(Hear, hear.) Well, this gave additional strength for the argument as to the necessity for the existence of this Society. We had it that inquiry was necessary—that investigation was more or less sure to detect the fraudulent applicants for public bounty, and that the present agencies were inadequate to meet the demands for such thorough investigation. If these were the facts, then the necessary inference was that the existence of this Society was most urgently called for. This was, by inference, admitted by the strongest opponents of the Society, and no argument rested against it unless it could be proved that the Society was not doing its work satisfactorily. (Hear, hear.) Therefore, unless the opponents of the Charity Organisation Society brought this objection to bear, there was none other which would lie against it. (Cheers.) Now, what were the facts as regarded the work of the Society for the last year? It would be seen that the Society inquired into 15,000 cases, representing 60,000 persons; it investigated the whole of these; and 6,000 of these, representing more than 20,000 persons, were reported against as being truly unworthy.* If that was the result of one year's experience in London alone, then it could be seen at a glance that no one could measure the magnitude of the resources which were withdrawn from the pockets of the benevolent and from the worthy poor, and went into the pockets of the unworthy, who made the worst possible uses of the money thus obtained. (Hear, hear.) After a short conference with Mr. Ribton-Turner, the learned and hon. member said that his argument could be strengthened by the fact that he had just received—that the 15,000 cases inquired into represented 60,000 persons, and therefore the 6,000 cases of those who were proved to be unworthy represented 24,000 persons. When this tremendous amount of deceit was strained out from among those who had had the temerity to apply for aid in particular channels, it would be at once apparent that persons might well tremble at the mischiefs and perils caused by the thoughtlessness of the philanthropist. (Hear, hear.) It would at once be seen that those who passed along giving with the right hand and with the left hand were doing a very large proportion of harm to their country and to their fellow-creatures. Under these circumstances, the question only remained—Does this Society do its work? The facts he had pointed out were a sure sign that it was doing its work, and the proof of it was seen in the fact that the more the Organisation was known to those who were associated with the work of true charity, the more they were desirous of having the assistance which the Society could give as an investigating agency, to insure that charitable funds should do good and not harm. (Hear, hear.) This being so, he thought the Society should stand upon very high ground indeed. The time had come when economy in all things was found necessary. This was acknowledged in every enterprise, whether of commerce, of manufacture, or of agriculture; and if economy was necessary in these concerns of life, à fortiori it was right in the distribution of charitable funds. It was a cruelty and an injustice to those who, by making a sacrifice of their needs or comforts, were able to support charitable institutions, that the funds of those institutions, raised by Christian self-denial, should add to the gratifications of the drunken and the vicious. (Cheers.) It was to prevent such a misapplication of charitable funds, and from turning persons aside from the cause of charity which the discovery of such impostures led to, that this Society existed, and it was doing this work with an efficiency never devised before. (Cheers.) If the contributions withdrawn from the unworthy were given to the worthy and to do a permanent good, the work of charity was enhanced, and that was what this Society did. It urged the public not to give doles which left the recipient the next day in the same position in which he was on the day he received it—that was, no better off, but still in a state of dependence; but, by multiplying the dole by twenty, the worthy man was raised up with his family out of the ranks of penury, and was placed upon a platform where he could achieve a future career. So what was given this way was doubly blessed—it blessed him who gave and him who received—it had a benefit not only for the present, but it made brighter the whole future life of the recipients, teaching the lower class that which laid at the bottom of all social improvement—that they must acquire habits of prudence and providence so as to work out their own independence. If they were encouraged in this by having thorough inquiry into all cases which came forward for relief, and improvidence were discouraged by adequate help being given to those only who helped themselves, then the charitable would raise the poor out of the ranks they had been in so long, and society would be healed of the moral sore which was weakening and degrading the whole social system. (Loud cheers.)

The resolution for the adoption of the Report was then put and carried nem. con.

Mr. C. B. P. Bosanquet said: Lord Lichfield says, much to my regret, that I am to take his place in moving the next resolution. I must obey orders; and my regret has no reference to the subject-matter of the resolution itself, for no resolution could have been put into my hands which I could have more pleasure in moving or supporting. I well know the importance of all the points involved in this resolution, which I will now read. It is—'That in order to extend the operations of the Society in reducing pauperism, and in improving the condition of the poor, it is essential that both increased help should be given to its District Committees, and liberal support accorded to its funds, by the general public.' The first part of this resolution speaks of the need of increased personal support being given to the Society. We have a very considerable amount of volunteer personal support. Nothing has more surprised those of us who have worked at this Society from the beginning, than the spirit of perseverance with which ladies and gentlemen have stuck to their work in it; and we have both women and men who are working in our Committees with as much energy and regularity as they could display if they were working in a profession. We have these still. We have had others on our Committees who worked until their health broke down, and they had to leave upon that account. We have many efficient helpers of this sort, but we have need for more—we have need for a vast number more, that we may undertake the immense amount of work which has to be done in London. I wish to make my appeal to your sense of duty. I do not say that it is altogether pleasant work. When a person is called upon to take up any public work, such as the duty of a magistrate or guardian, he takes it up because he believes he can be useful, not because it is pleasant. The work of charity would no doubt be very pleasant, if it only consisted in finding out a case of real distress and giving money or food or clothes, and hearing words of thankfulness. That would be exceedingly pleasant, to do that and nothing more, and many of us have found it so. But that is not enough, and the man or woman who does that, and that only, soon finds that it is unsatisfactory. (Hear, hear.) You have over-lapping of relief and pauperisation. You have dissatisfaction among the poor themselves. You have no permanent result from what you have done. (Hear.) Hence the Charity Organisation Society. Now as to our work in this Society, allow me to say that I do not lay so much stress upon the negative as upon the positive side of our work—that is, I do not look so much upon impostures we have detected as upon the number of cases in which we have set up families. But it takes a long experience for a man or a woman to learn how to help others adequately and well. All our best workers are men and women who have gone through the various experiences of this work. They have tried to do it in their own way, till they have come to another way of doing the work, namely, by adherence to certain principles which have proved effective. Assuming that I am speaking to some young man who is anxious to give help among the poor, I should not expect him to take another's experience altogether, for all who enter upon this work must, to some extent, earn their own experience, and therefore I should not say 'Come and work with us,' but should urge him to use his own judgment, and make a beginning. I should say 'Work among your fellow-creatures, work perseveringly, and watch the results of what you are doing. If you consider you are called to work in a spiritual way among the poor, that is the highest kind of work, and has the most lasting results; but be careful how you mix that up with material relief.' (Hear, hear.) 'If you take up material relief among the poor, do the best you can in your judgment to raise the people, keep your eyes open to what others are doing, and, above all, watch the results of what you are doing. Watch and see the difficulty you will have in permanently raising one family. You may help them to tide over one winter, but they will be in the same position the next winter. Make what use of our offices you like, and I think that you will ultimately find it best to come and work with us, and for us.' (Hear, hear, and cheers.) I would rather that a man would not come and work for us until his experience has proved to him the necessity of adopting our principles of action. There is no doubt that there is much more care required in the giving of relief than would at first sight appear to most persons. It must not be supposed that the many cases dismissed by the Charity Organisation Society were all undeserving. On the one hand, the Society was prepared to help a case which was not altogether deserving if permanent good could be done, and it might not be able to help a deserving case if, by the help, no permanent good could be effected. (Hear, hear.) We want to make relief remedial, and to raise, as far as we can, the whole mass of the poor. (Cheers.) Anyone who wishes to know more of this work in its details, should get the reports of some of the District Committees, by which will be seen the positive side of our operations. Let those who wish to see this work take up, for instance, the report of the St. Saviour's Committee; they will see a graphic sketch by the honorary secretary, who tells how he stands in his office waiting for persons to come in, how a poor woman comes in who wants to know where her son is, he being 'somewhere' in the country; and yet even in this despairing case the honorary secretary, by setting his wife to work, gets news of the son and brings him into communication with the mother. Then there arises a case in which a son is lost 'somewhere in London,' and he is discovered in a night refuge, and means are found for his being sent home. But the cases are really innumerable in which, by pains and thought, we are able to give persons a fresh start in life; and this is the principle of our work, to give this fresh start instead of sending them away with a dole of a few shillings. (Cheers.) To give this fresh start often entails the expenditure of a good round sum, and requires also the assistance of men and women who will give thought and care to these cases. (Hear, hear.) If those who desire to work in the cause of the poor are willing to accept our principles, then I would say to them, Go to one of our committees, either to an East-End committee, where assistance is most wanted, or to the committee of the district in which you live. See the hon. secretary, and say what you can do, what time you can give, and so on. He will ask you to join the committee, and I venture to say that, if you go in that way, you must not take a refusal or be put off. You can urge that the Society is one for promoting a division of labour; that though you can only offer a limited amount of work, yet that you expect to have a niche found for you. I know that there are difficulties in starting; but when a man really means work he can be useful to us, and we are bound to give him the opportunity of making himself useful. (Hear, hear.) Then as to the second part of the resolution—that which asks for liberal support to the Society's funds from the general public, I desire to appeal to the same sense of duty. At Christmas the Society is always well supplied with funds; but the public seem to forget that from the very nature of our Society its work and expenses must go on all the year round. Distress in London does not end with the winter, and indeed some of the worst cases of the year are found by us in the summer. One cause of this is that some relief agencies close their doors in the summer, and another is that many people go out of town when the season is over, while the poor are left worse off in consequence. Our District offices—37 in number—are open all the year round, and are always ready to hear any case, and to give attention to any case. (Hear.) With regard to our expenditure—if you have an idea that we spend too much money, I ask, in reply, to consider the size of London. I do not think one person in a thousand realises the size of London and the difficulties of dealing with it for any defined purpose as a whole. I do not know how to shake the vastness of this work out before you; but you will see at once that this population of three and a half millions would form the populations of thirty-seven large towns, if not many more. To deal with this population, we want all our district committees; and if that system is to be kept up we must have a large sum to support all this machinery. (Hear.) It may be worth mentioning that if a time of exceptional distress should arise, we should be in a position to give as much relief as might be required without much more expenditure upon machinery, and that all other agencies are free to use our machinery without charge. We bear the cost of inquiring for all—and we are quite ready to give the results of our work to others—to lend our machinery, in fact; and it is better that we should bear the heavy expenses of this work, while others do the pleasanter work of giving relief. In saying this I do not lose sight of the danger that, unless the public look into this matter sufficiently, and are guided by a sense of duty, they will be inclined to send all their money to the relief agency and not to the inquiring agency. (Hear, hear.) Then I should mention that, though a London Society, we have a deal of work to do for the whole country. Our Council in Buckingham Street is an agency for propagating knowledge throughout Great Britain, and even beyond it. We have a large correspondence, foreign and domestic, and we have been the means of starting other agencies in different parts of England, so that we can appeal for aid in return to the country as well as to London. We have now a great system established—a system far greater than we six years ago could have expected to see. It has spread all over London, and we have to ask the public for increased personal help, which is the life-blood of the Society—for fresh men and women coming in are its life-blood—and also for the 'sinews of war,' that this great system may be kept up. (Loud cheers.)

* Rather, cases unsuitable for charitable assistance. The figures in Class I. of the Annual Returns are as follows:—Dismissed or unfavourably reported on, as not requiring relief, 1,525; undeserving, 1,186; cases for Poor-Law, or otherwise ineligible, 3,047; class total, 5,758. See Appendix I., Seventh Annual Report, 1876.—Ed.

Sir John Kennaway, M.P., in seconding the motion, said it was very true that the detailed work of the Society did not at first sight explain its mode of operation, but all would agree that the very lucid way in which this work had been explained by Mr. Bosanquet, whose life for some years had been devoted to it, had placed its operations in a clear light before the assemblage, and rendered it unnecessary for a seconder to detain them. Having, however, been asked to speak on the Society's behalf, he without hesitation gave it his hearty support, as a Society which sought to propagate the knowledge of right principles in the distribution of charity. There were right and there were wrong principles even in charity, and this could not be too strongly insisted upon, for there was no doubt that actions performed with the best of all possible motives, and from the warmest feelings of charity, had done little good but rather harm, and had tended to make paupers of those whom it was only sought to help. (Hear, hear.) Harm had been done through the need of painstaking inquiry such as this Society instituted, and that being admitted, the need of such a society as this was amply evident. Mr. Bosanquet had spoken of the large size and of the great increase of London, and no one who had reflected upon the growth of this metropolis in population, in wealth, and in poverty, but must have been painfully impressed with the difficulties of dealing with its poor at all adequately. He could speak with an experience acquired in the work, for ten years ago he worked in St. Giles's in connection with the Society for the Relief of Distress, and he came to the conclusion that giving money thus was like pouring water into a sieve, and that the good one was able to do by such modes of relief was infinitesimal.

Now, however, that this Society had sprung into life, and had worked itself into the vigorous action of having united agencies all through London, each agency calling out the best energies of men and women who were devoted to the work of assisting the poor in the truest and best sense of the word 'assisting'; having, too, the advantage of working with and in conjunction with legal and other relief agencies; having the advantage, moreover, of advice from the Central Committee—advice given with all the weight of experience—it could not be doubted that the work which was being done must be of the greatest good, not only to the poor themselves, but to the public generally. (Cheers.) He trusted that the appeal for workers would be warmly responded to, and he was sure that men and women who had leisure—and even those who were busy might make some leisure to help their fellow-creatures—could not do better than join the Society in its work. Without personal help and money the Society could not work, and it must have both. The Society had strong claims upon the support of the public, for it relieved distress and attacked imposture, and so it took away the excuse often given by persons who did not give in charity—that there was 'so much imposture.' For the Society took care to find out that a case was worthy of relief, and it discriminated between the good and the mistaken giver of charity, for in charity-giving great mistakes were made. (Hear.) The Society had not limited itself to private questions, but had entered upon public ones with the best effect. All must rejoice that it had the courage to face the great questions bound up with the dwellings of the working classes in the Metropolis. (Cheers.) It was unnecessary to describe the terrible conditions under which thousands of our fellow-citizens lived in this great aggregation of cities, and the Society grappled so well with this question and with its surroundings, that the Home Secretary publicly acknowledged in the House of Commons the services which the inquiries of the Society had rendered him in his endeavours to remedy these great evils. (Cheers.) This year the Society had taken up another great question—that of dealing with the blind. For a very long time endeavours had been made to deal with this unfortunate class, various ways having been suggested; but now this society recommended the right principles upon which relief should be given to the necessitous blind. (Hear.) There is one thing that must not be forgotten in dealing with the poor; it must not be thought that a person's duty ended with giving a guinea to this Society, and people had to guard themselves against the idea that all duty ended with what they gave. There was, and there would be, much work beyond the province of this Society. Cases were continually arising which needed thought and care upon the part of someone, and those who were earnest in the cause of charity ought not to shrink from helping in this work. (Cheers.) He could not do better, as showing the grounds upon which support was claimed for the Society as doing a special work of its own, and a work not attempted by others, than by reading the concluding words of the report as set forth from the words of the St. Saviour's Committee:—The object of the Society is neither to check benevolence, nor yet to dictate to the public the form that benevolence should take; but, in obedience to the necessities created by a dense population and a complex social system, to offer the advantages of organisation to those who labour for the poor, to give to each such worker the experience of all, and to furnish a machinery which shall tend to protect Charity from the idle, improvident, and undeserving, and at the same time to render its action in proper cases more beneficent and more strong.' (Cheers.)

The Right Hon. the Earl of Lichfield, who was received with warm cheers, said: I think I did a very wise thing in asking Mr. Bosanquet to propose this resolution. (Hear.) He is very well known to most present as having worked at this Society from its outset, and he has devoted his time and energies to it in a manner which is beyond praise (cheers), and I knew perfectly well that his experience in the work would enable him to put, in far more forcible terms than I could, the requirements of this Society, both in respect of volunteer help and also of funds. I have the honour of being intimately connected with the Council of this Society, but I cannot claim anything like Mr. Bosanquet's knowledge of its working, as I have not had the same opportunities of acquiring that knowledge because I am in London but a short time in the course of the year. I think, however, it is desirable, upon the present occasion, that someone who has taken as prominent a part as I have upon the Council of the Society ever since its establishment should say a few words upon the work which we have actually done, and that we are endeavouring to do. (Hear, hear.) I think, in supporting a resolution which asks for increased support both in the way of volunteer help and of funds, it is right that we should ask ourselves—Has this society, up to the present time, done as much as might have been expected of it, with the means it has had at its disposal? (Hear, hear.) With regard to that I may say that the work undertaken by the Society has proved to be much larger and much more difficult than was contemplated by the original promoters of Charity Organisation. (Hear.) I do not think that any one who joined this Society at the outset had any idea of the gigantic work which was set on foot; and not only has the work been greater than was contemplated, but the difficulties in carrying it out have been vastly greater than were expected, from the fact that from the first the Society has been unable to command that help from the charitable societies and charitable agencies which it relied upon in the starting of its work. (Hear, hear.) In saying this I refer to that which was the original intention of the Society, namely, that its District Committees should be formed in the first place entirely of the representatives of the various charitable agencies at work in each district of London. Now, as a fact, these representatives of the various charitable agencies in each district, partly I suppose from not understanding the aim and objects of this Society, did not come forward to do that work of organising charitable relief which we thought, and the public thought, it was necessary should be done. (Hear, hear.) The consequence has been that the Society has had to seek for volunteers to come forward and do the work, and these volunteers upon our District Committees have been obliged to give up the greater part of their time in trying to bring about that co-operation between the various charitable agencies at work in each district and themselves, which was absolutely necessary before the work we undertook to do could be done. (Hear, hear.) The very first work which we pointed out as necessary to grapple with the frightful evils of pauperism was a thorough co-operation between the charitable agencies, by these combining and concentrating their efforts to reduce this pauperism; and the first step to this was to co-operate with those who were doing the work of legal relief in the metropolis. Without that co-operation of the charitable agencies and of the Poor Law we knew that our own efforts would be unavailing to achieve this good purpose, but instead of being able to command, as we expected at the outset we should, the assistance of the charitable agencies in co-operation with the Poor Law, we have had to form committees, whose main work has been to bring their influence to bear upon the different charitable agencies, with a view to securing their co-operation and support to work out the purposes for which this Society was established. (Cheers.) I merely point to these facts to account for the delay there has been in bringing about this co-operation, and the consequent disappointment to those who have been actually engaged in this work—a disappointment which is more felt by ourselves than by the public generally. (Hear.) But I do not wish the public to think that we in any way shut our eyes to the shortcomings and deficiencies in the work of this Society. It is important that we should not only feel that these shortcomings and deficiencies exist, but that the public should know that we are thoroughly alive to them. (Hear, hear.) And what is more, I am certain that these deficiencies will never disappear from the Society unless we get more hearty support than we have had from the public. I do not mean to say that we have not had a great deal of support; but I do say that the support we have had has not been equal to the amount of work which has been done, and which is to be done. (Hear.) I do not speak so much of the money aid as I do of the want of volunteers. We want more volunteer help upon our District Committees. We who are acting in the work of this Society have no desire that it should be set down to our credit that we spend large sums in relief. (Hear, hear.) We would far rather that the public in general knew little or nothing of our work in the shape of bringing relief to those who are distressed. We do not want that this relief should be given out of our funds. (A voice, loudly, (Hear, hear.)) We think that this relief should be given by those who, we believe, can give it very effectually and in a more efficient manner than we possibly could do it ourselves. (Cheers.) We know that there are plenty of agencies at work in this metropolis, and that if we could only secure their co-operation in spending money given for relief upon those principles of right to the public and right to the poor, which we should like to see exercised in the dispensing of relief, then there would be no need for us to spend money in relief, nor feel ourselves enforced to spend any of this Society's funds in work which other agencies exist to perform. (Cheers.) But I know that there are objections to the work of this Society—(A voice, (Hear, hear.))—and I shall be glad to meet some of these objections. (Cheers.) Let me say that we are here to-day anxious to hear what can be said for and against this Society. (Cheers.) We know that, although arrangements are necessary for speakers to be called upon by the chairman to speak to the various resolutions, that there is every opportunity for any person to rise and make remarks upon the subject of the work carried on by the Society; but I, for my part, prefer that the public should learn from our own lips that we are alive to all these objections; and I will refer to one or two of them. (Cheers.) One consists in what at first sight appears to be something like hardship in the minuteness and closeness to which investigations are carried by the Society. (Hear.) I know that this is felt—I have felt it myself; and it is only upon fully weighing the facts that I have come to the conclusion that this as a hardship does not exist, for it is necessary to make minute investigations in order to ascertain accurately the manner in which a case should be dealt with. (Hear.) I am convinced that if you are to have investigations at all, they must be thorough. If there is one principle which is recognised as sound, it is that some inquiry is necessary before assistance is given, and this being so, I reiterate that it is absolutely necessary that this inquiry shall be complete, for I maintain, if it is not thorough and exhaustive, in many cases great injustice must be done; whereas, if it is complete and thorough, it enables those who are able to form an opinion to decide how a case can be best relieved. (Hear, hear.) On the other hand, when the inquiry is not exhaustive, persons will not be able to ascertain the facts which would guide them in relieving a case, and the applicant would perhaps be debarred from receiving the form of aid he most requires. These are the reasons why I think that investigations should be thorough. (Cheers.) It is thought too, by some, that this Society has acted harshly in its dealings with the poor. (A voice, loudly, (Hear, hear.)) Now, if there is one thing which this Society would desire to disabuse the public mind of, it is of that idea. I must say that I have never met in my life any body of men and women more thoroughly in earnest, more kindly hearted, or more desirous of devoting themselves to the real help of the poor than the ladies and gentlemen with whom I have found myself working in this Society, and I utterly disbelieve that there is one of the members of the District Committees or of the Council who cannot lay claim to as kind a heart and as benevolent a disposition as anyone need to possess in working for the poor. (Loud cheers.) I am sure that if there is anything to complain of in our Society it is of the amount of work which remains to be done, and the remedy for this can only be found in our obtaining the assistance of the public in clearing off the work left undone. (Hear.) Then as to the treatment of those which are called 'chronic cases'—the cases of persons permanently afflicted, and who cannot be effectually relieved without considerable outlay. There is a general impression in the public mind that persons who are permanently afflicted and cannot be effectually relieved, except by pensions, are altogether set on one side by the principles of this Society. (Hear, hear.) Now that is not the case. (Cheers.) All the Society says with regard to these cases is that if we cannot relieve them effectually we will not touch them, but that we will do our best to obtain for these cases effectual and permanent relief, which is the only relief fitted for them, and this is done by the Committees inducing benevolent individuals to take them up. It is in that fact that you have an explanation of the reason why comparatively small sums are set down as given in relief by our District Committees, for the amounts thus obtained through private individuals do not appear in the accounts of the Committees; and, indeed, it would be very difficult to estimate the amount of that relief which is given by persons who, from the confidence they feel in the investigations of the Committees, come forward in a much more liberal spirit than they would if they were in doubt as to the case being deserving or undeserving of relief. (Loud cheers.) It is through that confidence that these charitable persons spend their money freely in relief of the cases, and thus the worthy poor are benefited. (Cheers.) The points of objection to which I have referred are not the only objections which are made to the Society—(Hear)—and though I should like to hear the persons who make them state them openly—(Cheers)—I will in answer to them simply say this—that whatever may be these objections, and whatever may be their extent, I am quite sure that practical experience in the work we are doing will gradually enable us entirely to remove all these objections; and I believe, moreover, that with increased support—with the active support of those persons who take a real interest in the welfare of the poor of London—that if they will co-operate together and with us, and will concentrate their energies upon the work which we have put before them as work which is possible to be done, and which ought to be done—that we shall see in the next few years a very great improvement upon the state of things which hitherto has existed in this country as regards pauperism in general. (Loud cheers.)

The motion was carried amid acclamations.

Sir Rutherford Alcock said he was very glad it had fallen to the portion of those who had preceded him to enter upon the large matters the audience had heard, and more especially was he glad that the opportunity had been taken to speak freely of the objections urged against the work of the Society. He could not conceive a better service being done to the Society than by giving an answer to the objections which were constantly made, that the Society did harm and not good to the cause of charity. One of the easiest obtained luxuries in the world was to give money, and he who stepped between the indiscriminate giver and his pleasure, was sure to get small thanks for his pains. (Hear.) It was well known by those who had wives and daughters that the alms were always ready for the cry of distress, and when one stepped in with the warning, 'Don't be in a hurry—the cry may be the cry of an impostor—the penny you give to the woman with the child out in miserable weather, may be the cause of the child being kept out for hours more, and therefore a cruelty to the child,' the question was put, 'Am I to steel my heart?' To this he answered, 'You are not to steel your hearts; but you should exercise some self-denial in your giving, take trouble before you give, and give only when you are sure that you are doing good and not evil.' (Cheers.) If a person's distress was caused by drunkenness, was it likely that it would help him or her, to give the shilling for which he or she asked? Was it not certain that the shilling would go the way of previous shillings, and thus only add to the evil already existing? And inquiry would save this doing of harm. Inquiry into the capacity of a person for labour, and assisting him or her to live over a time of difficulty that the labour might be done when it was found, was a worthy way of giving charity, and he therefore said to the ladies, 'Take care, and do not throw your money away upon beggars in the streets; for this money, judiciously given and upon inquiry, will permanently benefit the worthy, while otherwise it will do additional evil in the hands of the unworthy.' It is said; 'Persons may die before your inquiries are completed,' and 'You may do them harm by inquiring about perhaps they owe a little rent, and an inquiry may set the landlord on fire.' (Hear.) It might be that such extreme cases did occur,* and some cases have been pushed off so long that they are urgent; but must be remembered, these protests notwithstanding, that considerable means be given to the means of doing the greatest good to the greatest—the means to be adopted by which the least harm and the amount of good can be done. (Cheers.) He would say that he did not hear the objections stated, and he would not pretend to say that they were without foundation, for delays did occur, and some harm was done by inquiry. An objection of delay came from the School Board Divisional Committees in this way. A benevolent man, Mr. Peek, a member of this Society, and a representative of the London School Board, had placed at the disposal a large sum of money to find shoes for children whose parents were unable to find boots or shoes for the children to go to school. The Society had to investigate each case, and the School Officers said 'You ought to find out all the particulars of a case in four days.' Now, the District Committees were quite willing to grant as much as once, if the secretary of the Divisional Committee would certify that a case was a worthy one, otherwise the inquiries must be made, and he thought they were made with all possible speed. Sir Rutherford said he had some remarks in preface to a proposal that a vote of thanks should be given to the noble Earl for presiding. His lordship had not favoured the proposal with any remarks; but he doubtless would. (Cheers.) The noble lord was a tower of strength, for he had devoted his whole life to others, and the fact that he had taken an interest in this Society that it had strong claims on the support of the public. (Cheers.) Viscount H. Hill seconded the motion, and said the Society had not known a greater triumph in the vindication of the justness of its principles than it had that day in having the field-marshal of charity, who had been elected by universal acclamation, presiding over its annual meeting, claiming, at the end of a long fight, that in the principles of charity—charity—which might be called science applied to the relief of the suffering—there was nothing to damp the bloom or lessen the beauty of human charity. (Loud cheers.)

The motion was carried amid acclamation. The noble Chairman, who rose amid loud cheers, said: My Lords, Ladies, Gentlemen,—First allow me to thank you for the vote you have just passed and to say that I had no desire for any other expression of thanks than that which you have given me and around me have given to the proceedings of the Society. I have come here to-day in the discharge of a duty which I owe as representing the charitable public, as well as to myself. I have a few minutes to spare in which to address you, but you will think me that I took a wise course in not occupying your time at the commencement of the meeting, for, if I had done so, you would not have had the excellent addresses you had presented to you, for you will have the members of Parliament who were present have departed to their places. What I have to say with regard to this Society is, that I believe I saw that it was really engaged in an important, nay, in an essential work—the detection, among other things, of fraud in connection with charity. (Cheers.) This work I knew from a long experience—was really necessary, and that it was a work which, if rightly carried out, would tend to promote the cause of true charity. (Cheers.)

I venture to say, could have been mixed up with all the transactions of life in the London of to-day without seeing the enormous transactions in which we are living, and the impossibility for any one person to be the subject, possibly victim, of 10,000 applications for aid, the value of which he cannot by himself ascertain. I saw this very clearly in my career, and I supported the plan of the Charity Organisation because I knew that fraud and imposture were organised, I saw that it was that means should be organised for its detection—and when fraud and imposture were organised to impose upon the charitable, it was necessary a defence should be organised and rigorously set up to discern the means of those who traded upon the wants of the helpless. (Cheers.) For years many societies have been set up to detect fraud and imposture; but they did not cover the area, they did not go deep enough, they did not hunt the cases of fraud and imposture out as this Society does, but waited until the cases came, or were brought before them. I say that this Society has taken the very able and very unselfish course of ferreting out what is wrong and exposing it. (Cheers.) Therefore, this, the promoters of the Society must expose themselves to a great deal of obloquy and misrepresentation, on the one hand, from some persons and to a great deal of dislike from others, for the course the Society has taken in overhauling the affairs of some charities. Some people think that cases of urgent distress such temporary relief as is absolutely necessary is obtained or given in the interval between the application and the completion of the inquiry: the adequate assistance given with a view to the raising of the condition of the applicant being reserved until the results of the completed investigation have been submitted to the Committee.

that they conduct the affairs of their Societies very well; but I say that every Society is the better for being looked up now and then. (Hear, hear.) It is a very good thing for individuals and for Societies to be found fault with and questioned as to their doings. They resent it at the time; but it makes them look into their actions, for unless Societies are pressed, they are liable, like men and women, to fall into habits of indolence, and inquiry and questioning prevents them from degenerating from their usefulness. It once happened to me to be placed in a very curious position with regard to two Societies. I was chairman of both, and they were not, in appearance, antagonistic, yet they were antagonistic in a way owing to each society seeking information with a view to control the doings of the other. Well, when I was at the meeting of the Society from whom information was sought, I took the views of its members. I could not see why they should have their affairs dealt with by the other, and as the chairman I resisted the other; but when I took the chair at the other I saw that the second was right. I directed the attack upon the other myself (laughter), and the result was that great amendment on both sides was made to the greatest advantage of the Societies and of the public. (Cheers.) Now the Charity Organisation Society has been the means of discovering a vast number of frauds; and, if I may be allowed to differ in opinion from so great an authority in all that concerns charity organisation—Mr. Bosanquet—I beg to say that I think the negative part of your work—a part which he passed over—is of immense value. (Cheers.) Indeed, I think that if we do not take these negative results of your work we lose sight of two-thirds of the benefits we have received, and we ought to look at the negative as well as at the positive results of any work. (Hear.) Now, for instance, some people, looking at the positive side, and overlooking the negative good which has resulted from your recommendations—results which are not enumerated—may be inclined to say that you have done nothing; but they cannot say you have done nothing if their attention is turned to the amount of sin and fraud and imposture you have saved the public from supporting in luxury, and this negative work will indicate the vast amount of positive good work you have done with but comparatively small means and in an amazingly short time. (Cheers.) A Society like this is of more than ordinary value in these times, and its value to the public generally cannot be over-estimated. At all times there have been great frauds; but at no time in our history has there ever been so many frauds of all kinds—frauds planned with such wonderful skill, and carried out so adroitly as to deceive the most wary. London itself affords, in its overgrowth, means of perpetrating fraud and imposture which it did not in times past, and education even has added to these means, as have the increase of wealth, the taste for luxury, and the passion for wealth. Education has enabled some impostors to draw up very insinuating and, indeed, very seductive addresses suitable to the minds of the recipients; and all in all, I think, the facilities and means of imposture and fraud are fifty-fold what they were twenty years ago; and it is therefore more than ever necessary that we should have an agency like this to combat the efforts of those who are thus plundering the public in the names of charity, philanthropy, and necessity. (Cheers.) I may here tell you that I am indebted to my friend Mr. Ribton-Turner, the Organising Secretary of this Society, for the exposure of an attempted fraud upon myself. I received a letter, written with such apparent simplicity and genuine distress and sorrow, asking for £30, that, if I had had the money at the moment I should have given it to the applicant; but, not having it, I placed the matter in the hands of Mr. Ribton-Turner. You would be perfectly aghast to see the result of the inquiries made by Mr. Ribton-Turner. The whole thing was a lie from the beginning, for the writer, not being able to get £30 from his father, who was a wealthy man, had written this lying letter in the thought that he would get it out of me. This will show you the necessity of inquiry into all cases, no matter how genuine they may appear. (Hear, hear.) I can tell you an incident—a case which occurred to a lady—which will show you how the persons who are trading upon the public enter into the feelings of those with whom they come into contact. This lady lost her 'ugly pug'—a very 'ugly pug' it was too—(laughter)—and she offered rewards in vain. At length she received an intimation that if she would pay down £12 she would have the dog. She agreed to it, and when the man who brought the dog had got the money, she said 'Pray tell me how it is that you put such a price upon the dog?' The man, with an insinuating leer and smile, replied 'We judge all these things, marm, by the affections.' (Loud laughter.) Now these letter-writers act upon a like principle—some of the ladies they will address with a little logic—for the charitable ladies and gentlemen are, most of them, well known to the begging-letter writers and the impostors who trade upon the public, and they seek to play upon some chord of love or vanity in those to whom they write, or upon some affection, and this in no few cases enables them to accomplish their miserable and deceitful ends. Another lady they will praise for her literary attainments—if they know that her taste lies that way—and their letters are addressed so as to deceive. This being so, I say that we are day by day more and more in a state of necessity and defencelessness against these attacks if we have not a Society like this to be upon the watch for our protection, on the one hand, and, while it exposes fraud, to give a protection to the worthy poor—by lessening the chances of the fraudulent obtaining money which would go to the relief of the deserving, who would be thus permanently benefited. (Hear, hear.) The work of investigating cases is a very difficult one indeed. You must have those who are accustomed to the work, who have a certain amount of rigidity in them, and a great amount of discrimination. (Hear, hear.) I think I may say that the Society has got somewhat out of the groove in which it was at first. I remember that I was struck by the doctrinaire style in which certain principles were urged at first, and the manner in which these doctrinaire principles were pressed by some connected with the Society startled many excellent and charitable persons, who were not disposed to go so far as the Society did at first. (Hear, hear.) I do not think that the objects of the Society, as at present directed, are well or generally understood. (Hear, hear.) Let me say then that it is not only a society for the 'organisation of charity and the repression of mendicity,' the detection of fraud and imposture and the aid of the deserving; but that it is a society for the encouragement of thrift, and therefore a society which aims at raising the people who are down by the improvement of their habits—by teaching them self-dependence, by aiding them in regard to sanitary principles, and by the institution of everything which leads to economy morally, physically, and socially. (Cheers.) One instance of this is seen in the encouragement of loan funds. Now I believe that there is no form of help you can give the people at all equals the help from loan funds in the grants of small loans without interest. (Hear, hear.) I have myself seen the effects of these small loans upon different and very various sections of the poorer parts of our population. For instance, I have seen it in the case of the girl street-sellers of the East of London. These at one time trade in flowers, at another time with fruit; and though most of them are known as 'flower girls' they trade with other things bought in the London markets, and they even at times become vendors of hot coffee in the streets. Now there is a very large number of these girls—some 3,000 or 4,000. I had it brought before me by a friend four years ago, that the establishment of a loan fund would do a great deal of good to these girls, and we were able to start one. Now probably you would look upon these girls as untrustworthy citizens, but practical acquaintance with them 'in business' has proved the reverse. You must remember that, though the sum we have in this fund may not be enormous as a whole, yet as it comes in every week and goes out again and again in loans, in the whole an enormous amount has been lent—that is in the general issue. And what do you think has been the total loss? Nothing whatever has been lost through dishonesty, and what has been lost has not come in because the poor creatures have been ill, and this loss in the four years amounts only to the sum of £4 upon issues and re-issues amounting to thousands. (Cheers.) Now by these loans you not only improve the people financially by giving them the capital to work with, but you give them a sense of the dignity and self-respect which come from being trusted, and I shall never forget one girl coming in with pride and pleasure to pay her last instalment, saying, 'Now, didn't I tell you I would pay you?' (Cheers.) I for a certainty believe that in this system of loans you will go further to improve the condition of the working-class than by any other form of help, because it teaches them the value of character, the necessity of industry and thrift; it does not pauperise them, and it leads them on to maintain their independence. Give them money, and you take their independence from them; you take from them the incentive to industry; but help them with a loan which they will have to replace by industry, and you teach them lessons they will not soon forget. (Cheers.) Then the Society encourages the system of provident dispensaries, and this is another means of helping the people to maintain their independence. I am glad to see means to this end in such a Society as the Provident Surgical Aid Society, by which, with the payment of small sums, the afflicted may obtain the surgical instruments they need. All in all I congratulate you upon the establishment of a Society like this, which places its hands on so many means of helping the needy, and acts so promptly in exposing the impostor. The longer you work the better will your operations become adapted to the wants of the people, and I trust that you will put manifestly forward that you are not merely a Society for repression, looking into the abuses which wrong alike the givers and the poor; but that you are at the same time a Society for the help of the deserving and industrious, not by the distribution of doles, but by the help which will place them above necessity, and elevate them in all respects. (Cheers.) I give your Society all the support I can in its endeavours to repress the fraudulent 'charities' which exist amongst us, and I should like to see some law which would strengthen your hands in this work. (Cheers.) These fraudulent 'charities' not only absorb the vast amount of money which they extract from the charitable, and divert that money to the worst uses; but they check the hands of charity and furnish arguments to those who want excuses for bestowing no charity at all. (Hear.) Now, don't suppose that you alone have had to bear the abuse and obloquy which comes from various quarters upon this Society, for I can tell you that I have had a great number of letters of abuse for being so very wicked as to have anything to do with this Society. (Laughter.) One told me in frightful terms that my past fame had gone to the dogs, and that I am 'a shrivelled specimen of bygone benevolence.' (Loud laughter.) All I can say is, that every letter I receive of this character, in my belief, represents at least twenty frauds discovered and exposed, and I say within myself, 'So much the more will I support the Charity Organisation Society.' (Loud cheers.)

The meeting then separated.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of March 1876 was 36,915, and 49,893 received outdoor relief, making a total of 86,808. This was a decrease of 836 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 12,152, 20,734 and 32,245 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 547. This was an increase of 30 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 135 on the corresponding day of last year.

IRISH SAVINGS BANKS.—A return compiled by Dr. Haneock gives some interesting facts respecting Irish savings. Last year they increased to the extent of £980,000, and in ten years the increase has amounted to £12,067,000. The aggregate of savings in the joint-stock banks, deposits in savings' banks, and Indian funds, is now £70,180,000. In the joint-stock banks there was an increase last year of £1,785,000, and of £14,900,000 in ten years. In post office savings banks the deposits increased £70,000. The investments in Government Funds and India Stock decreased, but this is owing to the larger interest allowed by railway companies for debenture stocks, and the transfer has been encouraged by the definition of securities which married women might invest as given in the Married Women's Property Act of 1870, and also by the greater number of investments in Russian and American bonds. The abundance of capital is shown by the fact that the 4 per cent. guaranteed stock of the Dublin and Drogheda and Northern Railway rose from an average price of £90 in 1865-69 to £99½ at the end of 1875, and the original stock advanced in price from an average of £89 in 1865-69 to £123½ at the end of last year. —Times.

OUT-DOOR RELIEF.—A public meeting was held on Tuesday evening in the Town Hall, Woolwich, to consider the best means of effectually dealing with pauperism. The Hon. and Rev. Adalbert Anson, rector of the parish, condemned the system of out-door relief under the Poor Law as a gigantic mistake, and open to the gravest abuses, undermining men's ideas of independence, and increasing instead of diminishing poverty. In countries where there was no Poor Law, there was not one-hundredth part of the miserable poverty which was to be seen in England. He calculated that the poor paid no less a sum than £5,000,000 a year as interest on articles pledged, and that if they became their own pawnbrokers they would get £150,000 a year as interest from the Post Office. If the poor could pay £40,000,000 back to pawnbrokers, they could put away 1s. a week for old age, and if this were commenced early in life it would produce a yearly pension of £41 at the age of sixty.

BIRKENHEAD CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—The annual meeting was held on the 6th instant. Mr. J. B. Cooke was in the chair. Mr. B. Cooke, the Hon. Sec., reported that the Decision Committee had investigated 593 cases, against 572 last year. Of these 237 had been aided by the direct grants of the Society, 26 had had employment found for them, and 62 had been referred to other agencies or private persons. Of the rest, 134 had been found to be either undeserving or not requiring relief. £85. 19s. 4d. had been given in relief, generally in kind, against £66. 5s. 4d. last year, and £39. 4s. 1d. in 1873. The provident department was increasing in usefulness. During the twelve months £1,573. 16s. 10d. had been collected.

NOTICES.

District Committees are reminded that a fresh election of representatives at the Council has to be made (under Rule VII.) within one month after the Annual General Meeting of the Society.

The Secretary will be glad to have the names of those members who have been elected as representatives as soon as possible.

Colonel Busk and Mr. R. M. Hensley have been elected representatives of the Wandsworth Committee.

Lord Dunsany and Mr. Russell Barrington have been elected representatives of the St. George's-in-the-East Committee.

Mr. H. Hoper has been elected Hon. Secretary of the St. Saviour's Committee, vice Mr. E. Villiers, resigned.

The Whitechapel Committee will meet at 3 o'clock on Wednesdays, instead of 3.30 P.M., as hitherto.

Copies of the Classified Directory to the Metropolitan Charities have been placed at the disposal of the Council, and can be had by Hon. Secretaries, for office use, at the Central Office.

PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL.

THE Council of the Charity Organisation Society met at 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, on Monday, at 3 P.M.

Hill, Esq., Vice-Chairman; Sir Charles Trevelyan, C. A. Miner, Esq., Additional Members. Total, 43. C. S. Loch, Esq., Secretary.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE SOCIETY.

The Secretary reported that the receipts on the General Fund during the past quarter had been £978. 19s. 11d., as compared with £967. 13s. received in the corresponding quarter of last year; that there had been at the commencement of the present year a balance in hand of £414, as compared with a balance of £774. 17s. on the 1st of January 1875. That, as regards the District Committee Aid Fund, there was a balance on the 1st of January 1876 of £100. 3s., as against a balance of £149. 8s. 9d. in 1875, while the receipts on this fund during the past quarter had been £270. 12s. (including a contribution of £100 from the St. George's, Hanover Square, Committee), as against £367. 5s. contributed in the corresponding quarter of 1875, £100 of which was a donation from the St. George's, Hanover Square, Committee.

As regards expenditure, it was pointed out that, while less had been received on the District Committee Aid Fund, and there had been a smaller balance on that fund at the commencement of the year, £689. 1s. 5d. had already been expended in assisting the Committees in poorer districts; and that £368. 18s. 10d. had been transferred from the General Fund to meet part of this expenditure, while £150 (making in all an expenditure of £839. 1s. 5d.) had been paid to the City Committee from the same funds, in accordance with the arrangement made in November last. In the corresponding quarter of last year the comparatively small sum, £317. 10s., was spent in assisting District Committees.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending March 25 the receipts had been £20. 1s. for the General Fund, and £20 for the District Committee Aid Fund; and that the available balance of the General Fund on that day had been £289. 17s. 3d. Also that the sum of £99. 13s. 7d. appeared as a deficit against the District Committee Aid Fund, there being no available balance on that account.

GRANTS.—Grants of £25 and £15 had been made to the St. Olave's and Mile End Committees respectively.

COLLECTION IN THE CITY.—A conference of members of the Administrative Committee and of the City Committee had been held at the office of the City Committee on Thursday morning last, and a Sub-Committee was subsequently appointed by the Administrative Committee to organise and conduct the collection of funds in the City.

SCHOOL BOARD CASES.—The following circular had been approved by the Administrative Committee:—

'The Sub-Committee on District Work desire to call the attention of the Committees of the Society to the want of uniformity in the treatment of School Board cases, which is brought to light by an analysis of the returns published in the Reporter of the 19th February last. They have observed that the average amount of the grant made in each case is lower than the ordinary average of sums granted by the Society. They believe that a cause of this is to be found in the "nature of assistance" for which application is made, and that many Committees are deterred from dealing with School Board cases in full accordance with the principles of the Society, in consequence of their considering them in their reference to the application only. But the Sub-Committee would point out that while it may be in some cases necessary to grant the boots or shoes so generally applied for, it is equally important that the attention of the Committee should not, in the discussion of School Board cases, be confined to this point. The Committee should be prepared to take "fitting action" in each case, and to deal with it in any of the various ways that may suggest themselves.

"The Sub-Committee would refer Committees to the arrangement made with Mr. Francis Peek in May 1875. Mr. Peek, it is there stated, is "anxious to increase the ability of the Committees in the poorer districts to deal with such cases as the Divisional Committees of the School Board may refer to them." . . . "The cases of these persons will be inquired into like those of persons applying under any other circumstances, and dealt with according to the principles of the Society, as set forth in the Manual." The Sub-Committee would therefore point out to District Committees the expediency of observing the following general rules:—

1. That each case should be considered, not in relation only to the child who is unable to attend school, and has indirectly been the cause of the application to the Committee, but in relation to the position of the parents and family.

2. That since each case has to be dealt with in its relation to the condition of the whole family, District Committees should consider the nature of assistance asked for (e.g. boots or shoes) only in the second place, and should strive, in the first place, to give or obtain such judicious and adequate relief as may permanently improve the condition of the family, and prevent, if possible, a second application to charity.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS.

The list of additional members having been read, the following members were re-elected:—Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.O.B., Mr. J. W. Willis-Bund, Mr. George Blount, Mr. S. Fuller, Dr. Hawksley, Mr. G. Howell, Mr. T. J. Phillips Jodrell, Mr. C. A. Miner, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., Mr. W. Wightman Wood.

After some discussion, in which Mr. J. R. Hollond, Mr. S. Fuller, Mr. R. Barrington, Rev. H. J. Cummins, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. F. D. Mocatta, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Lord Claud Hamilton, and Mr. R. Dundas took part,

Mr. R. Hollond gave notice of the following motion:—

That Mr. C. B. P. Bosanquet be elected a Vice-President of the Society.

Sir Charles Trevelyan gave notice of a motion:—

That T. Hughes, Esq., be elected a Vice-President of the Society.

And, on the motion of Mr. A. H. Hill, the Secretary was instructed to ask Mr. G. M. Hicks whether he would be able to attend the meetings of Council. Mr. Hill gave notice that, if Mr. Hicks were unable to attend, he would move that he be elected a Vice-President.

INQUIRIES INTO HOSPITAL CASES.

Mr. J. R. Hollond then moved—

That the Council would recommend that, when no definite standard of eligibility for the admission of patients to their out-patient departments has been adopted by the hospitals, investigation into cases sent by them to the Committees of the Society should be limited to inquiries relative to the position and circumstances of the applicant; and that reports on such cases should contain the above information without giving an opinion (unless there is reason to believe the hospital requires it) as to the suitability of the case for medical relief.

He said that he had, with the permission of Council, altered in some measure the wording of his motion. There was a certain confusion, he feared, in District Committees as to the right method of investigating a hospital case: there was a danger lest they should inquire into them, as they would into other cases, with a view to finding out antecedents, &c.—information not required by and not always of service to the hospital. The system of inquiry, as applied to out-patient departments, was in an inchoate state, and when there was no fixed standard of admission it would be well for Committees to avoid incurring an unjust unpopularity from the adoption of too scrupulous a method of investigation, and thus, perhaps, retard a more perfect co-operation with hospitals. Subscribers to hospitals sometimes objected to the intervention of the Society for the purposes of inquiry, and it was necessary that the hospitals should show them good cause for a change, and a satisfactory method for carrying it out.

Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe seconded the motion, believing it to be in its nature provisional. He hoped that eventually an exhaustive inquiry would be possible in hospital cases.

Mr. Seton-Karr said that at Chelsea the method adopted by the St. George's Hospital had been found to work well. A paper containing a series of definite questions respecting the circumstances of the applicant was forwarded to the Committee, and, as far as he knew, the opinions sometimes expressed by the Committee for or against the suitability of the applicant as an out-patient, were well received.

Mr. Russell-Barrington considered the suggestion a valuable one; but it would be better if hospitals made known in each case what they wished. Some committees had been in the habit of employing a slighter system of investigation in hospital cases long before any special arrangements with hospitals had been made.

Mr. C. L. Corkran considered a line of exclusion such as that of being in receipt of wages above 30s. a week inadvisable; it was necessary to modify the rule by the statement of many other facts. Character should be taken into account. Hospitals would in many cases be thankful, he thought, for a delicate expression of opinion on the part of a Committee: if questioned, the Committee could state the grounds of their decision.

After some words from the Rev. H. G. Henderson, Miss O. Hill, and Mr. H. H. Hill, Mr. R. Dundas said that it would be impossible to obtain the sanction of hospitals for exhaustive inquiries in hospital cases. A just and sufficient method of inquiry might be obtained, if all hospitals that availed themselves of the machinery of the Society, adopted a form similar to that made use of by the St. George's Hospital.

Sir Charles Trevelyan said that since the Society had advocated the system of provident dispensaries and medical relief on the mutual assurance principle, the existence of so many hospitals with free out-patients' departments had been the first and greatest difficulty. But hospital authorities were becoming more and more sensible of the evil, and modifications were being gradually introduced. It was better, therefore, to make progress in the present unsystematic manner, than to lay down a hard-and-fast rule of any sort.

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in reply, said that an exhaustive inquiry in hospital cases would for some time at least be most prejudicial. It was most desirable that hospitals should have a proper paper of questions, and it might be necessary for the Society to fix on some form for use in all such cases. He proposed an ad interim arrangement merely, and one that could not stand in the way of any more perfect system.

The motion was then put and carried, 13 voting for it and 10 against it.

The motion respecting Standing Committees, of which Mr. A. H. Hill had given notice, was again adjourned.

Mr. A. H. Hill's motion respecting Standing Committees of the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK ON CHARITY ORGANISATION.

On Monday, March 31st, His Grace the Archbishop of York presided over a meeting of the Charity Organisation Society, held in the Council Chamber of the Hall, Hull. In the course of his remarks, His Grace said that owing to important municipal affairs, which were being carried on in London at this moment, a good many of the gentlemen on this occasion happened to be absent from the meeting ; but no doubt the interest in the town in this new undertaking was as great as it deserved to be. He was very glad if the words he was uttering could be addressed to an audience. Those present all knew the object and importance of the organisation, whereas the outside public did not understand the it in all its bearings. (Hear, hear.) In the first place, they all he had no doubt, that almsgiving was an indispensable part of a duty ; yet the first time they discovered that out of a shilling in indiscriminate alms probably eleven pence were wasted, was a shock to their feelings. They really felt that it frustrated one of their notions, and one, as they thought, of their paramount duties. (Hear, hear.) That being so, were they to button up their pockets and give

They felt that their obligation remained precisely the same, but ; either cease from giving or endeavour to give so as to guard imposture or the encouragement of idleness. This Society was the purpose of proving to the good people of Hull that such an was perfectly possible. In the little document which had been the honorary secretary, it had been mentioned that there was no wish to prevent individuals who consulted the Society from giving to different cases with their own hands, so that their own loving might be exercised in so doing. He heartily agreed with this, that by degrees there would be more of that kind of almsgiving

But this Society simply undertook, as he understood it, to make into those cases which pretended to be on behalf of poor and needy persons ; and having satisfied themselves as to the deserving character of each application, the Society dealt with them by means of this Committee, by relieving them or referring them back to the persons who had consulted it, as might be most expedient. (Applause.) That being so, he ventured to say there was not a Christian gentleman in all Hull who had anything to spare who was not absolutely bound to become a subscriber to the Society. (Applause.) Of course the alternative was that a man should give his money as he chose, and having a great deal of it, he might give a shilling for the purpose of having good done, though he might make up his mind that elevenpence out of the shilling would in all probability go to the indolent or the impostor. (Laughter and applause.) The objects of the Society being to direct benevolence into a proper channel, he did think they ought not to stop until every person who had anything to spare recognised the duty of giving to the poor in this town, as a subscriber of the Charity Organisation Society. It had the effect, no doubt, of getting rid of a vast amount of imposture, and preventing the trade of the sturdy beggar being a profitable vocation in this town. In that respect alone it was of immense benefit. But there were many other points in which, he considered, the Society might do a vast deal of good. Allusion had already been made to its influence in directing the steps of benevolence into the right way, and now it was proposed that the aid of the ladies should be called into requisition. The good ladies were always forward in works of this kind, and though the Committee did all they could in cases which came within their ken, yet it was thought desirable to have a Ladies' Committee, who should attend especially to such cases as were confided to them. This was an element in the Society without which the organisation would be by no means complete. (Hear, hear.) Then they had heard of a sanitary board, for which great need existed. He believed both these propositions would be admitted, and it was gratifying that the Society had secured the co-operation of the Municipality of Hull, who undertook to attend to the recommendations of the Society. (Applause.) The claims set forth in the report were excellent, and here was another which the Honorary Secretary was about to read, but he asked that gentleman to allow him (the speaker) to mention it, because it was a very important case. An American found himself stranded in Hull, and wanted to get back to his own country, but had not the means. He might have begged, but he did not choose to be a beggar ; therefore he applied to the Committee of this Society, that they would investigate his case, and that was precisely their function. He asked that they would represent his case to some shipowner, in order that he might get into some ship and work his passage home. Thereupon inquiry was duly made, and eventually Messrs. Wilson gave him a decided facility for getting home, and the man had gone. (Applause.) He had not been pauperised ; he had not begged ; but he had gone home himself by the assistance of the Society. Those present were all aware of the great good that the Society was doing, and he emphatically said, since the opportunity was given him, that this was not a hole-and-corner association, but a representation of the whole benevolence of the people of Hull ; and all those who wished to combine benevolence with good sense and proper calculation would come to their doors and give the Society their money. Until that consummation, so devoutly to be wished, was attained, they must meet together and make their appeals to the hearts of the philanthropic, and he was perfectly sure the Society would not collapse for want of support. (Applause.) The practical result of such an organisation would be in the long run, not to arrest the flow of benevolence, but to give the public a feeling of confidence. It would make everybody turn when asked for alms, and cause them to give one of those tickets for inquiry, and in the event of there being a real call upon their benevolence, all such cases would receive proper attention. At present everybody knows they had got into a sort of habit of treating the casual beggar in the light of an impostor, and would have nothing to do with him. But still, after all, after the man had gone away there remained the possibility of his having been a deserving person. When in a softer mood, and well accosted, they might be disposed to part with the shilling, and after the recipient had gone they might say to themselves in all probability the greater part of it, and perhaps the whole of it, had been wasted. This was a state of things that ought not to be encouraged, and this Charity Organisation Society by proper investigation took away from stinginess its last excuse, assuring the benevolent that the money they felt disposed to give would be quite well bestowed. (Applause.)

A Ladies' Committee was subsequently formed, and the town divided into districts, for the purpose of securing thorough and complete visitation and relief.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of March 1876 was 36,731, and 49,463 received outdoor relief, making a total of 86,194. This was a decrease of 614 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 11,960, 21,111, and 31,505 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 651. This was an increase of 4 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 139 on the corresponding day of last year.

THE DISABLED FIREMEN'S RELIEF AND PENSION FUND.

On Friday, March 31, Joseph Kinsman, 32, surrendered before Mr. Benson, at Southwark Police Court, charged on remand with obtaining money from various individuals by representing himself as a member of the Fire Brigade, and collecting funds for the Disabled Firemen's Relief and Pension Fund, which it was alleged had no existence.—Mr. C. J. Ribton-Turner attended on behalf of the Charity Organisation Society.

The prisoner was charged on the 3rd of February by Detective-Sergeant Bell, M Division, who found him on the previous afternoon soliciting money for the Fire Brigade of Mr. Brockles, leather merchant and currier, 173 Bermondsey Street; and after the examination he was remanded to enable an action to be tried between Secombe and the Charity Organisation Society, Mr. Benson wishing to defer his adjudication until it had come off. The prisoner was accordingly remanded until Friday last.

As soon as the prisoner had taken his place in the dock,

Mr. Benson asked if the trial had taken place. A clerk from Messrs. Wontner's, who was present, informed his worship that it had not, owing to certain interrogatories not being completed.

Mr. Benson, to the prisoner: Have you anyone to defend you?—Prisoner: No, sir. I don't want anyone to defend me.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Wontner appeared for you on the last two occasions. Did you instruct him to defend you then?—Prisoner: No, I did not.

Mr. Benson: Then who instructed him to defend you?—Prisoner: Mr. S. S. Secombe, my master, I suppose. I am only his servant, and I wish him to speak for me.

Mr. Benson: If you call him I shall have to caution him, as he will be asked some very severe questions. I don't think, however, that anything can be done without the production of the books.—Prisoner: The books were here on the last occasion.

Mr. Benson: But they were not produced, although they were called for. Mr. Bailey, the clerk, had them, and declined to produce them.

Prisoner, to Bailey: Do you produce them?—No, I have not got them now. On the last occasion I refused to produce them, as Mr. Wontner advised me not to do so.

Prisoner: I object to being brought here so many times, as it has done me so much injury by the reports in the newspapers.

Mr. Benson: I can't see that, as nothing has appeared in the newspapers but what has been said in evidence. I, however, don't think the prosecution should be so hard on you, as I believe you are only a servant.—To Mr. Bailey: Has he paid you all the money collected by him?—Bailey: He has, sir. I should like to remind you that the case of one of our pensioners was before the House of Commons yesterday. He was on our funds from 1872 to 1875.—Mr. Benson: No doubt you have some machinery at work; but if you receive large sums of money from the public, and do not account for it, it is a fraud. I think you are all keeping yourselves in a comfortable position with the funds so collected.—Bailey: I am receiving nothing.—Mr. Benson: You said you were a clerk at a stated salary. I feel it my duty to further adjourn the case, as it requires to be thoroughly investigated. I could not allow it to be mixed up with the civil action; therefore I shall again remand the prisoner.

Mr. Secombe: I think, sir, I should have received notice when the prisoner was taken into custody.—Mr. Benson: Do you wish to be called as a witness?—Secombe: Yes, I did, and I can explain everything satisfactorily.

Mr. Benson: Well, you can come next time; but I must remind you that you will be severely cross-examined.—Secombe: I will come, sir. I, however, wished to apologise to your Worship for what might have seemed to have been improper conduct on my part; but I was much excited, owing to the conduct of Mr. Ribton-Turner.

Mr. Benson: I have no wish to speak harshly to you, as you are not before me. You have an action pending, and when that is tried all your grievances can be brought before the public.—To the prisoner: Then you are remanded until the 28th of April at 12 o'clock.

CHARITY ORGANISATION AT NOTTINGHAM.—At the quarterly meeting of the Nottingham Social Guild, on the 22nd of March, reports were read from the several Committees of the Guild. The report of the Boarding-out Committee showed that an interview had been held with the Guardians, and the Board had agreed to grant 4s. 3d. per week, inclusive of clothing, for each child to the number of six, which the Committee intended taking into their hands as soon as the sanction of the Local Government Board was obtained.—Mr. Simon read an encouraging report from the Charity Organisation Committee, which was said to have justified the expectations formed by the subscribers; an officer was employed, and they were enabled to detect cases of imposition, and relieve the deserving.—The Chairman informed the meeting that this was a matter separate from the Guild as to subscriptions, &c.—The report was passed after some explanations.—The treasurer's account showed receipts £100. 15s. 6d., leaving a total indebtedness of £125.—A suggestion was thrown out that each member should subscribe £1 annually, and a resolution was carried to that effect, with a distinct understanding that that was not to be an absolute condition of membership, as several persons gave no money, but their help.

HALIFAX.—Mr. Stansfeld on Friendly Societies.—On Saturday, March 26th, Mr. Stansfeld addressed a meeting, at Halifax, of the Amalgamated Society of Joiners, Carpenters, and Ironmoulders, and presented the accident grant of £150 to Alfred Leech, ironfounder, and of £100 to John Foster Tetley, joiner. In making the presentations, Mr. Stansfeld said there were many reasons why working men should feel an interest in such associations. The first was one which naturally occurred to him from the part he had played in public life—the influence of such societies upon the burden of the rates, and upon the administration of the Poor Law. Every Friendly Society tended to relieve the rates—a good deal more so than all those local taxation committees of which they had heard so much of late in the agricultural districts, and whose only desire seemed to be to take the burden off the owners of land and place it on the shoulders of the ordinary taxpayer. These societies prevented poverty, and they prevented pauperism, which was worse than poverty. They also begat a spirit of independence, disinclined the population to go upon the rates, and were a far greater saving of the rates than the mere direct saving which followed from the assistance given to members in times of need.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 174.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, APRIL 12, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge each of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of a District Committee, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

NOTICES.

The Administrative Committee will not meet to-morrow.

The Central Office will be closed on Good Friday, and reopened on Easter Tuesday.

As the Council does not meet on Easter Monday, no Reporter will be issued next week.

In the absence of Miss Courtenay, Dr. B. Daniel has been elected representative of the Chelsea Committee, and Captain Boyce, R.N., the other representative, has been re-elected.

Lady Wilson has been re-elected representative of the South t. Pancras Committee.

Mr. W. G. Holloway and Mr. H. F. Cornish have been elected representatives of the Deptford Committee.

NOTICES TO DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

District Committees which have not yet sent to the Central Office their returns of School Board cases for the past quarter are requested to do so as early as possible.

The attention of District Committees is called to a letter from the Dudley Stuart Home, on page 74.

And to the following resolution relating to inquiries into the social position of out-patients, which was adopted by the Council on the 3rd inst. :—

That the Council would recommend that, when no definite standard of eligibility for the admission of patients to their out-patient departments has been adopted by the hospitals, investigation into cases sent by them to the Committees of the Society should be limited to inquiries relative to the situation and circumstances of the applicant; and that reports on such cases should contain the above information without giving an opinion (unless there is reason to believe the hospital requires it) as to the suitability of a case for medical relief.

District Committees requiring for distribution copies of the Reporter containing the account of the recent Annual Meeting of the Society, are requested to apply to the Secretary. Copies of the second (enlarged) edition of the Seventh Annual Report of the Council can also be had upon application.

PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL.

THE Council of the Charity Organisation Society met at 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, on Monday, at 3 P.M.

Present: The Earl of Lichfield (in the chair); F. J. S. Edgcombe, Esq., Kensington Committee; Major Yard, J. R. Holland, Esq., Paddington; Capt. Boyce, R.N., W. S. Willis-Bund, Esq., Stephen Fuller, Esq., C. A. Miner, Esq., Additional Members. Total, 43. H. Howgrave Graham, Esq., Assistant Secretary. J. Barber, Esq., Visitor.

In the absence of the Secretary, through indisposition, the Assistant Secretary read a letter from Mr. G. M. Hicks, resigning his seat at the Council as an additional member.

QUESTIONS.

Mr. E. Peters asked how the District Committees would deal with a case in which the wife of an applicant was of drunken habits; the case being, on every other ground, eligible for relief.

Opinions were expressed that such cases must be dealt with each on its own merits. The Rev. R. J. Simpson thought that much would depend upon the form of relief required.

Mr. A. H. Hill asked whether any member of Council was acquainted with the proposed Maternity Home now advertised by the managers of St. John's Home, Norfolk Street, Strand? He doubted whether an additional charity for training nurses was required, and thought that a demand for such a class of labour could be better met by an institution conducted on a commercial basis.

Mr. Dundas stated that the want of a sufficient number of well-trained nurses was felt at St. George's Hospital, with which he was connected.

Major-General Blunt desired to draw the attention of members of Council to a sermon preached on behalf of the Society by the Hon. and Rev. W. H. Fremantle, of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square; and he laid a few copies of the sermon upon the table.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending April 1 the receipts had been £120. 7s. 6d. for the General Fund, and £200 for the District Committee Aid Fund; and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £233. 6s. 11d. and £60. 7s. 5d. respectively.

GRANTS.—Grants of £30, £40, £50, and £50 have been made to the Lambeth, Shoreditch, Newington, and Stepney Committees, respectively.

DUDLEY STUART HOME.—The Committee also reported that the following letter had been received from the Chaplain and Secretary of the Dudley Stuart Home:—

March 30th, 1876.

Dear Sir,—I am desired by the Committee of the Dudley Stuart Home to inform you that, for the future, men will not be received into this House.

I am also to inform you that the Committee of this Institution will be at all times ready, as far as their resources go, to admit for a limited period, free of expense, any female of good character recommended to them by a Committee of your Society. Any Committee recommending a case are requested to forward to the Committee of this Home the full result of their investigation.—I beg to remain, your faithful servant, H. HOUSEMAN.

SPECIAL SCHOOL BOARD CASE.—It also appeared that the Administrative Committee had been asked by a District Committee whether the case of a cripple, in which £12 was required to enable the applicant to enter a home, was eligible for assistance from Mr. F. Peek's gift. The case had been referred to the District Committee by the Divisional Committee of the School Board. The Administrative Committee had expressed an opinion that, failing other courses of procedure that were suggested, the case was eligible for assistance from the gift in question.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson said he would give notice of a motion on the subject.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

ASSISTANCE FOR EXCEPTIONAL CASES.

The Council then proceeded to consider the following Recommendations of the Administrative Committee:—

1. That the Administrative Committee are prepared to consider exceptional cases, in which a District Committee may not be able to obtain so large a sum as may be required to enable it to secure 'fitting action.'
2. That the Administrative Committee will consider the advisability of obtaining the assistance required in such cases, by advertisement or otherwise.
3. That such cases should only be referred to the Administrative Committee by District Committees when they have exhausted every means in their power to obtain the required assistance by private influence or by reference to charities.
4. That every such case will be carefully examined by the Organising Secretary before being submitted to the Administrative Committee.
5. That, if the Administrative Committee decide to advertise, the decision as to the form of the advertisement will be left to the Administrative Committee, due consideration being given to any suggestions of the District Committees.
6. That the Administrative Committee think it highly inexpedient that such cases be advertised in any papers without the previous approval of the Administrative Committee.

The Assistant Secretary having read the Recommendations,

Mr. A. H. Hill said, that he thought the subject was one which would be very appropriately dealt with by one of the Standing Committees to which his intended motion referred. He was in favour of the question being postponed until his motion had been before the Council.

The Chairman pointed out that, if the principle were settled, the Council could afterwards take, in the direction Mr. Hill had indicated, such steps as might appear expedient.

Mr. C. E. Maurice thought that the fourth Recommendation was unnecessary. The cases would be thoroughly investigated by the District Committees, and it would be useless for the Organising Secretary to repeat the inquiries.

Mr. Russell Barrington, in urging the Council to adopt the Recommendations as they stood, alluded to the sense of discouragement under which the poorer Committees must labour in dealing with cases requiring exceptional assistance. He thought that they would gladly feel that they could, in the last resort, refer such cases to the Administrative Committee. The intention of the fourth Recommendation was, that the Organising Secretary should examine the cases before they were submitted to the Administrative Committee. The Central Office had facilities for making inquiries in foreign and other parts which were not possessed by the District Committees.

Sir C. E. Trevelyan, in supporting the Recommendations, mentioned that a case had recently been referred to the richer by one of the poorer Committees. This course, he felt, was open to objections, and some of these would be removed if all such cases were passed through a common centre. In the earliest days of the Society the principle that the District Committees should not make appeals by advertisement had been laid down, and the Recommendations in question would meet difficulties of this class.

Mr. Willis-Bund thought the question involved was too important to be disposed of at once. He feared that difficulties would arise in dealing with cases in the manner proposed. The Administrative Committee and the District Committee might take different views as to the mode in which a case should be dealt with, and the hopes of applicants might also be unduly raised. He was in favour of postponing the consideration of the question.

Mr. Seton-Karr said that the difficulty that beset the poorer Committees was not that of investigating certain cases, but of procuring adequate relief for them. He thought that referring the case to the Organising Secretary would cause unnecessary delay, and he would move as an amendment that the fourth Recommendation be omitted.

Mr. C. E. Maurice seconded the amendment.

Mr. F. D. Mocatta thought that great caution was necessary in dealing with cases of the class referred to. He approved highly of the Recommendations, for it was most important that the poorer Committees should not be hampered in their work; but he thought that as the Administrative Committee could always refer cases to the Organising Secretary for his opinion, the fourth Recommendation was scarcely necessary. He thought that the cases to which the Recommendations referred were not so likely to suffer by delay as were cases of a more ordinary description. They would, he imagined, be exceptional cases, requiring exceptionally large sums for their adequate assistance.

Lieut.-General Cavenagh explained that the Administrative Committee had inserted the fourth Recommendation for their own guidance and direction.

The Rev. H. I. Cummins said that, for that very reason, the Administrative Committee might have discretionary power to refer cases to the Organising Secretary, or not, as they saw fit. He would suggest that the words relating to the Organising Secretary be struck out.

Mr. J. R. Hollond reminded the Council that a case would not necessarily be re-investigated by the Organising Secretary, but that he would, before submitting it to the Administrative Committee in the ordinary course of business, thoroughly examine the documents, and, if necessary, see the applicant.

The Chairman pointed out, that so far from causing delay, the proposed reference to the Organising Secretary would expedite matters. If the case were examined by him in the first instance, the Administrative Committee might be able to deal with it at their next meeting; but if, on the other hand, such reference to the Organising Secretary were only made after the case had been laid before the Administrative Committee, a delay of a week, or even nearly a fortnight, might ensue. He was in favour of retaining the fourth Recommendation.

After a few words from Major FitzRoy and Messrs. Edgcombe, Green, and Miner, Mr. Seton-Karr's amendment was put and carried.

The first, second, third, fifth and sixth Recommendations were then put and carried, two voting against them.

REPORT OF COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.

Major-General Blunt explained, as Chairman of the Sub-committee, that the Report, though already in proof, could not be submitted at present.

ADDITIONAL MEMBER.

Mr. A. H. Hill moved that Mr. Lionel Cohen, a member of the Jewish Board of Guardians, be asked whether he would consent to become an additional member of Council.

Mr. Cohen was well-known in connection with charitable work, and, could he give time to the work of the Society, would prove a valuable coadjutor.

After a few words of support from Mr. F. D. Mocatta and the Rev. H. I. Cummins, the motion was carried unanimously.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Mr. A. H. Hill moved that Mr. G. M. Hicks be elected a Vice-President of the Society.

The motion was carried unanimously.

On the motions of Mr. J. R. Hollond and Sir C. E. Trevelyan respectively, Mr. C. B. P. Bosanquet and Mr. T. Hughes, Q.C., were elected Vice-Presidents.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. A. H. Hill then moved—

That, for the more effectual working out of the objects of the Society, it is desirable to establish Standing Committees of the Council, whose function it shall be, under the general direction of Council, to take special charge of certain branches of the Society's work.

Mr. Hill said that he had brought this subject before the Council in 1874. He felt that it was most important for the advancement of the objects the Society had in view that they should, like other similar bodies, from Parliament downwards, have Standing Committees for dealing with certain subjects. He would instance the motion of which Mr. J. R. Hollond had given notice. The question indicated by that motion was a very large one, and affected the poorer classes very materially. He would like to see Standing Committees for dealing with this and other large subjects; such as Vagrancy, Industrial Employment, and Medical Relief. These were all questions of the highest importance, the last, especially, requiring most careful treatment.

Mr. C. E. Maurice seconded the motion.

Sir C. E. Trevelyan, while recognising the importance of the subjects referred to by Mr. Hill, could not think that the establishment of Standing Committees was the best way of dealing with them. He was in favour of following the practice hitherto adopted by them, viz., that of Special Committees to inquire into and report upon the several questions as they came up. The question of employment, mentioned by Mr. Hill, had already been considered by such a Committee, and other subjects, such as Night Refuges and Soup-kitchens, had been dealt with by similar means. He would rather see the scope of the existing Sub-committees extended: the Inquiry Supervision Sub-committee might, he thought, take more of the Organising Secretary's work under their care. Sir Charles concluded by moving the previous question.

The Rev. H. I. Cummins, in seconding the motion made by the last speaker, expressed his disapproval of a number of distinct, co-ordinate and independent Committees, and foresaw much difficulty in receiving reports and suggestions from such bodies. The Administrative Committee had power to appoint Sub-committees, and could exercise that power, from time to time, as required.

Mr. Dundas feared that the proposal of Mr. Hill would entail additional expenditure of time and money at the Central Office, as an increase of staff and larger premises would be required.

Mr. Russell Barrington, in rising to support Mr. Hill's motion, described the work of the existing Sub-committees, and pointed out that they did not deal with special but with current work. He thought it would be well if the initiative could be taken by Committees more actively than at present.

Miss O. Hill asked whether the Committees in question would be Sub-committees of Council, and whether they would include persons who were not members of the Society?

Major Prendergast begged the Council to pause before they committed themselves to a course necessarily involving a large increase of work at the Central Office.

Mr. Willis-Bund pointed out that it had been already determined that Honorary Secretaries should be appointed for special Sub-committees. He thought that it was important that these bodies should be permanent, in order that they might watch and carry out the work they had commenced.

Mr. A. H. Hill, in replying, explained that the Committees in question would, primarily, consist of members of Council, but they might be Sub-committees of the Administrative Committee.

Mr. Mocatta asked the Council to postpone this question, as it required careful consideration. He would mention that the Jewish Board of Guardians has several Committees; the Secretaries being honorary and the Committees including outsiders. He moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was carried, and the Council adjourned to Monday, the 24th inst.

The following contributions have been received during the week ending Saturday, April 8, 1876:—Donations: 'A.B.' £2. 5s.; T. Allen, Esq., £1. 1s.; Bernard Bosanquet, Esq., £4; Miss Dearlove, £5; D. E. E., 5s.; Hon. Mrs. Denman, £1. 1s.; Lord Ebury, £10; Miss Gosset, 2s. 6d.; the Duke of Leeds, £10. Annual: James Bromfield, Esq., £1. District Committee Aid Fund: The Earl of Pembroke, £200; Miss Pomeroy, £5.

The following business stands for Monday, the 24th inst.:—

I. Adjourned discussion on Mr. A. H. Hill's motion, see supra.

II. General Cavenagh to move as an amendment:—

That it be referred to the Administrative Committee to re-arrange the business of its standing Committees, with a view to their being utilised to the utmost practicable extent.

III. To receive the Report of the Sub-committee of the Council on the Collection of Funds.

IV. Mr. J. R. Hollond to propose members of the Administrative Committee for the ensuing year.

V. Mr. J. R. Hollond to move:—

That this Council, considering that it is imperatively required, in the interests of the poor, that the Poor Law should be administered with a view to the ultimate abolition of outdoor relief, recommends its District Committees to co-operate with Boards of Guardians in the following way:—

1. By recommending to them for relief only such cases as they consider suitable for indoor relief in its various forms.

2. By taking off their hands, as far as possible, all such cases of temporary distress as are not suitable for indoor relief—e.g., cases of sickness where it is not advisable to compel the patient to enter the infirmary.

3. By referring to them only those School Board cases in which, from the character or circumstances of the parents, it is advisable that the children should be taken into the District Schools; all other cases being considered within the jurisdiction of charity, to be dealt with on the and ordinary principles of the Society.

VI. Mr. Willis-Bund to call attention to the Poor Law Amendment Bill, and to move:—

That it be an instruction to the Administrative Committee to take such steps as may be deemed advisable to secure alteration in the proposed amendment in the laws as to removal and settlement proposed by that Bill.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

75.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, APRIL 26, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor: bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities. securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases. granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources. repressing mendicity. Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge on all who are willing to take part in the work to become members of District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies intended to help them. The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, will be happy to furnish further information.

Wilkinson, Esq., Vice-President; Lieut.-Gen. Cavenagh, Alsager Hay Hill, Esq., Vice-Chairman; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Stephen Fuller, Esq., Additional Members. Total, 47. H. Howgrave Graham, Esq., Assistant Secretary. John Barber, Esq., J. E. Sapsford, Esq., jun., Visitors.

VICE-PRESIDENT.

A letter from Mr. G. M. Hicks was read, accepting the office of Vice-President, and stating that his interest in the work of the Society was undiminished.

ADDITIONAL MEMBER.

A letter was read from Mr. Lionel Cohen, in which he thanked the Council for electing him an Additional Member, and expressed his approval of the principles of the Society. He regretted, however, that the amount of leisure at his disposal was so limited that he must decline the appointment.

QUESTIONS.

Major FitzRoy asked if a man named McFadden had applied to any of the District Offices.

Major FitzRoy also asked whether any members of the Council would furnish his Committee with two letters for the Walton Convalescent Home. There were none at the Central Office.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the two weeks ending April 15 the receipts had been £61. 1s. 0d. for the General Fund, and £210 for the District Committee Aid Fund; and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £279. 7s. 10d. and £100. 7s. 5d. respectively.

GRANT.—A grant of £25 had been made to the North St. Pancras Committee.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE COUNCIL.—Also that if all the ascertained claims, up to April 30, upon the General Fund were brought forward for payment next Thursday, a deficit of at least £86 would be shown; while, if applications for grants to District Committees already received were entertained, the deficit upon the District Committee Aid Fund would be £75.

Lieut.-General Cavenagh (as Chairman of the Administrative Committee) drew the attention of the Council specially to their financial position, which, he pointed out was entirely due to the wants of the poorer Committees. The District Committee Aid Fund had borrowed largely from the General Fund, and the embarrassed position of the latter was attributable to this cause alone. He would specially urge the consideration of this question upon members of Council representing the richer Committees.

COLLECTION OF FUNDS.—The Report of the Sub-committee was again postponed.

TANDING COMMITTEES.

The consideration of Mr. A. H. Hill's motion—

That, for the more effectual working out of the objects of the Society, it is desirable to establish Standing Committees of the Council, whose function it shall be, under the general direction of Council, to take special charge of certain branches of the Society's work, was then resumed.

Sir C. E. Trevelyan asked leave to withdraw his motion (the previous question).

Lieut.-General Cavenagh's amendment—

That it be referred to the Administrative Committee to re-arrange the business of its standing Committees, with a view to their being utilised to the utmost practicable extent, was then considered; and after a few words from Mr. A. H. Hill, the amendment, having been seconded by Sir Charles Trevelyan, was carried unanimously.

MOTIONS POSTPONED.

Letters having been received from Mr. J. R. Hollond and Mr. Willis-Bund, stating that they were prevented from being present, the motions standing in their names were, at their request, postponed.

The Council then adjourned.

The following contributions have been received during the two weeks ending Saturday, April 22, 1876:—Donations: G. Bailey, Esq., £1; H. S. L., £5; Rathbone Brothers & Co., £1. 1s.; E. Richards, Esq., £2. 2s.; J. Willis & Sons, £2. 2s. Annual: Rev. C. T. Ackland, £1. 1s.; Miss Scott Douglas, £2; Rev. J. Martineau, £1. 1s.; Colonel Townley, £3. 3s. District Committee Aid Fund: Miss Scott Douglas, £5; R. S. Holford, Esq., £5. 5s.

The following business stands for Monday, May 1:—

I. Mr. J. R. Hollond to propose members of the Administrative Committee for the ensuing year.

II. Mr. J. R. Hollond to move:—

That this Council, considering that it is imperatively required, in the interests of the poor, that the Poor Law should be administered with a view to the ultimate abolition of outdoor relief, recommends its District Committees to co-operate with Boards of Guardians in the following way:—

1. By recommending to them for relief only such cases as they consider suitable for indoor relief in its various forms.

2. By taking off their hands, as far as possible, all such cases of temporary distress as are not suitable for indoor relief—e.g. cases of sickness where it is not advisable to compel the patient to enter the infirmary.

3. By referring to them only those School Board cases in which, from the character or circumstances of the parents, it is advisable that the children should be taken into the District Schools; all other cases being considered within the jurisdiction of charity, to be dealt with on the ordinary principles of the Society.

III. Mr. Willis-Bund to call attention to the Poor Law Amendment Bill, and to move:—

That it be an instruction to the Administrative Committee to take such steps as may be deemed advisable to secure alteration in the proposed amendment in the laws as to removal and settlement proposed by that Bill.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

A tabulated statement of the returns of School Board cases dealt with by the District Committees during the quarter ending March 31, 1876, will be brought up for consideration at the meeting of the Committee tomorrow (Thursday, April 27).

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

WHITECHAPEL.—Co-operation with the Clergy.—The following is an extract from the Annual Report of this Committee for 1875:—

'It has been found a good plan to send monthly to the Clergy in the district (there are nine Church parishes) a list of the names and addresses of persons "resident in their parishes" who have come under the notice of the Committee.

'A few words explanatory of the nature of each case are added, and an intimation that fuller particulars will gladly be furnished on application to the Secretary.

'A clergyman coming newly to take charge of a parish is furnished with a list "alphabetically arranged" of all those of his parishioners whose cases have been before the Committee.

'By these and similar means the Committee hope to attain the object which they desire ever to keep in view both of themselves and the public—the Organisation of Charity.'

WOOLWICH.—Meeting.—A General Meeting of this Committee will be held on Wednesday, April 26, at 7.30 p.m., in the Masonic Hall. Mr. Shersby will take the chair and the Earl of Lichfield and others will address the meeting.

DORSET MENDICITY SOCIETY.

(From the Dorset County Chronicle and Somersetshire Gazette.)

The Sixth Annual Meeting of the Committee of this Society was held at the Shirshall, Dorchester, on the 4th inst. There were present the Hon. W. H. B. Portman, M.P. (Chairman), Mr. J. Floyer, M.P., Sir W. C. Medlycott, Bart., Colonel Cox, Mr. B. Littlehales, Mr. C. J. Parke, Mr. H. C. Goodlen, Rev. C. J. Glyn, Mr. J. H. Calcraft, Mr. Emson (Mayor of Dorchester), and Captain Amyatt Brown (Chief Constable of Dorset and Hon. Secretary of the Society).

The Hon. Secretary read the following report:—

Dorchester, 4th April, 1876.

'My Lords and Gentlemen,—In laying before you the Sixth Annual Report of the Dorset Mendicity Society I have much pleasure in being able to state that the great decrease in vagrancy, which has been noted in former reports, has not only been maintained during 1875, but the returns from the different Unions show a further reduction of 12 per cent. on those of 1874. The number of vagrants relieved in the casual wards of this county during the past twelve months amounted to 2,490, being a reduction of 78 per cent. as compared with the year previous to the adoption of this system; whilst the committals under the Vagrant Act have decreased in the same period by 80 per cent. As a further proof of the extent to which vagrancy has been reduced, it was found on taking the Annual Census of Tramps and Vagrants on the 9th of March that there were only eight such persons in Dorset on that night.

'During the past year 2,925 lbs. of bread have been supplied to wayfarers at the relief stations, and the total cost of the Society for 1875 has been a little under £40.'

The receipts and expenditure were then given in detail.

'Since the establishment of this Society it appears by the criminal returns that crime has decreased in Dorset by more than one-half; and, although there have been doubtless many other causes at work to bring about such a result, it may be safely said that some portion of this reduction is due to the county having been freed from the inroads of the vagrant class, who are ever ready to commit petty thefts and depredations, if not more serious offences. I beg to add that this system of dealing with vagrancy, which was first organised in this county in January 1870, is now in operation in Kent, Herefordshire, and West Sussex; and the statements which have been received from those counties are most favourable, the last report from Kent stating that since its adoption the number of casuals had been reduced by over two-thirds.

'Vagrancy is not a self-supporting institution; and if the public will continue to carry out the rules of this Society by giving nothing but bread-tickets it is evident that the mendicant must of necessity abandon his occupation.—I have the honour to be, my Lords and Gentlemen, your most obedient servant,

AMYATT BROWN, Hon. Secretary.'

The Chairman begged to move the adoption of the report. He thought they might well congratulate Captain Amyatt Brown on the success of the system he had inaugurated—for he might be said to have been its originator, not only in this but also in the other counties which had followed the example of Dorset, and with the best possible results. (Applause.) The only difficulty which occurred to his (the Chairman's) mind was, what must become of the vagrants? (Laughter.) He had been requested to say a few words respecting the surplus now in the hands of the Committee; and he thought it might be a good thing to suggest some gratuity to the Clerk and the Superintendents of Police for the trouble they had taken in carrying out the arrangements of the Society. He would therefore, if the meeting saw no objection, propose that £15 be paid out of the surplus in hand to those officers.

Captain Amyatt Brown remarked that in other counties the Clerk had been paid for his services in respect to the mendicity work, but in Dorset there had been no such payments.

Mr. B. Littlehales begged to second the proposition moved by the Chairman. He had seen a great deal of the working of the Dorset mendicity system which had been instituted by Captain Amyatt Brown, and which had been apparently so successful in other counties. He was accustomed to look at the number of vagrants every week in his own Union, and he found whereas formerly it amounted to 40 or 50 it was now reduced to eight or nine, and occasionally to two, sometimes even being nil. (Hear, hear.) He was very glad to bear testimony, as one of the magistrates, to the efficacy of Captain Brown's system, and also to the efficiency with which it was carried out. (Applause.) The motion was then put to the meeting and carried unanimously.

Mr. J. Floyer, M.P., moved a vote of thanks to Captain Amyatt Brown for the zeal with which he had carried out this very important work in the county. (Applause.) The Society certainly deserved all the support which was accorded it by the county magistrates. Looking at the fact of their having just voted a sum of money which reduced their balance at the bank considerably, the Society still stood in need of support and subscriptions, and everyone who felt an interest in this important work would, he hoped, continue their subscriptions, in order that the useful operations of the Society might be carried on. (Applause.)

Colonel Cox briefly seconded the motion, which was carried by acclamation, and the proceedings terminated.

BRIGHTON CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

We take the following from the Sussex Daily News, April 19, 1876:—

The following cases were brought before the Committee during the week ending Saturday last, April 15:—

No. 1464: A woman, who married a man who had been imprisoned for deserting his first wife, applied for assistance. Her husband, a painter, has been away more than six months, and is supposed to be in a neighbouring county. The Guardians have given the woman an order for the workhouse, of which she refuses to take advantage. A parish case that ought not to be interfered with, and therefore ineligible.—No. 1465: A clerk, who left a good situation because of his wife's illness, came to Brighton in the hope of getting employment in a more salubrious locality. As yet he has not succeeded, and is in great distress. Grant of 10s. for pressing necessities, and inquiry to be made of his late employer.—No. 1466: Inquiry as to the character and circumstances of a woman for whom an appeal was made to the charitable in the Times newspaper by a lady now in Brighton. A gentleman has given 10s. Deferred for further information, that the Committee may ascertain whether they ought to recommend the case or not.—No. 1467: The friends of a woman of good character are anxious to raise a sum of money for her benefit. Reported to the inquirer, who immediately sent a donation of £2, to be laid out at the discretion of the Committee.

Recurrent Cases.—No. 228: A man and his wife, who might get a good living but for their want of energy and perseverance. Again declared ineligible.—No. 808: A very undeserving case, and reported as such again and again.—No. 1387: A respectable workman in want of temporary assistance. Grant of 5s., to which a member of the Committee added 2s. 6d.—No. 1426: The Bristol begging-letter impostor again. His appeals are written as if they came from respectable women in deplorable circumstances, and are generally addressed to military men or their wives. The Bristol Society to be written to, and full particulars forwarded to the parties who received the appeals, and who, instead of complying at once with the request contained in them, sent them to the office for investigation. If this plan were generally adopted, begging-letter writing would soon cease to be the profitable trade it now is.—No. 1462: In the hope of getting a more favourable report, this person sent a long list of references to the office, and requested that his case may be reconsidered. The request was granted, but the original decision was confirmed.

Sixty-three wayfarers, pleading hunger and in search of work, were relieved with bread, which was eaten in the office, 182 Edward Street.

. The benevolent are cautioned against the acts of the many professional impostors who are either personally or by letter infesting Brighton at the present time. Inquiry is the only safeguard, and with a Charity Organisation Society in the town, information can be procured with little trouble and at no cost by all who wish to give as they ought to give—intelligently, and with proper moral caution, to none but really deserving objects.

OXFORD PROVIDENT DISPENSARY.—A Provident Dispensary has recently been established at Oxford, 'to prevent the abuses which are known so commonly to arise from an indiscriminate use of the out-patient system of hospitals and of free dispensary tickets: to promote a method by which those who are above the position of paupers, and yet are not able wholly to pay the expenses of medical attendance from their own earnings, may be encouraged and assisted to make provision against the time of sickness: to discountenance mendicancy and pauperism: and to prevent serious disease and mortality by meeting sickness in its earliest stages.' The Dispensary is open to labourers and artisans, and their wives, widows, and children, not receiving Poor Law relief, and to small shopkeepers, and others whose circumstances shall, in the opinion of the Committee, render them eligible. Domestic servants, when considered eligible by the Committee of Management, pay 5s. per annum, in not less than half-yearly payments. The Hon. W. Sackville-West is chairman of the Committee of Management.

BECKENHAM CHARITABLE SOCIETY.—The subscribers to the Beckenham Benevolent Fund, at a meeting at the Parish Schoolhouse—the Rev. W. Cator in the chair—appointed a Committee to administer charitable relief in Beckenham 'by the joint action of clergy and laity in a systematic and uniform manner, so as to meet most economically and efficiently deserving cases of distress.' The Committee propose to carry out the principle of the resolution by the observance of the following rules:—(1) To grant relief without regard to religious distinctions; (2) to keep a record of all cases of relief, and of the results of inquiries into them by the Committee; (3) to investigate all applications for relief brought before the Committee by the clergy, district visitors, and others, and to determine the nature of the relief to be given; (4) to afford such assistance by means of judicious loans, by procuring employment and otherwise, as will benefit the poor permanently, and enable them to help themselves, and, so far as possible, to discontinue the practice of giving small doles, which are apt to injure the self-respect and independence of the recipients; (5) to endeavour to establish and keep up a system of communication with the Poor Law Guardians, upon whose province the Committee do not intend to encroach, and to whom all cases properly coming under the Poor Law should be referred. The Beckenham Benevolent Fund is now incorporated with the Beckenham Charitable Society.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

The Special Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles held their first and second meetings on April the 5th and 12th respectively, at the Central Office. There were present, at the first meeting, Sir J. Kay Shuttleworth, Bart. (in the chair), the Earl of Lichfield, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B., Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., Lieutenant-General Cavenagh; Drs. Bell Fletcher and Graham; Messrs. W. Millard, Danby P. Fry, Fletcher Beach, and C. S. Loch, Secretary.

The following resolution of Council of the 21st of June, 1875, was read:—That the Council, recognising the expediency of placing Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles on the most comprehensive and satisfactory footing, resolve that a Committee be formed to consider and report upon the whole subject, and that the resolutions now submitted by Sir Charles Trevelyan, together with the draft Bill submitted by Canon Hopkins, be referred to such Committee for their consideration.

Sir Charles then stated that since June last he had been led to modify the view taken in the six resolutions which he had submitted to the Council (see Reporter, vol. iv page 93). Those resolutions were based on the supposition that private charity was able to make adequate provision for Idiots and Imbeciles. Further study had convinced him that only 'through public administration' could comprehensive arrangements be made for those classes of the afflicted, and accordingly a summary of the existing legislative enactments for the care and education of imbeciles and idiots had been forwarded to each of the noblemen who had been asked to join the Committee. He had also drawn up a series of agenda, indicating the main points to which he thought the attention of the Committee should be directed.

The agenda were then read, and alterations and additions made, Sir Charles Trevelyan undertaking to submit an amended draft at the next meeting.

At the second meeting there were present: the Earl of Lichfield (in the chair), Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., Hon. C. H. Strutt, Lieutenant-General Cavenagh, Dr. Graham; Messrs. F. D. Mocatta, W. Millard, Danby P. Fry, and Howgrave Graham, Assistant Secretary.

The amended agenda were then considered and further alterations made, Sir Charles Trevelyan undertaking to send copies, together with a circular drafted by him and approved by the Committee, to all the members of the Committee.

It was also agreed that a letter should be written to the Foreign and Colonial Offices, with a view to obtaining information with regard to institutions in other countries.

The Committee adjourned to Wednesday, May 3, at 11 a.m.

MEETING OF CLERGY AND DISTRICT VISITORS.—A meeting will be held at 3 o'clock on Thursday, May 4, at which Miss Octavia Hill will read a paper dealing with the question of enabling volunteer visitors among the poor to render their work more valuable in raising the temporal condition of the poor. The meeting will be a private one, held, by the kind permission of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol and Mrs. Ellicott, at 35 Great Cumberland Place, Portman Square; but as it is desired to secure the attendance of influential visitors, of the clergy, and of others connected with Visiting Societies, and representing as many districts in and near London as possible, invitations will, on application to Miss Octavia Hill, 14 Nottingham Place, W., be forwarded to those desirous of being present.

MR. GLADSTONE ON THE 'SYSTEM OF ELECTION FOR CHARITIES.'—It appears, from the Medical Press and Circular, that at the meeting held at the Mansion House, on behalf of Mrs. Gladstone's Convalescent Home at Woodford, Mr. Gladstone moved the following resolution:—'That, to render convalescent homes available to the poorer classes, the system of privileged tickets, entailing canvassing and delay, should be dispensed with; and he then went on to say: 'He belonged to that section of the community who believed that the system of election for charities, with the extensive operations it entails, is a most ingeniously contrived machine for intercepting on their way to other benevolent ends a large portion of the aims of the community.' 'These observations,' says the Medical Press and Circular, 'were received with cheers, for it has become more apparent of late that a grievous wrong must be done, more particularly with regard to convalescent homes, if applicants are compelled to exhaust their strength and means in a vain endeavour to obtain letters of admission to their benefits; and we believe, with Mr. Gladstone, that it is both wise and prudent that admission to hospitals, and indeed all institutions established for the afflicted classes, should be according to the urgency and need, and perfectly free—free in this way, that every man should be able for himself to put forward his claims to the benefit of the institution, and that there should be no competition as to coming within its doors, but the competition of the greatest merit—that is to say, of the greatest need.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of April 1876 was 35,821, and 47,426 received outdoor relief, making a total of 83,247. This was a decrease of 766 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 9,124, 18,628 and 27,234 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 556. This was an increase of 77 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 74 on the corresponding day of last year.

LADY GUARDIANS.—Miss Collett, an Hon. Secretary of the St. Pancras (South) Committee, has recently been elected a Guardian for one of the wards of St. Pancras, having been returned at the head of the poll.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL
BY THE
SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 176.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 3, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

Brown, Esq., Lambeth; F. Green, Esq., Battersea; S. Etches, Esq., Clapham; T. Galabin, Esq., Camberwell; F. D. Mocatta, Esq., W. M. Wilkinson, Esq., Vice-Presidents; Lieut.-Gen. Cavenagh, A. H. Hill, Esq., Vice-Chairmen; Sir Charles Trevelyan, J. W. Willis-Bund, Esq., G. Blount, Esq., S. Fuller, Esq., C. A. Miner, Esq., W. Wightman Wood, Esq., Additional Members.—Total, 48. H. Howgrave Graham, Esq., Assistant Secretary. J. Johnstone, Esq., A. C. Mitchell, Esq., Visitors.

BOARDING-OUT IN SCOTLAND.

Sir Charles Trevelyan presented a copy of a treatise by Mr. Skelton, Secretary to the Poor Law Board in Scotland, on the boarding-out of pauper children; and remarked that the advantage of bringing up pauper orphans in family life was now going to have the force of law given to it by a clause in the Government Bill for amending the Poor-Law of Scotland, which provided that no orphan or deserted child, or child separated from its parents, being between three and twelve years of age, is to be detained in a poor-house longer than three months, unless the medical officer certifies that its health would suffer by removal; and that all such children are to be boarded, as far as possible, in rural districts, and with persons of their own religion, under rules to be approved by the Secretary of State. Sir C. Trevelyan also presented a short collection of papers on the comparative cost of district pauper schools and the boarding-out system, copies of which have been sent to all the Boards of Guardians in England and Wales. He advocated, in conclusion, the extension of the boarding-out system.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE COUNCIL.

The Chairman drew the attention of the Council to their financial position. He pointed out that at this time last year the balance of the General Fund was £1,095, and that of the District Committee Aid Fund £264. At that time the larger outstanding claims on the General Fund had, in most cases, been met; whereas, at the present date, nearly the whole of the available balance of the General Fund would be required for present liabilities, whilst the balance of the District Committee Aid Fund was only £15. He estimated that during the next six months about £1,000 would be required for the poorer Committees, and about £1,800 for the general purposes of the Council, and he did not think that much more would be obtained by means of the appeal recently issued by the St. George's Committee. Lord Lichfield said, in conclusion, that he would recommend the financial position of the Society to the very serious consideration of those members of Council who felt satisfied with the present mode of collecting funds.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the two weeks ending April 22 the receipts had been £7. 1s. for the General Fund, and £5. 5s. for the District Committee Aid Fund; and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £168. 4s. 9d. and £80. 12s. 5d. respectively.

GRANTS.—Grants of £30, £40, £15, £45, and £35 were made to the Fulham, Whitechapel, Islington, Bethnal Green, and Mile End Committees respectively.

SCHOOL BOARD CASES.*—The Returns of School Board Cases dealt with by the District Committees during the quarter ending March 31, had been referred to the Sub-Committee on District Work for their consideration.

ELECTION OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

On the motion of Mr. J. R. Hollond, the following members of Council were elected members of the Administrative Committee for the present year:—

The Earl of Lichfield, Lady Wilson, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Lieut.-General Cavenagh, Major Fitz-Roy, Major Prendergast, Major Yard, Captain Fortescue, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Miss Collett, Messrs. Douglas Brown, Q.C., F. J. S. Edgcombe, S. Fuller, J. R. Hollond, A. H. Hill, C. A. Miner, H. B. Praed, M. B. Praed, E. Peters, C. Stevens.

OUTDOOR RELIEF.

Mr. J. R. Hollond then moved:—

That this Council, considering that it is imperatively required, in the interests of the poor, that the Poor Law should be administered with a view to the ultimate abolition of outdoor relief, recommends its District Committees to co-operate with Boards of Guardians in the following way:—

1. By recommending to them for relief only such cases as they consider suitable for indoor relief in its various forms.
2. By taking off their hands, as far as possible, all such cases of temporary distress as are not suitable for indoor relief—e.g., cases of sickness where it is not advisable to compel the patient to enter the infirmary.
3. By referring to them only those School Board cases in which, from the character or circumstances of the parents, it is advisable that the children should be taken into the District Schools; all other cases being considered within the jurisdiction of charity, to be dealt with on the ordinary principles of the Society.

Mr. Hollond said he would in the first place, point out that there were two prevalent theories as to the duties of Guardians. One was that they should be pressed to do all that they legally can undertake in the way of outdoor relief; the other, that that they should be pressed in all cases to offer indoor relief, while outdoor relief should, as much as possible, be relegated to other agencies. The first theory tended unduly to increase outdoor relief—the second to substitute charitable for State relief. The District Committees were, of course, in constant communication and co-operation with the Boards of Guardians; it was therefore most important that this co-operation should assume the best possible form. It would be seen that his resolution was not an abstract proposition; its intention was to lay down certain definite principles for the guidance of the Committees. Mr. Hollond then stated the chief objections to the outdoor relief system. Outdoor relief is generally given to the sick, the aged, and to the children of able-bodied widows. He would say, with regard to the sick, that, owing to the circumstances of their homes, such of the sick poor as usually received outdoor relief would be much better off in the infirmary, and medical relief was but too often the first step to other relief. With regard to the aged, there existed in some Unions a half-recognised rule, that persons over 60 years of age were eligible for outdoor relief. He was in favour of offering the house more freely in cases of all kinds. In Wellington Union, where, in 647 cases, this had been done, in only 27 was the offer accepted. Relatives came forward, work was found, other agencies assisted, and the number of cases gradually dwindled. With regard to the children of able-bodied widows, he was strongly in favour of giving indoor relief to one or more of them, rather than of affording outdoor relief to the whole family. Mr. Hollond supported his views by quoting the opinions of Mr. Corbet, Poor-Law Inspector, and of Mr. Lyle and Mr. Jones, both relieving officers of large experience; and, lastly, he called attention to the enormous diminution of out-relief cases in Whitechapel, and to the paper read on this subject by the Rev. S. A. Barnett at the Conference of London Guardians held last year. Mr. Barnett had stated that out of 167 cases in which outdoor relief had been stopped, 77 were no worse off for its withdrawal; 52 had been enabled to support themselves, only 10 had been admitted to the workhouse, and only 8 were 'not supposed to be doing well.' But even in these eight cases there were other causes of failure. On these and on other grounds, he maintained that the outdoor relief system was opposed to the true interests of the poor. It was, owing to the fluctuating policy of Boards of Guardians, uncertain, and therefore deceptive. If charity took its place, charity must perforce become organised, and lastly, as a matter of economy, very large sums would be saved to the ratepayers. He thought, therefore, that the Committees would do well to recommend cases to the Guardians for indoor, not for outdoor relief. In conclusion Mr. Hollond alluded to suggestions that had been made with reference to the best practical modes of abolishing out-relief, and pointed out that, while the out-relief system was strongly condemned by those who introduced the Amended Poor Laws of 1834, yet at that time a change would have been less advisable than at present.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, in seconding the motion, would draw special attention to the way in which the labour market was overstocked with the very class to whom outdoor relief was most abundantly given. The wages given to widows engaged in various kinds of labour were quite inadequate to their support. He would remind members that the Parochial Councils in the district of St. George's, Hanover Square, and the Committee of the Society for the same district, had, by their pension-funds, already taken off the rates, after careful investigation, a large number of the most deserving and most provident outdoor paupers.

After a few words from Mr. A. H. Hill, in support of the motion, Mr. Edgcombe moved the following amendment:—

That this Council, considering that it is imperatively required, in the interests of the poor, that Poor Law Relief should be given only with a full knowledge of the character and circumstances of applicants and their families, recommends District Committees to offer every facility to Boards of Guardians for conducting the necessary inquiries.

He dwelt upon the success that would attend thorough investigation of cases, and thought that Mr. Hollond's objections applied to unwise administration of the outdoor relief system, not to the system itself.

Mr. Seton-Karr seconded the amendment.

Mr. Maurice supported the original motion; and Mr. Russell Barrington, while agreeing entirely with Mr. Hollond as to the spirit of his motion, was doubtful if the mode in which he proposed to carry it into effect was the safest. He thought, too, that 'pension charities' had a dangerous tendency, and he would rather see chronic cases taken charge of by private persons. Feeling that the right time for the line of action proposed was not yet come, he would conclude by moving the previous question.

This was seconded by Mr. Willis-Bund, who pointed out that Mr. Hollond's motion was totally opposed to the principles hitherto laid down by the Society.

Mr. W. Wightman Wood, Major Prendergast, the Rev. H. Mallet, and others supported the motion.

Mr. Bousfield, Mr. Fuller, and Mr. Mocatta thought the proposed action premature; and Mr. Lavers Smith dwelt upon the difficulty which the Whitechapel Committee had, for want of funds, felt in dealing with certain cases to which the Guardians had refused out-relief.

Mr. Hollond then replied. He explained that there was no intention of dictating any course to Boards of Guardians; he simply hoped that District Committees might be recommended not to urge the Guardians to give outdoor relief.

Some policy ought to be definitely laid down and followed, and, while recognising the difficulties which beset the Committees in many districts, he still thought that they could, at any rate, refrain from pressing upon the Guardians extensions of the out-relief system. He would point out that it was not to charity but to increased wages, and to more provident and independent habits among the poor, that he looked for the adequate maintenance of those who, under the present system, received outdoor relief. Nor did he advocate the immediate abolition of out-relief; such an advance must be made gradually. But he thought it the duty of the Society to give the movement all the help they could, and, at any rate, to see that their action was not in the wrong direction.

The previous question was put and lost by 9 votes against 10. Mr. Edgcombe's amendment was then put and lost.

Mr. Hollond's motion being put, 11 votes were given for and 11 against it. The Chairman then gave his casting-vote in favour of the motion, which was therefore carried.

The Council then adjourned.

The following contributions have been received during the week ending Saturday, April 29, 1876:—Donations: St. George's Committee, £250; Sir George R. Phillips, Bart., £50.—Annual: Rev. W. J. Pinckney, £1. 1s.; W. Sharlock, Esq., £1.; Col. Smith, R.E., £1. 1s.—District Committees Aid Fund: Francis Peek, Esq. (2nd instalment of £3,000), £300; Kensington Committee, £100; Sir Charles H. Lowther, Bart., £3.

The following business stands for Monday, May 8:—

Mr. Willis-Bund to call attention to the Poor Law Amendment Bill, and to move:—

'That it be an instruction to the Administrative Committee to take such steps as may be deemed advisable to secure alteration in the proposed amendment in the laws as to removal and settlement proposed by that Bill.'

ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

At their meeting to-morrow (Thursday) the Administrative Committee will consider the general resolution of Council with regard to Fraudulent Charities (see Reporter, No. 168).

MEETING AT WOOLWICH.

A meeting of the Woolwich Committee of the Charity Organisation Society was held at the Masonic Hall, Woolwich, on Wednesday evening, Col. Oldfield, R.A., in the chair. The Earl of Lichfield, the Hon. and Rev. A. J. R. Anson (Rector), the Rev. W. H. Pritchett, Rev. J. White, Rev. J. Bond, Rev. H. R. Baker, Rev. T. Sissons, Col. Brackenbury, Col. Bruce, Messrs. G. White, J. Taylor, C. Curtoys, S. Topley, Howgrave Graham, and others were present.

The meeting was well attended.

The Chairman briefly opened the proceedings, alluding to the Society as one of the most useful in England.

The Rev. W. H. Pritchett, Rural Dean, said that the Woolwich Committee was started in the early part of 1872. During nine months of that year no less than 3,492 persons were received into the casual wards of the Woolwich Union. In the corresponding nine months of 1873, after the Committee had begun its work, the number was reduced by nearly 500. The effect of their operations was then so much appreciated by the Local Government Board, that they gave orders to the guardians to diminish by one-half the cost of the extra casual wards which they were then erecting. If this was all the Society had done they would have merited, in some degree, the confidence and support of the Union; but how had the work been carried on? He had made inquiries of the authorities, and found that they were still causing a diminution in the number of casuals received, although at not so great a rate. Last year the average number per week was 47, the year before 53, and the year before that 85. In the first three weeks of April 1873 there were 308 casuals received; in the corresponding period of 1874, 164; in 1875, 120; and in 1876, 102. From this he would venture to say that the Society, as judged from the reports of others, was doing a valuable work. If necessary, however, he might refer to their own reports, which showed equally satisfactory results. Soon after the committee was formed a large reduction took place in the number employed at the Arsenal, and the committee were then enabled to bear one-third of the cost of sending a number of the young women to work in mills in other parts. The results of the efforts of the Committee, if judged by the grants made, would not appear very extensive; but there were other parts of the work which ought to be considered, and amongst the rest the most useful practice of granting loans. Under these circumstances it would be seen that they were still trying to do their duty, and that their machinery was in such order as to be ready for any emergency, provided only that they were supplied with the necessary lubricant—money. He would remark that, although there were about 40 members on the Committee, it was gradually becoming a body composed of clergymen of the Church of England. This, he thought, should not be, and they particularly wished the representatives of other congregations to take a part in the work. A sad vacancy had been caused in the Committee by the death of their chairman, the late Canon Brown, who had filled the office in the most kind, and at the same time efficient and businesslike manner. By the motion he was about to make he would now beg to nominate, as the successor of the late Chairman, the Hon. and Rev. A. J. R. Anson, their present excellent hardworking Rector. (Applause). The Rev. W. Pritchett concluded by moving the adoption of the Report, together with the reappointment of the members of Committee.

The Rev. T. Sissons, Rectory Place Congregational Chapel, seconded the motion, corroborating all that the previous speaker had said with regard to the late Canon Brown, and expressed the gratification it afforded him to see that they had one so highly qualified for the post to take his place. He excused his recent non-attendance at committee meetings by stating that he had the largest 'parish' of any minister present, with no helper; but he promised that for the future he would do his best to attend. He remarked that during a year before the establishment of the Committee about 1,800 persons called at his door for relief; but now he was not troubled with a caller more than once in a fortnight. The object of the Society was not, he pointed out, to limit relief, but to extend its sphere, to do away with mendicity, and not only to give in cases of known need, but to find out such cases. The deepest poverty was often that which would not ask for relief. (Applause.)

The resolution was carried unanimously.

The Earl of Lichfield said the object of that meeting was to obtain increased support for the local Committee of the Charity Organisation Society. As to the work which that Committee had done, they were probably the best judges; but if they would allow him, as one who had taken an active part in the movement from the first, he would say a few words on the subject generally, afterwards referring to one or two points in the report which he thought deserving of attention. He would begin by alluding to the reasons which induced the action of those who promoted the establishment of the Society. Few persons who had considered the difficult problem of the treatment of the poor could fail to be struck by the state of things existing in this huge metropolis and its suburbs, where we have a vast population and an enormous proportion of pauperism. Any person, too, who saw the state of things there—the number and variety of the means which were adopted by persons and charitable agencies for the treatment of the poor—could scarcely fail to notice that something like system and organisation was wanting in the art of dealing with the poor about London. It was this that induced those who first took an interest in the movement to establish what has since been called the Charity Organisation Society. The object of that Society was simply to bring about intercommunication and co-operation between all persons, of all sects and denominations, who were working in the true interests of the poor throughout London; for they felt sure that without that system of co-operation it was utterly impossible that any effective plan could be adopted for improving the condition of the poor generally and permanently. Perhaps the most important feature in this movement was the necessity for that co-operation being general, and entirely without any distinction of sect or denomination. At the meetings which took place upon this subject they were apt to hear too much about the suppression of mendicity, and too little about the higher objects of the Society. They were probably fully aware that without the suppression of mendicity and imposture it was impossible to deal effectually with the poor; but at the same time they had far higher and nobler objects in view than the mere getting rid of a nuisance. They wished to establish habits of self-reliance and providence amongst the poor, by the mode in which they dealt with the cases which were brought before them; they knew that there was nothing which was so much calculated to discourage these habits as to let people think they can have for the asking. (Hear, hear.) This state of things had arisen through people never having taken the trouble to make inquiries about those whom they relieved. It had been the case too long, and if the Society had only succeeded—as he believed it had—in calling the attention of the public to the necessity of this inquiry, with a view of effectually relieving where it was really deserving, then the Society had done a work well worth accomplishing. That, he believed it had done, and he thought he might say that the real principle at the root of the work which was to be done by them was to give as little as you possibly can without the fullest inquiry; to take care that you do not encourage, by a system of useless doles, a chronic state of pauperism on the part of the person relieved, which leads to utter demoralisation; and to give relief in such a way that it may be a real benefit to the person on whom it is bestowed. This latter might be done in various ways, one of the most effectual of which was the system of loans; for it often happened that people were placed in such a position by misfortune that a few shillings would be of no use to them, whereas the loan of a sum which would enable them to tide over the difficulty would be of permanent benefit. By that system much might be effected, but still more might be done by directly promoting habits of providence among the people, and by encouraging institutions which were calculated to enable persons to put by for a rainy day. He had seen something of the working of Provident Dispensaries, and he believed that nothing could be more successful in raising the condition of the poor. He was of opinion that there was wanted in Woolwich an active working committee, who would undertake to visit the poor at their own homes, and in that way ascertain where the machinery of the Society might be really effectually applied. No doubt very few of the cases which would then be discovered would ever be found begging for money at people's doors. He noticed in their report that a large number of persons were merely relieved by being sent to the office with a ticket for bread. So large was this number, indeed, that there were only 138 other cases which had been dealt with. This being the case, and numbers of these being found undeserving, it might be remarked that the cost has been excessively large. No doubt it was, for the cost of the machinery of the Society here was nearly 16s. a head upon the cases dealt with. It was not, however, altogether fair to judge of the work of the Society by the statement given in the report, for there was a great deal more in what a society of that description prevented than there was in what it actually did. In various parts of London the Society now had branches which were doing a most excellent work, and not, as was sometimes supposed, interfering with the action of other charitable agencies. They desired to bring these institutions together, and to co-operate with them in every way in their power, but not to interfere with the work which they have made their own. The Society did not, for a moment, pretend to be a relief society, for it was an association for obtaining efficient relief from other sources. It could only be by bringing these other sources together that they could give effectual relief, for no one charitable institution could deal with these cases so as to be of any permanent benefit. It was only by co-operation and intercommunication, upon the broadest and most liberal principle, that they could secure the improvement they desired to see effected in the condition of the poor of London. He believed that the Society was deserving, not only of every support they could give it in the way of funds, but of their active co-operation and assistance in the work which they desired to do. In conclusion, he moved, 'That the Charity Organisation Society, having for its object the encouragement of habits of self-reliance and providence among the poor, is deserving of increased support in this neighbourhood.' (Loud applause.)

Lieut.-Colonel Brackenbury, C.B., R.A., seconded the motion. He especially urged upon the laymen present to do their parts in the work, for there were strong reasons why they should not leave the distribution of charity altogether in the hands of the clergy, for in this way there was a danger of promoting hypocrisy on the part of the recipients; and another reason why they should take some of the work out of the hands of the clergy was that it would leave that body more time for the nobler work which they had to do. (Hear, hear.) Beyond this there were urgent reasons why the laity should take this matter up, for the great question before them was the growing conflict between wealth and pauperism. No man could say that it was to the credit of the country that, while cloth and fabrics are being made in England for the whole world, we have millions of people in rags; that while coals have been dug up to a vast extent, people are left to perish with cold; and that, while the ships in our harbours are filled with the produce of every nation, many perish from hunger. (Applause.) Certain classes were fast coming to the understanding of these matters themselves. An intelligent force must be brought to bear upon them, and of all means of so grappling with the question none had so much commended itself to him as the Charity Organisation Society. (Applause.) It enabled them to find out—(1) that class of the aged, infirm, and permanently sick, who ought most unquestionably to be helped by the State; (2) those who were deserving of no help, and ought to be forced to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow; and (3) the deserving poor. The Society would, if accorded the support which it deserved, be enabled to extend its sphere in many ways, and he called upon all present to join them in this great work. (Applause.)

Mr. Howgrave Graham supported the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

The Hon. and Rev. A. J. R. Anson thanked the meeting for appointing him Chairman of the Committee, and said it would give him much pleasure to do what he could for its welfare. (Applause.) He also thanked Colonel Brackenbury for his advice to the laity, and added that in Woolwich there was required a greater co-operation between the different charitable agencies. If this were done, and Mr. Sissons and those connected with other places of worship would join in it, a far greater work might be carried on in the town generally. (Applause.) He concluded by moving a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

Mr. G. Whale seconded the resolution, which was duly carried.

The Chairman, in replying, moved a vote of thanks to the Earl of Lichfield for his excellent address. This was seconded by Mr. S. C. Harrington, and carried unanimously.

Lord Lichfield replied, and the proceedings then closed.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of April 1876 was 35,653, and 46,944 received outdoor relief, making a total of 82,597. This was a decrease of 650 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 9,200, 18,233, and 26,951 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 694. This was an increase of 138 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 220 on the corresponding day of last year.

NOTICE TO DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

The attention of the Committees in the poorer districts is drawn to the following recommendations of the Administrative Committee with regard to 'Exceptional Cases,' which were passed by Council on April 10:—

1. That the Administrative Committee are prepared to consider exceptional cases, in which a District Committee may not be able to obtain so large a sum as may be required to enable it to secure 'fitting action.'

2. That the Administrative Committee will consider the advisability of obtaining the assistance required in such cases, by advertisement or otherwise.

3. That such cases should only be referred to the Administrative Committee by District Committees when they have exhausted every means in their power to obtain the required assistance by private influence, or by reference to charities.

4. That if the Administrative Committee decide to advertise, the decision as to the form of the advertisement will be left to the Administrative Committee, due consideration being given to any suggestions of the District Committees.

5. That the Administrative Committee think it highly inexpedient that such cases be advertised in any papers without the previous approval of the Administrative Committee.

IMPROVED DWELLINGS.

Some papers were laid upon the table relating to the Metropolitan Artizans' and Labourers' Dwellings Association. They had been sent by Mr. H. B. Praed, who had wished to draw the attention of the members of Council to the merits of the scheme in question.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending April 29 the receipts had been £303. 2s. for the General Fund, and £603 for the District Committee Aid Fund; and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £211. 5s. 10d. and £18. 12s. 5d. respectively.

COLLECTIONS IN PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Mr. Du Pré Thornton moved for a return showing the number of places of worship in which collections had, during the year ending September 30, 1875, been made on behalf of the District Committees.

The motion was agreed to.

THE LAW OF SETTLEMENT.*

Mr. Willis-Bund moved—

That it be an instruction to the Administrative Committee to take such steps as may be deemed advisable to secure alteration in the proposed amendment in the laws as to removal and settlement proposed by that Bill. He explained that the Bill proposed to abolish all 'derived' or secondary settlements, and to substitute for them settlement by birth. This was a most important change in the law, and must, he thought, inflict much hardship, if carried out. He cited, as an illustration, a case occurring in 1874, in which a journeyman tailor, who had resided for forty-five years in Birmingham, was admitted into the workhouse, and worked there at his trade, under the superintendence of the master-tailor. A few months later the pauper was authorised by him to accept an offer of employment made to him by a tailor residing in a neighbouring parish, and was assured that he might return to the house, if he and his employer did not agree. At the end of ten weeks he returned on that account, but having broken his residence, he was removed to Worcester, his place of birth. The removal was appealed against, but confirmed by the Court of Queen's Bench. This was an instance of the kind of hardship and suffering which might be inflicted by such an Act as the one in question. Persons were to be removed from places where they had friends, and had long been known, to parishes where they had no friends and were helpless and hopeless. Mr. Willis-Bund thought the new law would tend to an increase in the number of indoor paupers, and pointed out the complications that might arise in cases of migration, such as those undertaken by the Society.

Mr. A. H. Hill, in seconding the motion, said that he thought the total abolition of the law of settlement would, perhaps, be the most satisfactory solution of the question. Many of the relieving officers were, he knew, in favour of this plan.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson supported the view taken by Mr. Hill.

Mr. Bousfield thought that the Council should pause before coming to any decision on so important a point.

After a few words from the Chairman, Mr. Willis-Bund explained that his hope was that the full consideration of the question would be referred to the Administrative Committee. If permitted, he would, however, withdraw his present motion, and give notice of the following motions for next Monday:—

1. That, in the opinion of this Council, the law of renewal and settlement presses with great hardship upon the poor, and that it is desirable, instead of amending the same, to take steps for its total abolition at the earliest possible moment.

2. That it be referred to the Administrative Committee to take steps to bring this resolution before Her Majesty's Government.

The motion was then withdrawn, and the Council adjourned.

The following business stands for Monday, May 15:—

I. Mr. Willis-Bund to move—

'That no action be taken in carrying out Mr. Holland's resolution, passed on the 1st of May 1876, on Outdoor Relief, until after the first meeting of the Council in October.'

II. Mr. Willis-Bund to move—

(1.) 'That, in the opinion of this Council, the law of removal and settlement presses with great hardship upon the poor; and that it is desirable, instead of amending the same, to take steps for its total abolition at the earliest possible moment.'

(2.) 'That it be referred to the Administrative Committee to take steps to bring this resolution before Her Majesty's Government.'

* See Reporter, June 10, 1874.

III. Mr. Wilkinson to call the attention of the Council to the financial condition and prospects of the Society, as indicated in the statement of the Earl of Lichfield.*

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

At their meeting to-morrow (Thursday) the Administrative Committee will consider the following resolution of Council, passed on April 24:—

'That it be referred to the Administrative Committee to re-arrange the business of its Standing Committees, with a view to their being utilised to the utmost practicable extent.'

The following contributions were received during the week ending May 6:—Donations: J. Francis Austen, Esq., £21; Mrs. Greenwood, 10s. 6d.; Marquis of Lansdowne, £25; Duke of Norfolk, £100; Hon. Mrs. W. Tomline, £5.—Annual: A. P. Fletcher, Esq., £5. 6s.; Mrs. H. Gillson, £1; Lieut.-Col. Gillum, £1. 1s.; G. J. Graham, Esq., £2. 2s.; W. B. James, Esq., £1. 1s.; H. Long, Esq., £1. 6s. 6d.—District Committee Aid Fund: G. A. Birn, Esq., £100; 'C. J. C.', £5; Francis Peck, Esq., £300 (2nd instalment of £3,000); St. Marylebone Committee, £25.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of April, 1876, was 35,318, and 46,405 received outdoor relief, making a total of 81,723. This was a decrease of 874 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 9,341, 18,721, and 26,355 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 631. This was a decrease of 63 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 166 on the corresponding day of last year.

SOCIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

ocial Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles held its meeting on Wednesday last, at the Central Office. There were present: Mr. Lichfield (in the chair), Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., Sir Rutherford B. C.B., the Hon. C. H. Strutt, Albert Pell, Esq., M.P., Dr. Cameron, J. Kay-Shuttleworth, Esq., M.P., Lieut.-General Cavenham, the Hon. J. Simpson, Drs. W. Brewer, J. Langdon Down, Bell Fletcher, Dr. H. Tuke, W. C. Cortis, Fletcher Beach; Messrs. H. J. Cropper, W. Millard, F. Purdy, Danby P. Fry, F. D. Mocatta, Mr. Wilkinson, and Mr. Howgrave Graham, Assistant Secretary. The section of the Agenda, as settled at the two previous meetings, 'General Statistics,' was considered. It was resolved, after discussion, that the inquiry of the Committee should be under the name of 'Harmless Lunatics,' to persons demented after infancy, and the title of the Committee was amended accordingly.

1 and 2, viz. 'Nature of Infirmity' and 'Number of Idiots and Imbeciles,' were discussed in detail. Under the 3rd head, 'Where Placed,' the Committee, after considering statistics at their disposal, found it impossible to arrive at any conclusion. Under the 4th head, 'Idiocy and Imbecility, how far preventable or capable of improvement,' was discussed. The Committee considered the 5th head, 'How far capable of improvement,' and the following resolution was agreed to:—
That a small proportion may be made self-supporting; that a further proportion may be trained to do some useful work; and that, as a rule, the habits of the remainder can be improved so as to make them happier to themselves and less burdensome to others.

HOME FOR WORKING BOYS.—The Committee of the Dudley-Stuart Home have arranged to use a part of their premises as a Home for Working Boys. The following classes of boys are stated to be eligible for admission: 'Orphans; sons of parents living in the country, and having no friends in London; sons of parents where, owing to poverty, the family is overcrowded; sons with bad homes.' The boys must, as a rule, be between 12 and 16. The minimum charge for board, lodging, and washing will be 6s. 6d. a week, subject to a deduction of 5d. a day in the case of such boys as are unable to dine at the Home. The boys will provide themselves with their own clothing, and will be encouraged to make weekly deposits in the Post Office Savings Bank.

MENDICANCY AND THRIFT.—The following cases are taken from the Times and the Daily Telegraph:—

Fanny Martin, 45, was charged with begging in Fleet Street. She was described as a seamstress, and had a somewhat haggard appearance. The constable who took her into custody said she stopped several little children in Fleet Street as if she was begging. He also saw her accost gentlemen and stretch out her hands. At the station 9s. 5d. in silver and copper was found upon her, with a banking book. Sir Robert Carden, on examining the book, said it was a new book. The amount brought forward from the old book was £114. 8s. 8d., and the amount to her credit at present was £120. 14s. 5d. Why, then, did she go about begging? How did she earn all this money? The prisoner said she got it from her employers and worked hard for it. She had lost her husband four years ago. Sir Robert thought she must have been a very industrious woman, and if she went on like that she would soon have money enough to buy another husband. The prisoner said she did not want another husband. She had trouble enough with the deceased. Sir Robert Carden—reference to the directory having shown that she had given a correct address—discharged the prisoner, and ordered her money and bank book to be given up to her.—Times, March 24, 1876.

At Marylebone, a woman, about 28 years of age, who refused to give her name and address, was charged, on remand, with begging. It appeared that on the afternoon of the 30th ult. a constable on duty in the Euston Road had his attention called to the prisoner, whom he saw accost several ladies and gentlemen and receive money. When taken into custody she became very violent and abusive. At the first hearing she answered the questions put to her in such a manner that it was believed she was insane, and the magistrate sent her, under remand, to the House of Detention, in order that the surgeon might examine her. On Saturday, when she was again placed in the dock, it was stated that £6 odd in English silver money, ten gold foreign pieces, 77 silver foreign coins, and 84 American notes had been found in her possession. Mr. Smiles, the surgeon, reported that he had examined the prisoner and could detect no symptoms of insanity. During the hearing of the case the prisoner pretended she did not understand what was being said, but it was stated by the constable that she abused him partly in English, and she perfectly well knew what was going on. Nothing being known of the prisoner by the officers of the court, she was discharged.—Times, April 10, 1876.

James Branchford, a notorious beggar, has been sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment by the magistrates at Farnham. Twelve months ago he was sent to prison by the Aldershot magistrates for a year, for a similar offence. He is the owner of several houses and other property at Headley, Hants. When apprehended about 20s. in copper and silver was found on him, together with a banking book showing £14 to his credit in the Post-office Savings Bank at Aldershot. The magistrates ordered the forfeiture of these sums for defraying his keep in gaol. It has been ascertained that all his property has been acquired by begging.—Daily Telegraph, May 8, 1876.

METROPOLITAN ENDOWED CHARITIES.

SUPPLEMENTARY RETURN BY THE CHARITY COMMISSIONERS.—A return of the 'general charities' mentioned in the Fourteenth Report of the Commissioners has been obtained by Parliament. From a summary given at the end of the return it appears that the total gross income of these charities is £616,556. 5s. 5d. The 'objects of foundation, or purposes to which the income is applicable' are as follows:—Education, £147,839. 11s. 8d.; apprenticeship and advancement, £24,334. 9s. 9d.; endowment of clergy, lecturers, and for sermons, £35,215. 14s. 6d.; Church purposes, £1,551. 17s.; maintenance of Dissenting places of worship and their ministers, £23,913. 2s. 11d.; education of Dissenters, £9,281. 0s. 6d.; public uses, £2,901. 16s. 3d.; support of almshouses, their inmates, and pensioners, £140,345. 14s. 9d.; distribution of articles in kind, £804. 4s. 7d.; distribution of money, £16,566. 5s. 3d.; general uses of the poor, £26,954. 14s. 1d.; medical, £180,055. 6s. 6d.; loans, £886. 10s. The same return gives the total gross incomes of the London endowed hospitals and other institutions as follows:—St. Bartholomew's Hospital, £46,658. 3s. 4d., and the Samaritan Fund, £397. 14s. 6d.; the Charterhouse, £30,656. 0s. 11d.; Christ's Hospital, £53,110. 19s. 3d. (exclusive of several charities under the management of the Governors); King Edward's School, formerly the Bridewell Hospital, £8,634. 5s.; Bethlehem Hospital, £16,818. 7s. 4d.; and foundation for incurable patients, £7,314. 5s. 4d.; St. Thomas's Hospital, £39,832. 2s. 6d.; the Foundling Hospital, £11,465. 9s. 11d. (exclusive of the Benevolent Fund, £148. 4s. 8d.; and the Whately Fund, £22. 17s.); Guy's Hospital, £50,662. 5s. 10d.; St. Katherine's Hospital, £6,331. 10s. 4d.; St. Paul's Schools, £11,264. 16s. 10d.; St. Luke's Hospital, £4,476. 4s. 7d. There is also in the return a list of about forty charities under the Corporation of London.—Daily News, April 14, 1876.

RAINE'S CHARITY.—The Pall Mall Gazette gave, a short time since, an account of the original purpose of this charity, and of its reorganisation by the Charity Commissioners. It appears that in 1736 Henry Raine built upon his own land in Rawdon Fields, St. George's-in-the-East, two schools for the free education, with clothing, of 50 boys and 50 girls, together with residences for a master and mistress. The endowment, from additions, and from the increased value of property, has now become worth about £1,350, having nearly doubled itself during the last fifty years. The scheme of the Commissioners comprises a mixed preparatory day-school, a boys' day-school, and a day and boarding school for girls; and, in addition to the existing boys' day-school, buildings are to be provided for at least 100 day-scholars. The sum of £210 may still, under the founder's bequest, be annually expended on marriage portions and entertainments when required, but the old system of apprenticeship is abolished. Two sums of £150 and two of £60 are set aside for scholarships for boys and girls, and for exhibitions of £15 a year each, tenable at any place of higher education. Religious instruction, in accordance with the doctrines of the Church of England, will be given, and the girls will also learn machine-needlework and cookery.

GOOD FRIDAY GIFTS AT CITY CHURCHES.—The singular custom was observed on Good Friday, at St. Bartholomew-the Great, West Smithfield, of throwing down 21 sixpences on a stone in the churchyard, where the old women of the parish pick them up. The money is said to be the gift of a lady who was buried there, but the bequest is so ancient that no will can be traced, and even the exact place of her grave is not known. The custom is, however, well handed down by tradition, many people assembling each year to witness the ceremony. A number of street Arabs came on the scene, attracted by the report that 'tanners was to be given away,' but went away crestfallen when they found the bequest was limited to old women. The distribution was made by the Rev. J. Abbiss, Rector, and the Rev. G. A. Marshall, Curate.—The annual Good Friday sermon provided for by one Peter Symonds in his will, bearing date 1587, was preached at Allhallows, Lombard Street, by the Rev. Prebendary Mackenzie, who, taking for his text Hebrews ix. 22, 'Without shedding of blood is no remission,' delivered a short but able discourse appropriate to the day. At the close of the service the special provision made nearly three hundred years ago by the testator was duly carried out, some sixty or so of the younger boys of Christ's Hospital, the choir-boys of the church, and a few of the Sunday-school children being duly marshalled near the vestry-door, where, under the superintendence of Mr. Churchwarden Howden, each child received a new penny and a small packet of raisins, the representatives of the Sunday-school having a bun apiece in addition. Several of the poorer parishioners who were present were presented with a shilling each and a loaf.—City Press.

'STATION-HOUSE LODGERS' IN NEW YORK.—Writing, on the 10th ultimo, to the New York Tribune, Mr. Henry E. Pellw, of the New York Bureau of Charities, draws attention to the increase, during the last four years, in the number of vagrants to whom free lodging is given by the police, under conditions which, it appears, are far too easy. Mr. Pellw questions 'the expediency of providing free lodgings, under any but certain very exceptional cases, to those who are able, but unwilling, to work.' . . . A labour-test for these persons would, he suggests, 'immediately diminish their numbers, and, among other advantages, would give some chance of extending help and comfort to the few worthy cases occasionally to be found among them.' Mr. Pellw states that the average number of 'station-house lodgers' during the first three months of 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876 has been 614, 637, 978, 864, and 866 respectively, showing an increase of 41 per cent. in four years.

PAUPERISM AND ENDOWED CHARITIES.—The Vicar of a large town in Somersetshire says, in a recent letter: 'In this place very abundant endowments for charities, and a very large, though decreasing, expenditure on outdoor relief, go hand-in-hand.'

POOR LAW CONFERENCE IN THE EASTERN COUNTIES.—The English Labourer states that it has been arranged that a Poor Law Conference for the counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, and Essex shall be held at Whitsuntide in Ipswich—Lord Stradbroke to preside.

THE Charity Organisation Reporter.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL
BY THE
SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 178.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 17, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge each of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of a District Committee, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

NOTICES.

The Kensington Committee have re-elected their representatives.

The General Meetings of the Westminster (St. James's and St. Anne's) Committee will be held in future on Tuesday, at 5 p.m. A Decision-meeting will be held at the same hour on Friday and after the General Meeting on Tuesday.

In the absence of Major-Gen. Blunt, Mr. W. H. Birley has been elected a representative of the Marylebone Committee.

The Strand Committee have re-elected their representatives.

PADDINGTON COMMITTEE.—A Public Meeting in promotion of the objects of the Society was held this day (Wednesday, May 17), at 5 p.m., at the Lecture Hall, Gloucester Place; Chairman, the Right Hon. Russell Gurney, M.P., Recorder of London. The Earl of Lichfield, Mr. Arthur Mills, M.P., Mr. F. D. Mocatta, and others addressed the meeting.

Copies of the Notice with regard to Charitable Appeals from individuals and Institutions have been sent, according to their request, to 24 Committees for the purpose of being exhibited in Clubs, Hotels, Post Offices, and other places of public resort.

Members of Council desiring information with regard to Charities or to special cases are recommended, before asking questions at Council, to ascertain from the Organising Secretary what is already on record on the subject in the office.

NOTICE TO DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

The attention of District Committees is drawn to the following resolution of Council, passed on October 12, 1874, and to the discussion at that and at the previous meeting:—

That inasmuch as relief is not the primary work of the Society, the Council adheres to its plan of making the establishment expenses the primary objects of its subsidies, but does not therefore intend to prevent Committees giving grants of money out of the subsidies so granted, in the last resort, in conformity with the principles of the Society.

PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL.

THE Council of the Charity Organisation Society met at 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, on Monday, at 3 p.m.

Present: Alsager Hay Hill, Esq. (in the chair); J. Whitcombe, Esq., Miss Merington, F. J. S. Edgcombe, Esq., Kensington; Dr. Daniel, C. J. Stevens, Esq., Fulham; J. R. Hollond, Esq., Paddington; W. LETTERS FOR CONVALESCENT HOMES.

The Assistant Secretary stated that he had recently received, from the Poplar and from other Committees, requests for letters for Convalescent Homes, and that he had been unable to supply them, the stock at the Central Office being exhausted.

It was suggested that District Committees would do well to apply to Subscribers to such Institutions who reside in their districts.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending May 6 the receipts had been £163. 16s. for the General Fund, and £130 for the District Committee Aid Fund; and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £242. 18s. 7d. and £151. 4s. 1d. respectively.

GRANTS.—Grants of £40 and £30 had been made to the Islington and St. George's East Committees respectively.

CHAIRMANSHIP.—The Administrative Committee reported that they had elected Lieut.-Gen. Cavenagh and Mr. J. R. Hollond their Chairman and Vice-Chairman respectively.

QUARTERLY FINANCE SUB-COMMITTEE.—The Finance Sub-Committee had held their quarterly meeting. It appeared from their Report that, while there had been an increase of £138 in the receipts of the General Fund, as compared with the receipts for the corresponding quarter of 1875, there had been a decrease of £93 in the receipts of the District Committee Aid Fund. None of the amount advanced in former quarters from the General Fund to the District Committee Aid Fund had been repaid; but, on the contrary, a further loan of £231, and a grant of £188 (making together £419), had been made to this Fund from the General Fund. The Report pointed out that 'the unsatisfactory financial position of the Council may be attributed entirely to the continued drain upon its resources by the increasing demands of the subsidised District Committees,' and urged upon the Administrative Committee the necessity of putting the District Committee Aid Fund in a more satisfactory position. It was also stated that during the current quarter the condition of the General Fund would not enable it to respond, as it had hitherto done, to the claims made upon it by the District Committee Aid Fund. The Finance Sub-Committee drew attention to the matter, not with a view to the diminution of the amounts to be granted to the subsidised Committees, but in order to direct attention to the urgent necessity of immediate steps being taken to improve the financial position of the Society.

STANDING COMMITTEES.—The Administrative Committee had considered the resolution of Council on this subject, passed on April 24, and had determined to retain the present Sub-Committees, and to add to them a Sub-Committee on co-operation with Charities. Their scheme was, however, not yet completed as to details.

OUTDOOR RELIEF.

A letter from Mr. Willis-Bund was read, in which he stated that he was unavoidably prevented from being present, and expressed a hope that some member would take up the first resolution standing in his name, and that the Council would allow him to postpone his other motions to the next meeting.

Major Prendergast said that in Mr. Willis-Bund's absence he should have much pleasure in moving—

That no action be taken in carrying out Mr. Hollond's resolutions, passed on the 1st of May 1876, on Outdoor Relief, until after the first meeting of the Council in October.

He felt that the matter was of such importance that the Society should use the greatest deliberation in approaching it. The plan of the Society had always hitherto been to use the Poor Law as it is, and to co-operate in every way with the Guardians. He deprecated any but a gradual change.

Dr. Daniel seconded the motion.

Sir C. E. Trevelyan urged that a decision having been arrived at after a full discussion, and the motion being a general one, there was no reason for delaying such action as might prove expedient. He concluded by moving the previous question, which was seconded by Mr. Maurice.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson was in favour of delay. The strongest reason was that the resolutions of Mr. Hollond were only carried by a casting-vote, and passed at a time when few members were present. Under such circumstances it behoved the Council to pause before putting into practice a principle only rescued from rejection by a majority of one.

After some discussion, in which the Rev. J. D. McGachen, Mr. Mocatta, and others joined,

Mr. Hollond urged that to carry out his resolutions the Committees would not have to make such an alteration in their practice as some members supposed. He pointed out that his first resolution was practically negative. According to its terms the Committees were in future to abstain from 'recommending to the Guardians' cases for out-relief. He would point out that very few such cases appeared under this head in the returns of the Committees. His next resolution, he maintained, applying only to cases of temporary distress, pointed clearly to a class of cases suitable for charitable relief, which ought to be saved, if possible, from making their first application to the relieving officer. In drafting his third resolution he had in view the gift of Mr. Peek, to which, he contended, the Committees should, in all but chronic cases, have resort rather than to the Guardians. As he was anxious that, wherever this could be done, Committees should at once carry out the principles of his resolution, he would move as an amendment—

That though no general action on the motion of the 1st May should be taken till after the first meeting of Council in October, yet that where Boards of Guardians have already adopted a policy in restriction of outdoor relief, the Council sees no reason for urging the respective District Committees to postpone co-operation with them in the manner indicated by the resolution of the 1st of May.

The amendment was seconded by Mr. Peters, and the previous question having been put and lost, the amendment was also put and lost.

Major Prendergast's motion was then put, and carried by 23 votes against 12.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE SOCIETY.

Mr. Wilkinson, in rising, according to notice, 'to call the attention of the Council to the financial condition and prospects of the Society, as indicated in the statement of the Earl of Lichfield,'* urged upon the Council not only the importance but the extreme urgency of the matter to which he would draw their attention. The original lines upon which the Society was laid down were most harmonious and symmetric, and the Council might well look back with a feeling of pride on the day when the last Committee in the metropolitan area had been established. Still they had learned since that time that so gigantic an undertaking could not be carried out, or even inaugurated and maintained, without adequate support, both in funds and in workers of both sexes. It was for want of both sufficient means and of efficiently trained workers, unpaid and paid, that the Society had been unable thoroughly to carry out its original programme. To do this in the poorer districts, where neither of these sources of power he had alluded to could be found, the District Committee Aid Fund had been established, and this fund, they had been told, would have ceased to exist had it not been supplemented from the General Fund, now crippled, in its turn, by the assistance it had rendered to the first-named fund. Members had already been informed that during the next six months some £2,800 would be required for the Council and the District Committees, 21 of which were dependent upon the Council. Whatever measures the Council were disposed to recommend, whether by special appeal, by alterations in the present mode of collection, or otherwise, must be taken at once. In his opinion what was required, in the way of funds, to make the working of the Society efficient in all parts of the metropolis was not the £15,000 a year, hitherto expended by the whole Society but twice that sum. He then pointed out that, unlike other associations dependent upon voluntary contributions and working in the very poorest districts of London, the Committees of the Society in those parts were, at present, debarred by the rules of the Society itself from appealing for help to the richer districts of the metropolis, and therefore those Committees must depend on help from the Council, and, through the Council, from the Committees in the wealthy parts of London. If, after seven years of anxious and arduous working in a right direction, the Society had made for friends, now was the time for those friends to come and give their help, not so as to foster dependence, as to supplement vigorous personal and local efforts part of the Committees to obtain workers and to raise

Mr. Wilkinson concluded by moving—the financial position of the Society requires the immediate action of the Council.

Lichfield seconded the motion.

Charles Trevelyan moved the adjournment of the which was seconded by the Rev. Harvey Brooks.

adjourned motion of Mr. W. M. Wilkinson (see supra).

Willis-Bund to call attention to the Poor Law Amendment Bill, 1876.

That, in the opinion of this Council, the law of removal and settlement with great hardship upon the poor; and that it is desirable, if amending the same, to take steps for its total abolition at the possible moment.

That it be referred to the Administrative Committee to take steps this resolution before Her Majesty's Government.

To receive the Report of the Collection Sub-committee.

Following contributions were received for the week ending May 12:—Donations: Per the City Committee, £70. 16s.; Caesar H. Esq., £5; Miss Lush, 5s.; Major E. D. Nares, £1. 1s.—Annual: Wyer, Esq., £1. 1s.; Harcourt B. Slade, Esq., £2. 2s. The Marquis £5; Mrs. Sommerlat, £1. 1s.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan parishes on the last day of the fifth week of April 1876 was 46,214 received outdoor relief, making a total of 81,302. This was a decrease of 421 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 1,888, and 26,099 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 600. This was a decrease of 31 on the corresponding day of the preceding week, and an increase of 135 on the corresponding day of last year.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

A special Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles and Lunatics held its fourth meeting on Wednesday last, at the Central Hall. There were present: the Earl of Devon (in the Chair), the Earl of Devon, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., the Hon. H. Strutt, Lieut.-General Cavenagh, the Revs. R. J. Simpson, J. Cummins, Drs. W. Brewer, J. Langdon Down, Bell Fletcher, G. Ham, D. Hack Tuke, W. C. Cortis, Fletcher Beach, Messrs. H. M. J. Cropper, W. Pole Carew, F. D. Mocatta, W. M. Wilkinson, and Mr. Howgrave Graham, Assistant Secretary. Visitors, Miss Warner, Mr. J. Lee Warner.

Read from the Colonial and Foreign Offices stating that the Committee of the Council for information had been complied with, and it was to apply for similar information in regard to the United States of America.

The Committee then proceeded to consider the several Heads of the 2nd Report, entitled, 'General Principles of Treatment,' and the following resolutions were, after discussion, come to, in reference to the five first—

That Idiots and Imbeciles should be treated distinctively from Lunatics.

That they ought not to be associated with Lunatics in Asylums.

That they ought not, unless in exceptional cases, to be associated with Lunatics in Union Houses.

That the distinctive treatment suited to Idiots and Imbeciles ought to be applied collectively, especially in the earlier stages of education; and that Idiots and Imbeciles cannot, with advantage, be placed in schools with other children.

That, as Sir Charles Trevelyan, that 'feeble-minded children ought not to be associated with Adult Idiots,' was discussed in detail, and even withdrawn.

CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL, GREAT ORMOND-STREET.

From an inspection of the subjoined 'Revised Arrangement,' 'Regulations for Out-patients,' and 'Application Form,' copies of which will shortly be sent to the District Committees, it will be seen that out-patients cannot now obtain gratuitous medical relief at this Hospital, if the head of the family is in receipt of more than 30s. a week, or is receiving parish relief. Out-patients, after their first visit, are only admitted to the benefits of the Hospital when they can present a letter from the Governor or Subscriber who gave the original hospital letter, in which he states, of his own knowledge, that the first of these conditions is fulfilled, or when, in the other, the patients can show, on their hospital letter, as a voucher for both conditions being fulfilled, the stamp of a Committee of the Charity Organisation Society. The Seventh Rule gives a certain discretion to the Committees when there are special circumstances:—

CIRCULAR.—N.B.—This circular supersedes the circular addressed to District Committees on the 2nd June last. It should be so placed in the offices as to be within easy reach for reference.

DEAR SIR.—The Committee of the Ormond-street Children's Hospital having, in some points, modified the 'Arrangement,' particulars respecting which were forwarded to you in a circular, dated June 2nd, 1875, I am directed by the Administrative Committee of the Society to send you a copy of the 'Regulations for Out-patients' at the Hospital, and to call your attention to the following rules:—

1. With a view to checking misuse of their Out-patient Department, the Committee of the Hospital have determined to exclude, as a rule—(a) children whose parent (the head of the family) is in receipt of more than 30s. a week; and (b) children whose parents are in receipt of parish relief.

2. When a Hospital letter, similar to that enclosed, is brought to your office, your Committee will have to inquire—(a) whether the head of the family is or is not in receipt of more than 30s. a week, or (b) whether the parents are or are not in receipt of parish relief; and their inquiry will be limited to the verification of these two facts.

3. Your Committee should not, as a rule, stamp the letter brought to you by the bearer, if the head of the family is in receipt of more than 30s. a week, or if the parents are in receipt of parish relief.

4. But in cases in which the weekly earnings of the head of the family exceed 30s., your Committee should be at liberty to stamp the letter (adding a note), if any exceptional circumstances are found to exist which render it advisable that the case in question shall receive charitable assistance.

5. When the Committee see reason to refuse to affix the stamp, the Council think that it will be well to inform the Hospital Committee of the fact, through the post, giving the name and address of the rejected applicant, and the number of the letter.

6. All inquiries on behalf of the Hospital should be made with the utmost promptitude, and conducted with the greatest delicacy and care, so that the head of the family may not be injured by such inquiries as may, necessarily, be addressed to his employers. The Council have directed that, for the purpose of the Weekly Returns, the affixing of the stamp should be considered as a decision, and that the case should be entered under Class I. or II., not under Class III.

7. An Application Form, to be made use of by your Committee in making the inquiries into cases referred to you by the Hospital, is herewith enclosed, and fifty copies of the form will be sent without delay.

Note.—Your Committee probably has a suitable stamp; if not, the Council can obtain for you a lever endorsing-press, price 15s. 6d., or, if your Committee wish it, will entertain an application for a grant of one. The Hospital Committee request that the new arrangement may come into effect as soon as possible; so it is necessary that stamps should, if required, be ordered at once.

I am, dear Sir, yours truly, C. S. LOCH.

The following is the text of the Regulations for Out-Patients referred to:—1. That all new patients shall be admitted at the new Out-patient Room of the Hospital between 8.30 and 10 A.M. daily, except Sundays. 2. That all such patients be at once examined by the House Surgeon or other medical officer, who shall send away all who are suffering from Scarlet Fever, Smallpox, or other contagious fever, or its immediate sequelæ, and provide for the separation of cases of Whooping Cough. 3. That all other patients be admitted, being sorted by him into two classes, viz., those of slighter ailments to be treated as casualties, and graver ailments to be entered on the register, and to be supplied with letters, entitling the bearer to attend for a period of two months. 4. The register and also the letter shall bear a record of the name and residence of the patient, as also of the occupation of the parent on whom the patient is dependent. 5. No patient whose parent is in the receipt of more than 30s. per week shall, as a rule, be considered eligible for permanent treatment as an Out-patient of the Hospital. 6. No patient shall be entitled to attend a second time as an Out-patient unless the letter with which the parent has been furnished shall—(1) Be accompanied with a note from the Governor or Subscriber who gave the original letter of admission for such Out-patient, stating that the case is, to the knowledge of the Governor or Subscriber, within the last-preceding rule; or (2) Shall have been submitted to the Secretary or other officer of the Charity Organisation Society for the district in which the patient dwells, and bear the stamp of the Society, verifying the statement contained in such letter. 7. In cases where the weekly earnings of the head of the family exceeds 30s. the Charity Organisation Society shall be at liberty, notwithstanding the Fifth Regulation, to stamp the letter (adding a note), if any exceptional circumstances are found to exist which render it advisable that the case in question shall receive charitable assistance. 8. No patient whose parents are in receipt of parish relief shall ordinarily be considered eligible for permanent treatment as an Out-patient. With reference to this class of applicants, however, as also with reference to those whose parents are in the receipt of more than 30s. per week, it shall be in the power of the medical officers to dispense with these regulations on purely medical grounds, provided always that such medical officer enter in a book, to be kept for that purpose, the particulars concerning such patient, and the reason for the exemption, and sign it with his own name—the said book to be laid before the Managing Committee at each meeting. 9. That no letter be valid for more than two months, unless the medical officer sees fit to prolong the time for the patient's attendance, in which case he shall supply the patient with a new letter, indicating that the case is chronic. Such chronic patient may be brought at such intervals of time as the medical officer may desire; but if medicine is prescribed, such medicine shall in no case whatever be supplied for a longer period than one week, though it may be obtained weekly, by application at the Dispensary, without its being prescribed afresh. 10. That in order to prevent patients continuing their attendance beyond the period of two months, without the authority of the medical officer, the Dispenser be instructed to stamp each letter, the period of which is about to expire, so that the attention of the medical officer may be called to the case on the occasion of the patient's next visit. 11. That the Dispenser be instructed to attend strictly to the regulations laid down by the Medical Committee with reference to adherence to the regular formula, and the avoidance of costly medicine in prescriptions for Out-patients. 12. That the Dispenser be authorised to sell bottles and gallipots to patients who require them, at the rate of 1d. each, accounting monthly to the Secretary for all moneys received, but that no other articles be sold.—By order of the Committee of Management, March 23, 1876.

The following are the particulars indicated on the application forms to be used for Children's Hospital cases:—Record No., Hospital No. 1. Name and address. 2. Employment, and name and address of present employer. 3. Married or single, and number and ages of family. 4. Weekly earnings of father and mother. 5. Income from clubs or other sources. 6. State if applicant is in receipt of parochial relief—if so, name parish and amount of relief.

THE DISABLED FIREMEN'S PENSION AND RELIEF FUND.

Secombe v. Tidman.—This case was commenced by Mr. Samuel Simpson Secombe, the Secretary of the above so-called Society, against Mr. R. V. Tidman, the Honorary Secretary of the Lewisham Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, in consequence of a statement made by the latter, at the Greenwich Police-court, on the 14th of November, 1874, to the effect that collectors were going about collecting for a fund called the 'Disabled Firemen's Pension and Relief Fund,' and that it had been found, on inquiry, that the institution was not worthy of public support. The case came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Blackburn and a special jury, in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, at Westminster, on the 15th instant. Mr. Serjeant Parry and Mr. F. H. Lewis appeared for Mr. Tidman. On the case being called, the Plaintiff did not put in an appearance. Accordingly, the Court gave judgment, dismissing the action, with costs for the Defendant.

AN IMPOSTOR AT BRIGHTON.—Henrietta Randall, 28, was charged with obtaining, by false pretences, a sovereign, the money of Mrs. Brooksbank, of No. 5 Arundel Terrace, Brighton. Mr. Gray prosecuted on behalf of the Brighton Charity Organisation Society, who had taken up the case. Mrs. Brooksbank stated that about the 27th April the prisoner applied to her for a recommendation for indoor relief at the Sussex County Hospital. She told her to go to the Hospital, and inquire if hers was a proper case for treatment at the Hospital and return on the following morning and inform her (Mrs. Brooksbank) of the result. The prisoner came back, and stated that she had seen the house-surgeon at the Hospital, who represented that her case was not one for treatment in the institution, she being in consumption. She then expressed a wish to go to Ventnor Hospital, where, she believed, she would be attended to, explaining, however, that she had not money to take her. On the understanding that she would proceed to Ventnor next day Mrs. Brooksbank gave her a sovereign to assist her. Mr. Langdale, the house-surgeon, was called, and testified to never seeing the prisoner. The prisoner declared that she went to the Hospital and was directed by the hall-porter and the nurse to the surgeon's room. She there saw a medical gentleman, but, so far as she could remember, not Mr. Langdale. Wm. Collingham, agent to the Brighton Charity Organisation Society, deposed that he apprehended the prisoner at her lodgings, at No. 76 Upper North Street, and that in reply to the charge preferred against her she said, 'I don't see it.' He brought her to the Police-office. Mr. Gray stated that the prisoner had represented that she was in the service of Mrs. Brassey, the wife of Mr. Brassey, M.P. for Hastings, but Mrs. Brassey's butler was communicated with, and this representation was proved to be false, the prisoner having merely been relieved by Mrs. Brassey. Mr. Collingham added that the Charity Organisation Society had ascertained that, on a representation that she wished to go to another hospital, the prisoner had received £9 from Lady Caroline Turner, of Gresham Place, London, S.W. As it was possible that the prisoner might have been at the Sussex County Hospital, and seen another surgeon than Mr. Langdale, the magistrates would not convict her of obtaining money under false pretences, but of begging; and for that offence sentenced her to fourteen days' imprisonment, with hard labour. They thanked the Charity Organisation Society for investigating the case.—Sussex Daily News, Tuesday, May 9, 1876.

* * The above case is referred to in Reporter No. 169, March 8, 1876. It has been known for some time to the Marylebone and Paddington Committees, and also at the Central Office.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 179.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 24, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is
the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge each of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of a District Committee, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

PROVIDENT DISPENSARIES IN MANCHESTER.

Sir C. E. Trevelyan presented one hundred copies of the Manchester and Salford Provident Dispensaries Association, which he had received from the Honorary Secretary, Mr. O'Hanlon. Sir Charles said that in July 1873 Sir Rutherford Alcock and Dr. Ford Anderson were deputed to attend a meeting of the subscribers to the hospitals and dispensaries at Manchester, at which it was resolved: 'That, as there is a large class of working men above the condition of pauperism who, while unable to pay the ordinary medical fees, are yet well able to make small periodical payments for medicine and medical attendance, it is desirable to establish Provident Dispensaries, by which these cases may be provided for.' Manchester and Salford were then divided into districts, with a view to a Provident Dispensary being placed in each, to be managed by its own committee, consisting of ordinary members, honorary members, and medical men; and artisans and others were invited to become members, provided their income did not exceed on an average about 30s. a week. Up to the end of last year seven such dispensaries had been established, with 16,596 members, and £1,447 paid by them; and three or four others were about to be commenced; after which the system would be within the reach of the great bulk of the working population. It is expected that all these dispensaries will be self-supporting within two years of their first establishment. Lists of applicants to the hospitals and free dispensaries in the Association are daily sent to the Provident Society, by whose inspectors they are visited at their homes, and those who are able to pay the small subscriptions required under the provident system have their cards stamped in such a manner as to preclude them from receiving gratuitous relief a second time, and are referred to the Provident Dispensary of their district. On Sir Charles Trevelyan's motion it was agreed that the thanks of this Council be conveyed to the Council of the Association; and that copies of their report be sent to the District Committees.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending May 13 the receipts had been £91. 18s. 3d. for the General Fund, and that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund; and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £322. 19s. 5d. and £68. 14s. 1d. respectively.

GRANTS.—Grants of £13 each had been made to the Holborn, Whitechapel, Poplar, St. Saviour's, and St. Olave's Committees. Owing to the state of the funds larger sums could not at present be granted. It was stated that the sums of £45, £45, £30, £48, and £70 respectively were required by these Committees.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

COLLECTION OF FUNDS IN THE CITY.—The recommendation of the Administrative Committee on this subject was voted urgent, and, after discussion and amendment, was carried; Mr. W. M. Norton being appointed to collect funds in the City on behalf of the Society, at a salary of £150, and an increase of £25 should he raise £500 in the course of twelve months, or of £50 should he raise £1,000 during a similar period. The appointment to be terminable, at the end of six months, by one month's notice on either side.

APPEAL FOR FUNDS.—It was resolved, on the recommendation of the Administrative Committee, that the Committee be authorised to issue an appeal for funds in the form of a letter to the Times.

COLLECTION OF FUNDS.

Copies of the Report of the Sub-committee of Council on the Collection of Funds were laid upon the table, and the Report was ordered to be considered at the next meeting, on Monday, May 29.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE SOCIETY.

Sir C. E. Trevelyan resumed the adjourned discussion on Mr. Wilkinson's motion, calling the attention of the Council to the financial position of the Society. Sir C. Trevelyan said that the state of the finances, though serious, was not, he thought, alarming; but though it did not point to any radical change of system, it called for active exertion. The secret of the Society's success was, he maintained, its combination of local effort and responsibility with central representative control. In accordance with this principle the collection of the Committees was confined to their own areas, while the Council had power, by means of public appeals, to obtain funds from all parts of London. Sir Charles pointed out that the amount collected by the District Committees during the last two years had been more than twice the amount collected by the Council; being, in the first case £17,522, and in the second (taking the General and District Committees' Aid Funds together) £7,821. He believed that the grants made to the District Committees had already sapped their independence, and pointed out that during the past year they had collected £580 less than in 1873-4. He contended that there was abundant latent energy which was only waiting to be called forth, and he would suggest that special letters should be addressed to persons known to take an interest in the improvement of our population, and that the wants of the Society should be made known more widely. The Committees in the wealthier districts were only beginning to realise the fact that they must collect, not only for themselves, but for the Society at large. He concluded by urging the District Committees to aim at independent support.

After a short discussion, Mr. Du Pré Thornton, bearing in mind that the Report of the Sub-Committee of Council on the Collection of Funds would be considered next Monday, moved the adjournment of the further consideration of the subject. This was seconded by Mr. Maurice, and carried.

THE LAW OF SETTLEMENT AND REMOVAL.

Mr. Willis-Bund called attention to the Poor Law Amendment Bill, and moved—

(1) That, in the opinion of this Council, the law of removal and settlement presses with great hardship upon the poor; and that it is desirable, instead of amending the same, to take steps for its total abolition at the earliest possible moment.

(2.) That it be referred to the Administrative Committee to take steps to bring this resolution before Her Majesty's Government.

He explained that, from the first, he had been in favour of the total abolition of the present law, but, thinking that the Council might not be prepared to follow him so far, he had brought forward his motion of May 10 in order that the Administrative Committee might thoroughly consider the matter in the first instance. From a Parliamentary Return furnished early in the present year he saw that, during a period of twelve months, ending with March 25, 1875, there were 4,074 orders of removal, under which 7,391 persons had been removed, at a cost of £8,680. He pointed out that the majority of these removals were either to or from London, and that the question was, therefore, one that closely affected the classes with whom the Society had to deal. Mr. Willis-Bund then traced the successive amendments of the law since 1832, and mentioned cases illustrative of the hardship inflicted by the law in its present state. In one case a single woman, aged 32, residing with her widowed mother, left her to go on a month's trial as servant at a situation in another union. Returning home, and becoming chargeable, she was removed to the place of her birth, as she had broken her residence in the union where she and her mother had resided for three years. In another case the widow of a soldier was removed from a parish where she and her husband had lived for five years, because the residence had been broken by their absence with her husband's regiment. In the third case the wife of a surgeon had, from the nature of her husband's engagements during the week, been compelled to live for six years in an adjacent parish to that in which he resided. Her husband being imprisoned for some offence, and she having become chargeable, she was removed, with her children, to the union in which her husband had resided. Mr. Willis-Bund concluded by saying that he thought the abolition of the law should be gradual, and would accept a suggestion made to him to the effect that a sub-committee should be appointed to consider the matter.

The Rev. H. I. Cummins seconded the motion, but he would have preferred the appointment of a sub-committee.

Mr. Whitcombe thought that the question was scarcely one for the Society to take up.

The Rev. H. F. Mallet reminded the Council that at the last Metropolitan Conference of Guardians this very subject had been most fully discussed, and that the opinion of the Conference was adverse to abolition.

The Chairman (Mr. J. R. Hollond) expressed his concurrence in Mr. Mallet's views, and referred to opinions expressed at the Conference. Though the subject was one of great interest to the Society, he thought that it required dealing with by a body of experts rather than by the Council. He would strongly deprecate the appointment of another Committee.

After a few words from Mr. Miner and others,

Mr. Bonsfield moved the previous question, which was seconded by the Rev. H. F. Mallet.

Mr. Willis-Bund said he had no wish to press the motion on the Council, and confessed that he did not quite see his way to the total abolition of the present law. He would still, however, be glad to see the matter taken in hand by a special Committee.

The previous question was then put, and carried by ten votes against nine.

The Council then adjourned.

The following business stands for Monday, May 29:—

- I. The adjourned discussion on Mr. Wilkinson's motion of May 17.
- II. To consider the Report of the Sub-committee of Council on the Collection of Funds, appointed February 14, 1876.

Dr. Boyd presented copies of his recently published Treatise on the Diseases of the Nervous System.

The Committee then proceeded to consider the remaining heads of the Second Section of the Agenda, entitled 'General Principles of Treatment,' and passed, after discussion, the following resolutions:—

6th. 'That the improvement of Idiots and Imbeciles would not be promoted by boarding them out, but in certain cases, boarding out, under proper supervision, is not unsuitable to Harmless Lunatics.'

7th. 'That the education of Idiots and Imbeciles should be based on physical considerations.'

8th. 'That the education of Idiots and Imbeciles should commence at the earliest age at which they can dispense with a mother's care, and the subsequent stages should depend upon the capacity developed by them.'

9th. 'That Idiots and Imbeciles should have a thorough industrial training, so as to enable them, as far as practicable, to support themselves, or at least to contribute towards their support, when circumstances render it necessary': and—

10th. 'That Idiots and Imbeciles of all classes should, as far as may be prudently done, be also encouraged to cultivate any literary, scientific, artistic, or mechanical faculty they may happen to possess, or be otherwise furnished with employment, so as to promote their self-respect, and to make them feel that they are of some use in the world, or, any rate, to occupy them pleasantly.'

* * In the report of the previous meeting part of what follows was omitted, owing to want of space:—

A motion made by Sir Charles Trevelyan, that 'Feeble-minded Children ought not to be associated with Adult Idiots,' was discussed in detail; and on its being shown that, under certain circumstances, mutual aid might with advantage be interchanged among those diversely afflicted, and the elder might act as nurses and helpers to the younger, and having regard also to the improvement likely to be effected by early training in the habits of this class, the motion was withdrawn.

A Public Meeting in promotion of the objects of the Paddington Committee was held on the 17th inst., at the Lecture Hall of St. James's Church, Gloucester Place, Westbourne Gardens. It was expected that Mr. Russell Gurney, M.P., would have taken the chair; but at the time appointed for the meeting to be held Mr. J. R. Holland said that it was with great regret he had to communicate to the meeting the fact that he had received a letter from Mr. Arthur Mills, M.P., stating that Mr. Russell Gurney and he were both detained at the House of Commons on important business. Mr. Holland added that he would move that Lord Lichfield should be requested to preside. This was seconded and carried unanimously.

Lord Lichfield, who was received with warm applause, said he attended there, not with the intention of taking an active part in the meeting, but to ascertain how the principles of the Society were being carried out, and what progress was being made in Paddington. It was very unfortunate that the meeting should have been deprived of the presence of so excellent an advocate of its cause as the chairman who was to have presided, and it was to be hoped that no drawback would result to the Society from the absence of two friends so active as Mr. Gurney and Mr. A. Mills. Lord Lichfield proceeded to say that it was with great pleasure he opened the meeting, by congratulating those who had had the management of the Paddington Committee upon the very great success which had attended their work. Nothing could be more satisfactory to those who had taken an interest in promoting Charity Organisation from its commencement than to find such good work done as was detailed in the Report laid before the meeting. There were many things in that Report to which he should have liked to make reference, but he hoped that some one else who was more acquainted with the Paddington work would do so, and would place before the meeting all that could be said for and against the work in Paddington. There were many resident gentlemen present who were acquainted with the Society's work, and he would call upon Mr. Mocatta to propose the adoption of the Report.

Mr. Mocatta, in proposing the adoption of the Report, said it was drawn up in a most able manner, was full of interesting matter, and was most valuable for the suggestions it made in a very condensed, and concise form. It bore proof of being carefully considered, and gave a full knowledge of the work of Charity Organisation in Paddington. It was six years since the Committee was established, and during that time they had done a vast deal of work, and year by year showed greater strength. In the course of a long and able speech Mr. Mocatta then VOLUNTARY PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolises on the last day of the first week of May 1876 was 46,117 received outdoor relief, making a total of 80,968. This was a decrease of 334 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 160, and 25,774 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 563. This was a decrease of 37 on the corresponding day of the preceding week, and an increase of 66 on the corresponding day of last year.

cial Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles, and Harmatics held its fifth meeting on Wednesday last, at the Central here were present: The Earl of Devon (in the Chair), the Earl ld, Lord Wrottesley, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., Sir Rutherford
C.B., the Hon. C. H. Strutt, Lieut.-General Cavenagh, the Cummins, Drs. W. Brewer, J. Langdon Down, Bell Fletcher, G. am, W. S. Cortis, Fletcher Beach, T. A. Wise, R. Boyd, Messrs.
kinson, J. Cropper, F. D. Mocatta, W. M. Wilkinson, W. Millard, Howgrave Graham, Assistant Secretary.

It was read from Dr. Ireland, Superintendent of the Scottish Institution for the Education of Imbecile Children, at Larbert, proceeded to trace out the need shown for the Society before its establishment. This was proved, he said, by the enormous amount of money spent in charity without there being any co-operation between those who distributed the relief, so as to prevent persons from being relieved over and over again. He showed that, notwithstanding all the aid given, the people relieved were in a state of chronic pauperism, and the first work of the Society was, he pointed out, so to federate charity distributors, that each should know what the other was doing. He spoke against the system of relief, which only staved off the evil day of want, and urged that all relief should aim at assisting the poor persons to place themselves above the ranks of dependence—an end which this Society had in view in all it did. That the Committee was making progress in obtaining the confidence of the public was seen in the fact that during the year, 474 reports had been made for persons in the parish who desired information about those who applied for charity. Then the Committee had established a Labour Register, and 175 persons had, by means of this, been helped to work, so that in these cases the Committee, by assisting able and willing hands to find work, had done a vast deal more good than by distributing doles of money. (Cheers.) In regard to loans, apparently the amount lent had not been great; but when it came to be seen how much more good was done by loans than by gifts in the East of London, this branch of work would be more dealt with. He then proceeded to urge that to deal with poverty was a science of the highest order, and that those who took upon themselves the duty of dealing with it ought to study the best principles upon which to carry this out; but, he said, this study was unfortunately most frequently one which was entirely neglected. Yet the study in question was imperative upon those who associated themselves with societies which sprung up to do this thing and that thing in the name of charity, and upon those persons who considered it their duty to give their surplus funds to charity. It was a painful thing, no doubt, to know that many wealthy persons gave nothing in charity; but it was a fact that these persons did little harm in comparison with the harm which was done by those who distributed their money broadcast, without thinking where it went. (Hear, hear.) He was glad to say that there had been co-operation between the School Board officers and the Society's officers, and much good had been done by the gift of Mr. Francis Peek, who had given to the Council £1,000 a year for three years, in order to enable the Society to give adequate aid to deserving families who were unable, from unavoidable distress, to send their children to school, so as to dispel that ignorance which was known to be so fruitful a source of poverty, crime, and disease. (Cheers.) He proceeded to dwell upon the need for the District Committee Aid Fund of the Society, a fund, he explained, to which the rich Committees should contribute for the aid of the Committees in the poorer parts of London, where, he said, whole districts might be gone through without one well-to-do house being found. Paddington, he was glad to say, had given £100 to this fund. In such places a Committee could not be supported by the inhabitants; and not only was help in money needed from the wealthier parishes, but personal help was necessary as well, for poorly-paid people worked the most hours; and though these poor people were willing to help their neighbours, yet it was impossible that the man with 23s. a week could give time for working on a Committee; while people going to the East from the West of London would do good to themselves in learning the true principles of charity, and would carry their refining influences among the poor. The speaker then answered the objection made to the Society—that its working expenses were high—by pointing out that, as an inquiring and investigating Society, the expenses must always be high; and, moreover, the good the Society did was not to be calculated by the amounts it gave, but by the information it afforded, the impostors it detected, the permanent good it effected year by year in many cases, and the check it was upon mendicancy and fraudulent charities.

Mr. J. R. Holland, in seconding the motion, explained various points in connection with the Society not generally understood by the public. He proceeded to show that the Society was endeavouring to check impulsive charity, which was not true charity, and to place in its stead that true charity which arose from an earnest desire to do good. The Charity Organisation Society did not desire to relieve persons or societies from the duty of administering their charity, but it only desired to so direct them by information that the charity should do good, and not harm—that the charity should be a means of saving people from pauperism, and not be a mere aid to Poor Law relief. As a proof of the evil which was done by ill-directed charity he quoted the words of the Rev. T. J. Rowsell, the Vicar of St. Stephen's, who wrote:—

It is quite true that I did close the Soup Kitchen which had been in existence before I came here. I was very unwilling to disturb the kind efforts of several gentlemen here, and I attended when soup was given out, and followed some to their homes who came for soup, and also inquired carefully into circumstances of others. I found that scarcely one out of a hundred needed help, and I was convinced that the Soup Kitchen suggested dependence and begging, and induced parents to send their children to apply, and so to begin a system of concealment, which is in every sense harmful. My opinion is that in localities such as this, these aids and inducements to beg are very injurious. The District Visitors are able and willing to assist through their personal knowledge any cases of sickness or affliction where kindness and alms are needed.

(Hear, hear.) The Report would show the necessity of providence being encouraged, for inquiry proved that five-sixths of those who became applicants for charity and aid were never members of any provident society. (Hear, hear.) The speaker dwelt upon the necessity for the District Visitors being in connection with the Society—the officers of the Society being the inquiring agents, and the visitors the almoners—and he urged the needs of the District Committee Aid Fund upon the notice of the wealthy inhabitants of Paddington.

The adoption of the Report was carried unanimously.

The Rev. H. V. H. Cowell moved the following resolution: 'That the past working of this Society, both in this district and throughout London, entitles it to the support of the public and of the inhabitants of Paddington.' He spoke at length upon the great good which the Society had, to his knowledge, done, and said that he had received the greatest possible assistance from the Society, whose District Committee undertook the judgment of every case, and judged it, he knew, with wisdom and kindness. He declared that it was impossible for a clergyman to judge a case, for he had not the time and opportunities to make an investigation, and if he gave he was often deceived, while if he refused a case he often did wrong in judging by appearances. He warmly thanked the Society for the good it had been the means of doing his poor parishioners, and for relieving him from many difficulties.

Mr. A. Mills, M.P. (who with Mr. Pell, M.P., had come in just before, and were warmly received), seconded the motion, and said that if he had not been so active a member of the Committee as he used to be it was owing to Parliamentary and School Board duties, but he assured the meeting that he felt as deep an interest in the Society as ever. He spoke at length upon the work carried out, and said that in his capacity of Chairman of the Divisional Committee of the London School Board he had found the vast good which had been effected by the noble gift of his colleague on the School Board—Mr. Francis Peek; for by means of the Charity Organisation Society many parents had been enabled to comply with the law. Thus this relief was wise and generous, and kept a family, in many cases, from being pressed down by poverty. The speaker paid a warm tribute to the good services rendered by the paid officers of the Paddington Committee.

Mr. Pell, M.P., supported the motion, and said that though he was not a member of a Charity Organisation Society he hoped to be, for he was to take part in establishing one in the chief town of the county for which he sat in Parliament. He gave his experiences as an East End guardian for a short time, and said that he was convinced that only by carrying out the principles of the Society, and by a thorough dealing with out-door relief, could the great problems which now harmed society be solved. He gave some remarkable facts and figures relative to East End poverty, and showed that where the poor had been dealt with in a proper manner poverty had lessened, and the condition of the poor had been vastly improved—so vastly improved, that instead of being paupers on the rates they had become producing members of society. Mr. Pell said that out-door relief caused poverty, for it enabled those who received it to work for less wages than the self-dependent, and thus the self-dependent were reduced to the necessity of seeking relief.

On the motion of Sir Thomas Pycroft and Mr. Henriques a cordial vote of thanks was passed to the Chairman, who, in reply, made an exhaustive speech upon the action and principles of the Society.

This concluded the proceedings of the meeting, which was well attended.

AN AMERICAN'S OPINION ON SOME ENGLISH CHARITABLE ARRANGEMENTS.—Dr. Willbur, who was recently deputed by the Governor of New York to investigate our English institutions for the care and training of idiots, reports:—'At the annual elections the circumstances of the family from which the candidate comes have more influence than the question of teachableness in the person whose admission is desired. It is not necessary to show the unwisdom of selecting pupils on the ground of sympathy rather than of judgment. It is beginning to be strongly felt in England, and will soon, doubtless, be abandoned.'

THE Charity Organisation Reporter.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 180.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 31, 1876.

Price 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

NOTICES.

The Central Office will be closed on Whit-Monday. There will therefore be no meeting of the Council next week, nor any meeting of the Administrative Committee to-morrow, Thursday. The Administrative Committee will meet as usual on Thursday, the 1st of June. As there is no meeting of Council the Reporter will not be issued next week.

A few sets of the Annual Reports of the District Committees for 1875 will shortly be bound up with the Seventh Annual Report of the Council, price 2s. 6d., or post free for 3s. Those who wish for copies are requested to send their orders at once, addressed to the Secretary, 15 Buckingham Street.

The Meetings of the Woolwich Committee (held at 12 on Mondays) will in future take place weekly instead of fortnightly.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending May 20 the receipts had been £10. 4s. 0d. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund; and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £230. 13s. 10d. and £3. 14s. 1d. respectively.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE SOCIETY.

Mr. Du Pré Thornton resumed the adjourned discussion on Mr. Wilkinson's motion, calling the attention of the Council to the financial position of the Society. He considered the present mode of collecting funds expensive, unfair to Committees, and unjust to individual members. He estimated the average establishment expenses of the Committees (taking one with another) at £300 a year. This would give a total of about £11,000. It was clearly bad economy to employ some thirty or thirty-five persons to collect this sum. What was required was, that fewer collectors should be employed, but that they must be of a higher class. Such men could not be expected to work in the very poorest Districts where there was little prospect of funds being raised, and it was a waste of power, he thought, to attempt to raise funds in such Districts. It was unjust, he contended, that the Committees in the poor parts of London should, in addition to their other work—itsself of a very difficult character—bear the additional burden of collecting money in districts where it was so scarce. The speaker thought that the members of the richer Committees knew but little of the difficulties under which individual members of the poorer Committees laboured. These Committees, if they did not owe their chief strength to non-resident members, were, at any rate, largely reinforced from the outside; and it must be borne in mind that these 'outsiders' had to carry on the work in Districts with the local circumstances of which it was impossible they could be thoroughly acquainted. Hence he thought it unfair to impose upon Committees so constituted the additional labour of collection. He thought that those Committees who had an abundance of voluntary workers should train members for the poorer Districts, and send them to work there. He took objection to the comparison Sir C. Trevelyan had, on a former occasion, drawn between the amounts collected by the District Committees and by the Council. The former, he pointed out, employed some thirty collectors, and the latter none at all. He thought that Council should be ready to undertake, at the request of any Committee, the collection of funds in their District, such funds to be handed over to the Committee.

Mr. Wightman-Wood said that he was unable to find, after careful examination of the matter, that there had been any falling off in the revenue of the Society, and he believed that this alone showed that they possessed the confidence of the public. If there had been an increase of expenditure unaccompanied by a corresponding increase of income, and if there seemed no probability of that increase being met, they must, of course, curtail their expenditure and place it on the footing of former years. He thought the Committees should obtain more co-operation from existing charities.

Lord Lichfield pointed out that although the expenditure and receipts of the Council had both increased, yet their present financial position was far less satisfactory than it was at this time last year. He concluded by moving the adjournment of Mr. Wilkinson's motion, which was seconded by Mr. Wilkinson, and carried.

REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON THE COLLECTION OF FUNDS.

It was agreed, after some discussion, that the recommendations of the Sub-committee should be considered seriatim. They were as follows:—

I. That the Council should collect funds, in accordance with the recommendations of the Report of the Appeal Committee, adopted by Council March 17th, 1873, and that the necessary steps be forthwith taken by Council to effectually carry out the recommendations contained in the said Report.

[The classes to whom it was then agreed that the Council should appeal were:—

- (1) Large landed proprietors.
- (2) City companies.
- (3) Banking, mercantile, and manufacturing firms.
- (4) Persons of known wealth and benevolence (after communication with the Committee in whose district they reside).

II. That each District Committee should collect funds within its own district, but that the collection should be made not merely for its own work, but also on behalf of the whole Society.

III. That in districts in which there is reason to believe that much larger sums might be collected, the local Committee shall be invited to accept assistance in collection from the Council.

[Your Sub-committee do not propose any change in the arrangement made with the City Committee, or that in force in the seven East-end Districts. They cannot, however, consider either arrangement at present satisfactory, and they would urge Council to instruct the Administrative Committee to report on the work of the East-end Financial Committee at an early date.]

IV. That each Committee should set forth prominently in its Annual Report, and in all appeals to the public, the work of the whole Society, with a summary of the results effected by it throughout the metropolis, and that the Administrative Committee be instructed to draft a short and comprehensive statement of the work of the Council, and of the Society generally, up to the 30th of September in each year, for the use of District Committees in the preparation of their reports, or for insertion in the reports themselves.

V. That each Committee having collected all that it can, by a thorough house-to-house collection, should, at the end of each quarter, transfer any balance remaining in its hands, over and above the sum required for its own use, either to the General Fund or the District Committee Aid Fund of the Society.

VI. That, within a month after the 30th September of each year, estimates of the probable expenses of each Committee for the ensuing year, together with the balance-sheet for the past year, be sent to the Secretary of the Council, to be laid before the Quarterly Finance Sub-committee, in order that they may as soon as possible have the means of framing the estimates for the District Committee Aid Fund.

Mr. Edgcombe moved, and Sir C. Trevelyan seconded the adoption of the first of the above recommendations.

Lord Lichfield thought the resolution did not go far enough. Being himself of opinion that a central system of collection was the best system for the interests of the Society, he could not agree with any portion of the Report. A radical change in the mode of collecting funds was required, and the Sub-committee had not, as far as he could understand, recommended any change. He saw from the first page of their Report that they were appointed under the following resolution:—'That this Council, being of opinion that some change is required in the mode of collecting funds, it is resolved that a Sub-committee be appointed by the Council to consider and prepare some definite scheme, to be laid before this Council as soon as possible.' He could not admit that any change, properly so called, was proposed by the Report now before them. The recommendation under consideration merely proposed to continue the present mode of collection pursued by the Council. He must therefore oppose it, and would move as an amendment, and in a somewhat altered form, the resolution to which he had alluded on Feb. 7 of the present year—

That the system under which each District Committee has hitherto collected funds within its own district, and expended them without reference to the means and requirements of other parts of the Metropolis, has interfered with the establishment of a thoroughly efficient and reliable machinery for investigation, and has produced marked inequalities and inconsistencies in the distribution and administration of the Society's funds.

That such results are entirely at variance with the principles upon which the Society was started, and that, inasmuch as the Report of the Sub-committee does not recommend a change in the present arrangement for collecting and distributing the funds required for the use of the various District Committees, it is unsatisfactory and cannot be adopted.

The Rev. H. I. Cummins seconded the amendment. The Report was, in his opinion, a mere compromise between different views. He believed that a proper financial organisation, with well-paid collectors, was essential, and then the funds required would be forthcoming, though ten times as much should be wanted. The recommendation under discussion involved an adherence to the present system.

Mr. Miner pointed out that the recommendation advocated active steps being taken to carry out the Report of the Appeal Committee, which had hitherto remained almost a dead letter.

Mr. Willis-Bund was of opinion that the Report, by practically leaving things as they were, contradicted the decision of the Council upon which the Sub-committee was appointed.

Mr. Whitcombe thought that any scheme of centralisation was so incompatible with the whole plan and idea of the Society, that it could not be considered to be within the function of the Sub-committee to recommend such a scheme.

Sir C. Trevelyan said that the Society must rely for support upon those who took an interest in London as a whole—who had the welfare of the whole of the London poor at heart. It would, in his opinion, be most disastrous if the Committees should cease to collect. They were, each of them, separate spheres of work and interest, and could call forth an amount of local support that the centre could never evoke. He was in favour of a fair trial being given to the present system; the principle was sound, but had never, financially, been carried out.

Lieut.-General Cavenagh agreed with the last speaker that the power of collecting now possessed by the Council should remain, and that it would be unwise to remove from the District Committees the interest and responsibility they now have. These, he thought, were inseparable, and the loss of interest would follow upon the removal of responsibility. He felt sure that if the richer Committees would make proper exertions, sufficient funds could be obtained. He gave notice that he would move, as an amendment:—

That the Council should, as heretofore, be empowered to make such general appeals through the public journals, or by means of special appeals to companies, banking, mercantile, and manufacturing firms, or large landed proprietors, or persons of known wealth and benevolence, as from time to time may be deemed necessary.

In reply to a question by Mr. Miner, Lord Lichfield said that he put his opposition to the Report upon no other ground than that he considered the present system of collecting funds a failure. He feared that support would be withdrawn from the Society if some great improvement were not made in the present system of collection. The funds obtained were, he contended, insufficient for the maintenance of an adequate and competent paid staff in every district of London. Such machinery was, he considered, the first object of the Society.

Mr. Wightman-Wood could not admit that there had been any failure, though there was, of course, room for improvement both in the mode of collecting funds and in the work of the District Committees. He could not agree with the recommendation of the Sub-committee or with Lord Lichfield's amendment, and, believing that the Committees should be even less fettered than at present, he would, if he had the opportunity, move the following amendment:—

That the Council collect funds from all sources, throughout the metropolis and the country generally, in such mode as it may deem most expedient; provided only that the Council shall not make a house-to-house collection in any district of the Society except by arrangement with the District Committee.

After some further discussion, Lord Lichfield's resolution was put and lost by 24 votes against 13.

General Cavenagh's amendment, having been seconded by Mr. Dundas, was, after a short discussion, put and lost by 17 votes against 6.

Mr. Wightman-Wood's amendment, having been seconded by Mr. Du Pré Thornton, Lord Lichfield must repeat that he thought that the whole of the collection should be in the hands of the Council. They should not merely have the power of issuing appeals to certain bodies or individuals, but that of collecting funds on behalf of the whole Society, where and in what way it might seem best. Thoroughly efficient paid staffs could then be appointed, and he felt sure that they would then find that local workers would rally round the centres thus created.

Sir C. Trevelyan, the Rev. R. J. Simpson, and Mr. Edgcombe considered that the progress the Society had made since its establishment was very remarkable and encouraging. Sir Charles pointed out that it was not money alone that was wanted, but voluntary workers who should direct the paid staff. This superintendence could, he affirmed, never be carried out from one centre.

After a few words from others, and from Mr. Wightman-Wood in reply, his amendment was put and lost.

The adjournment of the debate until Monday, June the 12th, was then moved by the Rev. R. J. Simpson, seconded by the Rev. J. D. McGachen, and carried.

The following business stands for Monday, June 12:—

I. The adjourned discussion on the first Recommendation of the Report of the Sub-committee of Council on the Collection of Funds:—

(1) That the Council should collect funds, in accordance with the recommendations of the Report of the Appeal Committee, adopted by Council March 17th, 1873, and that the necessary steps be forthwith taken by Council to effectually carry out the recommendations contained in the said Report.

II. The consideration of the remaining recommendations of the Report:—

(2) That each District Committee should collect funds within its own district, but that the collection should be made not merely for its own work, but also on behalf of the whole Society.

(3) That in districts in which there is reason to believe that much larger sums might be collected, the Local Committee shall be invited to accept assistance in collection from the Council.

(4) That each Committee should set forth prominently in its Annual Report, and in all appeals to the public, the work of the whole Society, with a summary of the results effected by it throughout the Metropolis, and that the Administrative Committee be instructed to draft a short and comprehensive statement of the work of the Council, and of the Society generally, up to the 30th of September in each year, for the use of District Committees in the preparation of their reports, or for insertion in the reports themselves.

(5) That each Committee, having collected all that it can by a thorough house-to-house collection, should, at the end of each quarter, transfer any balance remaining in its hands, over and above the sum required for its own use, either to the General Fund or the District Committee Aid Fund of the Society.

(6) That within a month after the 30th September of each year, estimates of the probable expenses of each Committee for the ensuing year, together with the balance-sheet for the past year, be sent to the Secretary of the Council, to be laid before the Quarterly Finance Sub-committee, in order that they may as soon as possible have the means of framing the estimates for the District Committee Aid Fund.

The following contributions were received during the week ending May 27, 1876:—Donations: Mrs. Rooper, £1; Miss Caroline Singleton, £5; J. Denham Smith, Esq., £10. Annual: The Salter's Company, £2. 2s.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of May, 1876, was 34,260, and 45,635 received outdoor relief, making a total of 80,255. This was a decrease of 713 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 7,819, 16,933, and 25,448 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 645. This was an increase of 82 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 242 on the corresponding day of last year.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

The Special Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics held its sixth meeting on Wednesday last at the Central Office. There were present: The Earl of Lichfield (in the Chair), Lord Wrottesley, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., the Hon. C. H. Strutt, the Rev. H. I. Cummins, Drs. J. Langdon Down, Bell Fletcher, G. W. Grabham, W. S. Cortis, Fletcher Beach, T. A. Wise, R. Boyd, and D. Hack Tuke; Messrs. F. H. Dickinson, W. H. Pole Carew, J. Cropper, F. D. Mocatta, W. M. Wilkinson, W. Millard, C. A. Miner, and Danby P. Fry; and Mr. Howgrave Graham, Assistant Secretary.

The Committee commenced the consideration of the third section of the Agenda, entitled 'Treatment of Adults,' and, after discussion, passed the following Resolutions:—

1st. 'That the Treatment of Adult Idiots and Imbeciles must depend upon the degree in which the character and faculties have been developed by previous education and training.'

2nd. 'That a small proportion may be permanently improved, so as to take care of themselves, either at their own homes or elsewhere, and to earn their own living;'

3rd. 'That a larger proportion may be improved so as to support themselves under proper safeguards;'

4th. 'But that there is also a large proportion of cases which, having achieved a certain improvement, are unable to get beyond this, and are, indeed, liable to retrograde, and for these suitable Institutions are indispensable.'

5th. 'Not only can Idiots and Imbeciles in Asylums be employed with advantage to themselves, and the Asylums be managed as Industrial Establishments for manufacturing or agricultural industry, but it is essential to the moral and mental wellbeing of the class that such a system should be adopted; and, under good management, it may be made advantageous to the Institutions in a financial sense by diminishing the cost of maintenance.'

MACAULAY AND THE BEGGING-LETTER WRITERS.—It may be inferred from the following extract from Lord Macaulay's Life (vol. 2, pp. 113-14) that he would have welcomed the aid of the Charity Organisation Society (not, of course, at that time in existence) for the purpose of testing doubtful claims upon his bounty: 'To have written, or to pretend to have written, a book, whether good or bad, was the surest and shortest road to Macaulay's pocket. "I sent some money to Miss * *, a middling writer, whom I relieved some time ago. I have been giving too fast of late—forty pounds in four or five days. I must pull in a little." "Mrs. * * * again begging and praying. "This is the last time; an execution; &c., &c." I will send her five pounds more. This will make fifty pounds in a few months to a bad writer whom I never saw." "I have received," he writes to Mr. Longman, "a rather queer letter, purporting to be from the wife of Mr. D—, the author of —, and dated from Greenwich. Now I have once or twice received similar letters, which have afterwards turned out to be forgeries. I sent ten pounds to a sham Mary Howitt, who complained that an unforeseen misfortune had reduced her to poverty; and I can hardly help suspecting that there may be a sham Mrs. D—. If, however, the author of — is really in distress, I would gladly assist him, though I am no admirer of his poetry. Could you learn from his publishers whether he really lives at Greenwich? If he does, I will send him a few pounds. If he does not, I will set the police to work." . . . The Rev. Frederick Arnold tells the story of a German gentleman, the husband of a lady honourably connected with literature, who had fallen from affluence to unexpected poverty. He applied to Macaulay for assistance, and, instead of the guinea for which he had ventured to hope, he was instantly presented with thirty pounds. During the last year of my uncle's life, I called at Holly Lodge to bid him good-bye before my return to the University. He told me that a person had presented himself that very morning, under the name of a Cambridge Fellow of some mark, but no great mark, in the learned world. This gentleman (for such he appeared to be) stated himself to be in distress, and asked for pecuniary aid. Macaulay, then and there, gave him a hundred pounds. The visitor had no sooner left the room than my uncle began to reflect that he had never set eyes on him before. He accordingly desired me, as soon as I got back to Cambridge, to make, with all possible delicacy, such inquiries as might satisfy him that, when wishing to relieve the necessities of a brother scholar, he had not rewarded the audacity of a professional impostor.' *

* 'Sept. 14, 1859.—A Dr. * * * called, and introduced himself as a needy man of letters. I was going to give him a sovereign, and send him away, when I discovered that he was the philologist, whom I should never have expected to see in such a plight. I felt for him, and gave him a hundred pounds. A hard pull on me, I must say. However, I have been prosperous beyond the common lot of men, and may well assist those who have been out of luck.'

A LADY STATE COMMISSIONER.—The United States Senate has confirmed the appointment of the first woman who has ever received a State office. This lady's name is Josephine Shaw Lowell. She was nominated by the Governor for the office of State Commissioner of Charities, in room of Commissioner Marshall. Mrs. Lowell belongs to a distinguished New England family. Her husband—a nephew of the poet Lowell—and her only brother were killed in the late war.—Labour News, May 27, 1876.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 181.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 14, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicancy.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the two weeks ending June 3 the receipts had been £112. 3s. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £312. 16s. 4d. and £3. 14s. 1d. respectively.

REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON THE COLLECTION OF FUNDS.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson resumed the adjourned discussion on Mr. Wightman Wood's amendment—*

That the Council collect funds from all sources, throughout the metropolis and the country generally, in such mode as it may deem most expedient; provided only that the Council shall not make a house-to-house collection in any district of the Society except by arrangement with the District Committee.

He said that the Report of the Sub-committee was essentially a conservative one, and did not propose much alteration of the lines upon which the Society had been laid down. At the same time, he would remind the Council it was clearly the result of a very careful consideration of the whole subject; and, at any rate, it indicated certain definite modes of action.

Mr. Miner assured the Council that the Sub-committee had spared no endeavour to get thorough and reliable information from all sources, and they had communicated with the District Committees to see what plans they had followed in collecting funds. He would remind the Council that the question of the plan upon which funds should be collected had been most fully discussed on a former occasion, when very opposite views had been taken by Lord Lichfield and by Sir C. Trevelyan. The plan of central collection had then been rejected by a large majority, and an intermediate course had been decided upon. But the scheme thus accepted had been but feebly carried out by the Council, and no systematic arrangements had been made. Yet, in spite of the fact that the present system had remained undeveloped, very large sums had come in. He believed that if the recommendations of the Appeal Committee were thoroughly carried out, the Council would obtain ample funds. It was clear that the District Committees must make some concessions. Up to the present time each Committee had collected funds on its own plan, and in some cases, he felt sure, the subject had not received from the Committees the attention it deserved. Mr. Wood's amendment differed very materially from the recommendation of the Committee, and, if adopted, would, he feared, lead to collision between the Council and the Committees.

Mr. Mocatta, while feeling that the Council were much indebted to the gentlemen who had so carefully drawn up so excellent a Report as that now before them, could not entirely sympathise with the proposals of the Report itself. In his opinion, the collection of funds should still be left in the hands of the Committee, but the money thus collected should be paid into a common fund, and distributed to the Committees according to their individual requirements. At present there were among the Committees disparities of efficiency, disparities of funds, and disparities of numerical strength. His wish would be to see these inequalities removed, and to know that

* By a misinterpretation of the Chairman's notes, it was stated in the last Reporter that Mr. Wightman Wood's amendment was put and lost. The adjournment was carried before the amendment in question had been put.

no Committee could be considered to be specially favoured, either as regards money or workers.

The Rev. H. I. Cummins thought that both the recommendation and the amendment were, as far as they went, schemes for collection from the centre. But he pointed out that the recommendation, enforcing, as it did, the realisation of the recommendations of the Appeal Committee, laid down the principle that those persons who were known to have given to other Societies, or even to the Charity Organisation Society itself, were those who were to be specially appealed to. This, he feared, would not lead to new ground being broken. The Report was, he thought, a compromise at the best, and for his own part he must prefer the amendment of Mr. Wood, which, at any rate, left the hands of the Council free.

Mr. Dundas pointed out that the protection apparently afforded to the Committees by the words of the amendment was perfectly illusory, as the most wealthy persons in all parts of London would respond more readily and more freely to an appeal than to the visits of a collector.

Mr. Willis-Bund, while agreeing with the last speaker, pointed out that his objections applied, he thought, with still more force to the recommendation.

Mr. H. N. Hoare would ask Mr. Wood if he would eliminate from his amendment the words 'house-to-house.'

Mr. A. H. Hill also thought that the expression was wanting in definiteness. He would ask Mr. Wood to accept the following addition to his amendment:—

And that all appeals shall indicate distinctly the relations of the District Committees to the Council and the Society generally.

Mr. Hollond must suppose that the house-to-house collection would be carried out by the District Committees, and that all other forms of collection would be conducted by the Council. The suggestions of the amendment were, he thought, vague—those of the recommendation of the Report precise and well-defined. If the amendment were passed, much would, of course, depend upon the way in which the plan it indicated was worked. Still he could not help thinking that in practice it would be surrounded with many practical difficulties. It would be far from easy, if any extensive collection was to be made from the centre, to warn the local collector before he had called upon persons appealed to, and he feared that many collisions must, with the best management, occur.

Major Fitz-Roy said that the question had been most thoroughly discussed by his own Committee. Members were by no means of one opinion at first, but eventually they had unanimously approved of the Report, and their collector was, at the present time, appealing for funds on behalf of the whole Society.

Mr. Wightman Wood, in saying a few words in explanation of his amendment, expressed his regret that he could not adopt Mr. Hoare's suggestion. He approved of Mr. Hill's words, but thought that they had better take the form of a substantive motion.

The amendment was then negatived by 27 votes against 11. The recommendation of the Report, viz.—

That the Council should collect funds, in accordance with the recommendations of the Report of the Appeal Committee, adopted by Council March 17th, 1873, and that the necessary steps be forthwith taken by Council to effectually carry out the recommendations contained in the said Report—was then put and carried by 24 votes against 12.

Mr. Miner then moved the second recommendation:—

That each District Committee should collect funds within its own district, but that the collection should be made not merely for its own work, but also on behalf of the whole Society.

The recommendation, he pointed out, divided itself into two parts. The first was obvious, and was merely such a limitation of the collecting area of the Committees as had been hitherto agreed to. The second part was, he urged, of the last importance. It was clear that the greatest confusion would ensue if Committees were to collect in each other's districts, and it was therefore incumbent upon the Committees to help one another; and to do this effectually, the richer Committees must realise the obligation they are under to urge upon their public the claims of the whole Society, whose operations, it should be explained, extend over the whole metropolis. It was, he feared, but little understood that the object of the Society was to cut at the roots of pauperism, and to search out its causes. The work of the Council, as distinguished from that of the Committees, was, he thought, scarcely comprehended, and required thorough exposition. The benevolent must, he maintained, be told that some of the charities to which they are now subscribing are fraudulent, while many others which are not fraudulent are of a pauperising character. Large sums were required in order that the Society might secure the services of intelligent and educated men, and the public must learn that workers were required as well as money.

Mr. Hollond, in seconding the adoption of the recommendation, pointed out that a Committee of the Charity Organisation Society was, from its very constitution as part of an organised body, debarred from appealing for funds to all parts, as an ordinary charity (such as a soup-kitchen) could do. The most serious obligation rests therefore upon the richer Committees; they are, in fact, bound to supply funds for the poorer Committees. These are used for purposes of enquiry by the former class, and it was therefore essential to success that all should be equally efficient. The perfection of the machinery of the Society was to the interest of all the Committees.

The Rev. H. I. Cummins moved, but subsequently withdrew, an amendment appointing a Committee to consider the general position of the Society.

Mr. Wightman Wood moved, as an amendment, the insertion in the resolution, after the words 'collect funds,' of the following words: 'in any mode in which it may deem expedient, from persons,' and the addition of the following words:—

And hand over to the District Committee Aid Fund 10 per cent. of the first £500 collected and sums under £500; 30 per cent. of the second £500 collected; and 50 per cent. on all further sums collected.

He felt convinced that many of the Committees did not collect enough money, and that the present system was inadequate, and presented anomalies of so startling a character that some alteration was inevitable. He regretted that the system of collection from a centre had not been adopted from the first, but he felt sure that the richer Committees would not now consent to it, and that the only issue practicable was a compromise.

Mr. Whitcombe gave notice of the following amendment:—

That it be a matter of arrangement between the Council and the Committee of each District whether the collection shall be made by the Council or by the Committee, and generally as to the plan of collection to be adopted there; but the collection, by whichever body made, shall be on behalf of the Society at large.

Mr. Du Pré Thornton would move, if he had the opportunity, that—

When any District Committee shall have made application to Council for a grant in aid of its establishment expenses, and such grant has not been made because of the paucity of funds at the Council's disposition, then it shall be open to that Committee to collect funds as it shall find best, to meet the expenses of its establishment during the year then current.

Dr. Daniel feared that some of the Committees might be indisposed to accept the decision of Council. The collection of funds, even in districts not extremely poor, was not an easy matter. The Treasurer of his own Committee had paid several visits, but had not been successful in his efforts to increase their funds. He concluded by giving notice of the following amendment:—

That the further consideration of the Report of the Sub-Committee of the Council, on the Collection of Funds, be adjourned until the financial condition of the Society has been fully discussed, when the mode of collecting funds will have to be considered, together with other means of placing the Society on a satisfactory basis.

Mr. Wightman Wood's amendment having been seconded by the Rev. M. S. A. Walrond, Sir C. Trevelyan said that, in his opinion, the plan proposed by the amendment was a mathematical impossibility. No scale of proportionate contributions could be laid down which would apply fairly and equally to all Committees. The amount to be contributed by each Committee for the support of the poorer Committees must be left, he maintained, to the honour and sense of duty of the Committees themselves.

Lord Lichfield, after dwelling upon the inconvenience of considering each recommendation separately, stated that he was prepared to criticise the Report as a whole, but, taking into consideration the lateness of the hour, he would move the adjournment of the debate.

This was seconded by the Rev. R. J. Simpson and carried.

The following contributions were received during the two weeks ending June 10, 1876:—Donations: Anonymous, £5; Miss Frances Blake, £5; Lord Dunsany, £20; G. J. Eyre, Esq., £10; Sir Dudley C. Majoribanks, Bart., M.P., £50; Russell Scott, Esq., £20; Rev. E. Sendall, £2.—Annual: G. L. Houstoun, Esq., £1. 1s.; Mrs. Keyser, £1. 1s.

The following business stands for Monday, June 19:—

I. That each District Committee should collect funds, in any mode in which it may deem expedient, from persons within its own district, but that the collection should be made not merely for its own work, but also on behalf of the whole Society, and hand over to the District Committee Aid Fund 10 per cent. of the first £500 collected and sums under £500; 30 per cent. of the second £500 collected; and 50 per cent. on all further sums collected.

II. Amendments by Mr. Whitcombe, Mr. Du Pré Thornton, and Dr. Daniel (see above).

III. The consideration of the remaining recommendations of the Report:—

(3) That in districts in which there is reason to believe that much larger sums might be collected, the Local Committee shall be invited to accept assistance in collection from the Council.

(4) That each Committee should set forth prominently in its Annual Report, and in all appeals to the public, the work of the whole Society, with a summary of the results effected by it throughout the metropolis, and that the Administrative Committee be instructed to draft a short and comprehensive statement of the work of the Council, and of the Society generally, up to the 30th of September in each year, for the use of District Committees in the preparation of their reports, or for insertion in the reports themselves.

(5) That each Committee, having collected all that it can by a thorough house-to-house collection, should, at the end of each quarter, transfer any balance remaining in its hands, over and above the sum required for its own use, either to the General Fund or the District Committee Aid Fund of the Society.

(6) That within a month after the 30th September of each year, estimates of the probable expenses of each Committee for the ensuing year, together with the balance-sheet for the past year, be sent to the Secretary of the Council, to be laid before the Quarterly Finance Sub-committee, in order that they may as soon as possible have the means of framing the estimates for the District Committee Aid Fund.

IV. Mr. A. H. Hill to move:—

That it is expedient that this Council should offer every facility in its power for the training of suitable persons to act as local Charity Agents under the several District Committees, and with this view opportunities should be afforded for extra clerks, at moderate salaries, to work, by way of apprenticeship, under the Secretaries of the Society at the Central Office.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

At their meeting to-morrow (Thursday) the Administrative Committee will consider the constitution and work of the proposed Sub-Committee on Co-operation with Charities.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

The Special Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles and Harmless Lunatics held its seventh and eighth meetings on Wednesday, 31st May, and on Wednesday, the 7th June, respectively, at the Central Office. There were present at the seventh meeting: The Earl of Devon (in the Chair), the Earl of Lichfield, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B., the Hon. C. H. Strutt, the Rev. H. I. Cummins, Drs. W. Brewer, J. Langdon Down, Bell Fletcher, D. Hack Tuke, and R. Boyd; Messrs. F. H. Dickinson, W. H. Pole Carew, F. D. Mocatta, W. M. Wilkinson, W. Millard, and Danby P. Fry; and Mr. Howgrave Graham, Assistant Secretary.

Dr. Langdon Down presented copies of a paper on 'The Education and Training of the Feeble in Mind,' read by him at the Social Science Congress of 1867, and reprinted for the use of the Committee.

Mr. Millard communicated a condensed statement of the arrangements for the education and care of Idiots and Imbeciles in the United States, and a letter to him on the same subject, from Dr. Wilbur, Superintendent of the New York Asylum.

The Committee then discussed, at considerable length, the fourth head of the third section of the Agenda, viz., 'The best mode of treating adults who are only susceptible of supervision, shelter, and kind care;' and, instead of recording a separate opinion on this point, it was determined to amend the fourth resolution, passed at the preceding meeting, which will now stand as follows:—

'4th. But that there is also a large proportion of cases which, having achieved a certain improvement, are unable to get beyond this, and are, indeed, liable to retrograde, and for these Institutions, or Departments, where suitable classification may be carried out are indispensable.'

At the eighth meeting were present: W. H. Pole Carew, Esq. (in the Chair), Lord Wrottesley, Sir Alexander Acland Hood, Bart., Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B., Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., Lieut.-Gen. Cavenagh, the Hon. C. H. Strutt, the Rev. H. I. Cummins, Drs. W. Brewer, J. Langdon Down, Bell Fletcher, D. Hack Tuke, W. W. Ireland, G. W. Grabham, Fletcher Beach, and R. Boyd; Messrs. F. H. Dickinson, F. D. Mocatta, W. M. Wilkinson, W. Millard, and Danby P. Fry; and Mr. C. S. Loch, Secretary.

It having been resolved at a previous meeting to reserve the consideration of the third section of the Agenda ('Treatment of Adults'), so far as it bore upon the case of Harmless Lunatics, the Committee discussed this part of the subject at considerable length, and Sir Charles Trevelyan moved the following resolution:—

'That, as a general rule, improved, but uncured, Adult Idiots, Harmless Lunatics, and Epileptic and other Hospital cases, should be provided for in accordance with the preceding resolution (see the Proceedings of the 31st May), in separate Institutions, or Departments of Institutions, where suitable classification may be carried out.'

To which the Hon. C. H. Strutt moved the following amendment:—

'That those Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics who, after training and education, are neither capable of further improvement nor of useful employment, and whose presence may be injurious to those under training, should be maintained in separate Institutions, or Departments of Institutions.'

This amendment having been put and lost by nine votes to eight, the original resolution was declared to be carried.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of May, 1876, was 34,507, and 45,309 received outdoor relief, making a total of 79,816. This was a decrease of 234 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 6,734, 16,255, and 21,299 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 688. This was an increase of 13 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 218 on the corresponding day of last year.

MEETING OF CLERGY AND DISTRICT VISITORS.—On May 4, at the town-house of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, Miss Octavia Hill read, to a meeting of District Visitors and Clergy, a paper on the subject of making district-visiting more useful in raising the temporal condition of the poor. She urged that from each District Visiting Society a lady should be selected to act as secretary, whose duty should be specially to study how to improve the temporal condition of the poor, and who would quickly become a centre of information to her colleagues. Miss Hill advised that such secretaries should attend the meetings of the Charity Organisation Committees, where they would learn much, and render valuable assistance. She also offered to communicate with any such secretaries, to pass on to them any information which reached her, and which she thought likely to be of use to them, and to arrange meetings with them to discuss difficult questions. Her paper will be published in the July number of Good Words.

ALLEGED DEATH FROM STARVATION.—In the Times of May 12 a paragraph appeared headed 'Starved,' and giving an account of an inquest upon Charles Proctor, 57, a cabinetmaker, who, it was stated, occupied a first-floor back at 42 Totty Street, Bethnal Green. The landlord having seen nothing of him for four days, became alarmed, and on entering his room found him partially insensible. An order was obtained for his removal to the workhouse, where he died on the 6th May, according to the paragraph, 'from starvation.' Inquiries into the circumstances of the case were made by the Bethnal Green District Committee, and it appeared that the deceased (whose name was Prescott) was of dissipated habits, and that his death was not attributable to want. He was in receipt of 5s. 6d. a week as his share of the rent of five houses belonging to him and to other members of his family. He never did any work, and had, it was stated, done none for nine years. It appeared also that as soon as he received his small income he would spend so much of it in drink that he had not enough left for food, that he habitually drank to excess, and was very eccentric and dirty in his habits, and that he used to stay in bed for four or five days together. When found partly insensible he had a biscuit and sixpence in his pocket.

PAUPERISM.—The Lady-Day Return issued by the Local Government Board shows that the number of persons then receiving relief from the rates in England and Wales was 700,332, which number shows a decrease of 76,169, or 9.8 per cent., compared with the number at Lady-Day 1875, and of 10.8 per cent. compared with Lady-Day 1874. The improvement thus shown in the present year compared with 1875 extends to every one of the 11 divisions of England, but it was as small as 2.0 per cent. in Yorkshire, and it ranged from 5.6 to 9.1 per cent. in six other divisions. There are only four in which it exceeded the average of 9.8 per cent.—namely, the South Midland and the Eastern divisions, in which it was 10.8 and 10.9 per cent.; the metropolis, 11.4 per cent.; and the Welsh division, as much as 25.9 per cent., owing to the comparison being with a time of trouble in the iron and coal trades. But about 3 per cent. should be added to all the figures, owing to these returns not including vagrants nor paupers in lunatic asylums.—Times, June 3, 1876.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 182.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 21, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending June 10 the receipts had been £21. 1s. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £313. 5s. 5d. and £3. 14s. 1d. respectively.

GRANTS.—Grants of £32, £32, £17, £35, £57, and £30 had been made to the Whitechapel, Holborn, Poplar, St. Saviour's, St. Olave's, and Mile End Committees respectively.

REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON THE COLLECTION OF FUNDS.

Lord Lichfield resumed the adjourned discussion on Mr. Wightman Wood's amendment—

That each District Committee should collect funds, in any mode in which it may deem expedient, from persons within its own district, but that the collection should be made not merely for its own work, but also on behalf of the whole Society, and hand over to the District Committee Aid Fund 10 per cent. of the first £500 collected and sums under £500; 30 per cent. of the second £500 collected; and 50 per cent. on all further sums collected.

Lord Lichfield confessed that he could not see any reason for believing that the system indicated by the amendment was at all likely to meet the requirements of the Poor Committees, and he proceeded to show what inequalities would arise if £12,000 or £18,000 were collected by the six richer Committees and distributed on this plan. On these, and on other grounds, therefore, he would urge the Council to hesitate before adopting the plan indicated by the amendment. A still stronger reason for the rejection of the plan was that it was based upon an idea which he could not but think an erroneous one—namely, that sufficient money for the poorer districts could ever be raised by the richer Committees.

Lord Lichfield then drew attention to the recommendations and suggestions of the Report now before Council. He said that, with one exception, these recommendations and suggestions merely urged upon the Society greater exertions in the same direction as that in which they had hitherto worked. That exception was, however, a most important one, for by it Committees were to be authorised to collect money in the name of the whole Society. The Committees would, no doubt, raise more money in this way; but the adoption of the principle would, he contended, make the present inconsistencies and inequalities still more glaring, for the richer Committees would still be able to expend, in their own districts, as much money as they thought fit to spend there, while the amount would not only be larger, but would have been distinctly obtained from the public on behalf of the poorer Committees. Again, if the poorer Committees were to be supported by the richer, it amounted to this, that a large majority of the Committees of the Society were to be entirely dependent upon a small minority. In fact, bearing in mind the recommendation that each Committee should send in the estimates of their requirements, the Report laid down the principle that, after the appetites of the richer Committees had, so to speak, been measured, in order that we might know what they might require and what they might be able to spare, the poorer Committees were to be maintained by the crumbs that might fall from the tables of the richer Committees. Then, with reference to the third recommendation, how could it be decided that enough had not been collected in a district, and that the Council must come to the rescue? It was, he thought, very difficult to tell what could be done in this direction; opinions on such a point might very well differ. With regard to the first suggestion of the Report, that the names of persons willing to assist deserving cases should be obtained—this was, he did not hesitate to say, the A B C of Charity Organisation, and was already the first duty of every Committee.

The speaker then said that he thought, in order that the Council might have a thorough grasp of the subject they had under consideration, it would be well for him to rehearse, at some length, not merely the history of the special subject with which they now had to deal, but also the history of the Society itself, and the circumstances under which the movement originated. He pointed out that among those present at a Council meeting in the present day there were many who had joined the Society recently, there were few who had belonged to it since its early days, and there were very few indeed—not, perhaps, more than two or three—in the Council-room to-day who had assisted in the actual foundation of the Society itself. After dwelling upon the circumstances in which the Society had its origin, Lord Lichfield said, in explanation of the existence of the present system of independent collection on the part of the Committees, that he had only consented to such a system as a temporary measure; that there had been great difficulties in starting Committees, and that he had always looked forward to the time when the District Committees would consent not merely to a central collection, but to central control. As early as 1870 it could be seen, from an examination of the records of the Society, that anxiety and dissatisfaction existed, not only with regard to these questions of central collection and central control, but also with regard to that of a powerful executive body at the centre. This, he believed, was more necessary for the efficient working of the Society than any mere scheme of collection. The speaker then alluded to various motions bearing upon these questions which had, at various times from that year to the present one, been brought forward and discussed; and he recapitulated some of the arguments used by himself and others on these occasions. The former were, briefly, that the public, subscribing funds to the Council for the benefit of the whole Society held the Council responsible for the efficiency of the whole Society; whereas the Council, having no controlling power over the District Committees, could not do justice to the responsibility thus imposed upon it. He held in his hand an analysis of the names of those who, in one of these debates, voted against the plan of centralisation; and he drew attention to the large preponderance, among the majority, of the representatives of richer Committees.

The Council had shown their sense of the importance of this subject, not only by the discussion of numerous motions and amendments of the most varied character, but by the appointment of several Committees and Sub-Committees to consider questions bearing upon the position and prospects of the whole Society. The Reports of the last two of these Committees were now before Council. He said 'the last two of these Committees' advisedly, for he feared that the Report of the Sub-Committee on Visits to Offices,* some of the recommendations of which were still before the Council, had perhaps passed from the recollection of many members. He would also remind the Council that one of the chief recommendations of that Report had been, for the time, set aside, and the Sub-Committee whose Report was now under their more immediate consideration had been specially appointed to consider the question raised by the important recommendation he had referred to. In his opinion the Report of the Visits to Offices Sub-Committee, to which he had alluded was by far the most valuable and most powerful document of the two; and he intended at once to draw the special attention of Council to some of its utterances, and to some of those of the Report of the Sub-Committee on the Collection of Funds, to which the recommendations of the former Sub-Committee had given rise. Taking, in the first instance, the Report of the Sub-Committee on the Collection of Funds, what did that Report say? It stated that, with three exceptions, all the Committees were of opinion that more money might be collected in these districts, and it endorsed and confirmed that opinion. It showed that there was great want of co-operation with, and of support from, the local charitable agencies; it pointed out that to secure a sufficient number of competent officers the Society would require some thousands a year more than it at present obtained, and then it proceeded to recommend what was practically no change in the mode of operation, but merely, as he had already pointed out, an extension and development of the present inadequate system. The Report of the Visits to Offices Sub-Committee embodied a much stronger opinion, expressed, he would venture to say, by a much stronger Committee. This Report drew attention to inequalities in the number and efficiency of the paid staff of the Committees; to inequalities in the representation of the Committees at Council; and to the way in which Committees in the poorer districts, where it was already difficult enough to obtain working members, were hampered by the additional burden of collection.

Lord Lichfield then dwelt further upon the importance of a strong executive body at the centre, upon whom must devolve such additional responsibilities as any form of central collection and control would necessarily entail. He thought that the opposition of members to a system of central control and collection might arise from various causes. Some Committees dreaded interference, and some feared larger expenditure at the centre. To these last he would point out that reduced central expenditure did not, necessarily, imply increased expenditure of Committees. The advantages of central collection, though great, could be briefly expressed. It was simple, intelligible, equitable, and wholly in accordance with the principles upon which the Society was established. It had not yet been tried, so that the possibly small amount of failure that had attended the present system could not be charged against the one advocated. If he were asked what guarantee he would give for the success of the Society under this system, he would point to the success which had attended their efforts in spite of the present system. That success, he maintained, demonstrated, incontrovertibly, the soundness of the principles upon which the Society was based. Lord Lichfield said, in continuation, that his conviction with regard to the faultiness of the present system, and of the danger which the whole Society incurred by adhering to it, was so firm, that if the Report were passed in its present form, he must say, much to his regret, that he saw no course before him but that of resigning the Chairmanship of the Council. He would still hope to attend the Council meetings, and to give the Council all the assistance in his power, he would even loyally help them to carry out a scheme of the success of which he was utterly hopeless, but he felt that, under those circumstances, he could no longer occupy the position he had hitherto held as their Chairman. In the course of his examination of the subject now under consideration it had, however, occurred to him that, perhaps, some compromise might be accepted, some intermediate course agreed to, and the only basis upon which he had been able to found such a course was this. Let each Committee that chooses to do so invite the Council to collect for them, and let each Committee that prefers to collect for itself continue to raise its own funds; but let the Council collect in all parts of London indifferently, and on the plan which it thinks best. In the hope that such a course might be accepted by Council, he would, therefore, at the proper time, submit the following amendment:—

That each District Committee should collect funds for its own purposes only, within its own district, unless it prefers to have its collection undertaken by the Central Office, and that the Central Office should collect funds throughout the metropolis in any mode in which it may deem expedient for its own purposes, and on behalf of District Committees which do not collect for themselves.

Major Prendergast was aware that the attention of Lord Lichfield had, during the past winter, been drawn to the question of the efficiency of the Committees, and that he had been present at a large number of meetings of the Administrative Committee, and of various very important Sub-Committees, which had reported to Council in due course. But the subject with which they had dealt was not the question of collection, but that of efficiency, and with the latter question the executive body had not yet had time to grapple. In the course of their very lengthy and careful enquiry the Sub-Committee on Collection had come to the conclusion that the Committees would not accept any scheme of centralisation, and it had therefore not been recommended by them.

Mr. Allen Graham feared that the chief defect inherent in Mr. Wood's scheme, as in all those involving the transfer to the Council, for the use of the poorer Committees, of the surplus funds of the richer Committees, was that the natural tendency of the richer Committees must be not to collect more than they themselves require.

Mr. Wightman Wood's amendment was, after some slight discussion, put and lost, three voting in its favour.

Mr. Whitcombe said, with reference to his amendment,—

That it be a matter of arrangement between the Council and the Committee of each District whether the collection shall be made by the Council or by the Committee, and generally as to the plan of collection to be adopted there; but the collection, by whichever body made, shall be on behalf of the Society at large, that it left entire liberty of action to the Committees, while it increased their means of getting funds.

The Rev. H. F. Mallet having seconded the amendment, a few words in opposition were said by Sir C. Trevelyan, Mr. Miner, and Mr. Hollond, and the amendment was put and lost, five voting for it.

Mr. Du Pré Thornton and Dr. Daniel having obtained leave to withdraw the amendments of which they had given notice (see last Reporter),

Mr. Allen Graham said he had great pleasure in seconding Lord Lichfield's amendment. He could not feel that the object of the Committee, whose Report was now before them, had been to devise the best possible scheme of collection. It was, he thought, only an attempt to go as far in the direction of advance as the Committee thought the Council could be induced to go. He found, on referring to the Manual, that it was laid down as a principle that each Committee should raise and expend funds in its own district. But he pointed out, at the time when such a principle was affirmed, there could not have been, as at present, a majority of Committees dependent upon the centre for support; and to carry out that principle the original idea of entire independence must be reverted to. In his opinion the one fatal objection to any system of collection but a central one was, that it imposed upon the already overtaxed energies of the poorer Committees the additional burden and anxiety of collection. He could see why the poorer Committees should look to the Council for support, but not why they should depend for support upon the richer Committees. He had no fear of confusion arising from successive appeals, first from the District Committees, and then from the Council. The collectors would be instructed fully to explain the arrangement, and, for his own part, he believed that the statements of the superior collectors appointed by Council would do much to impress upon the minds of the public the fact that the Society works for the whole of London, not for any particular districts alone. He strongly supported the view that a much stronger executive body was required, and he pointed out, at some length, that had the Committees been in all cases spontaneous growths, they might be left to find their own nourishment. But they were rather, in many districts, delicate exotics raised by the Council, and to the Council they must, for some time to come, look for support. The Committees were, in these parts of London, far in advance of public opinion; it was futile, therefore, to hope that the public would at present efficiently support them. But if the Council expended on these Committees the money it had obtained from the public for the objects of the Society, it was bound to see that the Committees were carrying out those objects with the strictest adherence to principle. Central control was, therefore, he would say with Lord Lichfield, a necessary consequence of central collection.

Mr. Mocatta did not quite agree with Lord Lichfield's amendment; but he must admit that it had always appeared to him that the expenditure of the Society in the rich and in the poor districts was just the reverse of what it ought to be, and that the larger sums, both in machinery and in relief, should be expended in the poorer districts. He would still advocate the plan of paying all sums into one common fund.

Mr. Maurice feared that the plan proposed by the amendment would hinder the advance of the poorer Committees. He thought that many people would give money to their own Committees for transmission to the poorer Committees, when they would refuse it to the Council. He deprecated the notion that districts were either rich or poor; some could not strictly be placed in either category.

Mr. W. Wood expressed his opinion that the present system, though sound in theory, had utterly broken down in practice. The rich Committees, he was sure, had not energy enough to collect sufficient funds for the poor Committees. He approved the principle of Mr. Du Pré Thornton's amendment, but saw that it must lead to confusion. Of Lord Lichfield's amendment, however, he had no such fear; it was simple and consistent. It was, in his opinion, a significant fact that no member of his own (St. George's) Committee, or indeed of any of the richer Committees, had proposed, or even supported, any kind of intermediate course. He was heartily in favour of the amendment, but would ask Lord Lichfield to add to the end of his amendment the words, 'or, having collected, have been unable to raise sufficient funds.'

This addition was accepted by Lord Lichfield; and after a few words from Mr. Willis-Bund and others, the adjournment of the debate (which had already been put and lost twice before) was moved by Mr. Bousfield, and seconded by Lord W. Compton, who said that he felt sure that his Committee would be glad of the opportunity of considering the amendment now before them.

The adjournment was then put and carried.

The following business stands for Monday, June 26 :—

I. The adjourned discussion on Lord Lichfield's amendment to Recommendation No. 2 of the Report of the Sub-Committee on the Collection of Funds—

'That each District Committee should collect funds for its own purposes only, within its own district, unless it prefers to have its collection undertaken by the Central Office, and that the Central Office should collect funds throughout the metropolis in any mode in which it may deem expedient for its own purposes, and on behalf of District Committees which do not collect for themselves, or, having collected, have been unable to raise sufficient funds.'

II. The consideration of the remaining Recommendations (Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6) of the above-mentioned Report (see Reporter, June 14, page 103).

III. Mr. A. H. Hill to move :—

'That it is expedient that this Council should offer every facility in its power for the training of suitable persons to act as local Charity Agents under the several District Committees, and with this view opportunities should be afforded for extra clerks, at moderate salaries, to work, by way of apprenticeship, under the Secretaries of the Society at the Central Office.'

IV. Miss Hill to move :—

'That, considering the needs of the poor Committees, and to avoid catastrophe when most persons interested in the subject are out of town, it is desirable that every member of the Council should endeavour to give or collect either £5 or £10 each, or more if possible, before they leave town, quite irrespective of what they may have given or collected before.'

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

At their meeting to-morrow (Thursday) the Administrative Committee will consider a paper of suggestions by Mr. S. Fuller, on the Reporter.

The following contributions were received during the week ending June 17, 1876 :—Donations: Colonel Bryan Milman, £5; St. George's (Hanover Square) Committee, £250. Annual: Sir George Baker, £1. 1s.; H. Peto, Esq., £1. District Committee Aid Fund: H. D. Erskine, Esq., £2. 2s.; J. R. Fuiton, Esq., £5; Loan from General Fund, £250.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

The Special Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles and Harmless Lunatics held its ninth meeting on Wednesday, June 14, at the Central Office. There were present: The Hon. C. H. Strutt (in the Chair), Sir Alexander Acland Hood, Bart., Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B.; the Revs. H. I. Cummins, R. J. Simpson; Drs. J. Langdon Down, D. Hack Tuke, G. W. Grabham, T. A. Wise, Fletcher Beach, R. Boyd; Messrs. F. H. Dickinson, F. D. Mocatta, W. M. Wilkinson, W. Millard, Danby P. Fry, W. H. Pole Carew, and Mr. C. S. Loch, Secretary.

A report was made of a visit paid on the previous day by ten members of the Committee to the Earlswood Asylum.

A letter, dated the 27th ult., from Dr. Wilbur, Superintendent of the New York Asylum for Idiots, to Sir Charles Trevelyan, approving of the Agenda, and commenting upon the proceedings at the third and fourth meetings, was submitted to the Committee.

The Committee then considered the five first heads of the fourth section of the Agenda, viz., 'Administrative Arrangements,' and passed the following Resolutions :—

1. 'Voluntary charity has directed attention to the claims of this neglected class, and made great progress towards the establishment of a model for general adoption; but it has not proved equal to providing a remedial machinery co-extensive with the evil.'

2. 'Assuming that the returns of the Census of 1871 are within the mark, only about three per cent. of the Idiots and Imbeciles in England and Wales have been suitably provided for by voluntary charity.'

3. 'Adequate provision for all the Idiots and Imbeciles in England and Wales of the poorer classes, whether juvenile or adult, cannot be made without the intervention of the State.'

Under the 6th head letters were read from Mr. Jonathan Pim and Professor Hancock, stating that the provision made in Ireland for Idiots and Imbeciles was simply that they might be confined in Lunatic Asylums as being insane, or in Prisons as criminals, or in Workhouses as paupers, excepting only the Stewart Asylum, established about eight years ago, in which there are at present 43 inmates; but that a report is being prepared by the Charity Organisation Committee of the Dublin Statistical and Social Inquiry Society, under the several heads of the Agenda, so that the Committee may have uniform information for all parts of the United Kingdom as a basis for an uniform law for the helpless classes.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of June, 1876, was 34,079, and 45,114 received outdoor relief, making a total of 79,193. This was a decrease of 623 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 6,650, 16,325, and 23,518 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 576. This was a decrease of 112 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 120 on the corresponding day of last year.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia,* that during the week ending June 17 the receipts had been £263. 16s. 5d. for the General Fund, that the receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund had been £257. 2s., including a loan of £250 from the General Fund, and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £322. 1s. and £51. 11s. 7d. respectively.

THE REPORTER.—A paper of suggestions on the Reporter, by Mr. S. Fuller, had been considered, and it was resolved that the names of members attending Council meetings be published, and that the Proceedings of Council be reported as hitherto; that 'questions' of interest to District Committees, and details of special prosecutions, be inserted: that the Reporter be more freely used as a medium for collecting and diffusing information on subjects in which the Society is interested; that 'letters' be received; that District Committees be again invited to forward 'specimen' cases for insertion; that suitable advertisements be received; that a Sub-Committee be appointed to consider the best mode of carrying out the above changes, and report in a month's time; and that Mr. F. D. Thornton, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Major Nares, Mr. S. Fuller, and Mr. A. H. Hill be appointed members of the Sub-Committee.

REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON THE COLLECTION OF FUNDS.

With the consent of Mr. Bousfield, Sir C. Trevelyan resumed the adjourned discussion upon Lord Lichfield's amendment:

That each District Committee should collect funds for its own purposes only, within its own district, unless it prefers to have its collection undertaken by the Central Office, and that the Central Office should collect funds throughout the metropolis in any mode which it may deem expedient for its own purposes, and on behalf of District Committees which do not collect for themselves, or, having collected, have been unable to raise sufficient funds. He said that, in bringing forward this amendment, Lord Lichfield had preferred a heavy indictment against the constitution of the Society, and had concluded by proposing a mode of collection entirely subversive of that constitution. He would follow Lord Lichfield's allusion to the early history of the Society, by drawing attention to a few more of the points it would be well to recall in connection with its origin and foundation. In the course of his retrospect Sir Charles pointed out that, according to his view, the Society itself was, in the words of the second rule of the Society, 'a federation of District Committees, advised and harmonised by a representative Council. In the earliest days of the Society it became apparent, he said, that a vast mixed multitude of some four or five millions of inhabitants, constituting rather a province of houses than a city, and imbued with those erroneous views on charitable relief which it was the great aim of the Society to correct, could never be organised and influenced from a single centre. Many other societies to which the speaker referred had attempted to solve this problem, and had failed. It could, he maintained, be done only on the principle of local administration, by bringing the experience, influence, and benevolent zeal of the leading persons of each District to bear, in the most direct and effectual manner, upon their respective Districts. It was also plain that no amount of stipendiary agency which we could employ would suffice; that we must mainly rely upon voluntary agency, and that we should endeavour to train to the work as many volunteers as possible. Stipendiary agents must be employed, to the necessary extent, in a subsidiary and subordinate relation to the District Committees. It was, he contended, upon these principles, namely, local administration, voluntary agency, and professional stipendiary assistance, that the constitution of the Society was based, and upon them it had rested ever since.

In the earlier days of the Society the question of funds did not, said the speaker, press so heavily upon the Council. The Guarantee Fund was then in existence, and it was, he maintained, distinctly understood at that time that the Committees should eventually support the Council. Later came attempts, he said, at centralisation. Lord Lichfield's motion in 1873, that all appeals for support be made from one centre* had been negatived by 21 votes against 11, and a Committee was then appointed 'to consider and report on the most effective and economical arrangements for distributing and collecting funds both by the Council and the District Committees.' This Committee made two reports, the first as to collection by the Council, under certain conditions, from persons who might be presumed to be interested in the general welfare of the metropolis; the second, as to the distribution of the funds to the Committees. The Committee did not enter upon the question of collection by District Committees, it being considered that these were details which Committees were competent to decide for themselves, according to the circumstances of their respective Districts.†

Sir Charles then emphatically denied that the present system had proved a failure as regards the work done. No doubt there had been deficiencies and shortcomings; he was as ready to admit this as the strongest opponent of the existing system would be to assert it, and he and those who thought with him were equally willing to do their best promptly and zealously to remedy them. How, he asked, is it possible that there should not be deficiencies in an organisation the object of which is to direct the charity of tens of thousands, to suppress imposture, and to improve and elevate the condition of the body of the people? If all defects had been overcome, the object would have been accomplished. But the time had not yet come, he would assert, for taking off our armour. We had, in fact, only just buckled it on, for the first seven years of the existence of our Society had barely sufficed for completing its machinery and getting it into working order; and many a hard-fought field was before us, before we could hope to conquer in this strife. So much had lately been said of the defects of the District Committees that he felt it would only be fair if their successes were depicted in colours as powerful as those used for delineating their failures. There had, in fact, been a great preponderance of good, well worth all the labour and expense bestowed upon the Society and the administration had steadily improved and was still improving. The main object of the Society—effectual inquiry, effectual relief, and effectual exposure of imposture—had been substantially attained, and public confidence in the Society had been continually growing. This was proved, said Sir Charles, by the support and co-operation afforded to the Society by the clergy, the medical profession, Government departments, and even by Parliament itself. The reforms in medical relief that had owed their origin to the Society and had come to pass, not only in London, but even more strikingly in Manchester; the spontaneous, rapid, and successful growth of Charity Organisation Associations in most of the large towns of England, and in Glasgow and Dublin; the special committees of the Society on such subjects as Vagrancy, the dwellings of the poor, the condition of the Blind, and the treatment of Idiots and Imbeciles; the assistance the Society had been enabled, through Mr. Peek's generous gift, to render to those cases of distress brought under their notice by means of the operations of School Boards, and the co-operation of the Society with Boards of Guardians anxious to restrict, and eventually to supplant, by wise, well-regulated charity, the pauperising system of out-door relief—all showed the progress the Society had made and the growing appreciation evinced for its principles by the public at large. But, perhaps, after all, the best work they could point to was, that hundreds of men and women had been induced to take up the work; and, by the efforts of the District Committees and of the Council, trained in skilled voluntary work for the Society.

As regards finances, Sir Charles must repeat his emphatic denial that the existing system had proved a failure. The income of the Society, raised in the proportion of three-fourths by the District Committees to one-fourth by the Council, had been continually on the increase, and in the last three years of which an account could be rendered the District Committees had collected £35,256, while the Council had only collected £10,500, and this although the District Committees had not made any general appeals, while the Council had made appeals to the public through the Times and other channels of public opinion. Nor was this matter for surprise. The District Committees were not only 37 to 1, but they had a vast, varied, ready-made, and, for the most part, voluntary and unpaid machinery for making their collections. Their constituency might be said to embrace the whole of London, for residents in every district were intimately acquainted with them, and depended upon them for the various local benefits of the Society; whereas the Council, he feared, was, to the vast majority, merely an abstraction, and was only really understood by the comparatively few who were interested in the whole of London, and enlightened enough to comprehend the advantage of a central direction for the various local Committees of the Society. The speaker deprecated the numerous deliberations that had taken the place of action, and contrasted the activity of the Council in former years with the supineness which had of late, he said, prevented it from endeavouring energetically to raise funds. He contended that, had proper steps been taken, no such financial crisis as that with which they had been threatened (and in which he, for his own part, had never believed in), could have been used as the stalking-horse from behind which a second attempt had been made to substitute a centralised stipendiary system for the existing localised voluntary principle. The occasion of this second attempt was, said the speaker, a single paragraph, carried by a bare majority, in a long Report of a Sub-Committee, the rest of which was directed to other matters. This paragraph was referred to another and, he thought, a stronger Committee, which was instructed to make the point thus incidentally raised the sole subject of their deliberations, and the result was the Report now before the Council. He did not hesitate to say that it was an excellent Report. It was the comprehensive statement that had ever been made of the situation of the Society in all that concerns finance, and it raised some additional suggestions for its successful work.

The speaker could not admit that the recommendations of the Report indicated nothing more than the continuance of the present system. Their intention was to give full practical effect to the financial system of the Society, both as regards the District Committees and the Council, and this adoption of the present theoretical plan would be the best change of all.

He could not, he regretted to say, look upon Lord Lichfield's amendment as a compromise. He must denounce it as the most stringent and subversive expression of the centralisation principle which had yet been enunciated, and, if passed, would suddenly and effectually revolutionise the Society. It would produce a reversal of the present mode of action in which the poorer Committees were urged to make themselves self-supporting, and the richer Committees exhorted to contribute funds for the Society at large. He must deprecate the notion of Lord Lichfield to the 'crumbs' that the richer Committees had scattered to the poorer. The former had, he was sure, loyally striven to raise money for the general uses of the Society, and more trust and confidence ought to be reposed in their zeal and loyalty than the words of Lord Lichfield had appeared to credit them with. Sir Charles quoted passages from appeals issued by the St. George's (over Square) Committee in 1872 and 1876, signed by the Duke of Westminster, as chairman of the Committee, asking for contributions in the name of the whole Society, for the benefit of the Council and of the poorer Committees. The result of the first letter, he reminded members, was the sum of £1,100 by the St. George's Committee to the Council, and with regard to the second, a first instalment of £500 had been already paid, the collection being still in progress. At this point, Sir Charles said, he agreed with Lord Lichfield. There was no possible compromise—no via media—no golden mean between the principle of local administration based on voluntary agency, and the principle of centralised administration based upon highly-paid stipendiary agency. We must either have responsible District Committees working through subordinate paid agents, or Lord Lichfield's 'strong Executive' at the centre, upon whom must devolve such additional responsibilities as any form of central collection and control necessarily entail. This would involve, he feared, an increase of staff at the centre. Several secretaries and clerks would, he had been informed, be required, and all work must be directed from the centre. He must deprecate these periodical attempts at altering the constitution of the Society; they imperilled its existence, and to take away from the richer Committees the power of collecting funds on behalf of the whole Society would, he feared, be killing the goose that laid the golden eggs. Experience was entirely in favour of the existing system. It had been a success, and the very prospect of becoming a still greater success as the Society was brought into full work. Of the opposite system, Lord Lichfield said, we had had no experience in our own country; while in other Metropolitan Societies, where it had been tried, it had been an entire failure. It would therefore be pure speculation, with every presumption against it.

A. H. Hill said that the main question certainly was whether the present system was a failure or a success. He was not, judging from his own experience of the District Committees, pronouncing it the latter. The documents issued from the Committees showed that there was no uniformity of action or general recognition of principles. As far as he could see, the work of the poorer Committees was more satisfactory than that of the richer, and he thought that the Council could justifiably point to their success in the poor districts of the South and East of London, than to the work of the Committees in the wealthy districts of the West End. The more nearly did the Committees of the Society, in all parts of London, approach perfection in their work, the more thoroughly, he was sure, were the true interests of the poor advanced. He was strongly in favour of Lord Lichfield's amendment, and could not for a moment fear that its adoption could in any way imperil the Society.

The Rev. J. D. McGachen said that in that respect he could not agree with the last speaker. There was, he believed, already much dread among the Committees of interference on the part of the Council, and some impatience at any attempt at central control. The Sub-Committee whose Report was before Council had derived information from every possible source, and, as Major Prendergast had said, they could not, with that information before them, recommend any nearer approach to centralisation. Were a scheme of centralisation carried out, it would, he feared, be a fatal day for the Society. He did not forget that Lord Lichfield's amendment made no allusion to central control, but reading his amendment by the light of his speech, that, he felt sure, must be its intent.

The Rev. W. H. Langhorne said that although, like the last speaker, he represented a Committee in one of the very poorest districts in London, he must entirely differ from his conclusions. He could not possibly share these very gloomy views he took, and he had no fear whatever with regard to the effect which centralisation of funds might have on the poorer Committees. He could not, he feared, compare the Society in its present state to any of the higher living organisms: the head was there and the limbs were there; but some limbs were powerful, and others weak, while the head itself, he felt sure, might with advantage be strengthened. Nor could the Society, he thought, be properly called a 'Confederation,' for most of the Committees were, he took it, children of the Council, while some, he had heard from Sir Charles Trevelyan, were its parents. If the Council were not a governing body, he failed to see its exact relation to the Society. He thought the amendment was a step in the right direction, namely, in that of organisation, and he pointed out that its tendency would be to remove a somewhat invidious difference that now existed between the dependent and the independent Committees, for the latter, before they could receive subsidies from the Council, must submit to some examination with regard to their modes of working, while to the former perfectly free action was left. The Society would assume, he ventured to affirm, a much more symmetrical form if, following the plan of all other great societies, it adopted the simple principle of collection to, and distribution from, a centre.

Mr. E. Bond asked Lord Lichfield whether it was the intention of his amendment, if carried, that the District Committees should be confined to collecting for their own purposes only, and should be precluded from handing over to the Council any balance not required for their own support?

Lord Lichfield replied that he could not, at present, see his way to altering his amendment, and that he certainly intended to confine the collection of the Committees to their own purposes, and that they should not collect in the name of, and on behalf of the Society. But, he explained, if a Committee, in the course of a collection conducted on this principle, obtained more money than it required for its own purposes, it would, he conceived, be still within the power of that Committee in the exercise of its own discretion voluntarily to hand over to the Council such surplus as it thought fit to transfer in that manner.

The Rev. H. I. Cummins thought that the question before them, namely, that of the collection of funds, had been unnecessarily involved by too much attention being given to that of central control, which was not, he would point out, under the consideration of Council. Lord Lichfield's object, which he heartily supported, was clearly that the Council should no longer be dependent upon contributions from the richer Committees. That these Committees were very few in number was clear from a fact to which he would draw the attention of Council, namely, that only three Committees of the Society had, during the financial year 1873-4, raised more than £1,000. And he would point out further that in 1874 only £565 had been contributed by these Committees to the funds of the Council. The speaker dwelt upon the difficulty in obtaining, in districts where there were large non-resident employers, adequate contributions to the funds of the Committees, and argued from that and from other circumstances that contributions from such sources could be better obtained by the Council. A confederation of workers was, he said what was wanted for the perfection of the scheme of the Society—bands of earnest men and women who would go and work in those districts where both money and workers were scarce. But to secure these, the Society must be prepared to supply them with adequate funds, and to obtain these funds they must, he thought, look to the centre.

Major FitzRoy said that he felt sure that he should be taking the Council with him when he said that all were agreed that greater efficiency must be attained by the District Committees. This must of necessity imply an increased expenditure; for, he maintained, however much voluntary assistance might be secured, more paid agency was absolutely essential. It was for this reason that the Sub-Committee on Visits to District Offices, of which he had been chairman, had recommended the collection of funds from the centre. That Sub-Committee had gone very fully into the matter, and had arrived at their conclusions after mature consideration. But it was not, they conceived, within their function to say how such central collection was to be carried out. That question they left for later consideration, and it was now before Council in the form of the recommendations of the Report of the Sub-Committee on Collections. A common purse and a common distribution were, in theory, simple enough, but on a closer examination many difficulties presented themselves. Why not then, he asked, continue to employ the Committees as collecting agencies? He had, at first, hoped that his own (St. George's) Committee would have been able to adopt Lord Lichfield's amendment, but he feared that it would paralyse their efforts. They would no longer be able to use the powerful lever afforded them by the statement that the funds collected by them were applicable to the Society at large, not merely to the purposes of their own Committee; and the adoption of the amendment would, moreover, he pointed out, leave the Council without any definite practical scheme before them, so that they would be obliged to retrace their steps and re-consider the whole subject.

Mr. Bousfield feared that if larger funds were transmitted to the poorer Committees these would become large almsgiving centres. In rich districts, he pointed out, there were already numerous almsgivers of all kinds, and their operations invited organisation. But in the poorer districts such dispensers of charity were, with the exception of the clergy, scarcely to be found, and therefore he was not by any means convinced that in those localities Committees were at all necessary.

Mr. Holland said, with reference to Mr. Bond's question, that if the amendment were passed he thought the Council must be bound by its words rather than by some interpretation that might be attached to them. House to house collection by emissaries of the Council must, he thought, prove a failure, and would, he feared, entail disastrous results.

Major Prendergast would admit that a great error had no doubt been made in the first instance, when the principle of local was preferred to that of central collection. But the Council must now look their difficulties boldly in the face, and above all he would warn them against adopting a scheme so disastrous to the Society, so subversive of its constitution, as was the amendment now before them.

Lord Lichfield said, in explanation of his amendment, and in reply to a question from the Rev. R. J. Simpson, that he could scarcely consent to withdraw the word 'only' from the second line of his amendment. He begged the Council once more to understand that he considered his amendment a compromise, and that the responsibility of rejecting it must rest with themselves. He urged that he used the word 'compromise' because, while perfect liberty was left to the richer Committees to collect as much as they could for their own purposes, no attempt was made to diminish in any way the expenditure which might, even then, be excessive, as he maintained it was at present. He had introduced the word 'only' because he wished to avoid a double collection on behalf of the whole Society.

Mr. Miner, replying to the objections made to the second recommendation of the Sub-Committee, reminded the Council that the appointment of the Sub-Committee on Collection, its Report, now before them, and the discussions to which they had been listening, all had their origin in a single paragraph of the Report of the Visits to Offices Sub-Committee. Before the Collection Sub-Committee was appointed the views of the Committees had been ascertained, and the results had, together with a mass of other information, been most carefully considered by the Sub-Committee. He feared that upon the adoption of the amendment, or of any similar scheme, there would be great loss of vitality and vigour in the poorer Committees, and that they would degenerate into mere machines: for a healthy body strong limbs were, he thought, as necessary as a strong head. The speaker said, with reference to the charge that the recommendations of the Sub-Committee would make no change in the present scheme, that no scheme was in actual operation. No distinct appeal for funds had, since May 1874, been made by the Council. To quote Lord Lichfield's speech, he would say that the 'exception' he had alluded to was, indeed, a most important one, and, in his Lordship's own words, he would say that 'if the recommendation is adopted, that the Committees collect in future not merely for their own purposes, but also on behalf of the whole Society, the Council will put in the hands of the Committees an engine of enormous power for raising funds.' It was a great object, he thought, that money should be obtained from every stratum of society, that dribblets should be caught as well as streams impounded; and such work, he maintained, could only be carried out by the Committees themselves. Two large and experienced Sub-committees had recommended certain plans to Council, and if they adopted these recommendations, and earnestly and actively carried them out, could they doubt that they would be successful?

After some further discussion, Lord Lichfield and his seconder expressed their willingness to withdraw the word 'only' from the second line of the amendment, if the Council chose to express, by a vote, their wishes to that effect; but the Chairman ruled that, under the thirteenth Bye-law, the word could not be withdrawn.

On a show of hands being taken the amendment was lost by 22 votes against 19.

Lord Lichfield then moved, and it was carried, that the names of those who voted should be taken down. He said that his reason for wishing this was, that in introducing his amendment he had made reference to a division which had, in 1872, taken place on the same question, and he pointed out that the result had shown that the population of the districts represented by the minority was double that of the districts represented by the majority. It was also agreed, on the motion of the Rev. H. I. Cummins, that a division should be taken. This was done, with the same numerical result as to votes; and the recommendation being put as an original motion, was carried by 22 votes against 12.

The Council then adjourned.

The following business stands for Monday, July 3:—

I. The consideration of the remaining Recommendations (Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6) of the above-mentioned Report (see Reporter, June 14, page 103).

II. Mr. A. H. Hill to move:—

'That it is expedient that this Council should offer every facility in its power for the training of suitable persons to act as local Charity Agents under the several District Committees, and with this view opportunities should be afforded for extra clerks, at moderate salaries, to work, by way of apprenticeship, under the Secretaries of the Society at the Central Office.'

III. Miss Hill to move:—

'That, considering the needs of the poor Committees, and to avoid catastrophe when most persons interested in the subject are out of town, it is desirable that every member of the Council should endeavour to give or collect either £5 or £10 each, or more if possible, before they leave town, quite irrespective of what they may have given or collected before.'

The following contributions were received during the week ending June 24, 1876:—Donation: E. W. Holland, Esq., £5. Annual: Hon. Mrs. Malcolm, £1; Sir W. C. Trevelyan, £1. 10s. District Committee Aid Fund: Marylebone Committee, £25.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

The Special Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles and Harmless Lunatics held its tenth meeting on Wednesday, June 21, at the Central Offices. There were present: Mr. F. H. Dickinson (in the chair), Lord Wrottesley, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., Lieut.-General Cavenagh, the Rev. H. I. Cummins; Drs. J. Langdon Down, D. Hack Tuke, G. W. Grabham, Brewer, Fletcher Beach, R. Boyd; Messrs. F. D. Mocatta, W. M. Wilkinson, W. Millard, Danby P. Fry, Sydney C. Buxton, and Mr. C. S. Loch, Secretary.

A report was made of a visit paid on the previous day by nine members to Dr. Langdon Down's establishment at Normansfield, Hampton Wick.

Answers were read from the Foreign Office, transmitting information relating to Idiot Institutions in Switzerland and Belgium.

And printed copies of the following papers were distributed:—

1st. A short account of the Idiot Asylums in Switzerland and North and South Germany, by Drs. Ireland and Beach.

2nd. On the arrangements for the education and care of Idiots and Imbeciles in Scotland, by Dr. Ireland, Superintendent of the Scottish National Institution for the Education of Imbecile Children; and

3rd. Letter to Sir Charles Trevelyan from Dr. Seguin.

The existing arrangements for the education and care of Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics in Scotland were then considered, under the 6th head of the 4th section of the Agenda; and letters were read from Dr. Mitchell, member of the General Board of Commissioners in Lunacy for Scotland; Mr. Skelton, Secretary to the Board of Supervision for the Relief of the Poor in Scotland; and Dr. Ireland.

Under the 7th head of the 4th section it was determined to postpone the consideration of new legislation until it shall be seen what arrangements may be recommended to be made.

Under the 8th and 9th heads it was resolved: 'That the arrangement which has been made for Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics in the Metropolitan Asylum District is applicable, in its main principles, to the rest of England; viz., that Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics should be removed from Workhouses and County Lunatic Asylums, and that young persons of those classes should be suitably educated and trained.'

Under the 10th head it was resolved: 'That the education and care of Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics should be conducted by governing bodies specially appointed and responsible for that purpose; and

Under the 11th head: 'That such governing bodies should be charged with the education and care of Blind and Deaf and Dumb Children of the poorer classes.'

EAST END MEETING.

At a meeting of those interested in the work of the Charity Organisation Society in the East End of London, held on May 8, in the St. Philip's School-Room, Stepney, a paper was read by the Rev. S. A. Barnett, on 'Blanks in the Scheme of the Charity Organisation Society.'

Mr. Barnett began by saying that the title of his paper did not refer to imperfections in the mode of carrying out the scheme of the Society, but to gaps in the very scheme itself. These he placed under two heads, of which the first was the absence of any definite plan of co-operation with the Poor Law. The respective spheres of Charity and the Poor Law had never been exactly defined, though various attempts at a systematic co-operation between the two agencies had been made. The first was that of supplementing the Poor Law doles in certain cases by charity, but the objection to this was that it would lead to carelessness in giving relief, and so would have a tendency to pauperise. The second plan was that of dividing the outdoor list, the deserving been taken on by charity, and the undeserving by the Poor Law; but the objection to this was that it was difficult to see on what principle this division could be made, or how this form of relief could be justified in cases fitly classed 'undeserving.' The third plan was to limit Poor Law relief to the workhouse, the infirmary, and the District Schools, leaving all cases of out-relief to charity. This had the merit of being clear and distinct; of letting the poor know exactly how far the law was prepared to help them, and of opening up an opportunity to the charitable for giving real help to others. Rates, after all, were only a payment made to prevent people starving, and the money already given in charity, if properly organised, would be sufficient, for the cases would be much fewer than was imagined. The second gap in the scheme of the Society was the want of visitors to explain the reasons for the Committee's decisions, and to give moral help to the poor who came under their notice. It would be well if Committees associated with a body of visitors for these purposes.

In the course of the discussion which followed Mr. Jones, one of the relieving officers of the Stepney Union, stated that in his district, which contained a population of 38,000, the value of immediate discretionary relief which he had found it necessary to give did not amount, during the past year, to £1 (the exact sum was 10s. 1d.), and that the guardians did not make orders for temporary relief, either on account of sickness or for other reasons, to the amount of 35s in the same period. In cases of sickness the sick asylum was offered. In the case of widows with children, the latter were taken into the district schools, and in last April he had not a single widow with children on the books as receiving outdoor relief.

ROYAL SOUTH LONDON OPHTHALMIC HOSPITAL.

The following circular and copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Royal South London Ophthalmic Hospital have been sent to the Hon. Secretaries of the District Committees:—

Dear Sir,—I am directed by the Administrative Committee to send you the subjoined copy of a letter, addressed to the Secretary of the Royal South London Ophthalmic Hospital (St. George's Circus, S.E.).

In a subsequent letter the Secretary of the Hospital has accepted the terms of this letter.

Charity Organisation Society, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, W.C.,

March 18th, 1876.

(Copy.)
Dear Sir,—I have to thank you for your letter of the 11th inst., which I yesterday submitted to the Administrative Committee.

I am directed to inform you that the Committee of the Royal South London Ophthalmic Hospital may rest assured that any of the District Committees of this Society to which they may refer cases for inquiry will gladly give them every assistance in their power, it being, however, distinctly understood that the inquiry will be strictly confined to the following heads:—1. The amount of applicant's income. 2. The number and ages of the family dependent on the applicant. 3. Whether the applicant is in receipt of Poor Law relief.

They make this reservation in order that no difficulties may arise from a fuller investigation than is necessary in Hospital inquiries, being inadvertently undertaken.

If this should meet the approval of your Committee, a copy of this letter will be forwarded to our District Committees for their information and guidance.

Yours truly,

C. S. LOCH.

The Secretary, Royal South London Ophthalmic Hospital,
St. George's Circus, S.E.

PAUPERISM AND CHARITY.—The following facts and figures are taken from an article entitled 'Mistakes of Popular Charity,' which appeared in the April number of The Langham Magazine:—"A few statistics may suffice to show, not only that pauperism and demoralisation are assuming really alarming proportions among the lower classes, especially in our large towns, but also that the effect of different kinds of relief, and pre-eminently of different Poor Law systems, in fostering or checking these evils, is one that can hardly be exaggerated. Professor Fawcett, in his instructive essays on 'Pauperism, its Causes and Effects,' shows clearly the encouragement which will be given to dependence and improvidence by any Poor Law which gives out-relief abundantly and in-door relief with comparative rarity. He supports his theory by the following striking figures:—In England the proportion of in-door to out-door paupers is only 1 to 8; in Ireland it is 4 to 5. In England, therefore, State relief takes a form so attractive that few endeavour to be independent of it, while in Ireland the conditions accompanying it are justly dreaded, and all efforts are made to avoid the necessity of resorting to it. The result is that in England one person in every twenty is a pauper, and in Ireland one in every seventy-four; while the charge of pauperism is 3s. per head on the entire population in Ireland, and 6s. in England, the whole of the former country containing only half the number of paupers to be found in London alone. Similarly the Scotch Poor Law of 1845 has, by its liberality in the matter of out-relief, caused the number of paupers in proportion to the population to be three times as great in that country as in Ireland, and twelve times as great in the Highlands as in Ulster and Connaught—and this notwithstanding the greater natural thriftiness of the Scotch, and notwithstanding, too, that the average income of an individual in Ireland is only £5 per annum, while in Scotland it is £20, and in England £23. Again, the old Poor Law in England remunerated pauper labour at a greatly higher rate than that of average wages, and by various other practices tended to render the position of the pauper superior to that of the independent workman. The result was that the charge of pauperism rose to the sum of 8s. per head on the entire population; and that in one instance a single farm of five hundred acres, and of £500 rental, paid £250 per annum in poor-rates, and suffered an additional loss of £100 per annum from the compulsory employment of superfluous pauper labour; while the restrictive measures of the New Poor Law of 1834 soon reduced the cost of pauperism to between 6s. and 5s. per head on the population. Another instance may be found in the well-known system practised in Elberfeld, where, in the space of three or four years, the number of paupers was reduced from 8 per cent. to 2.9 per cent. on the population, although the population itself increased during the same period from 50,364 to 52,590. Again, according to an interesting pamphlet by Sir Baldwin Leighton, Bart., it appears that the number of paupers in Aitcham was, in spite of increase of population, diminished from 8 per cent. in 1836 to 1½ per cent. in 1870, the principles acted upon being described as follows:—

"1. Strict administration of out-relief. 2. Personal energy, sympathy, and supervision. 3. Sanitary precautions. 4. A practical reversal of the present Poor Law policy, and a revolution in administration by setting a premium on thrift."

"With regard to vagrancy, equally startling calculations have been made. According to official returns, the number of vagrants in Great Britain in 1869 was estimated at 60,000, while in England and Wales alone 27,701 persons were, in the year 1870, apprehended for various offences under the Vagrancy Act, and 18,384 were convicted. To this latter evidence of the unsatisfactory character of our vagrant population may be added the testimony of the Oxford Mendicity Society, which, out of 1,578 vagrant persons who slept on its premises between March 17th and October 18th, 1873, selected for further investigation 290 of those whose statements were most plausible, and wrote to the addresses given. The result was that not more than 120 replies were received, and that only 17 of these were satisfactory. It is remarkable, also, that the effective measures taken by the Dorset Mendicity Society succeeded in reducing the number of vagrants assisted from 11,428 in 1869 to 2,609 in 1873, while the committals under the Vagrancy Act were diminished from 251 to 32.

"With regard to the effect of private charity in discouraging habits of providence, a suggestive statement may be quoted from the returns of the Poplar and of the Fulham and Hammersmith Committees of the Charity Organisation Society. In the former district the resident population consists almost exclusively of the poor, while the latter contains a fair proportion of resident gentry, and is bordered by wealthy neighbourhoods. The fact is therefore remarkable that the number of applicants who had subscribed to benefit societies or provident clubs was only 9 per cent. in Fulham, whilst in Poplar it was nearly 32 per cent.; nor was this to be explained by any special or local facilities for saving, since the occupations of the applicants were as various as the nature of the societies subscribed to.

"That the charitable funds of the metropolis require rather to be improved in their management than increased in their amount will be apparent from even the lowest computation of the sum annually expended in London in the relief of distress. Professor Fawcett, writing in 1870, alludes to a then recent pamphlet by Dr. Hawkesley, in which it is estimated at five millions, while others have given estimates varying from four to seven millions; and Sir Charles Trevelyan, writing to the Times in the year 1870, quotes a remarkable calculation, by which it is shown that even if one-eighth of the entire population of the metropolis were in receipt of money relief from the other seven-eighths, the amount annually contributed (deducting £50,000 for the expenses of collection and distribution) would provide £17 per annum for each individual, or £85 per annum for each family of five persons.

"The evidence collected by Sir Charles Trevelyan with regard to the enfeebled constitution and demoralised habits of the London poor cannot, for want of space, be inserted here, even in the most abridged form. The two following facts, drawn from his able articles on the subject in the Parochial Critic, are, however, sufficiently alarming and significant to justify an exception in their favour. The one is, that out of 5,567 boys, almost all of them from the London district who presented themselves as candidates for the navy on board the stationary flag-ship in the Thames, 4,410 were dismissed as not complying with the following conditions:—that they should be of sound constitution, free from physical defect or malformation, not subject to fits, and able to read and write. The second, abundantly supported by the personal testimony of influential manufacturers, is that when a large demand for highly-paid labour took place in Lancashire and Yorkshire, no previous training or skill being insisted on, the efforts made to transplant thither the unemployed and professedly destitute labourers of the metropolis proved, except in one special class of cases, an almost entire failure: first, from the unwillingness of the people to avail themselves of the opportunity offered; and, secondly, from the laziness and intemperance of those who actually migrated, their general character being so unsatisfactory that several leading mill and factory owners refused to take any more hands from London, and preferred to search for them even in some of the poorest agricultural districts. It is true that upwards of 500 persons have since been very successfully migrated to supply this demand, and some of the families, which in London were in receipt of Poor Law relief, are now earning 30s. and upwards per week. These cases, however, were most carefully chosen by special agencies, and the families only sent after strict investigation of their characters."

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 184.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 5, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge each of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of a District Committee, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies at are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending June 24 the receipts had been £17. 11s. 9d. for the General Fund, and £25 for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £100. 11s. 3d. and £77. 11s. 1d. respectively.

REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON THE COLLECTION OF FUNDS.

Mr. A. H. Hill moved and Captain Boyce seconded the adoption of the third recommendation of the Report—

That in districts in which there is reason to believe that much larger sums might be collected the local Committee shall be invited to accept assistance in collection from the Council.

Lord Lichfield moved as an amendment the substitution of the words 'the Council has' for the word 'is.' He said that the Council having decided on allowing the District Committees practically to monopolise the collection of funds, it was important that failure should as far as possible be guarded against, and that with this view Council should reserve to itself the power of expressing its own opinion as to the efficiency or non-efficiency of the collection in any district. He thought that the words he proposed would be a step, however small, in the direction in which he still intended to urge advance—that of control from the centre. He had heard several times lately that his proposals would be subversive to the constitution of the Society. He would affirm that nothing he had proposed could be so totally at variance with the principles of that constitution as a scheme in accordance with which the District Committees were to raise funds on behalf of the whole Society, and then, without any control from the centre, were to spend as much of them as they pleased for their own local work. Lord Lichfield pointed out that when the Guarantee Fund came to an end, Council itself suggested that the richer District Committees should contribute to the support of the whole Society; if therefore this plan had proved a failure, Council was surely at liberty to revert to former plans. The speaker expressed his opinion that although contributions of considerable amount had been received, yet the financial straits of the Council were by no means passed. He thought that Council made a great mistake in depending so much upon large contributions from a few liberal men. The Society must look to the public at large for support; and to merit and obtain that support it must thoroughly carry out its principles. Some of the Committees, he maintained, did not obtain nearly enough from their districts, while his complaint with regard to the four richest Committees was not so much that they did not collect enough, as that they did not contribute, for the general purposes of the Society, a proper quota of the funds they raised.

The amendment, having been accepted by the mover and seconder of the recommendation, was agreed to.

The fourth recommendation—

That each Committee should set forth prominently in its Annual Report, and in all appeals to the public, the work of the whole Society, with a summary of the results effected by it throughout the metropolis, and that the Administrative Committee be instructed to draft a short and comprehensive statement of the work of the Council, and of the Society generally, up to the 30th of September in each year, for the use of District Committees in the preparation of their reports, or for insertion in the reports themselves, was moved by Mr. A. H. Hill, and agreed to.

The fifth recommendation—

That each Committee, having collected all that it can by a thorough house-to-house collection, should, at the end of each quarter, transfer any balance remaining in its hands, over and above the sum required for its own use, either to the General Fund or the District Committee Aid Fund of the Society, was moved by Mr. A. H. Hill, and seconded by Mr. Edgcombe, who took that opportunity of stating, as a member of the Collection Sub-Committee, that he withdrew his protest against the portion of their report now under consideration.

Lord Lichfield moved as an amendment—

That each Committee, having collected all that it can by a thorough house-to-house collection, should, at the end of each quarter, transfer to the General Fund any balance remaining in its hands, over and above such sums as may, by agreement between the Committee and the Council, be deemed sufficient to meet the local requirements of the Committee.

Lord Lichfield pointed out that the question now before the Council was much more important than the last one, which related to the collection of funds, while the present question referred to their distribution. He could not but think that the public would have just cause for complaint if, after contributing to the funds of a Committee money for the support of the Society at large, they found that only the surplus of such contributions was devoted to the purpose for which they had been given. The plan of appealing for the Society at large had already been made use of by the District Committees; and it was now proposed to give them still greater power in this direction. But its use involved responsibility to the public with regard to the efficiency of the whole Society, and what proof, he asked, had they of the assertions made by Sir C. Trevelyan to the effect that 'effectual inquiry, effectual relief, and effectual exposure of imposture,' had substantially been attained? He ventured to think that if Sir Charles and others who held these views were to visit other Committees than their own, and apply to their work those tests upon which they had asserted their reliance, they would find that the work would not, in many instances, bear the trial. He had referred to the fact that the four richer Committees did not contribute as much as they ought to the funds of the Council. He would now, by a comparison between the work of those and of other Committees, draw attention to the anomalies that resulted from the present system. He found that the money raised by these four Committees was equal in amount to the whole income (including grants from Council) of twelve Committees in other parts of London—namely, St. Pancras N., St. Pancras S., Holborn, Shoreditch, Bethnal Green, Whitechapel, St. George-in-the-East, Stepney, Mile End Old Town, Poplar, St. Saviour's, and St. Olave's; while the population of the area dealt with by the twelve poorer Committees was double that dealt with by the four richer. The average expenditure of the latter group had been six times as much as that of the former, while, although the four richer Committees had dealt with fewer cases than the twelve poorer Committees, the amount given by them in relief averaged eleven times as much as that distributed by the poorer Committees. But he would call their attention to another anomaly, even more striking and important than those he had just indicated. Members of Council were of course well aware that those cases placed under 'Class II.—Recommended,' in the periodical returns of cases, indicated the most important and soundest work of the Society. They were test cases—they showed how far a Committee was working on the principles laid down by the Society—how far that Committee was able to obtain, from existing legal or charitable sources, adequate assistance for suitable cases. He found that these twelve Committees, established in poor districts, where charitable agencies and charitable persons must be few and far between, had 'recommended' to such sources of relief one-third more cases than had been so recommended by the four richer Committees. He thought that this was a most important point; for the Society having been promoted on the principle that the amount of charitable relief in the metropolis was sufficient if it were wisely administered, it was clearly the first duty of a District Committee of the Society not to give relief until every effort had been made to obtain it from other sources. Further, he would point out that the number of cases having received grants from the four richer Committees was double those assisted in this manner by the twelve poorer Committees, while the requirements of those districts in the matter of relief were presumably much greater.

Lord Lichfield considered that this question of central collection, distribution, and control lay at the very roots of the prosperity and wellbeing of the Society. He admitted that his amendment was but a small improvement upon the original recommendation; but he felt that every step, however small, was valuable if it led towards the just, sensible, and only intelligible scheme—that of central collection and equitable distribution.

Sir C. Trevelyan could not admit that the plan proposed would confer upon the Committees a monopoly of collection. He would point out again that the Council already collected one-fourth of the whole funds of the Society, and that the recent financial crisis was attributable to want of exertion on the part of the Council. He thought that it was a fallacy to consider the eastern parts of London as requiring so much more relief than the western districts. It was true that there were fewer rich persons, but, on the other hand, a large number of poor persons with mendicant proclivities were, by that very fact, attracted to the West End. He objected strongly to the amendment, which, in his opinion, would, by giving the Council full power to measure the wants of the Committees, result in centralisation of the most complete kind. The Society, it must be remembered, was a voluntary one, and could not therefore be bound by arbitrary rules.

Mr. Maurice would have had great pleasure in supporting the amendment if Lord Lichfield had explained what was to take place if the Council and a Committee took different views as to the requirements of the latter. He had opposed collection from the centre because he thought that it was impracticable, but he did not consider the amendment open to the same objection. Nor was he opposed to the decision resting with the Council in the case of such a difference of opinion as he had alluded to.

Lord Lichfield explained that he had carefully considered the point raised by Mr. Maurice, but he thought it might, were his amendment carried, be considered later, and he should, in that case, be prepared to make suggestions on the subject. Having in view the present system of working adopted by the District Committees, and being unwilling to interfere unduly with that system, he was prepared, as a compromise, so far to modify his amendment as to make it apply only to that portion of the funds of the Committees as had been applied to relief purposes, leaving the 'establishment' expenses untouched.

Mr. Mocatta, who had seconded the amendment, said that he also would be glad of a clearer definition of the way in which any difference of opinion between the Council and a Committee was to be settled. He feared that members of the richer Committees knew but little of the difficulties of the Committees in the poorer districts, and of the requirements of those localities. He had himself seen a good deal of the latter, and he had seen enormous differences between them and the western districts. The presence of mendicancy in the West did not disprove the existence of poverty in the East.

Mr. Corkran reminded the Council that excessive legislation did not imply reform, and that it was useless to pass resolutions which the Committees could not adopt.

Mr. Bevan said, with reference to what had fallen from Sir C. Trevelyan, that though the Society was voluntary, yet surely being a member of a society implied obedience to its rules, whereas membership had, to his surprise, been alluded to in connection rather with anarchy than with organisation. The press and the public localised the Society in that Council-room, not in the office of any District Committee; and to that Council, representative as it was, would the public continue to look for proper control in the distribution of funds. He would not on any account destroy the independence of the District Committees; but Committees must be ready to submit to some control from the head office, so that unwise profuse-ness might be kept in check.

Mr. Miner feared that the Administrative Committee could never duly appreciate the requirements of the District Committees, which depended, he thought, upon local circumstances. Committees must be allowed to judge of their own requirements, though the Council ought, no doubt, to be able to control excessive expenditure. He did not wish to see officers transferred from one district to another, but rather to see as efficient a staff in all districts as was to be found in those that were best manned, and the funds for this purpose would, he felt confident, be forthcoming if proper steps were taken to obtain them.

Mr. Wightman Wood could not agree to either the recommendation or the amendment. What guarantee was there that the richer Committees would exert themselves to raise more funds than they required for their own purposes? He still thought that a definite proportion should be handed over by each Committee, and would give notice of the following amendment; namely, after the words 'each Committee' to insert 'not supported by the District Committee Aid Fund,' and after the word 'transfer' to insert 'one-third of the amounts collected to the District Committee Aid Fund, and.'

Mr. Hollond thought that to substitute for direct relief recommendations to local charitable sources must, in the richer districts, be a work of time. He would point out that while almoners of the Society for the Relief of Distress were to be found in all the poorer districts, the Committees were perhaps the only lay charitable agencies to be found in the richer localities.

After a few words from Mr. A. H. Hill, Lord Lichfield's amendment was put and lost by 16 votes against 14.

Mr. Wood's amendment having been seconded by the Rev. W. H. Langhorne, was put and lost by 17 votes against 5.

By permission of the Council, the Rev. R. J. Simpson moved as an amendment that the following words be added to the recommendation: 'according to an annual estimate regularly furnished to the Central Office.'

This was seconded by Mr. W. Wood and accepted by the mover, but objected to by the seconder, of the recommendation.

After a few words from Sir C. Trevelyan, the Rev. R. J. Simpson, and others, the amendment was put and lost by 16 votes against 11. The recommendation was then put as an original motion and carried.

The 6th recommendation—

That within a month after the 30th September of each year, estimates of the probable expenses of each Committee for the ensuing year, together with the balance-sheet for the past year, be sent to the Secretary of the Council, to be laid before the Quarterly Finance Sub-Committee, in order that they may as soon as possible have the means of framing the estimates for the District Committee Aid Fund.

was agreed to.

The Council then adjourned.

The following contributions were received during the week ending July 1, 1876:—Donations: J. Booth, Esq., £10; The Earl of Ducie, £10; P. Earle, Esq., £10. 10s.; Miss Earle, £2. 2s.; Sir Philips Grey Egerton, £10; The Fishmongers' Company, £52. 10s.; W. J. Farrer, Esq., £20; M. W. O. Foster, Esq., £20; Vice-Admiral Sir J. D. Hay, £10; Lady Hayter, £5; E. W. Hollond, Esq. (for the Mile End Committee), £5; M. Latham, Esq., £10. 10s.; Lewis Loyd, Esq., £50; Mrs. Richard Martineau, £25; W. Millar, Esq., £3; The Lord Overstone, £50; G. Peacock, Esq., £5; Miss G. M. Ramsden, £5. 5s.; R. M. S., £10. 10s.; Miss Ryland, £10. 10s.; V. P., 3s.; Messrs. Wall & Son, £2. 2s.; The Duke of Westminster, K.G., £200; C. Wilde, Esq., £5; J. Wimbush, Esq., £1; W. W. Willink, Esq., £10. Annual: Miss Blackhouse, £5; Horace Broke, Esq., £2. 2s.; Major Cox, £1; L. H. Scott Douglas, Esq., 10s.; W. Fuller, Esq., £2. 2s.; W. Morris, Esq., £1. 1s.; Capt. F. G. Steward, £3; Dr. F. Robinson, £1; Mrs. Walker, £1; Lord Wrottesley, £2. 2s. Quarterly: Hon. W. Warren Vernon, £5. District Committee Aid Fund: T. Key, Esq., £2. 2s.

The following business stands for Monday, July 10:—

I. Miss Hill to move:—

That, considering the needs of the poor Committees, and to avoid catastrophe when most persons interested in the subject are out of town, it is desirable that every member of the Council should endeavour to give or collect either £5 or £10 each, or more if possible, before they leave town, quite irrespective of what they may have given or collected before.

II. Mr. A. H. Hill to move:—

That it is expedient that this Council should offer every facility in its power for the training of suitable persons to act as local Charity Agents under the several District Committees, and with this view opportunities should be afforded for extra clerks, at moderate salaries, to work, by way of apprenticeship, under the Secretaries of the Society at the Central Office.

III. Mr. J. Whitcombe to move:—

1. That the present plan of having a separate and independent Committee for each Poor-law district is not well adapted to those parts of London where the local resources are insufficient, both as regards money and volunteer workers, and that the union of several such districts under a strong Committee, to be formed by the amalgamation of the existing local Committees, with additional members nominated by the Council, would be desirable.

2. That a Sub-Committee be appointed to prepare a scheme in accordance with the above resolution, and to confer with the local Committees affected thereby.

IV. Mr. Wightman Wood to move:—

That any collection made by the Council be on behalf of the General Fund and of the District Committee Aid Fund; each fund to have a first claim on 50 per cent. of all sums so collected.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of June 1876 was 34,053, and 44,943 received out-door relief, making a total of 78,996. This was a decrease of 98 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 6,237, 15,416, and 22,416 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 719. This was a decrease of 94 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 208 on the corresponding day of last year.

ERRATUM.—The numbers given on the division taken on Lord Lichfield's amendment on the 26th ultimo were 22 to 19. In the latter number the vote of one of the Vice-Presidents (who, by Rule XIII., are not entitled to vote) was accidentally included. The correct numbers, therefore, are 18 for and 22 against the amendment.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

The Special Committee for Idiots and Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics, held its tenth meeting on Wednesday, June 28, at the Central Office. Sir Alexander Acland Hood, Bart. (in the Chair), Lord Wrottesley, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., the Hon. C. H. Strutt, the Revs. R. J. Simpson and H. I. Cummins, Drs. W. Brewer, J. Langdon Down, Bell Fletcher, G. W. Grabbam, D. Hack Tuke, Fletcher Beach, Messrs. H. Dickinson, Danby P. Fry, Sydney C. Buxton, F. D. Mocatta, W. M. Wilkinson, and Mr. C. S. Loch, Secretary.

Dr. Hack Tuke and Mr. Mocatta reported visits paid by them to the school of the Metropolitan Asylums Board for Imbecile Children at Clapton.

Dr. Hack Tuke presented a paper by him reprinted for the use of the Committee, on the Richmond District Lunatic Asylum, Dublin, showing how much may be done, even for adults, by regular school teaching.

Copies of the Report of the Charity Organisation Committee of the Dublin Statistical and Social Inquiry Society, alluded to at the close of the proceedings at the ninth meeting, were received and distributed.

The Committee then considered the 12th head of the 4th section of the agenda, 'Administrative Arrangements,' and Dr. Boyd moved the following resolution:-

'That the Visitors of the County Lunatic Asylums, which contain a considerable proportion of the Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics in the kingdom, are the very best guardians that could be selected to form a Board for the supervision of schools, separate institutions, or parts of institutions, for the improvement and care of these helpless classes.'

To which Sir Charles Trevelyan moved the following amendment:-
'That such Governing Bodies (see the proceedings of the previous meeting under the 10th head) should be composed—

1. Of representatives of the local magistrates;
2. Of representatives of the local guardians; and
3. Of persons appointed by the Crown.'

Eight having voted for the amendment and five against it, the amendment was put as a substantive resolution and carried.

THE Charity Organisation Reporter.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 185.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 12, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is
the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies at are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

Howgrave Graham, Esq., Assistant-Secretary.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending July 1 the receipts had been 561. 19s. for the General Fund, and £2. 2s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £637. 15s. 5d. and £28. 13s. 1d. respectively.

GRANT.—That they had made a grant of £50 to the Newington Committee.

QUESTIONS.

Mr. J. R. Hollond asked whether all the District Committees made arrangements to keep their offices open throughout the summer.* He pointed out the inconvenience that would arise from a single Committee closing its office, when at least one or two members would probably be found who would be able to continue their attendance.

Reference was made to a discussion of Council on the 21st of July, 1873, at which there appeared to have been a strong feeling against the closing of District Offices during any part of the summer.

Mr. Hollond also asked what use District Committees had made of the placards issued by the Council, with a view to advertising the work of the Society.

NEEDS OF THE COMMITTEES IN THE POORER DISTRICTS.

Miss O. Hill considered that there was no reason for pressing the motion of which she had given notice—

That, considering the needs of the poor Committees, and to avoid catastrophe when most persons interested in the subject are out of town, it is desirable that every member of the Council should endeavour to give or collect either £5 or £10 each, or more if possible, before they leave town, quite irrespective of what they may have given or collected before.

She had wished to obviate the difficulties that must inevitably have arisen had the want of funds continued, which existed when she gave notice of her motion. It now appeared likely that there would be sufficient funds available to meet the expenses of the Committees during the recess. The motion was withdrawn.

CHARITY AGENTS.

Mr. A. H. Hill moved:—

That it is expedient that this Council should offer every facility in its power for the training of suitable persons to act as local Charity Agents under the several District Committees, and with this view opportunities should be afforded for extra clerks, at moderate salaries, to work, by way of apprenticeship, under the Secretaries of the Society at the Central Office.

Proposals similar to that which he now submitted to Council had been made before. The work in which charity agents were employed was of a peculiarly difficult and delicate character, and required both education and experience. Many men and women would from philanthropic motives undertake this work for a merely nominal salary; and they would nowhere be able to learn so well the length and breadth of it as in the Central Office. He even considered that a clerkship at the Central Office might be made the apprenticeship for work as an agent. The difficulty of getting the right person on an emergency was sometimes so great, that it was worth while to make the experiment he suggested.

Sir Charles Trevelyan seconded the motion. He thought that the position and opportunities which the Society was able to offer, would outweigh the smallness of the recompense it could give in salary. He had great faith in the combined power of good education and good practical training.

In answer to Mr. Seton-Karr and Dr. Daniel, Mr. Hill said he considered that, like most apprenticeships, the plan suggested would prove to be economical.

Mr. Hollond stated the plan had been already tried, but that the Committee on Expenditure had disapproved of it.*

* See Reporter, No. 67, Vol. ii., p. 125.

* See Reporter, No. 68, Vol. ii., July 30, 1873.

The work that had to be done at the Central Office required experts to do it.

The Chairman suggested that the latter part of the motion should be modified as follows, viz. :—

And with this view, in appointing extra or other clerks selections should, as far as practicable, be made from the list of candidates for the post of District Agent, kept in the Secretary's office.

And the modification having been accepted by the mover,

After a few words from Mr. Miner, Mr. Maurice, Mr. H. H. Hill, Mr. Bevan, Lord W. Compton, and others, the motion was carried, 21 voting for and 6 against it.

COMMITTEES IN THE POORER DISTRICTS.

The motion of which Mr. J. Whitcombe had given notice was withdrawn, the Chairman having, in accordance with the fourteenth Bye-Law, ruled that the adoption of the motion would be a reversal of the decision arrived at by Council on the 14th of February last.*

Mr. W. W. Wood not being present to move the motion of which he had given notice, the Council then adjourned.

* See Reporter, No. 166, Vol. v., p. 33.

The following contributions were received during the week ending July 6, 1876:—Donations: Douglas Brown, Esq. Q.C. (special), £5; C.G. Chittenden, Esq., £2; M. W. Collett, Esq., £5; Miss D'Oily, £3; Lord Ebury, £15; 'E. G.', £1; The Dowager Marchioness of Exeter, £10; Mrs. Freeman (per the Strand Committee), £1. 1s.; F. A. Hamilton, Esq., £10; E. R. Le Mare, Esq., £10; R. B. Litchfield, £2; M. Moggeridge, Esq., £5; John Noble, Esq., £50; Mrs. R. Potter, £5; The Hon. Mrs. Swinton, £1; The Merchant Taylors' Company, £10. 10s.; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B. (special), £50.—Annual: Stephen Fuller, Esq., £5; Sir H. D. Ingleby, Bart., £1. 1s.—District Committee Aid Fund: Hon. H. Butler, £10; Lord W. Compton, £3; John Ewart, Esq., £10; Stephen Fuller, Esq., £5; The Hampstead Committee, £26; The Kensington Committee, £100; W. H. Smith, Esq., £5.

I. Mr. W. W. Wood to move:—

That any collection made by the Council be on behalf of the General Fund and of the District Committee Aid Fund; each fund to have a first claim on 50 per cent. of all sums so collected.

II. Rev. W. H. Langhorne to move:—

That, whenever practicable, the District Committees should avail themselves of any public rooms which may be had in the several districts for the purposes of Committee meetings, in order that the payments for rent may be, as far as possible, confined to the Agents' offices.

III. Rev. R. J. Simpson to move:—

That the Council desires to remind the District Committee that the District offices should be kept open for ordinary business throughout the summer months.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

LEWISHAM.—At the request of the Guardians, and at their expense, the Committee have had a board placed outside their office, which is headed, 'Lewisham Union, List of Persons in Receipt of Outdoor Relief,' and to which are affixed the weekly and half-yearly lists, printed by the Guardians.

At a meeting of the Lewisham District Board of Works, held on the 14th June (says the Kentish Mercury), a letter was read from Mr. R. V. Tidman, Hon. Secretary of the local branch of the Charity Organisation Society, stating that his Committee understood that the Board were preparing a revised Ordnance Map of Lewisham, and asking that they might be favoured with a copy for use in their office. Mr. Hennell said the Society were doing a very valuable work, and he moved, therefore, that the request be granted. The resolution was carried.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of June 1876 was 38,773, and 44,675 received out-door relief, making a total of 78,448. This was a decrease of 548 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 6,133, 15,239, and 22,369 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 571. This was a decrease of 148 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 237 on the corresponding day of last year.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

The Special Committee for Idiots and Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics, held its twelfth meeting on Wednesday, July 5, at the Central Office. There were present: Sir John Ogilvy, Bart. (in the Chair), Lord Wrottesley, the Hon. C. H. Strutt, Sir Alexander Acland Hood, Bart., Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B., Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., Lieut-General Cavenagh, the Rev. Canon Hopkins, the Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mrs. Brewer, Boyd, Langdon Down, Fletcher Beach, G. W. Grabham, D. Hack Tuke; Messrs. F. D. Mocatta, A. Sperling, W. Millard, W. M. Wilkinson, and Mr. C. S. Loch, Secretary.

A report was made of a visit paid by a deputation of the Committee on the previous Friday to the Leavesden Asylum.

Answers were read from the Foreign and Colonial Offices, transmitting information relating to arrangements in Holland and the West Indies.

And copies were distributed of a translation (made by Dr. Ireland) of a letter from Dr. Kind, Medical Superintendent of the Idioten-Anstalt at Langenhagen, in Hanover, on the arrangements for the education and care of Idiots and Imbeciles in North Germany.

The Committee then had before them the 14th head of the 4th section of the agenda, 'Administrative Arrangements,' and after considering a paper, prepared by Mr. Millard, on the number of Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics, under and above 20 years of age, who had to be provided for, unanimously passed the following resolution:—

'That the country should be divided into districts sufficiently large to fill an Asylum containing not more than 2,000 adults, and Schools containing, at the utmost, 500 young people.'

And under the 14th head the Committee resolved, by 10 to 5—

'That, besides the supervision of the Commissioners of Lunacy, the Schools and Asylums should be inspected and reported upon to the Local Government Board.

It was then determined to consider together the 1st and 4th heads of the 5th section, 'Ways and Means,' and after a prolonged discussion the subject was adjourned.

ON CHARITY ORGANISATION AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR OUTDOOR RELIEF.

The following is taken from a paper read by W. G. Lely, Esq., at the Poor Law Conference held at Ipswich on the 8th ultimo:—

'It seems to be recognised by all who have considered the subject of pauperism that the system of outdoor relief, as generally administered, is productive of serious mischief to the classes directly under its influence, and through them to the welfare of the country.

'In cases exempted from the workhouse test of destitution, the genuineness of claims to relief is left to be ascertained by the investigation of Guardians and their officers, and this has almost everywhere been found inadequate. It is certain that outdoor relief is often given where the infirmity and destitution are pretended or exaggerated—a direct encouragement to fraud and hypocrisy, and a cruel injustice towards many struggling ratepayers.

'But there is a still more serious evil. A pauperising system of outdoor relief encourages men to disregard saving and self-reliance, to live from hand to mouth, and to form those habits of thriftless dependence on others by which they degrade themselves and their class; for this reason a change is desired by all who are anxious for their best interests. It is certain we should see far more thrift and forethought, if it could be proclaimed that in future all destitution was to be relieved in the workhouse except such as was due to unavoidable causes. We ought already to discriminate between cases on this principle—to inquire invariably what have been the past opportunities of saving, and to let our principle be known. But those who were brought up in times less favourable for their class, before these days of schools, of savings banks, of clubs, and so found modern facilities of migration, may often plead that they had little chance of saving. The exceptions to the rule of workhouse relief must, therefore, for some time be very numerous, and some cases of unavoidable destitution there will always be.

'Exceptions have long been the stumbling-block of Guardians. "The bane of all pauper legislation," said the first Poor Law Commissioners, "has been the legislating for extreme cases. Every exception, every violation of the general rule to meet a real case of unusual hardship, lets in a whole flood of fraudulent cases, by which that rule must in time be destroyed." The course of this destruction is familiar to us Guardians. "Hard cases make bad law," and we have cases with every gradation of hardship, with cross bearings that make it difficult to compare them, and facts very imperfectly ascertained. Rural Guardians have an especial difficulty; they are called on in turn to assist in "legislating" for the cases of men whom they may have known from childhood, with whose friends and relatives their business brings them into close connection, and whose shortcomings they may know too well, and yet be not unwilling to condone when the day of reckoning is come. It is called "legislating," and, indeed, where no fixed principles are in force, the decision of a particular case on its merits is a sort of ex post facto legislation, with an inevitable bias towards the good-natured leniency which "makes bad law." Will Guardians learn to discriminate on sound principles between the rule and the exceptions, or must a remedy be found in confining them to the administration of the rule, and leaving the exceptions to be otherwise provided for?

'The passage I just now quoted continues thus: "Where cases of real hardship occur, the remedy must be applied by individual charity, a virtue for which no compulsory relief can or ought to be a substitute." The exceptional cases proper for outdoor relief will certainly grow fewer, and it is worth inquiry, whether a time may come when charity can be trusted to take charge of any class of these, or even of the whole. But for this purpose it must be so formed into a system, or organised, as to ensure its finding out the hard cases, and restrain it from pauperising its objects.

'In rural districts the need for charity organisation is less obvious than in London, or even in smaller towns, for we have not the variety of Charitable Societies and the complete separation of rich and poor in daily life, which in London make the organisation of charity so necessary for husbanding its resources and preventing its abuse. Neither is its efficiency, as a substitute for outdoor relief, so well assured in the country, where there is not the same amount of existing charitable funds ready to take the place of a poor rate, while the raising of fresh ones may be thought to involve some danger of a pauperising result. But the experiment is well worth a trial. The work of district visiting and relieving is in London to a great extent separated from that of inquiry and organisation; in the smaller towns and in the country these might properly be combined under the name, perhaps, of Charitable Aid Society. At present, for the most part, Guardians in the country have no system of communication with persons administering charitable relief, in the words of Mr. Wodehouse's report, and generally charitable assistance is not taken into account; i.e. full relief is given to many who are also constantly relieved by individuals, in some cases as superannuated dependents.

'Mr. F. S. Corrance, who has kindly favoured me with his views on the subject of this paper, believes that it would be desirable to construct local machinery for charity organisation, covering an area not less than that of a union, with a central committee including the Guardians and others willing to work, and parochial sub-committees and visitors.

'If the condition of the labouring classes continues to improve, and their means are thus more obviously adequate, not only to supply their daily wants, but to make provision for the future, of which education will have shown them the advantages—if we find that organisation enables charity to take charge of exceptional distress, and restrains it from fostering improvidence, a time may come when public opinion will be in favour of the abolition of outdoor relief, except for sudden, urgent, or irremovable cases. Such a change, if ever resolved on, might be effected in some such way as this: by an order prohibiting all future outdoor relief, except in sudden, urgent, or irremovable cases, but exempting from its operation and leaving under the old law all persons who at the date of such order were of the age of, say, sixteen years or upwards, a dispensing power for extraordinary occasions being reserved to the Local Government Board.

'Any such prospective abolition of outdoor relief would give an immediate and decisive impulse to provident energy in all its various forms, an impulse that would carry it far beyond the original purpose of escaping the workhouse. Savings banks would have a great increase of customers; a considerable sum can be saved without much difficulty by a young man before his marriage. The provident societies—most popular form of thrift—would enlarge their aims so as to insure their members against all the various mischances which threaten with destitution the labouring man and his family—inability to work through sickness or old age—expenses of medical attendance and of burials—the possibility of widows and orphans being left destitute and helpless; of these misfortunes a great part are already insured against by hundreds of thousands in the clubs—to their honour be it said—by a weekly payment of sixpence, and the rest could, I believe, be provided for on a similar scale if this contribution were doubled. Now a shilling a week (though less than the amount by which wages have of late years increased) could not be spared without some sacrifice by an agricultural labourer, but a shilling could not be invested better than in the security, self-reliance, and self-respect which this would purchase him. With the misfortunes I have named insured against, and other forms of saving generally known and practised, there would be little unavoidable destitution.

'But charity would have its definite and appropriate duty in saving from the workhouse the victims of unavoidable calamity, and in taking others by the hand who appeared to be reclaimable. Organised charity might, I believe, be trusted to do this work in the true spirit of the mercy which blesteth him that gives and him that takes, and for which no system of compulsory relief can or ought to be a substitute.

In the course of a full explanation of the principles of Charity Organisation, Mr. Mallet defined those principles as the adoption of a certain order and method in the administration of charitable relief. 'It is not, of course,' he said, "charity" or "love" as a principle, but "charitable action," which we seek to organise—to give it a direction, founded on induction from observed results, and having certain definite objects in view.' In speaking of the Charity Organisation Society, Mr. Mallet said its 'ideal' 'might become, if accepted and used as such by all Christian Churches, the Christian Diaconate of the nineteenth century—fulfilling, in reference not to one branch of the Church alone, but to all, a similar office, in our vast and complicated society, to that which the original Diaconate was intended to fulfil in that first germ of a true human commonwealth, the infant Church of Jerusalem.' Mr. Mallet dwelt at length upon the difficulties that the twofold duties of parish priest and almoner impose upon clergymen, and expressed an opinion that the ordinary methods of almsgiving introduce a most disturbing element into the relation of pastor and people. 'How,' he asked, 'are we to discriminate between the deserving and the undeserving?—between those who may be encouraged in industry by a little timely help, and those who are tempted to go on living from hand to mouth in squalor and vice? The doles—consisting generally of tickets for soup, meat, or coals, in some cases of shillings or of loaves—are insufficient to benefit permanently a case of real distress, while yet quite enough to foster improvidence, imposture, and vice. The clergyman is not by any means the only almoner—there are other agencies at work in the parish, both public and private, and, behind all, the Out-relief Department of the Poor Law. The consequence is, that the poor are sorely tempted to lay themselves out for what they can get from as many different sources as possible. This leads to many well-known evils and abuses, which need not be specified. And what a relation does it introduce between the pastor and his poor parishioners! Their interest is to conceal from him what they may obtain from other sources, in order to get a larger share of his alms. His position as almoner thus makes honest and straightforward intercourse impossible, and turns spiritual food into poison. It is one of the objects of Charity Organisation to separate, as far as possible, the function of temporal relief from that of spiritual ministrations—not as a matter of abstract principle, but of practical urgency in reference to present needs and to the choice of evils presented to us. If the clergy could refer all cases of temporal distress to a wise and discriminating agency, it were surely worth while to relinquish their indirect influence as almoners, in order to secure, an honest, unbiassed attention to their spiritual teaching, and to strike at the root of a too prevalent hypocrisy. It is not, however, contended that a strict line of demarcation can be drawn between spiritual and temporal ministrations in general. The pastor who seeks to establish a relation of love between himself and his flock will care for their bodies as well as for their souls. But such love will be shown quite as often in withholding an alms as in bestowing it.

Mr. Mallet quoted the writings of the Rev. Brooke Lambert and of Canon Barry on this subject, and pointed out that, 'although there are many cases in which almsgiving is needful, there are other and far better ways of benefiting the poor, and such as more truly harmonise with and pave the way for spiritual influences. The provision of innocent amusements and interests, to replace those that are vicious and degrading; the amendment of sanitary conditions; the encouragement of provident habits by well-managed clubs, dispensaries, and penny banks, and by a stricter and more careful administration of the Poor Law; the promotion of industrial development, of co-operation; and last, though not least, 'primary education,' were mentioned as methods whereby real aid may be given, and sympathy shown towards the permanent elevation of the masses.

Referring to the injunctions of the Bible on the subject of charity, Mr. Mallet stated that 'to interpret these lessons literally is simply to degrade them. "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." If asked to mention facts in modern life which entirely modify the precepts of Scripture in regard to almsgiving, it is sufficient to specify—(1) the development of a great industrial system, based upon civil liberty and international friendship; and (2) the existence of a Poor Law. It must not be forgotten,' he added, 'that many of the precepts of Christ and His Apostles, addressed to a small and select body of believers, have since become embodied in permanent institutions, and that one of the most important of these institutions is the Christian State.'

A discussion upon the paper followed.

CONVALESCENT HOMES.

District Committees may be glad to know of the following small Homes:—

(1) A Convalescent Home for Children of from 5 to 12 years of age; payment, 5s. a week. No patients recovering from infectious illness, or requiring medical treatment, can be received. Apply to Mrs. Brandreth, Dickleburgh Rectory, Scoll, Norfolk.

(2) A Cottage Home, 3 Abercorn Villas, Sudbury, for poor women, girls, and children who are convalescents, or who otherwise require change of air and rest. At present, the terms of admission are as follows:—An annual subscriber is entitled to recommend one inmate yearly, who may stay three weeks at the Home; but if a longer residence be desired, the charge will be 7s. 6d. per week. A non subscriber may send an inmate on payment of 7s. 6d. per week. Any woman paying for herself is charged 5s. per week. Children under 12 years of age are received, for 5s. per week, if paid for; if their parents pay for them, the charge is 3s. per week. Boys are admitted up to 10 years of age. Third-class fare to Sudbury from Euston Road, 8d.

All applications should be accompanied by a medical certificate, stating the nature of the ailment from which the patient has been suffering.

Applications should be addressed to Miss Bright, 24 Norfolk Crescent, W., or to Miss E. Davies, 23 Brondesbury Road, Kilburn, N.W.

For other Homes, see Reporter, March 1, 1876, vol. v., p. 48; and March 22, 1876, vol. v., p. 68.

UNWISE CHARITY.—At Marlborough Street, a batch of nine persons principally women and children, were charged by Police-sergeant Watson, C 22, with street-begging and obstruction in Regent Street. Police-sergeant Watson said he saw the prisoners and several others standing on the footpath before the County Fire Office in Regent Street, waiting for a gentleman named Gardener. He told them if they did not go away he would take them into custody. Mr. Gardener, on coming out of the office, was immediately surrounded by the persons who had assembled. Some pulled his coat-tails, and others, who pretended to be blind, ran off on seeing witness approach. The obstruction had been going on for some time, Mr. Gardener being in the habit of giving a shilling each to poor people in the street. One of the prisoners, a little girl, said she did not ask Mr. Gardener for anything. He had, however, been in the habit of giving her a shilling every week. Mr. Knox directed that four of the prisoners who were actually blind should be discharged with a caution, and fined the others 5s. each for causing an obstruction. He wished Mr. Gardener would reconsider his present inconvenient mode of distributing alms.—Times, July 1.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 186.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 19, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

NOTICES.

District Committees, likely to require grants before the 30th of September next are requested to forward without delay, to the Secretary of the Council, their applications, together with the usual balance-sheet.

Mr. Douglas Walker has resigned the Hon. Secretaryship of the Strand Committee.

The Stepney Committee will in future meet at 4 P.M. instead of 3 P.M. on Tuesdays; the second weekly meeting will for the present be discontinued.

PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL.

THE Council of the Charity Organisation Society met at 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, on Monday, at 3 P.M.

Present: Alsager Hay Hill, Esq. (in the chair); J. Whitcombe, Esq., Kensington; Major Yard, Paddington; Capt. Boyce, Chelsea; W. W. Moore, Esq., St. George's; W. Bousfield, Esq., Westminster (St. James' and St. Anne's); Miss O. Hill, St. Marylebone; Lady Wilson, South St. Pancras; Rev. R. J. Simpson, Strand; C. L. Corkran, Esq., Whitechapel; Hon. H. R. Scott, Rev. W. H. Langhorne, Mile End; T. Galabin, Esq., Camberwell; W. M. Wilkinson, Esq., Vice-President; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart. W. W. Wood, Esq., Additional Members; total, 17. Deputy Controller General Robinson, and R. Radcliffe, Esq., Visitors.

CHARITIES CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.

In reply to Sir Charles Trevelyan, it was stated that the Charities Co-operation Sub-committee was being duly organised, and would commence work in good earnest after the recess.

Sir Charles Trevelyan presented the undermentioned papers:—

1st. 'Report of a Drawing-Room Conference on Boarding-out Pauper Children.' Longmans, price 1s.

2nd. A circular from the Charity Voting Reform Association to the subscribers to the Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution, which showed, Sir C. Trevelyan considered, in a striking manner, that an institution could not be revised on so essential a point as the mode of admission to it, without bringing about the amendment of other defects; and

3rd. A paper read by Dr. Hancock, formerly Professor of Political Economy in the University of Dublin, on the Proceedings of the 'State Charities Aid Association of New York.' The most remarkable feature of the proceedings of this Association, Sir Charles remarked, is the importance they attach to the investigation of the causes of pauperism, and the use they make of family life as a means of removing it. By a law passed in 1875 the removal of children from the workhouse before they have attained the age of three years, and the making a provision for them 'in families, orphan asylums, or other appropriate institutions,' has been rendered compulsory; upon which the Committee of the Association remark:—

The new law, by giving precedence to family homes in the disposal of children, recognises the fact that, if carefully placed and judiciously watched, they are better off in families than they can be anywhere else, and they are much less likely to become chargeable to the State in after-life, because they will learn to help and to respect themselves; and loss of self-respect is at once the cause and the effect of pauperism.

Another point of interest is the proposal to establish Adult Reformatories for habitual vagrants:—

But further legislation will also be necessary to provide permanently for the incorrigibly idle and vicious, who should, in accordance with the advice of the State Board of Charities, be withdrawn from jails and poor-houses of the State, and committed, until reformed, to district workhouses—there to be kept at hard labour and educated morally and mentally.

A similar arrangement, but without any compulsory process, was proposed by our Committee on Night Refuges in 1870:—

It is desirable that some provision should be made for affording an opportunity of regaining their social position by steady and regular work, to those whose character is not positively vicious, but cannot be satisfactorily tested without such trial.

For this purpose it is suggested that one of the largest and best endowed of the Night Refuges should be converted into an adult Industrial Home, in which instruction should be given in the ordinary handicrafts; and certificates of character and skill should be given to those who deserve them.

As the present plan of an endless succession of short sentences has entirely failed to put down vagrancy, it may be hoped that the Government will avail itself of the command it will obtain over the prisons of the country, under the Prisons Act, to make suitable provision for this object.

FIRE IN LITTLE WINDMILL STREET.

Mr. Bousfield stated that the Westminster Committee were taking active measures to place the services of their agent and office at the disposal of the Relief Committee.

A SPECIAL DONATION.

Sir Charles Trevelyan read the following letter:—

When this weather is making us all think of getting away from London as quickly as possible, it also reminds us of those who require it as much, with but little prospect of being able to go. It is for such I enclose you a cheque for £100; which I desire to be apportioned amongst the poorest of the District Committees, for convalescent cases only, in such proportions and with such restrictions as the Council may think fit to impose, but the cases to be those only which have been before one of your District Committees.

The Secretary was instructed to convey the thanks of the Council to the donor.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending July 8 the receipts had been £182. 12s. for the General Fund, and £159 for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £793. 14s. 7d. and £355. 2s. respectively.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT OFFICERS.—The Committee had adopted the following statement of the Districts Sub-Committee on the third and fourth recommendations of the Joint Sub-Committee:—*

The Sub-Committee has succeeded in enlisting several volunteer workers and attaching them to the various District Committees, and it has entered into closer communication with several Committees where its influence has been helpful; but, at the same time, it considers that it would be premature to decide finally whether the influence it can bring to bear, coupled with the progress which is being gradually made from other causes, is sufficient to permanently strengthen the Committees and bring them to a proper standard of efficiency.

The Sub-Committee is of opinion that the need of more volunteers should be kept steadily in view; and looking to the progress already made through the concentration in one Sub-Committee of the work connected with the District Committees, the Sub-Committee cannot at the present moment recommend the addition to the paid staff contemplated by the recommendation of the Joint Sub-Committee.

The Sub-Committee hopes that after the recess its members will be able to see still more of the District Committees.

CONFERENCE OF METROPOLITAN GUARDIANS.—Notices of the Conference to be held on the 17th inst. had been sent to District Committees.

THE MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—The work of the Mendicity Sub-Committee, formerly the Supervision Inquiry Sub-Committee,† had been defined in the following terms:—‘That it inquire into the bonâ fides of Metropolitan Charitable Institutions, and into individual cases outside the boundaries of Metropolitan Committees, and also take up the work of the Special Committee on Vagrancy and Mendicity.’

OFFICES OF DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

The Rev. W. H. Langhorne moved:—

That whenever practicable the District Committees should avail themselves of any public rooms which may be had in the several districts for the purposes of Committee meetings, in order that the payments for rent may be, as far as possible, confined to the Agents' offices.

He had lately been considering how Committees in poor Districts could as far as possible assist the Society when there was a want of funds, and it had occurred to him that it would be possible to secure a further economy on one point without diminishing the efficiency of such Committees. The offices of the Society should, he thought, be very numerous; Committee-rooms should be proportionately few. Committee meetings might be held in vestry or other halls; and, now that in the East-end the Society was becoming thoroughly known, it might even be possible without disadvantage to place the offices of the Society, not in a good thoroughfare, but in some street off the main roads. Shopkeepers and others would willingly, in some instances, set up placards in their windows to inform the public of the position of the office. He then submitted statistics of the amounts paid by the District Committees in rent for office and Committee-rooms.

* See Reporter, No. 162, Vol. v., January 19, 1876. The following are the recommendations of the Joint Sub-Committee above alluded to, viz.:—‘That three salaried District Officers, of whom one might be the present Assistant Organising Secretary, should be appointed for the purpose of personally assisting Honorary Secretaries and Committees of poorer districts; that these officers should be under the control of the Sub-Committee, and, unless specially required to attend at the Central Office, their duties should be confined to the districts to which they are accredited. ‘The Committee consider that the salaries of the two new officers above recommended, should not exceed (including travelling allowances) £200 per annum.’

Mr. C. L. Corkran seconded the motion. He thought that District Committees could unite with societies working for objects cognate to those of the Society, and take Committee-rooms in common; or the Committee-rooms of District Committees might be underlet to other societies at a nominal rent. But rooms in the main thoroughfares were necessary, as it had been found that many persons purchased the provident and other papers exposed for sale in such places.

Rev. J. H. Simpson feared the complications and possible misunderstanding of the objects of the Society that might ensue from the adoption of Mr. Corkran's suggestion. The words in the motion, ‘wherever practicable,’ were important, and, while they left room for the adoption of the motion, suggested the reason for the anomalies of rental that appeared in the statistics.

Mr. Bousfield, citing the Kensington Committee, pointed out the inconvenience that would result from the removal of the office-books to a neighbouring Committee-room three or four times a week.

Sir Charles Trevelyan said that after a Committee had established itself it might, like the St. George's, Hanover Square, Committee, consolidate its work within one building, but in no case would the separation of the offices from the Committee-rooms be desirable. However attractive a local or metropolitan charity building, such as that at Boston, might appear to be, the adoption of any arrangement for uniting the offices of various charities in one building would involve very difficult relations with the charities.

After a few words from Mr. T. Galabin and Major Prendergast, Miss O. Hill pointed out how unsuccessful the arrangement had proved in the case of several Committees which, by having carried out what Mr. Langhorne suggested, had reduced their rent to an almost nominal sum. And the Secretary stated that the Districts Sub-Committee had considered Mr. Langhorne's proposal, but were unwilling to adopt it, both because it had not been found convenient hitherto, and because a second room was useful for the work of the Hon. Secretary, and allowed each applicant to tell his story separately.

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson said that the National Penny Bank had taken eleven houses, at the average rental of £55, but that some of the rooms in each house were sublet, or used as residences for officers. In this way the net expenditure in rent was reduced to about £20 in each case.

Mr. Langhorne, in reply, said that he believed that the inconveniences consequent on the adoption of his proposal would be fewer than had been anticipated. He was, however, quite satisfied with having drawn attention to the subject, and would not press his motion. The motion was then withdrawn.

DISTRICT OFFICES.*

The Rev. R. J. Simpson having, with the consent of Council, slightly modified his motion, moved:—

That the Council desires to remind the District Committees that it is highly desirable that the District offices should be kept open for ordinary business throughout the summer months.

He said that it was an obvious condition of the work of the Society that it should be continuous; and it was of great importance that the public should feel that they could always refer cases to our Committees, and obtain the assistance of the Society.

The motion was seconded by Sir Charles Trevelyan, and carried nem. con.

The Council then adjourned.

The following business stands for Monday, July 24:—

I. The following recommendations of the Administrative Committee:—
(1) That the grant of £50 made to the Newington Committee on the 6th instant, and the grant of £57 made to the St. Olave's Committee on the 22nd ultimo, be confirmed; (2) that a grant of £55 be made to the Stepney Committee; (3) and that the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants during the recess to District Committees, in accordance with the estimates submitted by them.

II. To consider the following recommendations of the Collection Sub-Committee: (1) That with a view to obtaining the sums required for the relief of special cases, and to interest charitable individuals in the work of the Society, District Committees should make it extensively known that they will be glad to obtain the names and addresses of those who may be willing to relieve deserving cases; (2) that the collector of each district should receive a percentage on all contributions paid towards any branch of the Society by residents in his district which can be traced to his agency, as this would encourage him to put forward prominently the claims of the whole Society; (3) that the members of each Committee should keep themselves informed of the work of their collector, and lose no opportunity of supplementing his efforts in a systematic manner, so as to make known the claims and wants of the Society to those whom he may fail to interest in the work; (4) that in the first instance the Council appoint at least one collector of a superior class to collect funds on its own behalf, and to assist Committees in breaking fresh ground, or in working up a district in which there has been hitherto a very partial canvass made.

III. Mr. W. W. Wood to move:—

That any collection made by the Council be on behalf of the General Fund and of the District Committee Aid Fund; each fund to have a first claim on 50 per cent. of all sums so collected.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

At their meeting to-morrow (Thursday) the Administrative Committee will consider the Report of the Sub-committee on the Reporter; and some practical suggestions of the Collection Sub-Committee for collection by the Council and by District Committees.

The following contributions were received during the week ending July 16, 1876:—Donations: H. Bousfield, Esq., £5; F. W. Brind, Esq., £1. 1s.; Dennistoun, Cross, & Co., £2. 2s.; R. Jardine, Esq., £5; A. A. Ranken, Esq., £1; S. Scott, Esq., £50; The Drapers' Company, £21.—Annual: Messrs. Sewell & Edwards, £1. 1s.; The Clothworkers' Company, £10. 10s. District Committee Aid Fund: John Griffith, Esq., £25; the Hampstead Committee, £21. 13s.; Mrs. Arthur Whately, 10s.; J. Hornsby Wright, Esq., £5.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

The Special Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles and Harmless Lunatics held its thirteenth meeting on Wednesday, July 12, at the Central Offices. There were present: Lord Wrottesley (in the chair), the Honble. C. H. Strutt, Sir John Ogilvy, Bart., Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B., Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., the Rev. R. J. Simpson; Drs. Brewer, G. W. Grabham, D. Hack Tuke, Fletcher Beach; Messrs. Millard, A. Sperling, W. M. Wilkinson, Courtenay Boyle (Poor Law Inspector), F. D. Mocatta, Danby P. Fry, and Mr. C. S. Loch, Secretary.

Papers relating to the Blind Asylum at Amsterdam, received through the Foreign Office, were submitted to the Committee.

Returns of Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics needing public administration, according to districts, prepared by Mr. Millard, Superintendent of the Eastern Counties Asylum, were distributed.

The Committee then resumed the discussion of the 1st and 4th heads of the 5th section ('Ways and Means'), and resolved—

'That the education and care of Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics must, as at present, be mainly provided for by local administration and local rates; but, as every member of the community is interested in the object, and this national obligation has already been acknowledged in several ways, assistance should be given out of the public revenue; and

'That the best mode in which such assistance can be given is by advances for the necessary buildings on easy terms, liberal capitation grants for young people under training, and grants of less amounts for adults.'

Under the 2nd head of the same section it was moved:—

'That union houses and gaols which are no longer wanted, owing to the diminution of pauperism and crime, might, when the circumstances are suitable, be adapted as Training Schools and Asylums for Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics.'

To which the following amendment was moved, and unanimously carried:—

'That, although many workhouses and gaols are likely soon to be available for other purposes, yet, having regard to adaptability, sanitation, and economy, it is desirable to erect new buildings for the institutions contemplated by the Committee.'

Under the 3rd head it was resolved—

'That families which, although able to pay their way under ordinary circumstances, would be reduced to destitution if required to defray the entire cost, should be charged at such rates as their means will allow for an Idiot, Imbecile, or Harmless Lunatic member admitted into a Training School or Asylum; and that the privilege accorded by Act of Parliament to the Blind and Deaf and Dumb—viz., that relief given to children should not be deemed to be parochial relief given to their parents—should be expended to Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of July 1876 was 33,735, and 43,763 received out-door relief, making a total of 77,498. This was a decrease of 950 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 5,974, 15,956, and 22,531 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 436. This was a decrease of 135 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 70 on the corresponding day of last year.

OBJECTIONS TO THE CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

The following is an extract from a letter lately written by Mr. C. E. Maurice in the Workmen's Club Journal, in answer to objections raised against the Charity Organisation Society by a workman writing under the nom de plume of 'Rasp':—

'Mr. "Rasp's" chief objections to our society are—(1) that it wastes too much money on mere machinery; (2) that it does not restrain mendicancy; (3) that it fails to reach cases most deserving of help; (4) that, being a "distant organisation," even its inquiry cannot be as effective as that made by people nearer the spot; (5) that it makes relief a mechanical thing; (6) that it offends the spirit of independence of the poor (I presume Mr. "Rasp" means that by its "assault on natural pride"); and (7) that the work to be done would be better done by individual effort.

'Now, with regard to the first complaint, I would remind Mr. "Rasp" that the first object of the Society when originally started was to provide a machinery for inquiry which should prevent people from either relieving the undeserving or from giving inefficient help of a similar kind to that which was being given by others. It was found by careful inquiry that this help was needed, not, as Mr. "Rasp" supposes, only by those who wished not to take trouble, but by those who were taking trouble, but who, from want of co-operation with other charitable people, were not able to arrive at the truth in many cases. Many impostors were carrying on their work in different parts of London who could not be detected by isolated individuals, and many absolutely fraudulent "charities" were taking advantage of the generosity of charitable people for the purposes of the vilest form of swindling. Mr. "Rasp" will, I think, admit that considerable "machinery" was necessary to carry out these objects. At the same time I am not, I think, guilty of any breach of confidence in stating that there is considerable difference of opinion among the members of our Council as to the desirability of part of that machinery, and as to the wisdom of our taking up the question of prosecuting fraudulent charities. The objection, therefore, even if sound, does not touch the principles of our Society.

'As to the second charge—of our failure to restrain mendicancy—I can only answer that here, in Hampstead, we have succeeded in nearly suppressing street-begging, while the central office has exposed many of those swindlers who have lived on the public. Of course in seven years (the time of the Society's life) even this part of the work is not complete.

'The third and fourth objections it will be more convenient to consider together. It is evident from the phrase, a "distant organisation," and from his suggestion at a later place in his letter of what might be done by those "resident on the spot," that Mr. "Rasp" imagines that the offices and Council at Buckingham-street are the whole of the Charity Organisation Society. Now, there are thirty-seven Charity Organisation Committees established in different parts of London, and composed (except in the poorer districts, where men of sufficient leisure cannot be obtained) of persons "resident on the spot," and interested in the relief of the poor in its widest sense; and, while these committees are in constant intercourse with each other, and send representatives to the central Council, their formation has, in many cases, been due almost wholly to the efforts of local people. The inquiry, therefore, is not conducted by a distant organisation, but by people resident on the spot; partly by the agent of the committee, partly by the honorary secretary, and partly (in the best organised committees) by other members of the committees. We are thus able, in many cases, to reach cases of sudden calamity, where help, to be efficient, must be prompt. We (in Hampstead) have in many cases found work for people out of work; found convalescent tickets for those needing to go to Homes; or hospital letters for those needing such treatment; have in two recent cases found outfits for those requiring emigration; and supplied the means of work (sewing-machines, mangles, &c.) in others. A committee, in a district much richer than ours, has started a pension fund for widows, and has, I believe, made large use of it. But this is not the chief work of the committees, and we must generally leave cases of special urgency to private relief; but even our after-inquiry will be a guide to the relieving person for the future.

'As to Mr. "Rasp's" fifth objection, I must meet it with a most direct denial of his statement; and also with the complaint that, in saying I did not meet his objections in my former letter, he overlooked the sentence in which I touched on this point. We do not profess to be in any but the last resort a relief agency; and why not? Because, amongst other reasons, we wish to act through the personal agency of clergy, district visitors, and all who already know the poor personally. But our great wish is that they should act together, and act wisely; and it is because they have not acted together, and not acted wisely in the past, that our Society is needed. We wish to make their intercourse with the poor not less personal, but more efficient; more really friendly, because the result of thought and consideration and common action, not of the hasty conclusion that the giving of sixpences, and possibly coal-tickets, is always the most real relief.

'As to the sixth objection, I can tell Mr. "Rasp" of an instance here in Hampstead, in which we found work for a man who was merely needing work, but whom some benevolent people in Hampstead were doing their best to pauperise by giving him money and soup-tickets; and in another case we saved a woman from having money thrust on her without her wish, and which she did not need, by our advice to the lady desiring so to help her. Which does Mr. "Rasp" think most offended the "natural pride" of the poor—we, or the well-meaning but ignorant benevolent? But, indeed, I must again refer Mr. "Rasp" to my former article for a more complete answer on this point.

'The last objection to which I have alluded is one which I have been trying to answer throughout this letter; but, as Mr. "Rasp" has referred to me personally in so kind and complimentary a manner, I am bound very specially to reject the compliment. I am a man with none of those advantages of circumstances, still less with those special advantages of character which enable some men to gain an influence in settling matters between poor and rich; and if I had not joined the Charity Organisation Committee in Hampstead, I should never have obtained any knowledge of the poor, nor have been able to give even that almost imperceptible amount of help that I have been able to give. Above all, though I might have been able to give a small subscription to this or that charity, I should never have had any locus standi in going to see any poor person—that locus standi I have gained as a member of the Charity Organisation Committee.'

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 187.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 26, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge each of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of a District Committee, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies at are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

NOTICES.

District Committees likely to require grants before the 30th September next are requested to forward, without delay, to the Secretary of the Council, their applications, together with the usual balance-sheet.

The Reporter will not appear during the months of August and September, as the Council does not meet during those months, though the Administrative Committee sits as usual.

District Committees are requested to send in their weekly returns as usual during August and September.

PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL.

THE Council of the Charity Organisation Society met at 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, on Monday, at 3 P.M.

Present: Alsager Hay Hill, Esq. (in the chair); C. J. Stevens, Esq., Alham; Sir R. M. Stephenson, J. R. Hollond, Esq., Paddington; R. A. Spinall, Esq., Dr. Daniel, Capt. Boyce, R.N., Chelsea; W. Bevan, Esq., W. Rusfield, Esq., Westminster (St. James's and St. Anne's); Miss Octavia Hill, Marylebone; Hon. W. Warren Vernon, St. Giles's and Bloomsbury; Rev. J. Simpson, H. H. Hill, Esq., Strand; G. Barrington Baker, Esq., Holborn; Rev. H. I. Cummins, City; Rev. H. G. Henderson, Shoreditch; Hon. R. Scott, Mile End; R. Ellis, Esq., Poplar; Capt. Noyes, St. Olave's; Galabin, Esq., Camberwell; G. Parker, Esq., Lewisham; W. M. Wilkinson, Esq., Vice-President; Sir Charles Trevelyan, C. A. Miner, Esq., W. Willisond, Esq., W. Wightman Wood, Esq., Additional Members; total, 26. S. Loch, Esq., Secretary.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending July 15 the receipts had been 96. 14s. for the General Fund, and £52. 3s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £762. 10s. 7d. and £159. 16s. 1d. respectively.

GRANTS.—That they had made grants of £45 and £30 to the Bethnal Green and Islington Committees respectively.

'REPORTER.'—The Committee had adopted the following report of the Sub-Committee* on the Reporter, with one or two slight alterations and additions:—

Report of the Sub-Committee of the Administrative Committee on the Reporter:—

Your Sub-Committee have held three meetings, at which the following members have been present, viz.: Mr. Alsager H. Hill, Mr. Du Pré Thornton, and Major Nares.

They have confined their attention to the consideration of the practical questions referred to them by the series of Resolutions passed on the subject by the Administrative Committee.

They beg to submit the following suggestions on each of these Resolutions:—

They suggest on Resolution 1.—That the names of members attending Council be inserted in columns parallel to the names of the several Committees which they represent. That there should be double columns in the space allotted to these names, and that the word 'Esq.' be omitted, in order to economise space.

That, under ordinary circumstances, the report of Council Proceedings be limited to three columns; and that, considering the pressure of work on the staff, the Reporter should not be sent to press till noon on Wednesday, and that 'advance copies' be sent to Committees meeting on Wednesday.

On Resolution 2.—That the insertion of matter under the general heads of 'Questions of Interest to District Committees' and 'Details of Special Prosecutions' be left, as at present, to the discretion of the Secretary.

On Resolution 3.—That half a column of the Reporter be devoted to subjects under the head of 'District News,' and that postcards directed to the Secretary be supplied to Hon. Secretaries of District Committees to facilitate their supplying information for insertion under that head. That at least half a column be allotted to General Topics bearing on Charity Organisation; and that Country Charity Organisation Societies be invited to send in suggestions and memoranda.

That Mr. Purdy, of the Statistical Department, be requested to supply the return of Metropolitan Pauperism monthly for insertion in the Reporter, parallel with the Charity Organisation Society's returns of similar date. That the District Committees be invited to furnish brief abstracts of more than usually interesting cases illustrative of the working of the Society.†

On Resolution 4.—That letters and correspondence may be received for insertion under the following conditions, viz.: That letters in criticism of Council Proceedings or containing personal remarks should not be inserted; nor appeals for money, direct or indirect; also that a notice should be inserted at the head of 'Correspondence,' stating that the Council does not hold itself responsible for the opinions expressed in the correspondence; and that the Secretary should, when he thinks necessary, submit letters to the Administrative Committee before insertion.

On Resolution 5.—That cases submitted by District Committees should be inserted at the discretion of the Administrative Committee, under the head of 'Correspondence and Cases,' with a view to eliciting suggestions for appropriate treatment.

On Resolution 6.—They recommend that a certain number of selected Advertisements be inserted in such parts of the Reporter as are not required for the necessary reports of the Society's business and other matters to which space is allotted in the paper from week to week. That the rate of charge for Advertisements be invariable—1s. a line or 9s. an inch. That such Advertisements be submitted, with the other contents of the paper, to the Administrative Committee, and that, by way of experiment, the selection of Advertisements for the present rest with the Secretary. They also recommend that the size of the Reporter should for the present continue the same as heretofore.

A SPECIAL DONATION.*—The following arrangements for the distribution of the donation of £100 for convalescent cases had been adopted by the Administrative Committee:—

That £6 be given to each of the five following Committees, viz.: South St. Pancras, Islington, St. Giles's, Newington, and Lambeth; that £7 be given to each of the ten following Committees, viz.: Holborn, Shoreditch, Bethnal Green, Whitechapel, St. George's-in-the-East, Stepney, Mile End, Poplar, St. Saviour's, St. Olave's; that the distribution of the money be subject to the following restrictions, viz.: that no letter of admission to a convalescent home be purchased for an applicant, except after the receipt of a medical certificate duly filled up; that the form or medical certificate made use of by the Paddington and Marylebone Committees be forwarded to the Committees receiving parts of the donation, and that the applicants themselves take the certificates to the medical men. And lastly, that a list of Convalescent Homes, notice of which had been from time to time inserted in the Reporter, be sent to each of the above District Committees, to post up in their Committee-rooms.

GRANTS.

In accordance with the recommendations of the Administrative Committee (See Bye Law No. 27, section iv.), grants of £50 and £57 to the Newington and St. Olave's Committees respectively were confirmed.

The consideration of the grant of £55 to the Stepney Committee was postponed.

The following recommendation of the Administrative Committee was adopted:—

That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants during the recess to District Committees, in accordance with the estimates submitted by them.

SUB-COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON THE COLLECTION OF FUNDS.

Mr. Miner moved the following recommendations of the Sub-Committee, which it was agreed to take en bloc:—

II. To consider the following recommendations of the Collection Sub-Committee: (1) That, with a view to obtaining the sums required for the relief of special cases, and to interest charitable individuals in the work of the Society, District Committees should make it extensively known that they will be glad to obtain the names and addresses of those who may be willing to relieve deserving cases; (2) that the collector of each district should receive a percentage on all contributions paid towards any branch of the Society by residents in his district which can be traced to his agency, as this would encourage him to put forward prominently the claims of the whole Society; (3) that the members of each Committee should keep themselves informed of the work of their collector, and lose no opportunity of supplementing his efforts in a systematic manner, so as to make known the claims and wants of the Society to those whom he may fail to interest in the work; (4) that in the first instance the Council appoint at least one collector of a superior class to collect funds on its own behalf, and to assist Committees in breaking fresh ground, or in working up a district in which there has been hitherto a very partial canvass made.†

The first recommendation had been, he said, already carried into effect with very good results in some districts. The object of the second was to remove any excuse for inertness on the part of the collector in urging upon those whom he visited the claims of the Society as a whole. The third was most important: members of District Committees should consider it their duty to assist in explaining the objects of the Society and the results which it has accomplished. Their aid was required, not for the collection of funds only, but above all for the purpose of securing more complete and hearty co-operation. With regard to the fourth recommendation, an intelligent man was required, well versed in the practical work of the Society, who should be, as it were, a missionary on its behalf, and remove much of the misunderstanding and prejudice which at present existed respecting it.

Rev. H. J. Cummins, in seconding the recommendations, said that in consideration of the difficulties which might arise from the second resolution, he would have preferred the omission of the words 'which can be traced to his agency;' and as the question of salary was not touched upon, he would propose that it be left in the hands of the Administrative Committee.

Mr. Bousfield suggested that it might be advisable, in the interest of a reformed system of charitable administration, to attempt to continue without appointing a collector.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, referring to the third recommendation, said it was very desirable to retain the power of discriminating between sums for which percentage should be paid by Council and others for which no percentage could be levied. It was true that hitherto the Council had been able to obtain funds without employing such a collector as that proposed in the fourth recommendation, but it was now proved to be absolutely necessary to give assistance in collection to some District Committees. The selection of the collector must be conducted with the greatest care; for he would, to a certain extent, have the reputation of the Society in his hands. In the first instance, he should perhaps be appointed for a year only. The last clause of the fourth recommendation was specially important. It was essential that those responsible for the work of the Committee should remain responsible for the collection of funds in the district of the Committee. Many contributions which would not find their way to any more distant body would be paid to the District Committee, in consequence of good local work; and the work of collection would force members to make themselves acquainted with their constituencies, and oblige them to explain difficulties and meet objections. It must not be understood, therefore, that any transference of the burthen of collection was proposed by the recommendation.

After a few words from Mr. W. Bevan and Sir R. M. Stephenson, Mr. Miner said that it was the object of the recommendations to assist and co-operate with District Committees only. Nothing could be further from the intention of the Sub-Committee than to assume the responsibilities of the Local Committee, or displace local influence and effort in the collection of funds.

The recommendations were then put and carried, together with a further resolution—

That the amount of the salary of the Collector be determined by the Administrative Committee.

COLLECTION BY THE COUNCIL.

Mr. W. W. Wood moved:—

That any collection made by the Council be on behalf of the General Fund and of the District Committee Aid Fund; each fund to have a first claim on 50 per cent. of all sums so collected;

adding, with the permission of the Council, the following words, viz.:—

which are not specially assigned by the donors either to the expenses of the Central Office or to the District Committee Aid Fund.

The collection of funds on behalf of the Council and of the poorer District Committees was undertaken by the Council, while, since the recent decision of Council, District Committees collected on their own behalf and on behalf of the whole Society. At the discussion on the second recommendation of the Collection Sub-Committee he had proposed that their should be some specific division of the sums collected by each District Committee—that a part should be set aside for its own wants, and a part paid over for the work of the whole Society. The arrangement he had proposed was rejected; but it was even more obligatory for the Council not to accept money both for itself and for the District Committees without arranging that the money received should be fairly divided according to the requirements of each. His motion dealt with cases in which money had been received by the Council, but the donor had not specially stated how his donation should be expended.

† See Reporter, No. 180, vol. v., p. 97, May 31, 1876.

Mr. A. H. Hill seconded the motion.

Sir Charles Trevelyan said that the views expressed by Mr. W. W. Wood seemed to indicate a belief that Committees would be inclined to consider the collection made by them as the private property of the Committee, and not as a sacred trust fund. The Committees in the richer districts had undertaken; so far as was possible, to provide for the wants of those in the poorer districts, in order to compensate for the limitations which the division of the area of the Society into separate districts entailed on the collection of the poorer Committees. The Council also had undertaken to collect both for its own more special work and for the work of the poorer districts; the nature of the work in each case was totally different, and as the claims of each would vary in different years, a different yearly apportionment of the funds available would have to be made. The Council must claim that a trust similar to that imposed in the District Committees should be placed in it.

Rev. H. I. Cummins thought the question of collection had been already sufficiently discussed. Council was appealing on behalf of the poor districts, on the understanding that it conducted its work as economically as possible. He would suggest the abolition of the District Committee Aid Fund. He moved the previous question.

After a few words from Rev. R. J. Simpson and Mr. A. H. Hill.

Mr. J. R. Hollond said that the Administrative Committee made it a principle never to allow the wants of the Council to interfere with the distribution of money which was required by the District Committees. At the same time their decision turned not merely on the question whether the Committee was in want of money, but whether the grant was likely to be applied beneficially. During the present year £187. 13s. 10d. had been handed over as a grant from the General Fund to the District Committee Aid Fund; and £481 had been transferred as a loan, which would never, in all probability, be repaid.

After a few words from Mr. W. W. Wood in reply, the previous question was put and carried.

The Council then adjourned.

The following business stands for Monday, July 31:—

1. That a grant of £55 be made to the Stepney Committee.
2. Sir Charles Trevelyan to move—
'That the price of the Reporter be doubled, and that the size be increased to the extent required by the changes ordered by the Administrative Committee.'

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson to move—

- 'That the Reporter be distributed gratis to all subscribers of not less than £1.'

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

At their meeting to-morrow (Thursday) the Administrative Committee will consider if any arrangements should be made for sermons and lectures on behalf of the Society during the ensuing winter.

The following contributions were received during the week ending July 22, 1876:—Donations: Messrs. Quilter, Ball, & Co., £3. 3s.; A. Sim, Esq., £5. 5s.—Annual: Major C. C. Fitz-Roy, £2. 2s.; The Earl of Leicester, K.G., £10; L. Taylor, Esq., £1. 1s.—District Committee Aid Fund: 'Anonymous' (for convalescent cases in the poorest districts), £100.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of July 1876 was 33,603, and 43,630 received out-door relief, making a total of 77,233. This was a decrease of 265 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 6,061, 16,368, and 21,861 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 493. This was an increase of 57 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 63 on the corresponding day of last year.

ERRATUM.—The return of the Horsham Association, on page 126 of Reporter No. 186, should have been as follows:—Recommended to Guardians, 1; assisted by grants, 3; assisted by loans, 1; total, 5. Vagrants dealt with, 76.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

The Special Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles and Harmless Lunatics held its thirteenth meeting on Wednesday, July 12, at the Central Office. There were present: Lieut.-General Cavenagh (in the chair), the Honble. C. H. Strutt, Sir John Ogilvy, Bart., Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B., the Rev. Canon Hopkins, the Revs. R. J. Simpson and H. I. Cummins; Drs. D. Hack Tuke, Brewer, Grabham, Boyd, J. Langdon Down, Ireland, and Fletcher Beach; Messrs. W. M. Wilkinson, W. Millard, F. D. Mocatta, and Danby P. Fry.

A statement by Dr. Ireland on the bearing of the Scottish Lunacy Acts upon the condition of Idiots and Imbeciles in Scotland was distributed.

The 6th section of the Agenda, entitled 'Provision for Idiots and Imbeciles of the Lower-Middle and Upper-Working Class,' was then considered, and the following resolutions were passed:—

1st. 'That persons belonging to the lower-middle and upper artisan class, who are so unfortunate as to have an imbecile child, are in a less favourable position than any other for obtaining proper education and care for it, because, while they can rarely afford to pay the full cost of maintenance and education, they cannot well appear before their respective Boards of Guardians to claim the benefit of the legal provisions for destitute imbecile children.'

2nd. 'That institutions mainly supported on the voluntary principle are best adapted to the needs of the class specified in the foregoing resolution, provided all suitable cases are admitted at the proper age, at rates suited to the circumstances of their respective families.'

3rd. 'That the Government may assist in the formation and maintenance of such Institutions by removing unnecessary legal restrictions.'

ALLEGED STARVATION IN WESTMINSTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE TIMES.'

SIR,—The accompanying letter contains the decision of the Local Government Board respecting the case of Charlotte Hammond, deceased, and I am directed to request that you will publish the same in your next issue.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

THOMAS WORLOCK,

Clerk to the Guardians.

'Local Government Board, Whitehall, S.W.,

July 18, 1876.

'Sir,—I am directed by the Local Government Board to state that they have received from their Inspector, Mr. Hedley, a report of the official inquiry recently held by him into the circumstances attending the death of Charlotte Hammond, of No. 3 New Square, Orchard Street, Westminster. The Board have also received a copy of the evidence of the witnesses examined at the inquiry. On a careful consideration of the Report and evidence the Board have arrived at the following conclusions:—1. That Charlotte Hammond died from a complication of diseases, and not in any sense from starvation caused by inability to procure the necessaries of life. 2. That her husband, with the aid of his sons and daughters, were of sufficient ability to provide her with what she required. 3. That, from the nature of her illness, she was for some time before her death able to take very little nourishment. The first of the above conclusions is supported by the evidence of the father, two sons, and three daughters, who all testified that there was no destitution, and that food was plentiful. In fact, Louisa Hammond, who nursed her mother throughout her illness, swore that "she never wanted for anything;" and Henry Hammond, the husband, swore that "relief was not required." The second of the above conclusions is founded upon the evidence of her husband and sons, which showed that their gross earnings were about £2. 16s. a week, of which £1. 17s. was paid directly to the mother for housekeeping purposes. The third conclusion is amply borne out by the medical testimony. As regards the conduct of the officers concerned, and the general bearing of this case upon Poor Law administration, the Board direct me to state that they doubt extremely whether medical relief—that is to say, an order for the attendance of the medical officer—should have been given in the first instance. The Board observe that the application for that relief was made, not by a member of the family, but by a stranger, and that throughout the relieving officer does not seem to have acquainted himself with the circumstances of the family. In these respects the Board consider that the conduct of the relieving officer is open to question, and calls for animadversion from the Guardians. But the relieving officer, having exercised his judgment and decided, rightly or wrongly, that he ought to give relief, was, in the opinion of the Board, justified in letting that relief take the form of an order for admission to the workhouse, inasmuch as both certificates exhibited to him stated on their face, in the handwriting of the medical officer, that Charlotte Hammond was able to be removed to the workhouse. If, however, the conduct of the relieving officer in failing to make proper inquiries was lax, that of the medical officer was, in the opinion of the Board, still more reprehensible; for it is quite clear that Charlotte Hammond was not in a fit state to be removed to the workhouse when he certified that she was able to be removed, and, indeed, he had previously told her daughter that she was sinking rapidly. It is true that the medical officer offered the explanation that in so certifying he was carrying out instructions which he had previously received. Those instructions he believed to have been verbal, but he had no recollection when they were given, nor by whom. Under these circumstances the Board doubt very much whether the medical officer, in point of fact, ever could have received any such instructions. The Board request that the Guardians will caution the medical officer to exercise in future the greatest care in filling up his medical certificates, and will remind him that upon the accuracy of the information which those certificates should convey must depend in great measure the action of the Guardians and of the relieving officer in dealing with applications for relief. The Board also desire to draw the attention of the Guardians to the incomplete and careless manner in which the District Medical Relief Register has been kept. It contained no record of certain medicines which the medical officer states that he ordered for Charlotte Hammond, nor of an alleged change of the medicine of the patient on the 12th of May, and he himself admitted that he does not, except in cases of death, fill up the column headed "Result (as relieved, cured, died, discharged)." The Board request that the Guardians will require the register to be in future filled up in such a manner as will render it a trustworthy record of the attendance of the medical officer in each case, and will show in every instance the result of the medical treatment.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

'J. F. RORTON, Assistant Secretary.

CHARITY IN CHINA.

The Chinese have earned for themselves amongst Europeans a reputation for cruelty and for a stoical indifference for the sufferings of their fellow-men. We have found them to be treacherous in war, and merciless in punishment. Their prisons are known to be dens of the vilest description, where too often the sufferings of the culprits are looked upon with indifference, even if they are not aggravated, by the jailors; and the sword of the executioner is seldom allowed long to slumber in its scabbard. These and similar facts are naturally attributed to innate cruelty, when, perhaps, with greater justice, they should be put down as the results of the national traditions and surroundings. Besides this, these evils exist on the housetops. There is no attempt made to conceal them. Every visitor to China comes away with tales of the horrors he has witnessed in the Land of Han, and he seldom has any counterbalancing instances to adduce of acts of kindness performed or deeds of mercy done. The evil stares him in the face, and the good lies buried from his gaze. But, notwithstanding this, there is a vast deal of quiet charitable work being done in China. Almost every large town and district has its asylums for the aged and the orphans, and establishments for the relief of the poor. A Chinese work on these and similar institutions has lately been presented* to the London Charity Organisation Society, and its pages afford a very good insight into the scope and direction of Chinese charities. The author gives an account of some of the existing charitable institutions, and lays down rules for the guidance of those who may be desirous of establishing similar ones. His object in so doing is no doubt highly to be commended, but his views are precisely those to combat which the Charity Organisation Society was especially established. Indiscriminate largess to the poor, and a wide-spread distribution of food and raiment to those in want, are the ruling maxims which guide his recommendations, on the principle that to relieve the poor, no matter whether the object be worthy or unworthy, is a sacred duty.

The first charitable institutions to which he refers are not precisely similar to any that exist among ourselves. 'Farms of righteousness' he calls them, and he illustrates their objects by referring to two such farms, which were established by a Mr. Fan in the Prefecture of Soo-chow Foo. The said Mr. Fan, being desirous of benefiting his relations, purchased two blocks of land, and by deed covenanted that the produce arising from them should be distributed either in money or kind among his kindred for ever. Each household was daily to receive a certain quantity of rice per head, and, in the winter, a suit of warm clothing was to be distributed in the same way to every member of the family above ten years of age, and half a suit—whatever that may mean—to all children between that age and five. A male relative, on his marriage, was to receive thirty strings of cash (= about thirty dollars), and if he should enter the bonds of wedlock a second time, a further gift of twenty strings; but widows were not to be encouraged to marry again, and so, though twenty strings were to be given to each maiden at her wedding, she was to be portionless if, after having become a widow, she were to take a second husband. Liberal contributions were also to be given towards the expenses of burying members of the family, and provisions were made to meet any sudden or unavoidable emergency which might present itself.

Orphan asylums are also prominent among the institutions of which the author writes, and his history of these establishments furnishes very plain testimony of the recognised and habitual existence in many parts of the country of the crime of infanticide. Colleges, schools, societies for the preservation of life, for the burying of the dead, for relieving the destitute, for encouraging husbandry, and for many other charitable objects, are fully described; and however mistaken may be the means which are, in most instances, employed, yet the very existence of such institutions is enough to correct many erroneous impressions, and to stamp the Chinese as a civilized and not unmerciful people.—Athenæum, July 15.

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 188.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, AUGUST 2, 1876.

[WITH EXTRA HALF-SHEET.]

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

NOTICES.

The Reporter will not appear during the months of August and September, as the Council does not meet during those months, though the Administrative Committee sits as usual.

Monday, August 7, being a Bank Holiday, the Central Office will be closed.

PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL.

THE Council of the Charity Organisation Society met at 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, on Monday, at 3 p.m.

Present: Lieut.-General Cavenagh (in the chair); C. J. Stevens, Esq., Fulham; Dr. Daniel, Capt. Boyce, R.N., Chelsea; Major Prendergast, St. George's; W. Bousfield, Esq., Westminster; Miss Octavia Hill, St. Marglebone; Miss Collett, South St. Pancras; T. Copeman, Esq., Hackney; Hon. W. Warren Vernon, St. Giles's; Rev. R. J. Simpson, Strand; Capt. Fortescue, Tulse Hill; Rev. H. G. Henderson, Rev. H. P. Kelly, Shoreditch; Hon. C. W. Fremantle, Whitechapel; F. B. Montgomerie, Esq., St. Saviour's; T. Galabin, Esq., Camberwell; W. M. Wilkinson, Esq., Vice-President; A. H. Hill, Esq., Vice-Chairman; Sir C. Trevelyan, C. A. Miner, Esq., Additional Members; total, 21. C. S. Loch, Esq., Secretary.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending July 22 the receipts had been £32. 1s. for the General Fund, and £100 for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £509. 2s. 6d. and £86. 16s. 1d. respectively.

GRANTS.—That they had made Grants of £40 and £20 to the Fulham and St. George's East Committees respectively.

QUARTERLY FINANCE SUB-COMMITTEE.—The Finance Sub-Committee had held their Quarterly Meeting. It appeared from their Report that during the past quarter there had been an increase of £831 in the receipts on the General Fund as compared with the receipts for the corresponding quarter of last year; and that on the District Committee Aid Fund there had been an increase of £19 for the same quarter. District Committees had contributed £150 to this fund, and £250 had been transferred to it from the General Fund.

The recommendation of the Administrative Committee that a grant of £55 be made to the Stepney Committee was again unavoidably postponed.

The notices of motion which stood on the paper in the names of Sir Charles Trevelyan and Mr. W. M. Wilkinson were postponed.

THE ELEMENTARY EDUCATION BILL.

Sir Charles Trevelyan asked leave of the Council to bring forward the following motion as urgent:—

That the 'Day Feeding and Clothing Industrial Schools,' provision for which has been made in the Bill for the amendment of the Education Act, would seriously aggravate the relaxation of the feeling of parental responsibility caused by outdoor relief, indiscriminate charity, and the numerous institutions whereby fathers and mothers are enabled to relieve themselves of the care of their children, and would therefore be injurious both to parent and child.

That this resolution be submitted to the Presidents of the Local Government Board and the Council for Education.

The Chairman moved that the Bye-law by which notice of every motion is required be suspended. Sir Charles Trevelyan, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Captain Fortescue, and others stated the necessity for the immediate consideration of the motion, as Lord Sandon's Bill had already passed the second reading, while the Rev. H. P. Kelly, Rev. H. G. Henderson, and Dr. Daniel urged that, though this was the last meeting of the Council for the session, it was undesirable that so important a question should be discussed and formally voted upon by so small a Council without previous notice.

The motion for the suspension of the Bye-law was put and lost, 12 (out of 19) voting in favour of it.*

Sir Charles then made the following statement on the clause of the Elementary Education Act regarding 'Wastrel Children.'† He said that the machinery of public and private charity for providing for poor children during the last few years had grown so fast that it was necessary to review it and estimate its extent. The means of giving assistance were (1) Outdoor relief—the normal insurance against all the poor man's ills; (2) indiscriminate charity, as yet but partially checked; (3) institutions dependent on subscriptions, such as orphanages and homes; (4) institutions supported by rates, such as Reformatories and Industrial Schools; and lastly, Ragged Schools. All these were gradually producing a new state of things, and our people had sufficient worldly wisdom to adapt themselves to the circumstances of their time. It was proved to our working class that the best and cheapest mode of educating and providing for children was to turn them into the streets in a dirty, ragged, half-fed state. The children were harboured and educated; and after they had been brought up at the public expense, the parents could calculate upon their getting them again when their labour became valuable. The statistics of the Middlesex Industrial School at Feltham proved this from the fact that out of 803 boys discharged in the years 1872-3-4, 165 were claimed by their friends, 'who determinately refused all offers of provision'; and of the 165 more than 18 per cent. relapsed into crime. To quote another instance: three years ago Mr. Longley, a Local Government Board Inspector, made a report on outdoor relief, and recommended that when a widow applied for such assistance, one or more of her children should be taken off her hands and be placed in a district school; it appeared that, in the Metropolitan area, so large a number as 1,100 children had during that period been received in accordance with the Local Government Board order.

* Bye-law 20 requires that 'at least twelve members be present, and at least two-thirds vote for such suspension.'

Sir Charles then read the following extracts from a letter:—

To relieve parents from their responsibility is as bad for them as for their children; but of late years this has been done upon such a scale that it has become the principal source from which the class of neglected street children is recruited. Each case ought to be separately investigated, and dealt with according to its merits: either prosecuting the parents for neglecting their children if they are able to provide for them; or assisting them if they are unable to do so; or taking the child entirely in hand if it is a real orphan. Mr. Peek's Fund is administered on this principle; and it has already brought to light the fact that even well-to-do artisans, receiving from 30s. to 40s. a week, spend their earnings at the public-house and throw their children upon charity. If we are to make the next generation better than the present, we must direct our attention to this prolific root of the prevailing evil. So far from being more expensive than wholesale feeding and clothing, it is only by testing and discriminating that the available funds can be made to go as far as possible. If the children said to belong to this class were scrutinised and dealt with in the manner proposed, they would soon be brought within manageable limits; but of this, at any rate, there can be no doubt—that to isolate such children is to perpetuate their degradation; whereas, if they are educated with the class immediately above them, they rapidly become absorbed into it by the force of emulation, example, self-respect, and other elevating motives. The way out of our present dilemma has to be sought in this direction, and not in that of making rags and dirt and semi-starvation credentials for a special description of charity, till they have lost much of the disgrace which ought to attach to them, and are even regarded with interest and favour, as if they were the badge and order of merit.

Whatever we may say about the importance of enforcing parental responsibility, there can be no doubt that to dispense parents from the primary duty of feeding and clothing their children, and from the habits which the regular performance of this duty engenders, taking our chance of recovering the cost from them after their children have been cared for by others quite independently of them, is not the way to encourage the growth of parental feeling. In endeavouring to make things better than Nature has made them, we have seriously impaired the divine institution which is the masterkey of all human improvement—the family. While, on the one hand, we are laboriously providing a substitute for it in the boarding-out system, on the other we are breaking down the thing itself by our Ragged Schools, Soup Kitchens, and Orphanages which are really Orphanages only to a limited extent, being in the main vast establishments into which families are broken up and dispersed, leaving the mother to go her own way without motherly responsibility or affection.

Properly handled, the School Board system offers an opportunity of re-knitting the family tie—which has been miserably unravelled by the misuse of Poor Law and Charity, especially in our large towns—and of reabsorbing our lapsed class into the body of the community; but this advantage, which, in a country like ours, is not inferior to the primary object of giving to all classes a good education, would be seriously impaired by the revival of the Ragged School system under the name of 'Day Feeding Industrial Schools.' The original founders of Ragged Schools deserve all honour for having led the way in taking up the cause of our neglected street children. They did all that could be done at the time; but a more comprehensive and perfect remedy has now been provided, and the former cannot be continued without injury to the health of the patient.

He then quoted extracts from the account of the debate in the House of Commons, as reported in the Times of the 19th ultimo, showing that several members were apprehensive of the evil that might ensue from the adoption of this experiment, and finally he read the following letter, taken from the Times of the 24th ultimo:—

Mr. John Macgregor writes to us from Blackheath: 'Perhaps I may be allowed to suggest a few thoughts about day industrial schools, as the result of long acquaintance with the general subject and of nearly six years' experience as Chairman of the Industrial Schools Committee of the London School Board, which has dealt with 5,300 children, and has more than 2,000 of them in 40 industrial schools, including four ships. The Day Industrial School, as defined in the Bill before Parliament, would receive children for, say, ten hours daily, and would teach them, employ them industrially, and partially feed them. The children would be sent "home" for 14 hours daily, and, it is presumed, for all Sunday. Therefore, the children would be 60 hours at the school and 108 hours at "home" every week. Such a plan will, therefore, evidently be unsuitable for children who wander, or beg, or steal, because they will do this out of school hours; for children whose parents are "unable to control" them, or are unable or unwilling to supply clothing, or who are of the poorest class in bad localities and with shifting addresses. Who is to select the children, and what child can be refused? Who is to induce them to come for ten hours' schooling if they will not come now for five hours? Who is to bring them to school daily? How are they to be fed on Sunday and in holiday time, and will they come on Saturday, when all other school children have a holiday? Now, what will be the expense of such a school? About 4s. per child per week, according to the careful estimate of the Committee I have above alluded to. What kind of industrial work will be suitable for children who come for a few weeks and who spoil at least half of the materials as beginners? How can "one simple meal" be enough for a child with ten hours of work and school? What will be the cost of the school buildings, necessarily in dense localities, and with playgrounds and workshops? How many of these schools would be needed for London, when two miles each way is the furthest one can expect the children to walk? What will it cost to collect parents' payments? From experience in collecting such payments (for the Home Office) during the last 18 months from some hundreds of parents, I venture to say that the operation would cost in mere machinery one-half of what is received. Finally, what would be the effect of the system upon other children and other parents? If the schools are "pleasant" they will attract thousands. If they are punitive, even in appearance, they will deter anything like regular attendance. Day Industrial Schools established and worked by voluntary agency and without compromising the policy of the State, might be useful for some children in small towns; but if they are established and managed in London by official agency, necessarily cumbersome and costly, these schools will be a most expensive and demoralising failure.'

Mr. A. H. Hill thought that under the circumstances Sir Charles Trevelyan should be contented with having called the attention of the Council to the clause in the Education Bill, and suggested that a deputation, consisting of a few private gentlemen—members of the Society and others—would have more weight than the resolution passed by the Council, and transmitted as Sir Charles proposed. The Report of the Society on Soup Kitchens, and the other publications of the Society, had fully expressed the views of the Council on such questions. He had recently come across several instances of men in the receipt of good wages who were not ashamed to avail themselves of charity and every other means within their reach, in order to set aside their natural obligations. With regard to Industrial Schools his experience was that real 'industrials' were seldom produced by them.

Rev. R. J. Simpson thought that two bad results must necessarily ensue, if the clause became law. There would be a very strong temptation to tolerably 'well-to-do' people to send their children to these feeding schools, which would be in many cases the first step to the pauperisation of the parents. On the other hand, it was evident that the family tie should, if possible, be in all cases preserved, or should, by the system of boarding out, be renovated. But by the proposed scheme children, whose parents were of so bad a character as to contaminate their morality, would be allowed, at one and the same time, to receive the maintenance provided by the State and to remain in daily contact with vice.

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson referred to a conference with the School Board held in 1872.*

Mr. Bousfield thought that so grave an error must necessarily work its own cure. The 'maintenance' would involve a considerable addition to the rates.

The Rev. H. G. Henderson said that the advantages of the clause were, that there would be less inclination to send children to school as 'half-timers'; that there would be a better provision for the punishment of children; and lastly, he considered that there would be no great inducement to send children to these schools, as such children would in all probability be a marked class.

Mr. Miner drew special attention to the remarks that had been made by several members of the House of Commons, in the debate on the clause. He thought it would be very desirable to have a Parliamentary Sub-Committee, to watch the progress of bills touching on matters connected with the work of the Society, and to suggest, when necessary, the best method of drawing public attention to questions of importance. He proposed that the statement made by Sir Charles Trevelyan be referred to the Administrative Committee.

His proposal was adopted nem. con., and the Council then adjourned to the 9th October.

The following business stands for Monday, October 9:—

(1). Mr. J. R. Holland to move—

'That Bye-law No. 1 be amended as follows:—

'The Council shall meet on the first Monday in every month (except August and September) at 3 P.M., and on any other day and at any other hour to which the Council may, for special reasons, adjourn.

'Exception.—If the first Monday in the month shall fall on a bank holiday, the Council shall meet on the next Monday following.

'In case of emergency, the Administrative Committee, on the requisition of a District Committee or at its own discretion, shall have power to summon (through the Reporter) a special meeting of Council to discuss a particular subject.'

'The Council shall meet every Monday at 3 P.M. throughout the year, except during the months of August and September, and on any other day and at any other hour to which the Council may at any time for special reasons adjourn; but it shall be open to members to move that the Council shall adjourn over any Monday.']

(2). Major FitzRoy to move—

'That the Bye-laws from No. 21 to the end, relating to the Administrative Committee, be amended as follows:—

'No. 21. The Administrative Committee shall consist of the Chairman and Vice-chairman of Council and twenty members, and shall be elected annually at the first meeting of Council in the month of January; the names of those willing to serve being previously submitted, either directly or through the Hon. Secretaries of the District Committees. All members to be eligible for re-election. Any member of Council shall be at liberty to attend the meetings of the Administrative Committee, or those of its Sub-Committees, and take part in the proceedings, but not to vote.

'No. 22. The Committee to have power to fill up all vacancies, but to report the same for confirmation at the next meeting of Council.

'No. 23 to stand as it is.

'No. 24. That every member of the Administrative Committee who proposes being absent for more than two meetings shall give due notice thereof, in order that the Committee may appoint a substitute or fill up the vacancy.

'No. 25 to stand as it is.

'No. 26. Omit the words following "of the Committee."

'Nos. 27, 28, 29 to stand as they are.

'No. 30. The Administrative Committee shall divide itself into four Sub-Committees, viz.: 1. Finance; 2. Mendicity; 3. District work; 4. Co-operation.'

[The following are the Bye-laws which it is proposed to change, as they at present stand:—

'21. The Administrative Committee shall consist of not fewer than nine members, and shall be elected annually within one month after the Annual Meeting, members being eligible for re-election. Any member of Council shall be at liberty to attend its meetings, and to vote.'

'22. All new representative members of Council shall be placed on this Committee, unless they have served upon it at some previous time, and their names shall be kept upon the list for at least three months, provided they continue members of Council.'

'24. If a member of the Administrative Committee has not attended for thirteen consecutive weeks, it shall not be necessary to send him notices when such are issued.'

'26. If no quorum be present at the time of meeting, any member present shall be at liberty to transact business, but all orders passed under such circumstances shall be specially confirmed at the next meeting of the Committee or of the Council, whichever may first take place.'

(3). Sir Charles Trevelyan to move—

'That the price of the Reporter be doubled, and that the size be increased to the extent required by the changes ordered by the Administrative Committee.'

(4). Mr. W. M. Wilkinson to move—

'That the Reporter be distributed gratis to all subscribers of not less than £1.'

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

At their meeting to-morrow (Thursday) the Administrative Committee will consider the statement submitted to Council by Sir Charles Trevelyan on the 31st ultimo.

THE ELEMENTARY EDUCATION BILL.

DAY INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

The 15th clause of the above Bill is as follows:—

'15. If a Secretary of State is satisfied that, owing to the circumstances of any class of population in any school district, an industrial school in which children are not lodged is necessary or expedient for the proper training and control of the children of such class, he may, in like manner as under "The Industrial Schools Act, 1866," certify any such industrial school in the neighbourhood of the said population to be a certified day industrial school.

'Any child authorised by "The Industrial Schools Act, 1866," or by this Act, to be sent to a certified industrial school, may, if the court before whom the child is brought think it expedient, be sent to a certified day industrial school, and may during the period specified in the order be there detained during such hours as may be authorised by the rules of the school approved by the said Secretary of State.

'A certified day industrial school shall be deemed to be a certified efficient school within the meaning of this Act.

'In the case of a day industrial school—

'(1) A prison authority within the meaning of "The Industrial Schools Act, 1866," and a school board shall respectively have the same powers in relation to a certified day industrial school as they have in relation to a certified industrial school; and

'(2) There may be contributed out of moneys provided by Parliament towards the custody, maintenance, and training of children sent by an order of a court to a certified day industrial school, such sums not exceeding one shilling per head per week, and on such conditions as a Secretary of State from time to time recommends; and

'(3) Where a court of summary jurisdiction orders a child to be sent to a certified day industrial school, the court shall also order the parent of such child, if liable to maintain him, to contribute to his maintenance and training in the school such sum not exceeding two shillings per week, as is named in the order; it shall be the duty of the local authority to obtain and enforce the said order, and every sum paid under the order shall be paid over to the local authority in aid of their expenses under this Act; if a parent is unable to pay the sum required by the said order to be paid he shall apply to the guardians, who, if satisfied of such inability, shall give the parent sufficient money to pay the said sum, or so much thereof as they consider him unable to pay, and the money so given shall be a separate charge upon the parish as provided by this Act; and

'(4) The managers of a certified day industrial school may, upon the request of a local authority and of the parent of a child, and upon the undertaking of the parent to pay towards the maintenance and training of such child such sum, not less than one shilling a week, as a Secretary of State from time to time fixes, receive such child into the school without an order of a court; and there may be contributed out of moneys provided by Parliament in respect of that child such sum, not exceeding sixpence a week, and on such conditions as a Secretary from time to time recommends.

'It shall be lawful for Her Majesty from time to time, by Order in Council, to apply to a certified day industrial school the provisions of "The Industrial Schools Act, 1866," and the Acts amending the same, with such modifications as appear to Her Majesty to be necessary or proper for adapting such provisions to a day industrial school, and bringing them into conformity with this section; and such order may provide that a child may be punished for an offence by being sent to a certified industrial in lieu of a certified reformatory school, or may otherwise mitigate the punishment imposed by the said Act.

'It shall be lawful for Her Majesty from time to time, by Order in Council, to revoke and vary any Order in Council made under this section.

'Every such Order shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one month after it is made if Parliament be then sitting, or, if not, within one month after the beginning of the then next session of Parliament, and while in force shall have effect as if it were enacted in this Act.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of July 1876 was 33,673, and 43,244 received outdoor relief, making a total of 76,917. This was a decrease of 316 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 6,363, 15,342, and 21,765 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 421. This was a decrease of 72 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 9 on the corresponding day of last year.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

Special Committee on Institutions for Idiots and Imbeciles and as Lunatics held its fifteenth meeting on Wednesday, July 26, at the Central Office. There were present: Dr. Brewer (in the chair), the Hon. C. H. Strutt; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B.; the Rev. H. I. Jones; Drs. G. W. Grabham, D. Hack Tuke, R. Boyd, Fletcher Beach, Langdon Down; Messrs. W. M. Wilkinson, W. Millard, and Sydney Turner; Doctor Joseph Lalor (Richmond Asylum, Dublin), Visitor; and S. Loch, Secretary.

Reports were read from the Foreign Office, transmitting documents relating to the education and care of Idiots and Imbeciles in Germany, France, and Norway; and from the Colonial Office, relating to the same in Jamaica.

A following resolution having been moved by Mr. Wilkinson in reference to the resolution which was passed, under the 3rd head of the 5th section, to the effect that families which cannot defray the entire cost in the maintenance of their children should be required to pay to the Guardians as their means may allow:—

‘Considering the great want which now exists of efficient training for the young, and of custodial institutions for adults, it would be desirable that persons able to pay the entire expense of their maintenance should be received into these institutions, on such payment by themselves or friends as the managers may approve.’

On which the ‘previous question’ was moved, and carried by seven votes to three.

The 11th section of the Agenda, entitled ‘New Legislation,’ was then discussed, and it was resolved:—

‘That the legislative provisions required for Idiots, Imbeciles, and as Lunatics should be consolidated in a single Act distinct from the provisions applicable to Dangerous Lunatics; but the details of such legislation should be left to the measures which may be actually adopted.’

It was then resolved that a Sub-Committee should be appointed to draw up a draft of the Report, consisting of the following Members:—Hon. C. H. Strutt, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B., Dr. Langdon Down, Dr. Grabham, Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, and Mr. Macgregor.

FOOD FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN.

Following is a report to the Council of the Charity Organisation on the Conference with the Industrial Schools Committee of the School Board, as to providing Food for School Children*:

Conference was held on the 9th April 1872, and consisted of four members from each of the following: The Poor Law Guardians, the Ragged School Union, the Ragged School Union, and the Charity Organisation Society, and several members of the School Board. Mr. Sydney Turner was also present.

Mr. Macgregor was in the chair, and opened the proceedings by a short address, and then read a paper which he had prepared, consisting of a statement of the several classes of children to whom the question of providing food applied, and of a series of questions which arose, and which put in a convenient form all the main points and difficulties, and concluded by a statement of food should be paid for by the parochial rate, by a general rate, by voluntary aid, or by a combination of these or other means.

Sydney Turner, who was understood to be present only in his capacity, and to express only his personal opinions, gave most valuable information as to the working of the industrial schools, and on the constantly increasing amount disbursed by the Treasury in order to maintain the children, whose total cost is £13 per annum each. He stated that in the assistance paid last year by the Treasury was £25,000, or about one-fifth of the number of the objects, if the same class were maintained, it might increase to £500,000 per annum. His opinion was, that there might be intermediate feeding day schools, and that the School Board would be the proper authority to maintain them, and to provide proper objects. The food, he thought, need not cost above 1½d. per child, with the school fees in addition, or, at all events, not above 2s. per week.

With the exception of Mr. Sydney Turner, nearly every other speaker was of opinion that it would be most unwise to create any new machinery to administer food or school relief, and that by law the Guardians should have the power and the requisite machinery for dealing with applicants for relief, and that they only were the proper persons to do what was required.

Warren Vernon, for St. George, Hanover Square, and several other Guardians for Marylebone, Paddington, &c., informed the Conference that with respect to the large class who are receiving outdoor relief, they make it their practice to insist on the production of weekly cards, signed by the schoolmasters, of the attendance of the children at school, and that if they found the attendance unsatisfactory, they would refuse the outdoor relief and compel the family to come into the house, when, of course, the children would be sent to the Union schools. It seemed to be a surprise to Mr. Sydney Turner and to others that so easy a means of compulsory education, and of providing the necessary food by means of the outdoor relief afforded to the parents, was already in actual operation in several of the most important Unions of the Metropolis, and the hope was expressed that through the example thus afforded, and the inspection of the Poor-law Authorities, backed by public opinion, the children of all the large class which is in receipt of outdoor relief would thus be easily brought within the operation of the School Board instruction.

‘It was also generally thought that instead of the Guardians paying the school fees direct under Denison’s Act, they should encourage the rather more independent mode, of paying a similar sum as additional out relief to the parents, in order that they might pay the school fees themselves. The Guardians would thus seem to have in their own hands the whole question of school fees and necessary food for all who are in receipt of outdoor relief, and the duty should be left wholly with them, without the interference of charity in any form.’

‘Taking it that all these children are thus provided for, there would only remain the children of those who refused to receive or to apply for relief, and those children without parents or guardians, who are making a home in the streets.’

‘Hitherto it has been impossible to deal with these two classes of children, because the Guardians have no power to compel them to receive relief, and thus to bring them within their authority, neither have they power to take up the gutter children, and detain them for school and other purposes.’

‘The School Board now, however, has the power of compelling, by proceedings against the parents, both classes of children to attend schools, and it was thought it would be desirable that the Guardians should be empowered, under magisterial supervision and order, to take hold of these children in separate schools where food would be provided, and that in case of their non-attendance they should be liable to detention in the Industrial Schools, which would thus operate as the ultimate compulsory school, and deter the children from neglecting their attendance in the Guardians’ schools.’

‘It was recommended that all the Union schools should be more of an industrial kind than at present. The bringing out of a plan of apparently so easy accomplishment, and with so little additional legislative powers to be asked for, appeared to be very satisfactory, as laying a basis for the settlement of one of the most difficult questions for both the School Board and the Guardians. If it be capable of being carried out, it would open great facilities in the application of other adjuncts—such as cooking-kitchens attached to all the Board schools, where meals, wholesome and well cooked, and at a price to cover the cost, should be provided for all to purchase them.’

‘The boarding-out system would be easy of application to children without parents. Indeed, the raw material, being once brought under authority, and with power of detention, might be manipulated in any way most likely to reclaim the lowest class, for its own and the general good.’

‘The most cordial thanks are due to the School Board and to Mr. Macgregor for calling together the Conference, and for so earnestly taking part in it.’

The following arrangements, made by the Edinburgh Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor with the School Board, for the feeding and clothing of destitute school children, are taken from the 4th page of the last report of the Association:—

‘1. That the feeding of children be confined to those attending schools under Government inspection. 2. That the Association make arrangements with the Night Asylum, or such other places as may be required, for giving a breakfast and dinner to such children as may be approved by a Joint Committee of the School Board and the Association. 3. That the food given be porridge and milk, or porridge and treacle, for breakfast; and bread and soup for dinner. 4. That the teachers be furnished with a list of children attending their schools authorised to be fed; and also with brass tickets, which they shall issue to such of these children as are in attendance, authorising each to receive a breakfast or dinner. Such tickets to be issued only to children marked as present in the school. 5. That if a child is absent on two days in any week without proper excuse, no ticket shall be issued, and the master shall report to the School Board. 6. That the list of those receiving food be revised monthly by a Joint Committee, to be appointed from time to time by the School Board and the Association, who shall have power from time to time to alter these details. 7. That as these meals will be attended by children of all denominations, it is necessary that the religious services be restricted to a grace before and a thanksgiving after the meals.’

giving after food. On the subject of clothing, Dr. Wood reported to the Sub-Committee that the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor are aware that the distribution of clothes to necessitous persons, whether children or adults, is a kind of charity very liable to be abused. They, however, undertake to put any really necessitous children in a state to attend school; it being distinctly understood that any articles of clothing supplied be only lent, and that parents or others pawning them will be liable to prosecution for theft.

CASE OF CHARLOTTE HAMMOND.

The following, which is taken from the West Middlesex Advertiser of the 22nd of July, is part of the debate at the St. George's Union on the 19th of that month, on the reading of the letter (which appeared in our last number) from the Local Government Board on the case of Charlotte Hammond.

After the letter had been read, Col. Freemantle said he hoped they would never hear the end of Charlotte Hammond's case; he hoped it would be kept in mind, as it showed the demoralisation and degradation caused by the lax administration of the Poor Law under the sanction of an unwise public opinion. What was the condition of this pauper family? According to their own statements, all that Hammond earned over £1 a week he considered his own, and not counting the private money of the father, they had £150 a year to start with. A family earning at least that fell on the parish when the mother was on her death-bed! That was not the worst part of it. Public opinion was actually on the side of the family, and the Guardians could not shut their eyes to the fact that it was against them. He could hardly believe his eyes when he read an article in the Daily News, which was usually one of the most intelligent papers, admitting the earnings of the family, and then going into a long story as to whether the relieving officer and doctor were right. What could this have to do with it, if the family were earning £150 a year? Public opinion was evidently in favour of a lax administration of the Poor Law, and unless Guardians could show the public that this added to the difficulty of properly administering it, they would always be open to such attacks. The coroner's jury heard the evidence on oath, and they actually rejected the testimony that showed there was money enough, and all they wanted was to censure the relieving officer and the Guardians. They did not or would not know that it was the bounden duty of the poor to support their own relations if they could do so. . . . Having alluded to the suppression of one part of the evidence by the reporters, and to the leading articles that had appeared in the papers, he said, that was not the worst part of it, for one of their own body—he should be sorry to say anything disrespectful, but one of themselves—when the first meeting on the subject was held, got up and said that if they were going to give orders for admission to the workhouse in the way they had done, he would no longer remain a member of the Board. That was extremely important; he hoped that member did not carry the opinion of the majority, or anyone else, but it was very important that one Guardian should have said such a thing, for nine people out of ten outside approved of what he said, and probably thought he was the best Guardian of the lot. If the family had £150 or £200 a year, and were to be relieved, where was outdoor relief to stop—at £300, £400, or what? That was the practical point. If outdoor relief was to be given in that sort of way, the ratepayers would soon feel it. And there were many ratepayers who were poor, and miserably poor too. It was a most disagreeable duty for him, as a magistrate at the East-end of London, to have widows and cripples brought before him, in order that the collector might sell them up for taxes. To take the money from these poor wretches and squander it was a most disgraceful thing (hear, hear), and it was infinitely worse than throwing it into the Thames, because then it would do no harm. But with many people who were earning good wages it was the custom, when sickness or old age came, to fly to the parish. The system had taught them to rush off to the relieving officer for outdoor relief. He had always been in favour of restricting the outdoor relief, but the Guardians could not restrict it unless public opinion helped them. He hoped members of Parliament would consider it when questions of outdoor relief came on. While this degraded state continued the poor could not be improved, and neither schools nor anything else would give the people that self-respect and self-reliance which they ought to possess.—Sir Rutherford Alcock said he had lived in many countries, and he had no hesitation in saying that as far as his experience went, the labouring poor of England, though as laborious as the Chinese, were the most improvident and the most intemperate race on the face of the globe. They must be shown that it was incumbent on them to do their part when sickness occurred. The Guardians ought seriously to consider whether in such cases as that under consideration, they should not insist on the workhouse, and then it would be said that people were left to die, or waive the test—a most important and valuable test—and in all such cases of doubt give outdoor relief. He should be glad if any member of the Board could throw any light on this, which to his mind was the most complicated problem of the Poor-Law.

. . . .—Mr. F. Morris believed that the shutting up of free dispensaries had much to do with a certain class of pauperism. It was absurd to suppose that a man earning 30s. a week, and having to keep a wife and children, could afford to pay the doctor's fees. Perhaps if there had been a dispensary in the neighbourhood the man Hammond would have gone there, and the Guardians would not have heard of the case. Sir Rutherford Alcock wished it to be known that there was a free dispensary within a few hundred yards. The motion for reference to the Committee was then carried unanimously. Mr. Z. D. Berry said he felt bound to move a resolution with the consent of his colleagues, because he did not think a moment ought to be lost. It was, that the Local Government Board be written to, requesting that Mr. Fenton should be removed from his office in consequence of his adverse mode of acting with the proceedings of the Relief Committee, and also because of his conduct as shown by the letter received from the Local Government Board.

TRUE CHARITY BENEFICENT AS WELL AS BENEVOLENT.

The following is an extract from a paper recently written by Miss Octavia Hill:—

'Again, we have got our population into a state of semi-pauperism, from which they cannot be raised by individuals and societies merely abstaining from gifts, and Guardians withdrawing out-relief. We have accustomed them to trust to external help, and only by most patient individual care shall we raise them. Neither can we persuade donors unaccustomed to study the future results of their acts to abstain from distinctly unwise charity unless we are among them—unless we are ready, too, to consider with them about each human soul, which is to them and to us inexpressibly precious, what is, at the moment, the wise thing to do. Gentlemen, have you any idea how much this work needs doing in the poor districts of London? The Charity Organisation Society came forward, now some years ago, to try to get the donors of London to meet and consider this question in detail in every district in London. It undertook to look carefully into all cases brought to its offices, and to report the results of its inquiries. It did not undertake to make additional gifts except where they might secure enduring benefit; but it said to the donors, "Associate yourselves; relieve after due thought, after investigation, and in conjunction one with another." That Society has made great way; that Society has established offices in every district; and has provided an investigating machinery of inexpressible value of which every Londoner may avail himself. But, I ask, where are the donors? Where are the representatives of the various relieving agencies? the clergy? the district visitors? There are, of course, a certain number who have co-operated heartily; but, as a rule, I am forced to reply very mournfully, after all these years, they are, for the most part, going on with their ill-considered relief very much the same, not using the machinery, and reproaching the Charity Organisation Society that it is not relieving largely, and that it is not composed of themselves! Now, till these relieving agencies come in and take their share, and give their gentler tone to the somewhat dry machinery, are these offices to be places where mere routine business is done by an agent who cannot have much individual care for the applicants? Or is there to be anyone to watch over each applicant with real charity, questioning him gently, thinking for him sympathetically, seeking for him such help as will be really helpful? In some offices in the poor districts we have found honorary secretaries to do this, and splendid work it has been. Wherever such help has been forthcoming the poor have been well served, and the old-fashioned donors have been some measure won to wiser courses of action. But many more such honorary secretaries are needed, and that imperatively and immediately. Are there no men of leisure among you, with intellect and heart, who will come forward? I have known no such urgent need as this in the many years I have spent face to face with the poor since I came to London, a little girl of eleven years old—the need of advice, of sympathy, of thoughtful decision for poor man after poor man as he comes up to our offices at a crisis in his life.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 189.

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 12, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

NOTICES.

The next meeting of Council will be held on Monday the 23rd instant, at 3 p.m.

District Committees are reminded that their Annual Reports should be made up to September 30, and should be issued as early in November as possible.

The Stepney Committee have removed their offices to 3 Arbour Cottages, Arbour Street East, Commercial Road, E.

The Shoreditch Committee will hold their Annual General Meeting on October 13.

The Rev. J. Johnson has been elected one of the representatives of the St. Olave's Committee.

Captain Wallack has been appointed Acting Hon. Secretary of the St. George's (Hanover Square) Committee during the absence of the Hon. R. C. Moreton.

The South Lambeth Sub-Committee of the Lambeth Committee is now formed into a separate Committee, called the Brixton Committee. The honorary officers of the Committee are Mr. J. T. Hart, Treasurer; Mr. P. E. Nicholson and Rev. Robert Duke, Secretaries. The offices of the Committee are 21 Elizabeth Street, Cornwall Road, Brixton.

There is now at the Central Office an In-patient's Letter for the Hospital for Consumption at Brompton.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending September 30 the receipts had been £10. 3s. for the General Fund, and £200 for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £308. 2s. 10d. and £215. 16s. 1d. respectively.

GRANTS.—That they had made the following Grants during the recess: Islington, £10; Shoreditch, £56; Stepney, £105; Mile End, £23; Poplar, £105; St. Saviour's, £25; Newington, £30.

'WHITE SLAVES.'—A letter had been written to the Times on the subject of the 'Italian kidnappers,' and the Secretary reported that a special meeting would be held at 3 P.M. on Wednesday next, the 11th instant, to consider the best means of checking the traffic.

The Secretary drew the attention of representatives of District Committees to the following extract from a letter dated May 21, 1875, from Miss Selwyn, Sandwell, near Birmingham:—

'If, therefore, any deserving cases come before you of children above 12, deprived of both parents, we will gladly admit every year two, a boy and a girl, free, and others on our reduced terms of 4s. weekly for girls and 5s. for boys.'

He also mentioned a letter received from Miss M. J. Gregory, giving particulars of an orphanage for the daughters of clergymen or professional men at Vauxhall. The children were taken in at the ages of from 12 to 14; they were trained to get a livelihood as pupil-teachers or otherwise.

He also read the following extract from the rules of the Royal Alfred Aged Merchant Seamen's Institution, Belvedere, Kent:—

'The Committee having the right, at all elections, of nominating one-fifth of the number to be admitted, either into the House or for an Out-Pension, will exercise it by giving their nominations to those men who appear to them to be the most deserving of the Candidates for the Charity.'

He read part also of a letter from the Refuge of the Good Shepherd, East End, Finchley, N., a refuge certified by Government to receive convict women (Roman Catholics) during the last nine months of their penal servitude. Freed prisoners would also be received, and if they remained a year, they would, if found deserving, be recommended to service or employment.

THE MEETINGS OF COUNCIL.

Mr. J. R. Hollond moved—

'That Bye-law No. 1 be amended as follows:—

'The Council shall meet on the first Monday in every month (except August and September) at 3 P.M., and on any other day and at any other hour to which the Council may, for special reasons, adjourn.

'Exception.—If the first Monday in the month shall fall on a bank holiday, the Council shall meet on the next Monday following.

'In case of emergency, the Administrative Committee, on the requisition of a District Committee or at its own discretion, shall have power to summon (through the Reporter) a special meeting of Council to discuss a particular subject.'

He said that while it was questionable whether so important a motion should be dealt with by Council at the first meeting of the session, yet the subject of his motion had been discussed on the 24th of January last, and the minds of members had by that discussion been prepared for the change he proposed. This change implied economy, not by a decrease in the expenditure of money, but, as he believed, by a more profitable investment of it. Times had changed since the Council was first instituted. The Society had then to decide on principles and methods of work: for this the machinery of the Council was most suitable. Now the principles were decided, and the strength of the Society must centre in its executive: administration must take the place of discussion. The work of the Society was now, generally speaking, threefold: the reform of existing charities, the suppression of mendicity, and the improvement of the District Committees. This division included many large subjects, such as the questions brought to the notice of Council by Mr. Wilkinson, the action of the Medical Charities, the detailed work of District Committees. The Society should now aim at giving practical effect to its principles in questions of this nature. Its labours would thus have a more direct and more 'telling' effect, and the work of its paid staff would be turned to the best account.

The following were some of the objections raised to his motion: Arrangements and changes affecting District Committees would, if advocated by Council, a body representative of the District Committees, be likely to gain a readier assent from the District Committees. To this he would answer that the last clause of his motion, vesting in the Administrative Committee, on the requisition of a District Committee, the right to summon special meetings, was a sufficient guarantee that in important cases the opinion of the whole Society would be obtained by the vote of Council. Again, it was said the Council was a parliament of charity. This was true in a sense; but there was a tendency to debate, not questions of general interest, but the affairs of the Society. It was also said that the debates of Council were valuable as means of educating the members of the Society. In reply to this, he must state his opinion that a really good discussion on an important subject once a month would be infinitely more suitable for this purpose. At the same time, should any questions of importance require long and full discussion, the Council were able to adjourn the debate from week to week.

Major FitzRoy seconded the motion. The use of a weekly Council meeting had now, as Mr. Hollond stated, passed away; and it would be sufficient that, as a rule, only one meeting of Council should be held in each month, other meetings being convened when, on account of the business of the Council, they were necessary. Weekly meetings, he believed, made work; while motions were brought up for discussion without a notice long enough to enable any but the mover to acquire sufficient information on the various bearings of the subject of debate. Most members were so busy that they found it difficult to attend both on Mondays at the Council and on Thursdays at the Administrative Committee.

Mr. C. E. Maurice considered the advantage of the weekly meetings of Council was to be found, not in the discussion of special problems, but in the interchange of experiences and in the questions that were asked at Council with a view to meeting new and occasional difficulties.

After a few words from Mr. W. Bevan, Mr. S. Fuller, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Major Prendergast, Mr. H. H. Hill, and others, Mr. Hollond obtained leave to withdraw his motion and reintroduce it on the 6th of November.

The remaining notices of motion on the paper were postponed, and, on the motion of Mr. Hollond, seconded by Mr. Bevan, it was resolved—

'That the Council adjourn to Monday, October 23.'

The Council then adjourned.

The following contributions were received from July 29 to October 7, 1876:—Donations: Messrs. Baring Bros., £100; Sir Graham Briggs, Bart., £5; Messrs. BOARDING-OUT.—The following is taken from a report of a Drawing-room Conference on Boarding-out Pauper Children, published by Sir Charles Trevelyan in June last:—“A crucial test of the soundness of the boarding-out principle is the light in which it is regarded by the relatives of the child; for although best for the child, this system is least attractive to the relatives. Under the “aggregate school” system the poor see a vast institution, in which the children are dressed in uniform, and the whole managed on a very expensive scale. . . . But when the children are put out as boarders it is a totally different thing, for the children remain in the face of day, and their presence in the homes of other persons of the class from which they came is a constant protest against their desertion and abandonment; and it must be said for our poor people that, corrupted as they have been by the Poor Law, they are not, after all, sunk so low as to permit their children to be entrusted to their equals. This, then, is at the bottom of this singular problem: the poor will not allow their children to be boarded-out in their own class, though they are quite willing to hand them over to large aggregate schools to be brought up in the uniform of an institution.”

It appears from the Fifth Annual Report of the Local Government Board, that since the General Boarding-out Order of the 25th November 1870, 66 Boarding-out Committees have been formed; that, of these, 33 were in operation in 1875; and that the number of children boarded-out were 287 in that year as compared with 256 in 1874.

DORSET MENDICITY SOCIETY.—The number of vagrant admissions to the thirteen unions of Dorset during the quarter ending 30th June last, amounted to 661, being an increase of 76 admissions as compared with the corresponding quarter of last year, and a decrease of 71 per cent. as compared with the same quarter of 1869—the year previous to the formation of the Society.

CHARGE OF ILLEGAL PAWNING IN HACKNEY.

Articles and correspondence regarding the following case appeared, during the recess, in several of the papers.

On August 9, Matilda Trueman, of Fann Place, Homerton, a laundress, was charged before Mr. Bushby, at the Worship Street Police Court, with pawning some shirts entrusted to her to wash.

The woman admitted that she had pawned the shirts, and in her defence made a statement to the following effect:

“She was a widow left with three children, and during the last three years supported herself and them by washing and charring. On Saturday, August 12, her landlady put the brokers into her rooms for rent due, 9s. 6d. The brokers made a further charge of 6s. 6d. for their costs, and told her if she paid that money they would go out and give her another week. The shirts in question were in her possession then, and to get rid of the man in possession she pledged them for 6s. She paid the man out, and had 6d. left for food for her children. On the following Thursday the man came again, asked for the rent due, and when she could not pay it, said that the brokers would be in again. On Friday she came to this court for advice and assistance from the poor-box. It is the practice at this court to refer all cases to the Charity Organisation Society, and the woman was referred accordingly. She went with her ticket to the Town Hall, Hackney. She was sent from there with a letter to one of the committee of the Society. Having tramped to his place, he being out, she was directed to Mr. Blatch, the letter stating her case as “urgent and deserving.” Mr. Blatch was out, and for a fourth time she was directed to someone else—Mr. Thompson, of Shepherd's Lane, Homerton. Again she was unsuccessful, Mr. Thompson being out; and her fifth reference was to Mr. Miller, M.D. He told her he could do nothing for her, but gave her the address of the relieving officer of her parish. It was then eight o'clock at night, and the woman had been walking about all day. Her children were at home, and she went to the relieving officer, but he, too, proved to be out. Then she returned home.

On Saturday morning she went again to Mr. Thompson, and saw him. She was then told to get a letter as to her respectability and poverty; after that she got a letter to go before the Board of Guardians of the parish on Monday. She went on Saturday night again to Mr. Blatch, and he gave her 1s. 6d. to get food and assist her over Monday, and a note to go before the committee of the Charity Organisation Society. On Monday she was apprehended for the pledging, and she said that she had intended, if the committee granted her assistance, to have redeemed the articles.

The report goes on to say:

'The prisoner handed to the magistrate letters bearing out her statement, and giving her the character of an honest, industrious, and hardworking woman.

'Mr. Bushby said that the case was a painful one, and deserving the deepest sympathy. She had, however, broken the law, and for that must pay a fine of 1s., and 6s., the amount of the pawning.

'The prisoner, who cried all through the hearing of the case, was led from the dock to the cells, but presently a gentleman in court paid the money and released the woman.'—Daily News, August 23.

In the Times of August 28, it was stated that subscriptions amounting to upwards of £27 had been sent to the magistrate for the woman, and handed to her. It also appeared that on the previous Saturday, August 26, the agent of the Hackney Committee attended at the Police Court, and made statements showing that the case was of a most unsatisfactory character. He was, however, stopped by Mr. Bushby, who invited the Society, for whose work he expressed great respect, to make in the newspapers any explanation they thought necessary, and, while repeating his favourable opinion of the case, he said that he thought the subscriptions should now be discontinued.

On August 31 and on subsequent days the following letter from the Rev. L. E. Shelford, Hon. Sec. of the Hackney Committee, appeared in several of the daily papers:—

'To the Editor of the Times.

'SIR,—With reference to a case which has provoked a good deal of comment unfavourable to this Society—I mean that of the laundress who was charged last week at the Worship Street Police Court with pawning shirts in order to raise money to pay the broker who had distrained her furniture, and who, it was alleged, had been neglected by the officers of this Society—I have to ask that publicity may be given to the following facts:—The woman was not sent by us to the various persons on whom she called in vain. When she made her first application at our office she was referred to one gentleman, and to one only, who, as visitor of the district in which she resided, has power to give immediate relief, as far as regards food, to those who are in urgent need. This gentleman happens in this instance to be the vicar of her parish, and his house is close to that where she lived. Had she gone to him again after finding him out the first time she called, she would have received the same assistance as was afterwards given by him, when, disappointed in the result of her applications elsewhere, she returned to his house. It was her own doing only that she spent a whole day in going about from one guardian to another. She was not sent by us, and we cannot accept the blame which has been imputed to us in this respect. No more was seen of her at our office for three days, when she again called about the saving of her furniture. At this time the week had not elapsed which the law requires before the sale could be effected. We were informed that the broker was not in possession, and that the furniture had not been removed, but of course we were not told of the means she had adopted to pay out the broker. There was, therefore, time to bring the matter before the committee which met on the following day, when a sum of money was instantly voted sufficient to meet all the expense which had been incurred, and to secure the goods. This action was taken before the committee had any idea of the charge which had been brought against the applicant, and of the statements at the police court. The money was paid the next day in ample time to meet the necessities of the case. It must be obvious to all except the prejudiced that, while we can give instructions to our visitors and agent to grant immediate relief where there is danger of starvation, we cannot allow them to give away considerable sums, or, at least, what are considerable in relation to the limited funds at our command, without the sanction of the committee. What I maintain in this case is that there was no further delay than was absolutely necessary, and that, but for the difficulties in which the woman had involved herself by the pawning of the shirts, the help that was given would have reached her in time.

'I wish that I could stop here; but, as a good deal of commiseration has naturally been excited by the report in the newspapers, I am obliged to add some further facts which have come to our knowledge. The applicant stated at our office that she had no friends able to assist her. It appears, however, that she has several relatives in good circumstances, living in this parish, who assert that they have already helped her, and would do so again if they were satisfied with her character and conduct. One of the children was at one time maintained by a relative, but was sent home in consequence of the mother's behaviour. Further, the sum of £70, part of the bequest of a deceased relative, has been paid to her and spent within the last eighteen months. The remainder of the money is in the hands of trustees for the benefit of the children. On the whole, I am obliged to express my conviction that the pity which this case has excited is misplaced, and that those who have been so ready to attack the Charity Organisation Society, as well as the benevolent persons who have sent money to the magistrate for this woman, have been led astray by a plausible tale which will not bear examination. I have refrained from writing sooner, in order to obtain the opinion of the committee, which has met to-day, and authorised me to send this statement of facts.

'I am yours, &c., L. E. SHELFORD, Hon. Sec.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of September 1876 was 35,104, and 42,503 received outdoor relief, making a total of 77,607. This was a decrease of 275 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 4,032, 13,650, and 20,132 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 775. This was an increase of 271 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 408 on the corresponding day of last year.

THE Charity Organisation Reporter.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 190.

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 19, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

NOTICES.

The next meeting of Council will be held on Monday the 23rd instant, at 3 p.m.

The St. George-in-the-East Committee will, on and after the 18th instant, meet on Wednesdays, at 11.30, instead of on Mondays.

The Newington Committee will meet in future at 3 p.m. on Tuesdays.

District Committees are reminded that their Annual Reports should be made up to September 30, and should be issued as early in November as possible.

In order to carry out the following resolution of Council, dated July 3, 1876, a Balance-sheet Form and an Estimate Form will be sent this week to the District Committees—

That within a month after the 30th September of each year, estimates of the probable expenses of each Committee for the ensuing year, together with the balance-sheet for the past year, be sent to the Secretary of the Council, to be laid before the Quarterly Finance Sub-Committee, in order that they may as soon as possible have the means of framing the estimates for the District Committee Aid Fund.

It is requested that these Forms may be filled up and sent to the Central Office as early as convenient before November 1st.

YOUNG ENGLISHWOMEN ABROAD.—The following letter has been received from the British Charitable Fund, 17 Rue des Petits Carmes, Bruxelles:—

'Sir,—At our recent annual meeting several startling facts were disclosed, showing that increasing numbers of young English females are allured to Belgium by deceptive representations.

'Relying on promises of remunerative employment, attracted moreover by the novelty of visiting a foreign land, they often fall into snares prepared for their ruin by established traders in vice. Others engaged for the theatres are often abandoned to want and temptation, and are sometimes rescued and sent home by this Committee.

'We think it desirable that this evil should be more generally known, in order to impress on parties interested the necessity of caution. No offer, however specious, ought to be accepted without due investigation, and a written agreement providing for the payment of the return journey in case of a termination of the engagement. This alone, however, is but a slight security against the practised agents employed in this commerce.

'We look to the Press as the chief means of warning against this danger. Its voice cannot be raised in a better cause. We therefore appeal to you in full confidence that you will give to this matter the publicity of your columns, and the benefit of your remarks.

'I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
 '[for the Committee of the British Charitable Fund]
 'H. BARRON, H.B.M. Chargé d'Affaires.'

The Secretary would be glad to receive any letters for the In-patient Departments of Hospitals not mentioned above, and for Convalescent Homes.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending October 7 the receipts had been £74. 1s. for the General Fund, and 10s. 6d. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two Funds on that day had been £346. 12s. 11d. and £86. 6s. 7d. respectively.

ESTIMATES.—The Secretary was instructed to issue to District Committees a balance-sheet form for 1875-6, and an estimate form for 1876-7, to be filled up and returned to the Central Office, in accordance with the resolution of Council of July 3, 1876.

'WHITE SLAVES.'—Two meetings have been held to consider the best means of checking the traffic in Italian Children. At the first, evidence was submitted as to the nature and extent of the evils; at the subsequent meeting, held on Saturday the 14th instant, at 11.30 A.M., some preliminary measures for the suppression of the traffic were determined upon. The following gentlemen, amongst others, were present:—Mr. C. E. Maurice, Major Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Dr. Pius Melia, Signor Luciano, the Secretary of the Italian Beneficent Society, Mr. Negretti, and Mr. D. Lama.

The following contributions were received during the week ending Saturday, October 14, 1876:—Donations: J. Hall, Esq., 10s.; Rev. J. E. N. Molesworth, £2. 2s.; Messrs. Wright Bros., 10s. 6d.—Annual: H. Brown, Esq., £5; E. Fox, Esq., £2. 2s.

POOR-LAW CONFERENCES.

RESTRICTIONS ON OUT-DOOR RELIEF.

The following are extracts from the report of the Sixth Annual Conference for West Midland District, held at Great Malvern on the 10th May last:—

The Rev. H. A. Harvey said of 'convalescents' and of 'the aged and infirm,' in a paper read by him to the Conference: 'We will suppose that a man has been a fit object for out-door relief during serious illness; and that he has become able to the amount of doing some work. It may be said—"Why, of course, you will give him a reduced amount of relief—continue his relief on a smaller scale till he is thoroughly able." But does not the law say, "No"?—Is not this relief in aid of wages?—for no such thing as relief in aid of full wages can possibly be contemplated. Then let us take, next, the case of aged and infirm people, whom to keep in forced idleness as a condition of their receiving relief, when they could just do a little, even if it was only to keep themselves occupied and amused, and the remuneration was a mere trifle, would be obviously cruel as well as unwise. Now, the variety of practice in meeting these cases (and they form a very large portion of out-door paupers) must be very great, in proportion to the very varying opinions on any question so undefinable. "Just a little," and "odd jobs," and "partial," though chronic, "infirmity," are terms which admit of any extension. What is generally done, I suppose, is to grant some paltry allowance, whereby, in conjunction with the trifles picked up, an existence is maintained—bare enough to make the recipients eloquent exponents of their own pitiable condition, and those who listen to these itinerant preachers of dissatisfaction virtuously indignant at the hard-heartedness of the guardians. In looking at either of these cases, I cannot but think, for my own part, that nothing will ever be done to treat them satisfactorily, till a system of co-operation is established between the administrators of the Poor-law and Charity, whether public or private. If Charity Organisation Societies were more general, and the managers of these and the Boards of Guardians could be brought into correspondence, much of the difficulty we feel, and many of the evils we deplore, would be removed. A distinct sphere of action which can, with a little pains and thought, be clearly established between the two, should be recognised on both sides, and a method of co-operation established. The administrators of Poor-law and the various distributors of Charitable Assistance should not be shy of one another, but act in harmony and with mutual understanding. The repression of pauperism and improvidence, which is the object of legislative enactments, might then be attained, while acts of charity and mercy might be exercised in such a manner as to further, rather than, as now too often is the case, to hinder and frustrate that object.'

The Rev. W. Lea said that 'against the system of out-door relief a very strong feeling was growing up in the present day. The items which have led to the prevalence of this feeling among those who have considered the subject, I suppose are some one or other of these: (1) The present advanced rate of wages in every kind of labour enables working-men to provide for themselves, if they are so inclined, or their children to help to provide for them, under all the accidents of life, and in old age; (2) The example of some few Unions, Atcham for instance, in which out-door relief is almost unknown, and at the same time the example of Ireland, where in many parts there is no out-door relief, and where, in consequence, the ratio of paupers to the population is only one in 72 instead of one in 22, as in England; (3) And lastly, and, from my own point of view, the most important consideration, that out-door relief is a premium on improvidence, and that as long as it is continued, we cannot expect to see those habits of thrift and providence and self-reliance, on which the strength of a nation depends, prevalent in this country.' His conclusion was that some easier way of providing for old age should be devised for the class which had hitherto been depending on parish relief; so that, if out-door relief should, as was not improbable, be withdrawn or diminished, they might be able to provide for themselves on terms within their means, and not be obliged to go into the house. 'How this provision is to be made, on what terms, and by what agencies, is a question which, I take it, has engaged the attention of all who have looked into the subject from the two opposite points of view—from the ratepayers' and from the recipients' position. That it should be provided is only fair to both parties concerned, and consequently various suggestions have been made with a view to its practical solution. Some have proposed that the expenses of the Union houses should be thrown on the Consolidated Fund, and the cost of out-door pay remain with the Unions as before, thinking that if this system were adopted, the granting of out-door relief would be more jealously watched; and if the out-door relief were paid by the parish only, this perhaps might be the case, but the shoulders of the Union are broad. Others have propounded the idea of an universal system of insurance, by which every person shall be obliged to insure for a small annuity after a certain age. The effect of this would be that a large number would be, as it were, honorary members, and never claim their annuity, and their share consequently would be available for those who did require it. Another suggestion has found favour with several Boards of Guardians, and the Luton Board have circulated it, in the form of a petition to the Government, in the following terms: "That the difficulties connected with the question of out-door relief would be materially diminished if an institution were established for insurance against sickness and superannuation, on a plan suitable to the requirements of the labouring classes, under Government guarantee." However desirable this may sound, I suppose all who have had anything to do with the working of clubs would see the weak point of it at once. It would be almost impossible to have an efficient supervision of sick pay; and unless this is zealously watched, it is apt to exceed all calculations, and so produce the bankruptcy of a society. In a club of this kind, the annual loss would probably be so large that Parliament would never continue to sanction it. At the same time, the idea of a club on a national security seems to be a step in the right direction, only on too large a scale. If it is to be carried out efficiently, it must be worked out in a smaller area, over which a strict supervision can be exercised—say, for instance, in individual Unions; and I do not see why the Local Government Board may not devise a scheme to be worked on this system, by which those who wish to insure for sick pay and superannuation pension may purchase it from their own Union, on a scale issued by the Local Government Board, receiving in return for their payments an allowance in sickness, a pension when past work, with the attendance of the parish doctor, and medicine for the duration of life, and this under supervision of the relieving officer and the Board. This too might be granted on easier terms than a strict calculation of averages would justify; and then, after a certain period, out-door pay might be withdrawn, without much hardship being involved, and those who have not cared to make this or some other provision for themselves be received into the House.'

After some discussion, a series of resolutions, restricting the Prohibitory Order of the 21st December 1844, were passed.

INCREASE OF PAUPERISM.—It is worthy of note that, from a comparison of the returns of paupers in Metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of October, 1876, with the returns for the corresponding week of 1875, it appears that the number of paupers has increased in the following Unions. The numbers are:—Chelsea, 1,167, as against 1,096 in the corresponding week of 1875; St. Giles', 1,796, as against 1,606; Holborn, 1,108, as against 1,045. In the East District, Shoreditch has 1,853, as against 1,812; Whitechapel, 1,244, as against 1,239; St. George's-in-the-East, 1,309, as against 1,275; Mile End Old Town, 1,229, as against 1,150. In the South District, St. Saviour's has 5,085, as against 5,038; St. Olave's, 3,478, as against 3,317; Woolwich, 2,755, as against 2,672. At Chelsea there has been a decrease of £2. 17s. 3½d. in the amount spent for outdoor relief, but an increase of 41 persons receiving it. While at Kensington there has been, by comparison with the corresponding fortnight of last year, a decrease of £75. 7s. 10d. in the amount spent in outdoor relief—the largest decrease yet recorded.'

SCHOOL BOARD CASES.

The following are some typical cases of the action of the District Committees of the Society in dealing with School Board cases during the present year:—

(1) St. Pancras, South. Case 1,395:—

This case had been previously known to the Committee, and had been assisted by it between two and three years before. When it was referred as a School Board case, the family consisted of a widow with nine children, the three eldest of whom were daughters in service, but not earning enough to assist their mother much. One girl of 14 was in an orphanage. The mother and her five remaining children, aged 16, 12½, 10, 5, and 3, were all living in one small room, almost entirely dependent on the earnings of the one aged 16, a boy who gained 9s. a week. The ill-health of the mother prevented her going out to work. Nearly everything the family possessed was pawned, and, though their distress was very great, they had never applied for parish relief. The Committee placed the girl aged 12½ in a Training Home for Young Servants, from whence, when she is 13, she will be put into a situation. The girl of 10 they tried to place in a school, but her health not being sufficiently good to pass the medical examination required, she was sent to a sea-side Convalescent Home for three months, as a lengthened stay at the sea-side was said to be the only thing to prevent her becoming a permanent invalid. The child of 5 was enabled to attend school. Sufficient things were redeemed from pawn to restore the family to comparative comfort, and some needlework obtained for the mother, who was thus enabled to add a few shillings to the weekly income.

(2) St. Pancras, South. Case 3,235:—

When this case came under the notice of the Committee, the husband, a shoemaker by trade, who had been some time out of work, had left his wife and children, and had not been heard of for some weeks. The family then at home consisted of the mother and eight children, all sleeping in one room. The eldest girl, aged 19, worked during the day at a dressmaker's, and earned 12s. a week, which then formed the chief support of the family. She was furnished with a necessary change of clothes, and arrangements were made for her to sleep at her employer's. The third, a girl of 15, in service, had previously returned home at night; she was also provided with what was necessary, and afterwards slept at her employer's. The fourth, a girl aged 13, was sent to a Servants' Training Home, and then given clothes and provided with a situation. Three younger children were supplied with boots and clothing to attend school. Employment for a few hours each day was found for the mother as office cleaner at 10s. a week. The husband afterwards obtained work, and returned home.

(3) St. George's, East. Case 431:—

The applicant was formerly a numerical printer. His former employer stated that his earnings were 15s. a week, and that he was a respectable, steady workman. They had had, however, a disagreement about the price of his work. He belonged to no club, but was 'worthy master' of his temperance lodge. His wife earned about 2s. a week, and there were three children, aged 6, 4, and 1 respectively. The two elder went to the Board School, when they had clothes. In January he made his first application, but, as he was unable to obtain work, his case came before the Committee again in May. It then appeared that, unless he was immediately and adequately helped, he would become a pauper. The man was suffering from rheumatism, and was greatly depressed. He was anxious to see if he could find work in Australia, and it was believed that he might succeed in gaining his livelihood there, while his health would be improved by the voyage. £12. 15s. was therefore expended in purchasing a passage for himself and his family.

(4) Fulham:—

The applicant, a tinker by trade, applied to the Committee of the School Board for the exemption of his son, aged 11, from his attendance at school, in order that he might thus assist his elder brother in hawking salt. By the profits thus gained, the clothing necessary for the younger brother's attendance at school would be provided. Investigation showed, that while the relieving officer and others considered the applicant sober and steady, some who gave him this character considered that he was not a suitable applicant for charity, as he made a good living as a money lender, and was in the habit of lending to working men at high rates of interest. Further investigation proved the man to be a drunkard, and quarrelsome.

DORSET MENDICITY SOCIETY.—The number of vagrant admissions to the thirteen Unions of Dorset during the quarter ending 30th September last amounted to 671, being an increase of 307 admissions as compared with the corresponding quarter of last year, and a decrease of 69 per cent. as compared with the same quarter of 1869, the year previous to the formation of the Society.

DIFFICULT CASES.

It has been suggested that it would be well to insert in the Reporter 'Difficult Cases,' the solutions of which our readers are invited to give. The undermentioned case is one that has actually occurred:—

A. B., aged 55, wife, aged 27, two children, aged 10 and 8. A. B. was a commercial traveller, and bore an excellent character. His health failed him four years ago, and he has not earned anything for two years. He is now blind and paralysed. They have lived on savings and selling their goods, and have had help from former employers. The wife is doing her best to maintain the family by millinery, but having to look after the husband and children, she cannot earn enough for their support. They have no relations able to assist. What is to be done for them?

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of October 1876 was 35,569, and 42,737 received outdoor relief, making a total of 78,306. This was an increase of 699 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 3,150, 12,885, and 19,520 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 827. This was an increase of 52 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 348 on the corresponding day of last year.

OUTDOOR MEDICAL RELIEF.

'The question of Outdoor Medical Relief in all its bearings, whether charitable or official, is one which has of late years received much attention. The Poor Law Dispensary System, initiated by the legislation of 1867, borrowed certain of its administrative features from the analogous system which had been in working for 25 years in Ireland. The difference, however, between the Irish and the London systems is fundamental. In Ireland Official Medical Relief is not considered as implying the pauperism of the recipient. In England no distinction is made between medical and other kinds of relief. It is not necessary to refer at length to the various circumstances which have led to the establishment of an exceptional system in Ireland. It is enough to indicate the dangers which in this country would assuredly follow a relaxed rule in this respect.

'The consideration which has been given recently to the organisation of charity in London has led to the conviction that the extreme facilities with which medical relief is obtained in the out-patient department of many of our public charities is an evil of great magnitude, and is often the first step in the downward progress towards pauperism.

'In one or two instances this tendency has shown itself in the Metropolitan Poor Law Dispensaries. It has been found that relieving officers were giving orders for medical attendance to persons not in the receipt of other relief, and evidently not destitute. The attention of the Guardians was called to this subject, and a stricter administration was promptly substituted. It is obvious that the remedy in such cases must lie with the Guardians themselves; and with the view of rendering their supervision more uniform and unfailing, it would be well if the practice, already adopted by some Boards of Guardians, were to become universal, of granting the medical relief order for a month only.

'But these precautions being taken, there can be no doubt that the establishment of Dispensaries has exercised a most beneficial influence on the administration of medical out-relief. It is an advantage to the patient, who is certain of obtaining his advice and medicine at a fixed hour. To the medical officer, who is no longer burdened with the duty of providing costly drugs from a slender salary, a fixed hour and a public office for the performance of his official duties is not less advantageous. The strictly medical duties of examining and prescribing for the patient are no longer complicated by the labour of dispensing drugs. And, finally, the Guardians are enabled to keep this important branch of relief under control and inspection in a way which before was impossible.'—Fifth Annual Report of the Local Government Board.

CHARITY ORGANISATION.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES.—We propose, in the next few numbers of the Reporter, to insert, as space may permit, extracts from the writings of Dr. Chalmers, Mr. Walker, and others, who have done much to bring about that change of public opinion in matters of practical charity which is now bearing fruit in the 'Charity Organisation' movement.

The following is taken from a small treatise 'On the Sufficiency of the Parochial System,' by Dr. Chalmers, delivered 'in occasional lectures to students of theology for their instruction in one branch of parochial management—on which should they proceed in after life, it will exempt them from those secularities wherewith the office of a clergyman is too often overlaid, and enable them to give themselves wholly to the ministry of the Word and to such other duties as are strictly ecclesiastical.'

The first section is 'On the Encouragement for holding Inter-course with the Common People, and the various ways of doing them good.' It might be termed an essay on a right manner in district visiting.

'It was in 1822 that I made a round among the poorest houses, which we took at random, in the parish of St. Giles, London, along with Mr. Joseph Butterworth, of Russell Square, who told me that it was only a few months before since they had made the discovery of the movement being safe. We met the same reception that we should experience everywhere: one of perfect civility, even though on our part we had nothing more substantial than civility to offer—a mere question respecting the state of their health, the comfort of their houses, or the scholarship of their children. . . . We affirm nothing so fantastic or sentimental as that our first appearance is to operate like a spell on the affections of the natives; or, with something like the instant force of love at first sight, to bind us together by an affinity of trusty and sworn companionship. We speak not yet of their companionable virtues, but of their companionable manners; and that what is kindly meant on our part will be kindly taken upon theirs. It is to the initial facilities that we are now attending, by which the common people encourage and open up a way for our future household intercourse with themselves and their families; leading to an acquaintanceship convertible, if made to overspread the whole community, into the best results, both on the economies and the morals of the general population. In other words, the barrier in the way of this hopeful and beneficial interchange does not lie in any unwillingness, or in aught that is ungainly and repulsive on their part; but in our own selfish indolence, our own callous insensibility to the considerations and the calls of Christian patriotism. . . . Having now said enough of the access which there is to familiar converse with the common people, and that in virtue of a welcome and willingness from themselves; having, we trust, convinced the reader that this is not a romance of Arcadia, but a thing of as firm and homebred staple as any of the everyday occurrences in human life; let us now, with all plainness and brevity, unfold our own views of the account to which this intimacy, strengthening by every new visit to a family, or every new movement through an appointed district of families, might be turned. We suppose our philanthropist to have charged himself with a population of from two to three hundred, or somewhere about fifty families; and we shall now specify what a few of the various concerns are, on which, with a very little personal trouble, and with almost no perceptible expense of time or money, he might prove of substantial use to them.'

He then mentions, amongst others, as topics of common interest, 'weekday scholarship both in reading and sewing,' church-going, lending libraries, 'the health and comfort of the inmates,' 'the habit of accumulation.'

THE CHARITIES OF MELBOURNE.

A number of the Australian Sketcher, of July 8, 1876, containing an article on the Charities of Melbourne, has been forwarded to us. After referring to three recent cases, in one of which 'the inmate of the Benevolent Asylum proved upon his death to be the possessor of property to the value of £2,000,' while in the others the Asylum consented to receive as inmates two old women of whom one had 'a share in some landed property, but was kept out of her rights by the cruel greediness of a son,' and the other had been disowned by a son well able to support her. The writer adds:—'In each case pauperism was preferred to independent self-help. Charity was chosen in preference to honest industry, merely because it could be obtained with ease, and because, even when obtained by fraud, it was not felt as a degradation. The evidence afforded by these and similar cases as to the way in which the Benevolent Asylum is imposed upon justifies us in believing that the other charitable institutions of the city are similarly defrauded, and, indeed, facts are constantly being made public to prove that such is the case. Here, then, we find that one effect of our lavishly supported institutions is to produce pauperism by the means intended to relieve distress. The minds of numerous classes are familiarised with the receipt of gratuitous assistance, till it is felt to be no disgrace. The duty of self-denial and economy to make provision for the future, and the obligation of aiding, even at the cost of great self-sacrifice, those who have a claim for assistance, are entirely lost sight of. It is seen to be quite unnecessary to make provision for self-help when eleemosynary help can be so readily obtained. Such a system of indiscriminate charity—that is, of charity wanting in the indispensable conditions to ensure that it is not misapplied—is directly hostile to the self-reliant virtues of industry, thrift, and independence. It is not to be wondered at that, under such circumstances, the voluntary contributions to the support of charities thus administered should become of smaller and smaller proportion to the sum given by the State. The public see that the money they are asked to subscribe is wasted by being devoted to the support in idleness of those who ought to be made to support themselves, or of those who have relatives whose undeniable duty it is to support them. Thus, while industry and economy and foresight are being destroyed on one side, the sentiment of charity is being chilled on the other. Such must be amongst the consequences of the undue multiplication or too lax administration of public charities, and there is every reason to believe that these consequences are largely produced by the operation of the charities, the number and enormous revenues of which are often referred to with pride by the citizens of Melbourne.'

THE Charity Organisation Reporter.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL
BY THE
SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 191.

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 26, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

NOTICES.

It is suggested by the Administrative Committee that District Committees should forward to the Secretary the names of applicants suitable for situations as Workhouse Infirmary Nurses, as such situations are frequently procurable. The salary is £20 with annual increments of £1 up to £25, with board, residence, and uniform. No special training is required. Persons aged 50 are often appointed.

The Secretary would be glad to receive the names of any gentlemen, accustomed to business, who would be willing to assist the Society by undertaking the work of auditing the accounts of District Committees.

The St. George's, Hanover Square, Committee have forwarded to the Central Office a list of the cases which, during the year ending 30th September last, they have decided to be 'undeserving.' It is suggested by the Administrative Committee that, with a view to checking imposture, other Committees should furnish lists of their 'undeserving' cases.

The following letter has been received from the Hon. Secretary of the St. George's, Hanover Square, Committee:—

I am directed to inform you that a good deal is known by the Committee of the antecedents of a man named Donald Del'Hoste, formerly an officer in the army. He has no fixed residence, and therefore may apply to some other Committee.

ST. OLAVE'S.—Sir Graham Briggs has been appointed representative of the St. Olave's Committee, in the place of Captain Noyes; and Mr. E. Bayley has been appointed Hon. Secretary, vice Mr. B. R. Balfour, resigned.

ST. GEORGE'S, HANOVER SQUARE.—The Hon. R. C. Moreton has resumed his duties as Hon. Secretary of the Committee. ISLINGTON.—A second meeting of this Committee will be held, for the decision of cases, on Fridays, at 11.30 A.M.

ST. SAVIOUR'S.—The Rev. W. A. Richmond and Mr. W. F. Smith have been elected representatives of the Committee, vice Mr. S. C. Bosanquet and Mr. A. D. Graham.

STRAND.—Mr. E. W. Garrett has been appointed one of the Hon. Secretaries of the Committee, in the place of Mr. Lionel Robinson.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending October 14 the receipts had been £2.14s. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £350.16s. 5d. and £86.6s. 7d. respectively.

GRANTS.—That they had made the following Grants:—To Bethnal Green, St. George's East, Newington, and Lambeth, Committees, £20 each.

COLLECTION OF FUNDS.—That arrangements for carrying out the resolutions of Council on the collection of funds were under consideration, and would shortly be submitted to the Council.

HOSPITAL FOR POOR FRENCH PROTESTANTS.—That the charter and byelaws of the Corporation of the Governor and Directors of this hospital had been forwarded, together with a letter offering to assist suitable cases recommended by the Society. The admission is restricted to poor French Protestants and their descendants. Applicants must be of good character, unable to earn their own livelihood, and not in receipt of any pension or allowance sufficient for their maintenance. A form of petition containing information respecting the suitability of the applicant has to be presented. Vacancies are filled up by the quarterly committee of Directors, who elect from the register of candidates those deemed most eligible. There is also a pension fund for widows and spinsters over 50 years of age. A new hospital has lately been built at Victoria Park, 'to provide,' as the Report states, 'a peaceful asylum for some of the poor and aged descendants of the French Protestants.'

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW.—Mr. J. R. Hollond drew the attention of the Committee to an article on 'London Alms and London Pauperism,' in the Quarterly Review for October.

HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLE CHILDREN.

Major FitzRoy drew the attention of Council to the Cheyne Hospital for Sick and Incurable Children, 46 Cheyne Walk, Chelsea. 'It had been established for the reception of children suffering from chronic or incurable disease, who were on that account excluded or discharged from general hospitals. Children were admitted in order of application (between the ages of five and ten) as vacancies occurred, on the receipt of a medical certificate stating the nature of the disease from which they were suffering, and with approval of the medical officers of the Home. Cases of epilepsy and mental derangement were not eligible for admission.' The payment was 4s. a week. Communications should be addressed to the Lady Superintendent.

RESTRICTIONS ON OUT-DOOR RELIEF.

With the permission of Council, Major FitzRoy, in giving notice of the motion which stands first for consideration on Monday next, said that the more or less sudden withdrawal of out-relief had, he believed, been the source of considerable hardship in individual cases. He thought that charitable societies should prepare themselves to deal with the question unitedly and effectually. The rule of the Charity Organisation Society was to give 'temporary relief in those cases in which such relief would be of permanent advantage.' It was quite beyond its scope to give pensions such as those the poor enjoyed under a relaxed system of out-relief; but it might co-operate with other institutions who specially undertook the functions of relief, in order that the new and stricter administration of the Poor Law might react with the least possible harshness on the poor.

The following business stands for Monday, the 30th instant:

Major FitzRoy to move:—

1. 'That as it appears that many cases of individual hardship are occurring, especially amongst the respectable aged poor, in consequence of the laudable efforts of Boards of Guardians to do away with the much-abused system of out-door relief, it is the duty of this Society, while cordially co-operating with the Guardians, to ascertain how private charity may best be directed to meet these isolated cases; and that with this view the Co-operation Sub-Committee be directed at once to ascertain from the Society for the Relief of Distress, and other agencies, whether some concerted plan of action cannot be devised.'

2. Rev. H. G. Henderson to move:—

'That if the City, and any of the East End Committees, wish to amalgamate, they shall be allowed to do so.'

THE AFFLICTED POOR.—It is to be noted that 1,690 more lunatic, imbecile, and idiot persons were chargeable on the poor rates in 1875 than in 1874. There were, on January 1, 1875, 1,200 more in asylums, 115 more in registered hospitals and licensed houses, 348 more in workhouses, and 17 more residing with relatives, or in lodgings, or boarded out. The total number chargeable on the rates on January 1, 1875, was 54,571.

THE BLIND.—At a meeting of the Governors of the Sheffield and District Blind Institution, held recently at the Cutlers' Hall, a scheme was prepared by which the committee will be able to obtain £20,000, left by Mr. Daniel Holy for charitable purposes; and this sum they intend to utilise in the erection of a new institution for the blind. The building will cost much more than £20,000, and a town's meeting is to be called, and subscriptions raised in support of the object. It is proposed that the new institution should only give industrial training, which has already been very successful in the town, numbers of blind people educated at the existing institution being able to earn their own living.

DIFFICULT CASES.

The following answers have been received respecting 'the difficult case' described in our last number:—

'Referring to the "difficult case" quoted in the last Reporter, of the blind and paralysed ex-commercial traveller, aged 55, with a wife and two children, aged respectively 27, 10, and 8, the first point that occurs to me is that there is likely to have been improvidence in the case, as commercial travellers earn large sums, and no mention is made of the amount of savings or of insurances or clubs. Secondly, the fact of the man having married a girl of 16 is not in his favour. It appears to me that if there has been improvidence the husband should go into the workhouse, and then, but not till then, that the wife should be put in the way of supporting herself and children independently. If, however, there has been no improvidence, it appears to me that the wife should be helped in the same way, but that the husband should be provided for in a suitable institution, and that, until this can be done, the relief agencies of the district—or, failing them, the Charity Organisation Society—should make the family a weekly allowance. The Charity Organisation Society ought to be able to find private charity sufficient in amount to provide maintenance in an institution in such cases.—A. G. C.'

'Before the action on A. B. can be properly decided on, much more information is required than that given in your last number. He is 55, and his eldest child is 10. Was he married before? If so, did he have a family, and have they all died? Or was he a single man till 44? Did he provide for parents or others; and if so, to what extent? Unless he had very heavy expenses, could not a commercial traveller, single till 44, or married without a family, with an excellent character—that is, in good situations—provide well for old age for himself and small family, even with sickness? What were his earnings and mode of life? A strange part of relief is given at all by English guardians, so long, apparently, will the poor consider that they have a legal right to it, and calculate on it.

'One is therefore inclined to think the scheme more hopeful which proposes to abolish out-door relief altogether, so far as the union is concerned, while creating local voluntary organisations which, acting in concert with the guardians, may deal with exceptional cases, and occasionally administer help to the distressed at their own houses. I am aware that such an organisation is to some extent open to the same objections as those which have been stated to the present system. But it is better in two respects. Inasmuch as it is not legal, it could not hold out that definite prospect of relief which has done so much to discourage providence among the poor. Being voluntary, it would be more flexible—could be worked more freely, and adapted to the circumstances and needs of places and persons much more easily than any system depending on Acts of Parliament and orders of a Government Board possibly can be. Doubtless if such a voluntary organisation were suffered to become a mere machine, supported by the subscriptions of people who gave no personal help, but left its work to paid officials, it would rather add to than diminish present evils. In arguing for it, one assumes that it would be managed as it is in Boston, as it was in Glasgow by Chalmers, as the bureaux de bienfaisance are now managed in France, by benevolent and public-spirited people, giving their own time and pains to the task, bringing personal sympathy—that most precious part of charity—to bear upon the needy and afflicted, so that "organisation" would not mean a superseding or stiffening of individual effort, but merely a combination of resources, knowledge, and experience for the purpose of enabling such effort to accomplish more.'

Resolutions were passed in favour of the checking the undue bestowal of out-door relief, and of impressing upon the Government the importance of establishing a national sick and superannuation fund with a view to the ultimate abolition of out-door relief.

These are one or two of the suggestions made in the course of the discussion:—In favour of a national friendly society, it was said: 'It may be objected that it would require enormous machinery, and cause no end of difficulty; but I beg to submit that the same machinery now in use for the administration of this injurious system of out-relief would also serve for the carrying on of this institution we venture to recommend.'

Mr. Orlebar said: 'My idea—it is a novel one, and most of you will call it impracticable and utopian—is that by a system of compulsory, universal Government insurance, compulsory upon every man, woman, and child in England over sixteen years of age or thereabouts, pauperism, as it at present exists, may in some years come to be done away with.'

Mr. A. Pell said: 'Those who have studied the question, and enquired thoroughly into it, perfectly well know that the benefit clubs have no worse enemy in the world than the Poor-law; that is, a club out of which people take everything, and into which they pay nothing. You can have no more mischievous benefit society than that. . . . Some such proposal as this might be made: that no person, for instance, who is under twenty—or ten, if you like—on the 1st of this year shall ever be entitled to receive out-door relief. Every year the scale would be raised one higher. Next year it would be twenty-one, the next twenty-two, the next twenty-three, and so on, until the system died out.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of October 1876 was 35,863, and 41,882 received outdoor relief, making a total of 77,745. This was a decrease of 561 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 2,970, 13,281, and 19,694 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 730. This was a decrease of 97 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 85 on the corresponding day of last week.

VARIATIONS IN PAUPERISM.—Last week we pointed out that there was an increase in metropolitan pauperism, the numbers in the first week in October 1876 being considerably larger than those in the corresponding week of 1875, and 699 more than in the last week of September of this year. In the second week of October there was, as compared with the previous week, a decrease of 561, viz., 77,745, as against 78,306. The decrease is in the Central, East, and South Districts. In all the West Unions, except Kensington, and in all the North Unions, except Islington and Hackney, there is an increase. It is noteworthy that in Chelsea there has been an increase from 1,167 to 1,249, and in St. George's from 3,377 to 3,409. What accounts for the sudden increase or decrease in the number of paupers?

AMUSEMENTS versus DRUNKENNESS.—'Philanthropists are alarmed at the spread of drunkenness, and are never weary of devising expedients to lessen it. The salient fact is often lost sight of, that drunkenness is with many people a mere amusement.'—Echo.

CHARITY.—Qui benedicit impinguabitur: 'He that blesseth shall be fat and wealthy; he that blesseth, not with wagging his fingers, but helping the poor people, he shall be blessed, and ever have enough.'—Latimer.

PROVINCIAL.

CHARITY ORGANISATION AT BIRKENHEAD.—A meeting was held in the Music Hall, Birkenhead, on Monday evening, under the auspices of the above association, to hear an address from Mr. C. J. Ribton-Turner, Organising Secretary of the London Charity Organisation Society. Mr. Edward Darbyshire, president of the Birkenhead Society, occupied the chair; and amongst those present were Revs. Saumarez Smith, W. Binns, and W. H. King; Messrs. C. J. Preston, R. Gaskell, J. B. Cooke, C. Willmer, A. Billson, Alsager Hill, Bancroft Cooke, C. A. Wain, H. Whittle, Dr. Lamb, &c.

The Chairman, in calling upon Mr. Ribton-Turner to give his address, stated that the object of the Society was a most important one, and that the dangers of indiscriminate almsgiving, which the Society was established to regulate, were very great.

Mr. Ribton-Turner then proceeded with his address, in which he said that the London Charity Organisation Society was established about seven and a half years ago. The necessity for the maintenance of such an association arose from the fact that charity was badly distributed, and did not in very many cases meet the end desired. He pointed out that as pauperism increased so the decadence of a nation was indicated. It was necessary that there should be reciprocity of action between charity organisation and the Poor-law authorities. Analysis of character was a most difficult study, and before giving relief thorough investigation was necessary. He maintained that relief given by benevolent persons more frequently did harm than good; that it was much more important to teach the working classes cooking and domestic economy than to relieve poverty by alms. There were 749,000 paupers in England, and it was most important to reduce the extent of pauperism, partly that we might compete with other nations, and that crime, which was to a great extent dependent on pauperism, might be also reduced. Facilities were given by almsgiving people encouraging men in idleness. The first object of all aid should be to throw men into the labour market. Charity promiscuously given beats down the rate of wages. It was estimated that in the course of a year £75,000 was given in London alone to fraudulent charities. The Society was instituted, however, more in the interests of the poor than in those of the donors.

Mr. Alsager Hill said that the keynote of charity was personal interest; that it must not be mechanical. He felt sure that charity organisation could not hurt the human instincts towards charity, and that much of the indiscriminate charity which was given was not prompted by human love of the highest type.

In reply to a question on the method of work in London, Mr. Ribton-Turner said that they took the Poor-law cases and investigated them by paid agents or volunteers. They had now in existence 37 committees and 40 offices in London.

The Rev. W. Binns explained at length the operations of the Birkenhead Association; and the proceedings closed with votes of thanks to Mr. Ribton-Turner and the chairman.—Liverpool Mercury, October 1, 1876.

THE SUPPRESSION OF MENDICITY IN CARNARVONSHIRE.—At the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions for the county held at Carnarvon on the 19th and 20th inst., Mr. Holland introduced the subject of a mendicancy society. He observed that the question of obtaining the co-operation of all the magistrates throughout the kingdom for the suppression of vagrancy had engaged the attention of the Social Science Congress lately sitting at Liverpool. Mr. Ribton-Turner then addressed the Court, and explained the plan for the repression of mendicancy recommended by the Charity Organisation Society. The Chairman, the Right Hon. Lord Newborough, and Mr. Holland then made some further observations, and it was decided to form a committee for this purpose, which should co-operate with the 'Society for Organising Charitable Relief and Repressing Mendicancy.'

NOTICES.

In order to carry out the following Resolution of Council, July 3, 1876, a Balance-sheet Form and an Estimate were forwarded on the 24th ult. to the District Committee, within a month after the 30th September of each year, estimates of probable expenses of each Committee for the ensuing year, together with a balance-sheet for the past year, be sent to the Secretary of the Society, to be laid before the Quarterly Finance Sub-Committee, in order that they may as soon as possible have the means of framing the estimates for the District Committee Aid Fund.

It is requested that these Forms may be filled up and sent to the Central Office as soon as possible.

GEORGE'S, HANOVER SQUARE.—Viscount Sudley will act as representative of this Committee during the absence of W. Compton.

BETHNAL GREEN.—This Committee will meet on Fridays, at 8.30, and the office will in future open at 9.30 and close at 4.30 A.M.

ST. GEORGE'S.—The second meeting of this Committee will be for the decision of cases, at 11 A.M.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending October 21 the receipts had been £5 for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £229. 12s. 5d. and £6. 6s. 11d. respectively.

GRANT.—That they had made a grant of £20 to the Mile End Committee.

RESTRICTIONS ON OUTDOOR RELIEF.

Major FitzRoy then moved:—

He said that, since he had given notice of this motion, further study of the subject had led him to realise its importance more fully, and had brought under his notice several cases of hardship. The cause of the evil—the real question before the Council—was, 'How are we to deal with the consequences of improvident habits when the Guardians are withdrawing outdoor relief, and the people have made no provision to meet the effects of its withdrawal?' He then read, from the Middlesex Advertiser, the account of a case in the Chelsea District. There might, doubtless, be much to be said on the other side in these cases; but for his purpose it was sufficient to know that such cases were published; for, if the details of these cases came before benevolent people, they would give their money liberally, though often thoughtlessly and wrongly, and not with the charity that suffers long and is kind. This was an occasion for the Charity Organisation Society to act; for it was the special duty of this Society to combine forethought with charity—to guide private charity in the right direction. He then gave the details of another case that had come before the St. George's (Hanover Square) Committee. This case was one suitable for charitable assistance, yet not suitable for assistance by the Society; for the rule of the Society was to give temporary relief which might prove of permanent advantage. It was a case for a pension. There were a large number of pension societies; but these, without more concerted action, would never meet the want. He would propose no plan, but would mention the experience of the St. George's (Hanover Square) Committee. There they had thirty persons on a pension list. A strict investigation was instituted before any name was placed on the list; and it was necessary to show that no relations were able to assist; that the applicant had not been foolishly improvident or worthless; and that it would not be more just to let the Poor Law, rather than charity, support him. There was no pension fund; but the support of each case was entrusted to one or more individuals, who thus became personally interested in it. Each case had thus to be provided for separately; and this was a check on the laxity of administration which was an evil natural to the pension fund system. He did not believe that, in adopting this plan with proper safeguards, the District Committees would find themselves suddenly overwhelmed with suitable applications. There were, after more than a year's trial, only thirty on the St. George's list. It might, of course, be said that it was only possible to do this in a rich district; but, if there were rich people in that district, it must not be at the same time forgotten that the hangers-on of the rich swarmed to it. He then laid on the table papers showing the rules of the St. George's plan, which were to be published in the next Annual Report. In answer to a remark, he acknowledged that the system did lead to the supplementation of outdoor relief. The Guardians could only give a quite inadequate sum, and there was therefore, in many cases, no alternative but to supplement it.

Major Prendergast seconded the motion.

A letter from the Hon. Reginald Capel, the representative at Council of the Society for the Relief of Distress, was then read.

After a few words from Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, Mr. W. Bevan, speaking as a member of the Society for the Relief of Distress, said that that Society had always been disinclined to help chronic cases. It only gave temporary relief; and to give anything in the nature of a pension would be to reverse its well-established policy. Though the resolution were carried, he feared it would be quite inoperative.

Rev. R. J. Simpson, while commending the practical character of the motion, thought that the Society should weigh well the additional responsibilities it might entail. The action of the Society had, he believed, helped to produce the recent contraction of outdoor relief; and it might possibly be under an obligation to meet the want it in part had created. But to do this a vast additional staff would be necessary. Out of his own parish there would be several hundred legitimate claimants, and the Society could not undertake the responsibility of dealing with the whole of the vast amount of poverty lying on the margin of pauperism.

Mr. J. R. Hollond considered that the adoption of the motion would have precisely the reverse effect. It would not increase the responsibility of the Council, but would throw the responsibility on unorganised charity. People ask, What is the Charity Organisation Society doing at this crisis? This motion is a true answer; it states, We are trying to organise charity. It does not require us to sanction a definite scheme, but to arrange a definite scheme. If, then, other Societies will not co-operate, we shall have done what we could.

Rev. M. S. A. Walrond stated that the regulations of the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association were on this point similar to those of the Society for the Relief of Distress. They did not allow money granted by them to be distributed in pensions. Personally, he thought all cases of chronic distress should be left to the Poor Law. Any scheme for assisting them would practically produce more harm than good, and, though successful in St. George's, Hanover Square, in the East End it would be quite impracticable. In times of change the poor must necessarily suffer. He was sure his Society would be glad to co-operate in the consideration of any scheme, but at the same time he believed that the lines laid down by the Charity Organisation Society on its formation should still be adhered to.

Mr. Willis-Bund said, that if there were 30 pension cases in St. George's there would be 60 in Bethnal Green. It was a complaint against the Society that elaborate inquiries were made, and after all nothing was done. Yet the adoption of the motion would, he considered, raise hopes which the Society was not yet sufficiently well supported to fulfil. The scope of the Society's work was already too great.

Rev. H. P. Kelly, speaking as a guardian and clergyman in Shoreditch, said, that he had watched cases in which out-relief had been withdrawn, and had found the people in just the same condition, as they had been when in receipt of the relief. He believed that little injustice had been done.

Mr. J. Sapsford said, that having an intimate knowledge of the East of London, he was prepared to prove that starvation had in some cases followed the withdrawal of out-relief.

Rev. H. I. Cummins urged the necessity of adhering to well-recognised principles. It was a duty of the Poor Law to take care of the aged and afflicted poor; and, if injury had been done by the withdrawal of relief, it was the duty of the Society to remonstrate with the Guardians, not to undertake duties they had neglected. It was often a very great hardship to force old people into the house. Was it not possible to give them the same amount of relief out of the house, as that they would have had on entering the house?

Mr. C. L. Corkran thought Mr. Cummins had overlooked an important point in the discussion. It was proposed to affiliate, as it were, poor persons deserving of pensions to rich persons having the means of giving relief. This was a real organising, or rather, co-operative arrangement, uniting the sundered classes of rich and poor by a personal bond. He then mentioned the case of a Huguenot weaver, with which he was well acquainted. The earnings of a daughter, 2s. 6d. a week from a church, and a weekly pension of 1s., enabled a father and mother to live decently. If charity had been unable to take its part in this case, the old couple would have had to go into the house, and the family would have been broken up.

Sir Charles Trevelyan pointed out that in the forefront of the Manual was placed the 'co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law,' as one of the means of bringing about the main object of the Society—the improvement of the condition of the poor. Nothing was said there about outdoor relief; but it was hopeless to expect provident habits from the labouring classes so long as outdoor relief was continued, for such relief was a direct discouragement of thrift. It was a penalty to the thrifty; for, having accumulated insufficient savings for their old age, they were not entitled to any supplementary assistance. It was a bonus to the drunken and thriftless; for they were entitled by it to relief which they did not deserve. It was, in fact, a monstrous public evil, and if the Guardians were realising this we should do our best to co-operate with them. It was, it had been said, the duty of Guardians to deal with chronic cases. This was true of chronic cases in which there had been worthlessness and improvidence; for them there was the workhouse. But there was another sort of chronic case, in which the aged and infirm had been industrious and, owing to misfortune, had failed to provide for their old age. Those were proper cases for organised charity; and the means of meeting them were forthcoming. If the Society exercised properly its functions of inquiring and reporting, they would find many who would be thankful to have these cases brought to their notice. Besides individual charity there was also congregational charity. The parochial Councils in the St. George's (Hanover Square) District supported as many as 200 such cases. There were the endowed charities, a correspondence respecting which, between the St. George's Committee and the late Canon Conway, would be found in the Reporter of 8th March last. And lastly, there were the subscription charities.

Rev. W. H. Langhorne thought that, after what had been said regarding the action of other societies, it was hardly possible to deal with so large a question. The system, that had been described, was inapplicable to the East of London, where there were none to give the pensions.

Sir R. M. Stephenson considered it would be premature to adopt the motion. There was hardly sufficient information before the Council on the subject; and as the District Committees were actually working in the direction suggested, he would ask Major FitzRoy to withdraw his motion.

Dr. Daniel thought the motion brought to light an evil that must be remedied. Outdoor relief was, in any case, quite inadequate to meet the wants of the poor, unless other assistance was available. The motion did not bind the Council to any positive action.

The Secretary pointed out the immense reduction in expenditure that had taken place in unions in which outdoor relief was being withdrawn, and that the want thus created could not be met by the existing pension and other relief societies, so long as they worked under their present restrictions. Out of eighty-one pension charities mentioned in the Classified Directory to the Metropolitan Charities, none were available for ordinary cases, and free from religious, local, and other restrictions. Out of ninety-two almshouse charities only thirteen, supporting 175 persons, were generally available. And out of ninety-five general relief charities, there were—excluding the funds in the Magistrates' poor boxes, the Accident Relief Society, and the Society for Distressed Widows—only eight general charities available; while of these it appeared that the Society for the Relief of Distress and the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association would not be likely to give any but temporary relief. This showed the immense need of extending that co-operation, which was the first work of the Society.

Miss Octavia Hill said that donors looked to the Society to be told what they should do, but at the same time they were, as a rule, more willing to help different cases often than one continuously. She had found it advisable to obtain in some cases a large sum and expend it after the manner of a pension. Other societies should consider whether relief distributed in this way was not often the best form of relief.

Rev. H. F. Mallet, while allowing outdoor relief to be inadequate, showed that, being legal, and therefore expected as a right, it worked injuriously also, where private charity alone could act efficiently. He asked whether Major FitzRoy wished for the withdrawal or the supplementation of out-relief?

Mr. Lavers Smith said that a majority of the Whitechapel Committee were in favour of the continuance of out-relief, believing that it was the duty of the Guardians to give pensions, and that by their withdrawal of out-relief they had paralysed the efforts of charity to co-operate with them. To meet the difficulty the Committee had made special inquiries, and had found the charities of the district to be much more numerous, than they had at first supposed. The greater part of them, however, were for special purposes.

Mr. A. G. Crowder said that if the Guardians attempted to deal with chronic cases adequately, the rates would not be able to bear the burthen. To give such relief as that proposed, the utmost discrimination was necessary; and, while the relieving officer had to deal with as many cases as he did at present, the adoption of such a system would lead to wholesale pauperism. If chronic cases were left to the Guardians they must be met with either the workhouse or 2s. or 3s. a week; and the only use of the 2s. or 3s. would be to assist in producing a state of semi-starvation. Charity must grapple with the difficulty, and the charitable, instead of giving away half-crowns, must be prepared to give sums of £20 to two or three deserving persons.

After a few words from Major Prendergast, the Chairman said that from what had fallen from members working in different parts of London, he considered that a case had been made out for a further extension of organised charity; for charity was not yet prepared to meet the wants of the poor. It appeared from Mr. Capel's letter, that he thought the Society wished to supersede existing charities. This was altogether a mistake. It was one of the essential principles of the Society that it should co-operate with, and not supersede, other charities. The Society had lately formed a Co-operation Sub-Committee, and it had pledged itself to attempt to introduce co-operation in such matters of practical charity as this.

Major FitzRoy in reply pointed out that since the establishment of the Society new causes had been at work, and the Society for the Relief of Distress, and the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association, might very well be invited to make changes in their administration in accordance with new requirements. If all chronic cases, without distinction, were to go to the Poor Law, what was left for charity to do? If nothing was done by the leading Metropolitan Societies, benevolent persons would take the matter into their own hands and do badly what might with their co-operation be done well. Many safeguards were necessary; no pension fund with fixed rules, and, above all, no law would be sufficiently elastic. But there was not certainly any justification for treating all alike—giving to both the provident and the worthless no alternative but 'the house.'

The motion, having been slightly modified, was then put and carried nem. con., viz.:—

'That as it appears that many cases of individual hardship are occurring, especially amongst the respectable aged poor, in consequence of the laudable efforts of Boards of Guardians to do away with the much-abused system of outdoor relief, it is the duty of this Society, while cordially co-operating with the Guardians, to ascertain how private charity may best be directed to meet these isolated cases; and that with this view the Co-operation Sub-Committee be directed at once to ascertain from Metropolitan and other agencies for the relief of distress, whether some concerted plan of action cannot be devised.'

AMALGAMATION OF DISTRICTS.

Rev. H. G. Henderson moved:—

'That if the City, and any of the East End Committees, wish to amalgamate, they shall be allowed to do so.'

He said that, so far as he could find out, there were no rules to prevent the amalgamation of any two Committees desirous of combining together. In some cases there was delay in deciding cases, or money was wanted; or a definite object was required for which to ask the support of the public, such as, amongst other things, the assistance of the poor in a poor district, to which the richer district was attached. In all these cases the combination of a rich and a poor district would strengthen both.

Rev. M. S. A. Walrond seconded the motion.

Rev. H. I. Cummins, after a few words from the Chairman and from Mr. Willis-Bund, who urged that the motion was out of order, moved the previous question. It appeared to him that it was equally objectionable to approve or negative the motion; for if it was approved the approbation would apply to certain districts only, and, if it was negatived, the principle of an amalgamation, which in some districts would, he thought, be very advantageous, would be weakened.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, in speaking for the previous question, said that the motion if carried would be a most grave and revolutionary supersession of the authority of the Council.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 193.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 9, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge each of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

HOSPITAL FOR THE PARALYSED.

Dr. Daniel drew the attention of the Council to an arrangement recently made by the National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic, Queen Square, Bloomsbury. Patients 'who would shrink from entering the general ward of a hospital, and from receiving entirely gratuitous relief, and are so debarred from those advantages which the extreme poor can command,' are admissible to the new 'In Memoriam' wing of the Hospital, on the weekly payment of 12s.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending October 28 the receipts had been £126. 3s. for the General Fund, and £12. 16s. 10d. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £187. 4s. 9d. and £59. 3s. 5d. respectively.

GRANTS.—That they had made a grant of £10 to the St. Giles's Committee, and of £20 to the Islington Committee.

MIGRATION OF DOMESTIC SERVANTS.—A Correspondent had pointed out the great want of domestic servants in and around the towns of Nottingham, Derby, and Leicester, and had suggested that the Society might in some cases arrange for the migration of women and girls to those parts. Further information might be had of the Secretary.

COLLECTION OF FUNDS.

The following recommendations of the Administrative Committee on this subject were agreed to, viz.: that the City Collection Sub-Committee should be merged into the Finance Sub-Committee; that this Sub-Committee should in future undertake both the work of supervising the collection of funds in the City on behalf of the Council, in accordance with the arrangements made with the City Committee in November 1875, and should also carry out the resolutions of Council of the 29th May and the 3rd and 24th July last, respecting the collection of funds; and that the services of the Assistant-Secretary be placed at the disposal of the new Finance Sub-Committee.

MEETINGS OF COUNCIL.

Mr. J. R. Hollond then moved—*

That Bye-law No. 1 be amended as follows:—

The Council shall meet on the first Monday in every month (except August and September), at 3 P.M., and on any other day and at any other hour to which the Council may, for special reasons, adjourn.

* See Reporter, No. 189, vol. v., p.

Exception.—If the first Monday in the month shall fall on a Bank holiday, the Council shall meet on the next Monday following.

In case of emergency, the Administrative Committee, on the requisition of a District Committee or at its own discretion, shall have power to summon (through the Reporter) a special meeting of Council to discuss a particular subject.

He considered that the machinery of a weekly meeting of Council was of too cumbersome a nature to do the executive work which was now the first duty of the Society. That work, in fact, had devolved on the Administrative Committee, with its four Sub-Committees on Mendicity, District Committee work, Co-operation, and Finance; and the whole force of the Council was required to apply and carry out, by their means, the principles which the Council had fixed. His objections to the weekly meetings were: that they took up time and made work; that they led the public to misconceive the practical nature of the Society's work; that questions of principle having been settled, weekly meetings suitable only for the discussion of principles were no longer necessary. His motion threw on those who wished to meet, the responsibility of convening Council more than once in the month. A monthly discussion on important subjects would be a better means of educating the members of Council, and would be more useful to the public. By the resolutions of Council of January last sufficient power had been given to the Administrative Committee, and no change was necessary on this point. The Reporter, issued weekly, would, if there were no weekly reports of debates, be more generally useful and interesting. Finally, having pointed out that the rights of District Committees were preserved by the last clause of the motion, he asked the leave of the Council to alter the words of his motion to 'the second Monday in every month.'

Sir R. M. Stephenson seconded the motion.

Letters from Mr. S. Fuller, Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, and Rev. J. D. McGachen were then read.

Mr. A. H. Hill, after alluding to the testimony in favour of the continuance of the weekly meetings contained in the three letters just read, said he feared the tendency of the proposed change would be to place at the head of the Society a mere oligarchic bureau. Members were possibly getting tired of constant meetings; but the interests of the Society were national, and the principles it advocated had to be pressed continuously on the members of Council themselves. The movement which the Society represented, like all other important public movements, was only kept up by public meetings and debate, which, gaining for it new adherents and enlisting the individual sympathies of large numbers of the people, brought to light new sides of the problem, which was as yet but most partially solved. When meetings dwindled away, it was clear that the intensity of conviction that produced the movement was becoming less. Something had indeed been done; but the field of work was so vast, that unless many men and women would, for a long time to come, content themselves with attempting to influence public opinion by constant discussion of the principles of which so few had a complete grasp, it would be impossible to accomplish the enormous work which the Society had before it. He feared that involuntary weariness to which, after their first efforts and successes, the workers in such a cause were likely to succumb. He moved as an amendment:—

That a Committee be appointed to consider and report on the best means of increasing the usefulness of the weekly meetings of Council, and that the Committee consist of Lord Lichfield, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, Major FitzRoy, and Miss Octavia Hill.

That the Committee be requested to report in a fortnight.

Rev. M. S. A. Walrond seconded the amendment.

Mr. W. W. Wood opposed the motion, on the ground that the proposed change would be no economy; that the principles of the Society were not, as Mr. Hollond stated, settled and decided; that the one monthly meeting could not produce such large results, even under the best arrangements, as the four meetings in each month; that the Council constituted a sort of public opinion in the Society itself, and that in its speeches gained votes and were the only means of explaining to new members, unacquainted with the details of the Society's history, the various bearings of many of the subjects of discussion.

Sir Charles Trevelyan thought that the constitution of the Society, a confederation of autonomous Committees, necessitated the weekly meeting of a Council composed in the main of representatives of the Committees, and entrusted with the legislative work of the Society. The executive power had now been placed in the hands of the Administrative Committee, which, if very largely attended by members of Council, would lose its usefulness as an executive body; while the present distribution of executive and legislative duties gave scope for the conduct of the business of the Society with the least amount of friction, and, as the last two meetings of Council proved, retained to the Council its distinctive features as the legislative and educational body of the Society.

Rev. H. I. Cummins, in supporting the motion, showed how difficult it was for members to give up the time which was required for attendance at their District Committee, as well as at the Administrative Committee and one or more Sub-Committees, while they had also to attend weekly at the Council.

Mr. H. H. Hill considered that, as members of Council were engaged in work on other charitable institutions, the principles of the Society were being gradually disseminated by them. The meetings of Council were thus producing practical results.

Rev. R. J. Simpson, Major FitzRoy, Miss O. Hill, Mr. R. V. Tidman, Mr. Bousfield, and Captain Fortescue having spoken, Mr. Hollond replied that he could not agree to Mr. A. H. Hill's amendment. He did not think it possible to utilise the meetings of Council, if they were continued weekly. The negotiations with charities and the practical work to which Mr. Wilkinson had alluded in his letter was not work for the Council, but for the Administrative Committee and its Sub-Committees. He feared the Council would be guilty of self-deception, if they considered that their debates would achieve what the Society had pledged itself to accomplish.

After a few words from the Chairman, Mr. A. H. Hill having, by leave of the Council, withdrawn his amendment, the motion was put and lost, eleven voting for it and fifteen against it.

The Council then adjourned.

The following business stands for Monday, the 13th inst.:—

I. Major FitzRoy to move:—

'That the Bye-laws from No. 21 to the end, relating to the Administrative Committee, be amended as follows:—

'No. 21. The Administrative Committee shall consist of the Chairman and Vice-chairmen of Council, and of not less than twenty and not more than forty members, and shall be elected annually, at the first meeting of Council in the month of January; the names of those willing to serve being previously submitted, either directly or through the Hon. Secretaries of the District Committees. All members to be eligible for re-election. Any member of Council shall be at liberty to attend the meetings of the Administrative Committee, or those of its Sub-Committees, and take part in the proceedings, but not to vote.

'No. 22. The Committee to have power to fill up all vacancies, but to report the same for confirmation at the next meeting of Council.

'No. 23 to stand as it is.

'No. 24. That every member of the Administrative Committee who proposes being absent for more than two weeks shall give due notice thereof, in order that the Committee may appoint a substitute to fill up the vacancy.

- 'No. 25 to stand as it is.
'No. 26. Omit the words following "of the Committee."
'No. 27, 28, 29 to stand as they are.
'No. 30. The Administrative Committee shall divide itself into four Sub-Committees, viz.: 1. Finance; 2. Mendicity; 3. District work; 4. Co-operation.'

[The following are the Bye-laws which it is proposed to change, as they at present stand:—

'21. The Administrative Committee shall consist of not fewer than nine members, and shall be elected annually within one month after the Annual Meeting, members being eligible for re-election. Any member of Council shall be at liberty to attend its meetings, and to vote.

'22. All new representative members of Council shall be placed on this Committee, unless they have served upon it at some previous time, and their names shall be kept upon the list for at least three months, provided they continue members of Council.

'24. If a member of the Administrative Committee has not attended for thirteen consecutive weeks, it shall not be necessary to send him notices when such are issued.

'26. If no quorum be present at the time of meeting, any member present shall be at liberty to transact business, but all orders passed under such circumstances shall be specially confirmed at the next meeting of the Committee or of the Council, whichever may first take place.]

II. Mr. A. H. Hill to move that Lord Henniker be elected an additional member of Council.

III. Mr. A. H. Hill to move that Mr. W. Bayne Ranken be elected a representative at Council of the Royal Society for the Assistance of Discharged Prisoners.

IV. Major FitzRoy to move that Lord Stanhope be elected a Vice-President of the Society.

V. Mr. H. N. Hoare to move that Mr. G. C. T. Bartley be elected an additional Member of Council.

VI. Rev. H. I. Cummins to move—
'That when a District Committee has before it a case requiring relief, but with which it is unable to deal adequately, it shall, without delay, forward a full report of the particulars of such case to the Central Office.'

The following contributions were received during the week ending Saturday, November 4, 1876:—Donations: Messrs. McCalmont Brothers, £25; W. Kemble, Esq., £10; Messrs. C. de Murrieta & Co., £20. Annual: F. A. Boanquet, Esq., £1. 1s.; W. B. Collyns, Esq., 10s. 6d.; Crown Assurance Company, £2. 2s.; R. Duncombe, Esq., 5s.; F. J. Horniman, Esq., £1. 1s.; Captain Liebenrood, R.N., £1; B. H. Todd, Esq., £1. 1s.; R. Vigers, Esq., £1. 1s.

PROVINCIAL.

CHARITY ORGANISATION AT CRIEFF.—A public meeting of the Crieff Society for Organising Charitable Relief and Repressing Mendicity was held at Crieff on the 12th September last. The Provost, Mr. MacRisty, took the chair. In the course of his remarks he said it was a curious fact that our forefathers took as deep an interest in the poor and in the repression of mendicity as the present generation, and he produced the Acts of the Scots Parliament, commencing in 1424 and ending in 1621, and from these he read extracts from an Act of 'King James the Sixth, Sixth Parliament XX., October 1579,' intitled—'For the punishment of Strang and Idle Beggars, and relieve of the pure and impotent.' The Act is very interesting, and exhibits great skill on the part of the legislators of the time. In it occurs the following—'And seeing clearlie wald, that the pure aged, and impotent persones, suld be als necessarlie provided, as the vagaboundes and Strang beggars repressed, and that the aged, impotent, and pure people suld have ludgeing and abiding places, throughout the Realm, to settle themselves intil.' He alluded to the fact that the same expressions were used then (300 years ago) as now as to the repression of vagaboundes and strange beggars; and our forefathers did what this Society was trying to do at the present day. The following letter was read from the Bishop of St. Andrews, addressed to Mr. J. Cleland Burns:—

'The Few House, Perth, September 11, 1876.
'Dear Mr. C. Burns,—I am sorry that it will not be in my power to be present at your meeting to-morrow; but you know the interest which I take in your charity organisation movement, and I need not say that I wish you all success in establishing the system at Crieff. In Perth it is now thoroughly organised, and is producing, I believe, the best results.
'Yours very faithfully,
'C. WORDSWORTH, Bp. of St. Andrews.'

Mr. Burns said, as they had heard read from the old Scots Act in regard to repressing mendicity, the principles of that Act had been followed by this Society. It had been acknowledged in London and throughout the country that the principles of these charitable societies were identical with the principles expounded by Dr. Chalmers many years ago. He then read a few figures from Capt. Gordon's (Chief Constable for Perthshire) report. From January 1875 to January 1876 there had been 2,796 vagrants and 887 tinkers challenged, making a total of 3,683, and this in the county of Perth alone. Mr. Robertson, the Secretary to the Glasgow Society, said: In carrying out these societies great difficulty had been experienced, and he had no doubt they would find here, as in Glasgow, that parties who had hitherto kept aloof were now coming in. In Glasgow alone they had something like a couple of hundred different charities, and he found that there must be close on £200,000, exclusive of Poor Law money, collected every year in Glasgow for the relief of the poor. They were anxious to improve the condition of the poor and give them timely assistance and encouragement. Other gentlemen addressed the meeting, and the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

INTEMPERANCE AND DEPRESSION OF TRADE.—At the recent Congress of the Social Science Association, at Liverpool, a paper by Mr. William Hoyle on 'The Cause of the Present Bad State of Trade' was read. The following is taken from a report of the debate:—'The main cause of depression in trade was the misappropriation of what was produced, especially when coupled with neglect, incapacity, &c., in those who were producers. Mr. Hoyle attributed a great deal of the bad state of trade to intemperance among workmen. Through drink they lost one day's work per week, or £160,000 in wages, which would be a further abstraction from the trade fund. He applied that reasoning to the liquor traffic in general, and stated that that was the main cause of the stagnation in the home trade. He said that last year the nation spent about £143,000,000 in drink. He calculated that the indirect cost and losses through drink were as great as the direct expenditure, making in all a total of £285,000,000. He referred to the fact that not only was the liquor traffic the cause of so much loss commercially, but that it was the great cause of our pauperism and crime. If, he said, our commercial gain from the liquor traffic was equal to our present loss, it would then be too small a price for which to barter the happiness and well-being of the people.'

OUT-RELIEF.—MANCHESTER.

The proceedings of the Manchester Board of Guardians of April 1875, adopted with a view to checking out-door relief, have received the approval of the Local Government Board, and are so important in their relation to Charity Organisation that we take them verbatim from the last Report of the Local Government Board:—

'We have much pleasure in referring to the important proceedings which during the last year have taken place in the township of Manchester, in reference to the administration of out-relief.

'On the 15th April 1875 the Guardians adopted the following Regulations:—

"1. The Standing Orders which may from time to time be adopted by the Guardians, for regulating the administration of relief, shall be strictly observed by the Relief Committees; but if, owing to the special circumstances of any particular case, the Relief Committee shall be of opinion that a departure from the Standing Order applicable thereto is advisable, such case shall be reported by the Assistant Clerk for the decision of the General Board, and in the meantime the Relief Committee shall make such provisional order in the case as to them shall seem necessary.

"2. That the following be made and constituted

"STANDING ORDERS.

"I. Out-door relief shall not be granted or allowed by the Relief Committee (except in case of sickness) to applicants of any of the following classes:—

"(a.) Single able-bodied men.

"(b.) Single able-bodied women.

"(c.) Able-bodied widows without children, or having only one child to support.

"(d.) Married women (with or without families) whose husbands, having been convicted of crime, are undergoing a term of imprisonment.

"(e.) Married women (with or without families) deserted by their husbands.

"(f.) Married women (with or without families) left destitute through their husbands having joined the Militia, and being called up for training.

"(g.) Persons residing with relatives, where the united income of the family is sufficient for the support of all its members, whether such relatives are liable by law to support the applicant or not.

"II. Out-door relief shall not be granted in any case for a longer period than thirteen weeks at a time.

"III. Out-door relief shall not be granted to any able-bodied person for a longer period than six weeks at a time.

"IV. Out-door relief shall not be granted, on account of the sickness of the applicant, or any of his family, for a longer period than two weeks at a time, unless such sickness shall be certified in writing by the District Medical Officer as being likely to be of long duration, or to be of a permanent character.

"V. Where relief is allowed to a parent through the admission of a child or children into the Swinton schools or the workhouse, such relief shall not be granted for a longer period than six months at a time; and if at the expiration of such period a continuance of the relief is required, the relieving officer shall visit and enquire into the circumstances of the parent, and bring the case up for re-consideration by the Relief Committee, in the same manner as if it were a case of out-door relief."

'It was shown from the returns of the number of paupers in receipt of out-relief that in September 1874 the Guardians were relieving 2,319 individuals with out-relief, and in September 1875, 1,429, being a reduction of 890 persons. This result had been obtained, so far as the Guardians were aware, without a single case of hardship arising from the measures adopted, and a hope was expressed by some of the Guardians, that out-relief might still be further reduced, and indeed restricted only to the sick and aged. It was further stated, that as regards the sick, Provident Dispensaries had been established in Manchester, in which the number of members was rapidly increasing, and might in a short time become an important part of the social system.

'We have the satisfaction to add, that the proceedings of the Guardians of Manchester and the result of the adoption of the Regulations above described, have been circulated by them among the Unions in the manufacturing districts, and have led to their adoption in several of the Unions; and we have received copies of the resolutions to this effect passed by the Guardians of the Salford, Wigan, and Fylde Unions.'

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 194.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 16, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

NOTICES.

It is suggested by the Administrative Committee that District Committees should, on the receipt of a report on the case of an applicant resident in another district, enter in their Report Book, in the column headed 'Remarks,' the decision of the Committee by whom the report has been issued, before transmitting the report to the person who has asked for it.

A gentleman, aged 56, in very reduced circumstances, is anxious for any kind of employment. There is nothing against his character. The Hon. Secretary, St. George's, Hanover Square, will give full particulars.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee reported, inter alia, that during the week ending November 4 the receipts had been £263. 1s. 6d. for the General Fund, and that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £239. 13s. 9d. and £42. 15s. 4d. respectively.

GRANTS.—That they had made grants of £20 to the South St. Pancras Committee, £20 to the Holborn Committee, and £20 to the St. Olave's Committee.

BYE-LAWS RELATING TO THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

Major FitzRoy then moved:—

'That the Bye-laws from No. 21 to the end, relating to the Administrative Committee, be amended as follows:—

'No. 21. The Administrative Committee shall consist of the Chairman and Vice-Chairmen of Council, and of not less than twenty and not more than forty members, and shall be elected annually, at the first meeting of Council in the month of January; the names of those willing to serve being previously submitted, either directly or through the Hon. Secretaries of the District Committees. All members to be eligible for re-election. Any member of Council shall be at liberty to attend the meetings of the Administrative Committee, or those of its Sub-Committees, and take part in the proceedings, but not to vote.

'No. 22. The Committee to have power to fill up all vacancies, but to report the same for confirmation at the next meeting of Council.

'No. 23 to stand as it is.

'No. 24. That every member of the Administrative Committee who proposes being absent for more than two weeks shall give due notice thereof, in order that the Committee may appoint a substitute to fill up the vacancy.

'No. 25 to stand as it is.

'No. 26. Omit the words following "of the Committee."

'No. 27, 28, 29 to stand as they are.

'No. 30. The Administrative Committee shall divide itself into four Sub-Committees, viz.: 1. Finance; 2. Mendicity; 3. District work; 4. Co-operation.'

He wished to give the Administrative Committee a more defined position, and thus increase both its responsibilities and its efficiency. With regard to the date of election, there was a manifest awkwardness in holding the election within a month after the annual meeting of the Society. By the seventh rule the Representatives of the District Committees were then elected, and the 21st Bye-law, as it at present stood, fixed the same time for the election of the Administrative Committee, a body elected from the representatives. Having obtained leave from Council to modify his motion by omitting the words 'but not to vote' from his proposed amendment of the 21st Bye-law, and making no alteration in Bye-law 24, he dwelt upon the several points on which he proposed a change. He was most anxious to have a large number of members of the Administrative Committee on the four Sub-Committees mentioned in his suggested Bye-law No. 30.

Sir Charles Trevelyan seconded the motion.

Dr. Daniel moved as an amendment, which was seconded by Mr. H. N. Hoare, that the words 'not more than forty' be omitted from the suggested Bye-law No. 21, and that after the words 'all members to be eligible for re-election' be added 'except those who have not attended the meetings at least ten times during the year.'

After some words from Rev. Harvey Brookes, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Mr. C. L. Corkran, Miss O. Hill, Major Prendergast, Rev. R. J. Simpson, and Mr. J. R. Hollond, Mr. C. A. Miner and Mr. A. H. Hill gave notice of several amendments, proposed with a view to limiting the number of the Administrative Committee, securing the due representation of the Sub-Committees upon it, and conducting the annual election of Administrative Committee by ballot.

Dr. Daniel's amendment having been lost, Major Fitz-Roy's motion, together with the proposed amendments, were, on the motion of Mr. Corkran, seconded by the Rev. H. I. Cummins and supported by Sir Charles Trevelyan, referred to the Administrative Committee, with the request that they report on the whole question at an early date.

NEW MEMBERS OF COUNCIL.

Mr. A. H. Hill apologised for not having communicated with Lord Henniker and Mr. W. Bayne Ranken with a view to ascertaining whether they would be able to serve on the Council. The motions on the paper in his name were, with the consent of the Council, postponed, Mr. A. H. Hill being authorised to invite Lord Henniker to become an additional member and Mr. W. Bayne Ranken a representative at the Council.

Major FitzRoy, seconded by Rev. R. J. Simpson, moved that Lord Stanhope be invited to become a Vice-President of the Society.

The motion was carried nem. con.

On the motion of Mr. H. N. Hoare, Mr. G. C. T. Bartley was elected an additional member.

DIFFICULT CASES.

Rev. H. I. Cummins moved—

'That when a District Committee has before it a case requiring relief, but with which it is unable to deal adequately, it shall, without delay, forward a full report of the particulars of the case to the Central Office.'

He said it was most necessary to prevent the possibility of a District Committee letting a deserving case drop, when there was unusual difficulty in obtaining for it adequate and suitable assistance. A case of this nature had recently been brought to his notice, in which he considered that the District Committee had not made the effort that, in accordance with the rules of the Society, they were bound to make, to obtain the necessary assistance. If his motion were adopted, it would have the effect of obliging District Committees to send reports of these cases to the Central Office, and this would ensure that, while the District Committees were led to expect suggestions and assistance from the Central Office, no cases would be needlessly set aside.

Mr. A. H. Hill seconded the motion, which, a few verbal alterations having been made, was carried, in the following terms:—

'That when a District Committee has investigated a case and found it to be one with which it is unable to deal adequately, it shall, without delay, forward a full report of the particulars of the case to the Central Office.'

The Council then adjourned.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

At their meeting to-day, the Administrative Committee will consider the amendments to the Bye-laws referred to them by Council on the 13th instant, together with other important business.

The following business stands for Monday, the 20th inst.:—

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson to move—

'That the Reporter be distributed gratis to all subscribers of not more than £1.'

The following contributions were received during the week ending Saturday, November 11, 1876:—Donations: Sydenham Committee, £10. 10s.; Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, & Co. £50; G. S. Gibson, Esq. £2. 2s.; W. H. Heaton, Esq. £1; Baroness Lionel de Rothschild, £10; 'A Friend,' £1; Annual: W. Awdry, Esq. £1. 1s.; Sir T. Douglas Forsyth, £2. 2s.; District Committee Aid Fund: Clapham Committee, £10. 10s.; Francis Peek, Esq. (5th instalment of £3,000) £250.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

STEPNEY.—District Visiting.—The following are extracts from the Minutes of this Committee, dated June 13 1876:—

'Resolved, that one or two additional members of Committee should be procured for the purpose of visiting cases relieved by the Charity Organisation Society, where the Society think such visits would be desirable, and for giving periodical information as to how such cases are progressing.'

'Resolved, that it is expedient in the interest of the indigent poor to increase the number of District Visitors, and to organise their efforts into a harmonious whole, in order to produce an effectual personal visitation and co-operation with Poor-law and other officials, and at the same time to leave the action of each free, yet systematised.'

'Resolved, that the principles of the plan of working in operation in the division of the parish of St. Marylebone known as St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, be recommended.'

The following resolutions were adopted on the 17th October, 1876:—

'Resolved, that the Clergy, Ministers of Religion, and acting Lay Agents of the Stepney Union Poor-law District be each supplied with a copy of the pamphlet by Miss Octavia Hill, on the "Work of Volunteers in the Organisation of Charity," and that they be invited to co-operate with the Society in this work.'

'Resolved, that two members of Committee, one being the almoner for Society for the Relief of Distress of the Parish, should call upon the Clergy of the Church, Dissenting Ministers, Roman Catholic Priests, and any Lay Agencies in the district, present the copy of Miss Hill's pamphlet, with the three first resolutions, and urge them to co-operate with the Charity Organisation Society; and it was agreed that Mr. Crowder and Mr. Peters should accordingly call on the Clergy and Ministers in the districts of St. Anne's and St. Thomas's; the Rev. J. S. Whichelow and Rev. H. F. H. Burchell-Herne in St. John's and St. Matthew's; Rev. S. A. Thompson-Yates and (if possible) Mr. Mitchell in St. Paul's, Bow Common; Mr. Mitchell and Rev. S. A. Thompson-Yates in St. James's, Ratcliff.'

Rev. J. S. Whichelow stated, with reference to the first resolution, that Mrs. Whichelow and Miss Lilley would assist and report on cases in St. Anne's District.

PROVINCIAL.

ETON.—The following is an extract from the Report of the Eton Charity Organisation Association for 1876-8. 'The floods of last winter inflicted an amount of distress that was met by a special fund; that fund has already been accounted for; but it may be well to state that the distribution of relief was greatly aided by the Organisation of this Society and the experience of its agent.'

WEST SUSSEX.—From the second Annual Report of the West Sussex Mendicity Society it appears that 'Since the 29th September 1875, 9,443 bread tickets had been presented to the 49 bakers and exchanged for bread, being 4 tons 4 cwt. 1 qr. 7 lbs. In the different Union-houses where the police relieve tramps, in the year ending 29th September:

' 1873 there had been	6247	Tramps relieved.
' 1874	6885	"
' 1875	5264	"
' 1876	7301	"
' Increase, 2,037.

'There had been 67 persons apprehended under the Vagrant Act, in the year ending 29th September 1876, viz. 24 for begging, three for having no visible means of subsistence, three found in enclosed premises, and 37 for sleeping in the open air and outhouses. Last year, for the same offences, 138 were apprehended, being a decrease of 71 persons. In the year ending 29th September 1875, 58 persons were apprehended for petty larceny; in this year there were only 44.

FOREIGN.

CHARITY ORGANISATION AT WÜRZBURG.

Mr. H. Peto has sent us the following letter:—'I sent last year* from here a short account of the foundation of the Würzburg 'Verein für freiwillige Armenpflege,' and, as I was told it was of interest, I think a further report will be welcome. The Society, at the close of its first year, had 806 members; had assisted 535 persons with money, food, or clothing; and expended 2,481 marks, carrying forward 4,712 marks. Considering the population of the city (47,000), the number of members and the receipts may not be thought indicative of a flourishing society; but the founders are satisfied with the progress made, and think the Verein well established. The state of politics has to be considered, moreover: it is impossible for any society to be started by laymen here without being very jealously regarded by the clerical party. . . . The Verein, whose objects are akin to our own Society, has been started by the Liberals. . . . Every member declares his allegiance to its principles, and affixes to his door a plate with the name of the Verein, and a note that beggars will receive no alms. Open begging has been almost suppressed, and it is no longer a profitable excursion for beggars to take a trip into Würzburg to ply their trade. There are two points of difference between this and our Society. Here all labour is voluntarily given; there is but one salaried official to collect the subscriptions and receive gifts of clothing. The agents who prepare the reports for the fortnightly meetings of the committees, and the cashier who pays the money from the central office when voted by the committees, all give their services without remuneration. The other difference is the enrolment of members. The object of the founders is to enrol as many members as possible who will pledge themselves to do their best to suppress begging, and whose subscriptions (a small subscription is compulsory) form the source of the Society's income. Compared with the Munich Verein, which in its first year numbered 4,009 members (Munich contains 190,000 inhabitants), the Würzburg Society has started well. I have seen no reports of the Munich Verein since 1873. The report for that year (the fifth) says that during the year 2,110 cases had been relieved, and 35,000 marks had been expended.

* See Reporter, No. 151, Vol. IV. p. 128.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The following has been received from the Secretary of the Liverpool Central Relief and Charity Organisation Society:—

"The manager of one of the largest iron works in Liverpool having given us permission to send to him any respectable men applying to us for relief, or who were working at our workshops for unemployed men, and having promised that he would give them employment; we accordingly, from time to time, sent him such men as we deemed suitable for the work, and the following copies of letters from the manager will show the result:—

"Liverpool, August 14, 1876.

"The man you sent up for work a short time ago was put on a job where he might earn from 25s. to 30s. in the week, loading pig-iron; he only worked about half-an-hour. It's my opinion he preferred getting his living given to him to working for it."

"Liverpool, September 9, 1876.

"I set on the man you sent with a bad character, but immediately after starting he refused to work, saying that he was to be found an easy job and to do as he pleased. Other two men you sent up; one was a 'tramp,' whom I wouldn't start, the other was offered work and agreed to take it, but never turned up. I think you need not trouble to send any more; the men that come to you are those that won't work."

DIFFICULT CASES.

No. 2.—C. D., aged 51, is a ropemaker, with four children between the ages of six months and nine years. His wife, aged forty, earns 8s. to 10s. a week by washing. The husband's sight has been gradually failing for the last four years. Eight months ago he was obliged to give up his work entirely; a medical certificate states that he is suffering from decay of the optic nerve and that there is no hope of his recovery. He used formerly to belong to his Trade Club. No relations are able to assist. All that the Committee feel able to do is to make inquiry, through one of their members, whether there is a prospect of increased employment for the wife if the family removes to Hampstead from the low neighbourhood in which they are living; as she states she can earn more if she can get more washing. They think it is a case for a pension, but have no means of obtaining one.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fifth week of October 1876 was 36,476, and 42,697 received outdoor relief, making a total of 79,073. This was an increase of 643 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 3,963, 12,500, and 20,374 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 693. This was a decrease of 59 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 176 on the corresponding day of last year.

CHARITY ORGANISATION.

CASE OF 'VETA.'

Under the heading 'Charity Organisation,' the following letters have recently appeared in the Times:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE 'TIMES.'

Sir,—Having seen in a recent paper a paragraph headed 'Shocking Death from Starvation,' I have been induced to address you and make known the following facts:—About eight months ago, myself and son, who is 20 years of age, arrived in London. At that time we were tolerably well off as to money, &c. From that time to the present we have been most indefatigable in endeavouring to procure employment in fair copying or anything else next to menial, but have failed to succeed. Our last shilling being expended, and we being at the time in arrears for lodgings and washing, we received notice to leave. Being compelled to do so, we had to wander the streets for two nights in succession. My son, being in a very delicate state of health, is now considerably worse, owing, I have no doubt, to exposure and want of food. I am advanced in years and very feeble. Some eight or ten days ago, when going down St. James's Street, I saw on the door of No. 21 a brass plate, on which are the following words:—'Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Fund, first floor.' I went upstairs and had an interview with a gentleman who appeared highly respectable. My son waited my return in the street. I briefly stated our sad case, and that we had not tasted food of any description since the previous morning (this was 3 o'clock in the afternoon). My statement was true, to which he appeared to listen attentively. His reply was that no relief could be obtained there, that the only relief given was by the clergy, and they visited the persons on whom it was bestowed. He then said, 'You had better go to the "Charity Organisation," in Buckingham Street, Strand' (which address he put on paper), 'where in all probability you will get some relief.' On our arrival I saw on a board in large letters the words above stated. I there had an audience with a gentleman, who desired me to be seated, and asked me numerous questions, the whole of which I answered correctly. He then asked who it was that recommended us there. I told him, when he said he knew no such place, but if there was it was out of their district. He then said 'I cannot do anything for you,' but gave me the name and address of a relieving officer whose residence was some three miles from there. I said, 'we at present are quite exhausted,' and told him we had not eaten anything since the previous morning; but every entreaty was in vain, and I left the office. My son, as in St. James's, remained at the door. A gentleman, seeing us leave, accosted us, and said, 'You will excuse me—have you been endeavouring to procure relief?' I said 'Yes.' He asked, 'Did you succeed?' The answer was 'No.' He said 'Not likely,' and that scores to his knowledge who were in a most distressed condition had made similar appeals there, but were rejected with the only redress of the name and address of the relieving officer. He commented on the conduct of some four or five who were in the same office (one of them passed at the time) in the most bitter terms, and in language that I forbear making use of. He requested us to remain a short time, and on his return brought some bread and butter folded in a piece of newspaper, and gave us all the money he had—viz. threepence halfpenny. We then wended our way to St. James's Park, sat on a form there, and ate the bread and butter. We remained in and about the Park until one o'clock in the morning. A policeman came to us and said we were not allowed to remain there. I told him we were not bad characters, had nowhere to go, and were destitute. He was remarkably civil, but again said we could not remain there, and told us to go to Covent Garden, where we should be out of the rain. (It was slightly raining at the time.) We went there and saw some scores of men, women, and children lying in groups, and; it grieves me to say, making use of the most blasphemous and dreadful language. A most terrible night it was, and when daylight appeared we had nowhere to go to obtain a mouthful of food. We have had no assistance from anyone in London ever since, but have lived most economically on small remittances sent from the country by some relatives, who, I am sorry to say, are in very indigent circumstances, and these are now, for want of means, discontinued. What to do I am quite at a loss to devise, and am much afraid the fate of the late poor Mr. Arthur French will be mine if no kind friend will come to the rescue in procuring us employment. We have lived in the same town for many years, and our character will bear the most strict investigation as to honesty, &c.; to corroborate which I beg to state that the Mayor and magistrates where we have so long resided will give ample testimony of the same.—I am, Sir, yours respectfully,

Oct. 24, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE 'TIMES.'

Sir,—I observe in the Times of to-day a letter signed 'Veta,' containing the story of an application made at this office. I hope you will allow me to give you what I believe to be a full explanation of the seeming hardship of the case.

The facts are these:—On the 21st of last month a man, whom I believe to be your correspondent, called at this office and affirmed that he and his son were in a state of destitution. A gentleman whom he had seen in a branch office of the society in St. James's Street had, he said, suggested that he should call here. He was told that he must have been mistaken on this point as there was no committee of the society in that street. He was informed that applications for relief were never received at the central office of the society, and, after a few general questions had been put to him, his name and the address of the house at which he stated that he had slept the night before were taken down.

It was too late in the afternoon for him to make an application that day to the committee of the district (Lambeth) in which he had been residing. He was supplied, therefore, with the address both of the relieving officer nearest the house (the address of which he had given) and of the district committee of the society in Lambeth, and he was asked to apply to the district committee on the following morning.

The reasons for the course adopted are obvious. The applicant was directed to go to the relieving officer, inasmuch as he could thus get the food and shelter which the law affords to the destitute. And he was asked to call at the office of the district committee in order that, having received from the Poor-law authorities the immediate and temporary relief necessary for his existence, he might afterwards, if found deserving, be adequately assisted.

May I add that this society has never professed to be primarily a relief society. One of the principles which it has adopted with a view to improving the condition of the poor is 'to secure due investigation and fitting action in all cases.' This investigation is undertaken in the interests of the poor themselves; for it is only after a careful consideration of the causes of misfortune that the remedies suitable in each case can be devised. Having discovered and weighed these causes, the district committees exert themselves to supply the remedy—to obtain 'fitting action'—with the assistance of private persons, with the aid of benevolent institutions, and, in the last resort, by a grant from their funds.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

C. S. LOCH.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE TIMES.'

SIR,—I am directed to forward you the following further particulars of the case of 'Veta,' the signature under which a letter, dated the 20th of October, appeared in your columns on the 24th of that month. On the 25th ult. you were good enough to insert a preliminary reply to that letter.

The main facts of the statement made by 'Veta' are that about eight or ten days before writing he went to the 'Charity Organisation, in Buckingham Street, Strand,' that after some conversation with a gentleman at the office he was given the name and address of a relieving officer, whose residence was some three miles off, and notwithstanding every entreaty and his statements that he and his son were quite exhausted and had not eaten anything since the previous morning, he had to leave the office without relief. He afterwards went to St. James's Park, and was there accosted by a policeman, to whom he said he was destitute, and had nowhere to go, for he had received notice to quit his lodgings. Then, after describing a night he passed in Covent Garden, he sums up his story by saying that he had been living on small remittances sent from the country by some relatives who were in very indigent circumstances; that these remittances were now for want of means discontinued; that he would be glad to procure employment in fair copying or anything else next to menial; and that having lived in the same town for many years, his character would bear the strictest investigation as to honesty, &c., in corroboration of which he states that the mayor and magistrates where he and his son had so long resided would give ample testimony.

The Council of the Society regret that they are compelled to make public the following facts, which have been ascertained respecting this statement.

The writer of the letter signed 'Veta' is named M. R. He called at the central office of this Society on the 21st of September—29 days, and not, as he states in his letter to you, eight or ten days before his letter was written. At this office he gave an address in the Wandsworth Road, at which he was at the time residing, and where he has been residing with his son from that time up to the present week. The landlord at these lodgings states that 'Veta' and his son, who have been living there eight or nine weeks, paid him 6d. a night each; that 'Veta' always appeared to have enough to meet his wants, and that he had never been turned out of his lodgings. This, therefore, shows 'Veta's' statement, that he and his son were destitute and homeless, was without foundation.

With regard to his alleged starvation, it is perfectly true that the official who received his application referred him to the relieving officer at Lambeth, and that he saw nothing to indicate any inability on his part to go so far. But the fact that he had always, according to the landlord's statement, sufficient money to pay for his lodgings, confirms the view that the official of the Society took of his case.

It further appears that his statement that his relations are in indigent circumstances is utterly untrue, for in another statement made by him he avers that his wife receives quarterly the interest of £2,200 at 4 per cent., and £1 weekly from her sister. She has, therefore, an income of £140 a year, and this income is irrespective of her earnings as a teacher of music.

With regard to his antecedents, at the request of his wife, he applied in April last to a gentleman who knew his circumstances, and by him he was given £1 or £2, being told that, if on inquiry he found any grounds for believing that he would conduct himself well in future, he would receive further assistance. Inquiry was then made privately by this gentleman, with results which more recent investigation has corroborated. 'Veta' has, it appears, occupied for 26 years very responsible posts in a country town, but lost his employment through giving way to drink.

Respecting the treatment of the case by this Society, the applicant was, as stated in my letter of the 24th ult., given the addresses both of the relieving officer and of the Lambeth Committee of the Society, and though the above statement of facts will, I believe, be considered conclusive, I must ask you to allow me to draw your attention to one or two important points.

Supposing 'Veta' to have been, as he states, starving and homeless, it is clear, on his own showing, that he did not avail himself of the help which the law had at a considerable cost provided for him, and which charity, on his being found deserving, was ready to give. He has not, to this day, called either on the relieving officer or at the office of the District Committee. He complains that he was referred to a relieving officer three miles off. It may not be generally known that no relieving officer but the one in the district in which he was residing or had slept the previous night would have relieved him, and had he gone to the Casual Ward he would have had food and better and more respectable shelter than Covent Garden or even an ordinary common lodging-house could afford.

Again, supposing him to have been starving, it should be remembered that every announcement of the Society such as those which I enclose states distinctly that applications for relief are not received at the central office, and if you will permit me to use the analogy, the application for relief in this case would be similar to the application of a pauper resident in the Strand Union for relief at the offices of the Local Government Board.

In cases of absolute hunger, persons making applications at any of the district committees of the Society receive bread to be eaten on the spot, and their applications are then investigated and either dealt with by the committees or reported to the persons sending them, if this be requested in writing. But at the central office, except when the official who receives such applications considers the case of such an exceptional nature that he is bound to contravene the rules laid down for his guidance under ordinary circumstances, no relief is there given, but the applicant is at once referred to the proper district committee.

In 'Veta's' case there did not appear to be any reason for departing from the usual course, and the facts that have since transpired appear to the Council to confirm fully the decision of their official.

It must not be thought that even after the false statements made, the Society is inclined to consider the case hopeless as regards the son. For you will agree, I believe, in considering that money given to the father would under the circumstances be worse than useless. The son has already been given the address of a Labour Agency where he is likely to obtain employment, and should he be willing to avail himself of this opportunity, and be proved to be in real need, it is possible that some assistance in providing him with outfit may be well bestowed.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

C. S. LOCH, Secretary.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 195.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 23, 1876.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE had met on Thursday last. There were present—

J. R. Hollond, in the Chair; Sir Chas. Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Major Yard, Capt. Fortescue, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Brown, Hill, Miner, Lawrence, and Peters.

And on Friday at an adjourned meeting were present—

J. R. Hollond, Esq. in the Chair; Sir Chas. Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, and Messrs. Hill, Lawrence, and Peters.

FINANCE.—The Committee reported that during the week ending November 1, the receipts had been £84. 2s. for the General Fund, and £310. 10s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £258. 13s. 5d. and £29. 13s. 5d. respectively.

GRANTS.—They had made grants of £30 to the Fulham Committee, and £30 to the Mile End Committee.

THE BYE-LAWS.—The proposed changes in the Bye-laws relating to the constitution of the Administrative Committee were discussed at length, and the Secretary was instructed to draft as Bye-laws the resolutions that were adopted, and to report on the whole question at the next meeting.

Various proposals for the improvement of the Meetings of Council were discussed; a resolution was carried that a paper be read at the second Meeting of Council in each month, and other points of detail were agreed upon. It was decided that these and the resolutions respecting the Administrative Committee should come up as recommendations to Council on Monday the 4th of December.

THE REPORTER.—It was agreed that in future all notices of the meetings of Sub-Committees should be given through the Reporter only, and that for this purpose there should be published as a standing notice in each number of the Reporter, a table of the work of the ensuing week; that the names of those present at the Administrative Committee, the Sub-Committees, and the Special Committees of the Council, should be published in the Reporter weekly, and that, whenever expedient, a short notice of the work of the Sub-Committees be inserted. It was further resolved that the returns of cases dealt with by District Committees, and forwarded to the Council weekly, should be published monthly in the Reporter, instead of each week as heretofore; and that monthly returns of Metropolitan pauperism should also be published.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the Meeting of this Sub-Committee on Tuesday the 14th inst. were present—

Major FitzRoy, in the Chair; Miss Octavia Hill, Mr. Bousfield, Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, and Miss E. Howes, visitor.

The Sub-Committee had, on a reference from the Administrative Committee, recommended that under no circumstances should expenses incurred by District Committees in the distribution of Mr. Peek's fund be paid from that fund; they had also recommended that Major-General Blunt and Miss E. Howes be asked to become members of the Sub-Committee. The Administrative Committee had approved the recommendations.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee were present—

Hon. H. R. Scott, in the Chair, and Major FitzRoy.

THE CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—This Sub-Committee had met on Wednesday the 15th inst.

Present: J. R. Holland, Esq., in the Chair; Major FitzRoy, Mr. A. H. Hill, Mr. W. M. Wilkinson.

MEDICAL COMMITTEE.—This Committee had met on Friday the 17th inst. Present: Sir Charles Trevelyan, in the chair; Mr. A. H. Hill, Dr. Hawksley, Dr. A. P. Stewart, Dr. Ford Anderson, and Dr. Leo, Visitor.

CORRESPONDENCE AT COUNCIL.

The Chairman drew attention to the fact that letters relating to motions to be discussed at Council were frequently received after the meeting of the Administrative Committee on Thursday. By the 5th Bye-Law no correspondence could be read at the meeting of Council, unless it was absolutely urgent, or unless the Administrative Committee had specially directed that it should be read. He urged that for the better conduct of Council business, this rule should be most strictly adhered to.

THE REPORTER.

In Mr. W. M. Wilkinson's absence, Major Prendergast, with the permission of Council, brought up the motion that was on the paper in Mr. Wilkinson's name—

That the Reporter be distributed gratis to all subscribers of not less than £1. He considered that viewing the Reporter from an educational standpoint, the Council should endeavour to make it a more valuable medium for propagating the principles of the Society. This end would be partly attained by increasing, at a comparatively small cost, its free circulation, and the larger the number to whom it appealed, the higher and more responsible would be the tone of its writing. It was not to be hoped that the Reporter would be a 'paying' publication; but as the subscribers to the Society were probably those most in accord with its principles, it was desirable to give them something in return, and to keep them informed of all that we were doing and hoping to do. The Council would thus make them more zealous coadjutors, and, as the Reporter was not merely a means of communicating with our District Committees, but a means of furnishing the public with useful information regarding the organisation of charity and the exposure of abuses and imposition, the large expense incurred in printing it would be more effectively utilised. He calculated that of the 300 subscribers to the Council, only 100 subscribed to the Reporter.

The motion having been duly seconded, the Secretary submitted papers showing that the Reporter cost the Council in 1874 about £254, of which £104 was repaid in the form of subscriptions to the Reporter, leaving a net loss of about £150. In 1875, in consequence of the bills not being sent out till late in December, only £68. 15s. 10d. appeared in the balance-sheet for that year as the sum repaid on account of the Reporter. Including the sums thus due to the Council, the loss to the Council in 1875 was, approximately, the same as that in 1874.

The income from the Reporter was now about £120 a year. Its average circulation, exclusive of the copies printed for the use of the Council, but including the free copies distributed, was about 745 a week. In 1875 there were about 320 'subscribers' to the Council, or 550 subscribers and donors. Of these 550 only 20 contributed less than £1; and of these 20 about half subscribed to the Reporter. Of the remaining 530, about 120 subscribed to the Reporter. To give free copies to all subscribers and donors of £1 and upwards would cost the Council about £132. At present all subscribers and donors of £5 and upwards received the Reporter free, if they wished it. The Secretary urged that to make the Reporter an organ of information worthy of the Society the co-operation of several volunteers in writing for it was absolutely necessary. He had at present statistics and reports on several important subjects closely connected with the work of the Society, which, owing to pressure of work, he was unable to summarise; from these papers, treated from the standpoint of the Society, conclusions were deducible which could not be found in the slight abridgments of parliamentary and other reports that occasionally appeared in the press.

Mr. A. H. Hill considered that the increased free circulation of the Reporter suggested by Mr. Wilkinson would be more than remunerative to the Society. It would increase both the interest in the Society's work and the general contributions. He wished to see the Reporter improved.

Miss O. Hill moved the following amendment, which was seconded by Dr. Daniel:—

That a good list of names of persons likely to be interested in the objects of the Society be looked out weekly, and that a certain number of free copies of the Reporter be distributed to them.

Mr. W. Wood thought that every effort should be made to increase the directly remunerative circulation of the Reporter. If the greater number of those who subscribed to the Council were also subscribers to the Reporter, it was plainly an unnecessary pecuniary loss to furnish them with free copies. If, on the other hand, but few of the subscribers to the Council were subscribers to the Reporter, we gave an undue privilege to subscribers to the Council.

Rev. W. A. Richmond spoke against and Major Nares in favour of the motion, and, Mr. Russell Barrington having given notice of an amendment requesting further statistics, Major Prendergast replied shortly. Miss Hill's amendment was then put and carried, 13 voting for it. The amendment was then adopted as a substantive motion.

The Council then adjourned.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

At their meeting to-day, the Committee will further consider the amendments to the Bye-laws referred to them by Council on the 13th instant, together with other important business.

The following business stands for Monday, the 27th inst.:—

- (1) To receive a report of the Organising Secretary on Charity Organisation in the Country.
- (2) Miss Octavia Hill to call attention to the relations of this Society with the District Visiting Societies of the Metropolis.

The following contributions were received during the week ending Saturday, November 18, 1876:—Donations: Mrs. F. Brady, £2; H. Clark, Esq., £1. 1s.; E. H., £25; T. R. Fothergill, £1. 1s.; 'R. A.' £1; T. G. Rooper, Esq., £5; Miss Seager, £5; Mrs. Tomlinson, £10.—Annual: Edmund Coulthurst, Esq., £3. 3s.; Miss Ewart, £3. 3s.; H. G. Hoare, Esq., £3. 3s.; Mr. and Mrs. Methuen, £1. 1s.; Heathfield Smith, Esq., £2. 2s.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

SHOREDITCH.—The Annual Report.—It appears that this Committee has dealt with 515 cases during the year ending September 30, 1876, as compared with 367 during the previous year. Out of the 515 applicants there were 52 labourers, 45 needlewomen, 35 charwomen, 34 shoemakers, 23 cabinetmakers, 21 hawkers, 18 porters, 16 general dealers, and 23 had 'no occupation.'

SYDENHAM.—The Annual Report.—The cases dealt with by this Committee during the past year have been 398 as compared with 390 in the year 1874-5; the non-resident cases have been 338, and the resident cases in which relief has been given numbered 44. Of the former, 48 are described as professional tramps, 156 as labourers, and 16 had no occupation.

OUT-DOOR RELIEF.—The following is an extract relating to Co-operation with the Guardians, and the question of out-door relief generally, taken from the Sydenham Report:—

'The largest distributor of charity in this district is the Relieving Officer. Parish relief is not the less charity because it is not given, but paid, by the ratepayers for the relief of the poor. The pauperising tendency of out-door relief is everywhere admitted, and the increase rather than its decrease in this district is a mystery. From June 1874 to June 1875 it cost £1,565. 6s. 1d.; and it rose to £1,614. 2s. 2d. for the year ending June 1876. The inquiry system at the Charity Office has been so effective that while the Committee relieved 195 cases in 1871, at a cost of £131. 9s. 8d., and 131 cases in 1875, at a cost of £47. 8s. 11d., only 44 cases were relieved at a cost of £36. 8s. 1d. in the year ending 30th September last.

'This District Committee has for the past seven years cordially co-operated with the Board of Guardians, and not only is the Charity Officer frequently exchanging notes with the Relieving Officer, but a printed list of the persons in this district receiving parochial relief is received from the Board, to whom a list of cases relieved by this Society is sent weekly. This Committee aims, by timely relief of a temporary kind to keep persons from applying to the parish, because those who have once done so are ever after ready to fall back upon Parish relief, while some would die rather than ever touch it. It is, however, so easy to get parish relief, that, rather than answer a few necessary questions at the Charity Office, as to their antecedents, some prefer to go off to the parish. One case may convince the subscribers to this Society, who are also ratepayers, of the necessity of due inquiry into parish cases, to prevent unworthy persons preying upon the poor-rates:—N. C. has been for years on the list of persons receiving out-door relief in money and food, costing the parish 10s. 2d. per week. This Society learned that he and others no sooner got out-door relief than they went direct to the public-house. The fact of men and women who got 3s. to 6s. or more weekly as parish relief, and somehow found means to get drunk, became evident and notorious. It was found out that N. C. not only got 10s. 2d. per week from the parish, but also 8s. weekly from a club in the country, unknown to the Parish Officers. Some of these cases, reported by this Society to the Relieving Officer and to the Guardians, were offered in-door relief, and this test being declined by such persons, the relief was struck off.'

PROVINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL.—The Secretary of Liverpool Central Relief and Charity Organisation Society, in a letter to the Liverpool Mercury, after enumerating several cases of apparent distress that had recently come under the notice of the Society, writes: 'My object in calling attention to these cases is twofold. 1, to show the impossibility of forming a proper judgment from outward appearances, or from the statements of the persons themselves—two of these cases appeared to the recommenders to be so needy as to call for special remark to that effect; and 2, to ask the public either to investigate themselves, or make use of the Liverpool Central Relief and Charity Organisation Society in investigating the circumstances of a case before giving relief, and where this society has refused relief, to withhold judgment upon it until they have ascertained the reasons for such refusal, which we are always ready to give. It should be borne in mind that investigation has the result not only of detecting imposture, but also of enabling us to find worthy objects for our charity, and thereby of increasing the satisfaction and confidence with which we relieve.'

DOVER.—'White Slaves.' The Dover Charity Organisation Association, on the receipt of a letter from this Society respecting Italian children, on the 2nd of this month, on the charge of begging, took before the magistrates an Italian woman, aged forty, and her son, aged ten, who had just arrived from Italy. The magistrate referred them to the Italian Consul, who undertook to provide for them in every way.

FOREIGN.

FRANCE.—THE AFFLICTED CLASSES.—According to statistics that have just been made known, out of a population of more than 36,000,000 in France there are 37,927 blind and 29,512 deaf and dumb; so that in 950 inhabitants there is one blind, and in 17,123 there is one deaf and dumb person. In Paris alone there are 7,333 mad people, whilst in all France there are 17,123 male and 14,964 female lunatics.—Sanitary Record.

A FOREIGN OPINION OF LONDON CHARITY.—The Bulletin du Bureau Central de Bienfaisance, published monthly in Geneva, says in its September number, after stating that the London subscription charities amount to about 98,572,025 francs:—'On est frappé lorsqu'on voit traduite en chiffres la générosité de l'Angleterre. Les manifestations de la charité y prennent une variété d'aspect très-grande et c'est un sujet intéressant d'étude que celui de la philanthropie chez cette nation. La misère, il est vrai, y revêt des aspects repoussants et semble défer parfois tous les remèdes, mais la philanthropie infatigable pour la combattre, crée ces nombreuses Sociétés de bienfaisance, d'instruction, d'évangélisation et d'œuvres qui ont pour but de faire le bien sous toutes les formes.

'Que ne peut-elle extirper la racine des maux de cette société: la charité légale.'

POOR-LAW CONFERENCES.

RESTRICTIONS ON OUTDOOR RELIEF.

At the Poor-law Conference for the Metropolitan District held in London on the 17th July last, the following resolutions were passed: 'That out-relief to widows having dependent children should be discontinued in the great majority of cases; maintenance in the pauper schools being offered instead for such of their children as they seem to be unable, with the help of relations, to support.' And, 'that indoor relief alone should be offered to applicants having near relatives able to support them, whether legally liable or not, except in special cases, during inquiry or pending arrangement.'

Mr. Vallance made some practical suggestions as to the mode of treating applications for outdoor relief:—'There are three considerations which have been lost sight of. First of all, the antecedent circumstances of the pauper herself; next, the effect of outdoor relief upon her and her children; and next, the effect of outdoor relief upon her poorer neighbours. And that brings me to this proposition, that it is absolutely impossible to draw any hard and fast line, and I would suggest that it is not desirable. In my own individual practice cases come before me in some such way as this:—A case comes before the guardians for the first time—a poor widow recently bereaved. Of course she excites commiseration, and then relief is given for a temporary period, and before that period has expired the case is probably referred to me. When the woman comes before me I at once enter into the circumstances of her case, and tell her plainly the guardians are disposed to do all they can to assist her, to get her upon her own feet; I tell her plainly that the guardians will not give her a permanent pension, and they will not send her into a poor neighbourhood as a standing advertisement of the evils of outdoor relief, and therefore that any relief that may be given will be sufficient to get her upon her feet; and then I ask her a series of questions as to her antecedents, and of her late husband, and what he has been doing; whether he was provident, and whether he was in a club, or whether anything led him to avoid making the provision for the future which he otherwise would have done; and next I ascertain whether there has been ordinary thrift; then I endeavour to ascertain the address of the employer, and whether any of the children are employed, and then a list of the relatives, with the object of getting assistance for her from them, so as to put her in an independent position. Failing that, she is told plainly that the guardians will only do what her friends ought to do for her, viz., assist in bettering her position by taking the children and putting them in orphanages; and so in that way each individual case is taken upon its merits, and dealt with in that way with the view of terminating outdoor relief, and in that way the woman is made a party to it.'

EDUCATION AT WORKHOUSE SCHOOLS.

Rev. Dr. Clutterbuck, in his Report on the Education of Pauper Children in 1875, which appears in the last Report of the Local Government Board, has published a table of results from evidence supplied by 184 Unions, comprising 12 English counties, and the whole of Wales. The figures are:—Total number of children sent out, 5,999; reported as still in place or doing well, 3,056; doubtful or bad, 273; returned to and still in the house, 178; no information as to present condition, 2,026; dead, 46.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of November 1876 was 36,635, and 43,002 received outdoor relief, making a total of 79,637. This was an increase of 564 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 3,642, 12,392, and 21,026 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 664. This was a decrease of 29 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 111 on the corresponding day of last year.

DIFFICULT CASES.

No. 2.—Referring to the 'difficult case' mentioned in last week's Reporter of C. D., aged 51, a ropemaker, unable to work from failing sight (recovery hopeless), and having four young children, and a wife earning only from 8s. to 10s. a week, I beg to remark that it does not seem to me to be a case for a pension. First, it seems to me that unless there are other circumstances of providence and desert besides that of the man having belonged to his trade club, the case should be dealt with by the guardians. The man should enter the infirmary, whence he might be removed to a blind asylum when eligible, at the expense of the rates, and that number of the children which the wife cannot maintain should be taken into the District schools. Ropemakers are not usually of a sufficiently high class to have any fair objection to such a mode of assistance.

Secondly. Presuming that the circumstances of the case do make it incumbent on private charity to deal with it, I do not see that any permanent allowance is required. The almoner for the Society for the Relief of Distressed might assist the family through the winter to supplement the better, work which will, it is expected, be obtained for the wife. The case might, during the summer, be helped by some private person or from the funds of the Charity Organisation Society, and directly the man becomes eligible for an asylum, his maintenance in one should be paid for by the guardians.

As to the children, it is possible that the wife might be enabled to support them all; if not, the elder ones might be placed in an orphanage and a lump sum paid for their maintenance until of working age, or some charitable person might be found to allow a sum weekly for the same period.

It occurs to me as just possible that the wife might obtain work in which her husband, though blind, might be able to assist; and, if so, there would be no advantage in separating them, unless it were possible for the man, though 51, to learn at a blind institution some means of earning a livelihood.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES.—III.

SECULAR PHILANTHROPY.—It may be felt that we are now going beyond the limits of a strict secular philanthropy; and, doubtless, such is the close alliance between the moral and the economical—such the intimate dependence which the comfort of a people has upon their character—that we cannot bestow a full entertainment on the one topic without trenching upon the other, and so as to establish a line of continuity in our argument from things earthly to things spiritual. Nevertheless, as there is a real distinction between the two services, so is it of great importance to the wellbeing of a people that, in their behalf, they should be undertaken by separate and distinct agents; or that, in the arrangements of a benevolent association, as that of a church devising for the whole good of the families in a given neighbourhood, they should be vested in distinct office-bearers. But this is a matter which will fall to be adjusted afterwards; and meanwhile we can confidently aver of the philanthropist who limits himself to the services which we have now assigned for him, or who even acquits himself well and in the spirit of kindness of greatly fewer than these, that he will earn by it a mighty influence for good over the people whom he has thus selected as the objects of his care. They will not look unmoved on these his labours of love. It is not in nature that they should; for there is a spell and a sway in human kindness, if it but give the unequivocal tokens of its reality which even the hardest and most ungainly of our race feel to be irresistible. This is a law which has been mainly lost sight of in the innumerable projects of our day for the amelioration of society—the sweetening effect of mere acquaintanceship, though it should amount to no more than courtesy, between the men of higher and men of humbler rank in the commonwealth; and still more should it rise to cordiality, when it will be found that there are a moral action and reaction in the world of spirits, which, like the reciprocities of the material system, have been established by an all-wise Creator to maintain the harmony and stability of the whole.—On the Sufficiency of the Parochial System, by Dr. Chalmers.

PROVIDENT HABITS.

The following is taken from the last circular of the National Penny Bank, 269 and 270 Oxford Street:—

‘The first Penny Bank was opened on the 9th October 1875. There are now 43 branches: of these, 10 are open every evening; 13 once or twice a week; 4 are in workshops open once a week; 16 are in schools open once a week.

‘The number of Deposits up to 30th September was 176,180.
 ‘The amount deposited . . . £21,122 11 8
 ‘The amount withdrawn . . . 9,835 7 5
 ‘And the balance in hand . . . 11,187 4 3

‘These results, which far exceed the anticipations of the founders of the Penny Bank, not only prove that it meets a great want among the poorer classes, but that there is every chance of this want being supplied on a commercial basis.

REPORTS AND PAMPHLETS RECEIVED.

Annual Reports of the Shoreditch and Sydenham Committees.
 Paper on the Boarding-out of Pauper Children in England by W. Tal-lack. Read at the Glasgow Meeting of the British Association, September 1876. Harris & Co. 4d.
 Manual for Visitors of the Poor, by John W. Kramer, M.D. Appleton & Co., New York.
 A Century of Nursing, with Hints toward the Organisation of a Training School. (Paper No. 11 of the New York State Charities Aid Association.)

MENDICITY.—In the Eighth Annual Report of the South-East London Auxiliary to the City Mission, a Missionary writes: ‘I meet a number of able-bodied men who want no work to do. They appear to thrive. If the people who support this class knew half as much as I know, they would never relieve beggars at the doors.’

VILLAGE CLUBS.

In the Times of October 23 will be found an account of a ‘Village Club Association’ started more than a year ago in Suffolk, to supplement, as far as possible, by means of a county organisation parochial and isolated efforts to start and maintain village clubs. It assists existing clubs and reading rooms; it aids in starting new ones; for these it suggests rules, found to work well in practice elsewhere; it provides for an interchange of books and for lectures on subjects other than politics and theology; it supplies in a suitable form information about Provident Societies, Savings Banks, and other kindred institutions; and it stands ready to assist pecuniarily. Such clubs may be affiliated to the central body, share in its management, and receive loans of dissolving views, books, &c. One of the Hon. Secs., Mr. R. Johnson, of Boyton, Woodbridge, with whom the plan of the Association originated, has written a practical little pamphlet on the subject.

PUBLIC DAY NURSERIES.

The Bulletin, published quarterly by the Société des Crèches of Paris has, in its October number, an article on Mr. W. G. Howgrave's report on the Public Day Nurseries of London, which was published by the Charity Organisation Society in 1872. The writer of the article contrasts the Crèches of Paris with the Public Day Nurseries of London, and points out that the amount paid daily by the parents of the children in the former city is, as a rule, much smaller than that paid in the majority of the London nurseries. He accounts for this difference by pointing out that in France charitable assistance is still the dominant idea in the minds of those who support the Crèches and other charitable institutions, while in England, ‘the country of self-help,’ the dominant idea is to supply to those who are able to earn their living without charitable assistance, an institution in which their children can be taken care of while they are absent at their daily work. He also draws attention to the fact that, even at the higher charge made in the London nurseries, the amounts received from the parents are not sufficient to pay for the rent of the rooms in which the children are received; and he quotes, at length, a paragraph in which Mr. Howgrave suggests that a nursery should be attached to each Board school. He states that the same difficulty has been experienced at Paris, and that the Société des Crèches has for a long time been endeavouring to impress on the municipal authority the desirability of setting apart a room for use as a Crèche, in the buildings which it constructs for schools or salles d'asile, and he insists strongly upon the great advantage it would be to the families of the working population, if they could find in the same building institutions which would receive all their children. He concludes this portion of the article by expressing the hope that in this matter, as in many others, the example of England may be followed by France, and that, when the experiment has been made here, the neighbouring country will profit by it.

THE COUNCIL OF THE CHARITY ORGANISATION

SOCIETY desire to invite the attention of those interested in the work they have in hand to their Collection of Reports of Charities and works of reference on Poor Law and Charity, which may at all times be consulted at the Central Office, free of charge, together with the Reports and Suggestions of the Society on various Social Questions.

The Secretaries are authorised to furnish particulars with regard to Charitable Societies to persons desirous of such information.

The Council will be glad to receive letters of recommendation for Hospitals, Convalescent Homes, &c., for distribution to suitable cases through the District Committees.

Contributions to the funds of the Council can be paid at the Central Office, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi; or at Messrs. Coutts & Co.'s, 59 Strand, W.C.

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, Dec. 4:—

To consider the following Bye-laws recommended by the Administrative Committee in accordance with the resolution of Council of the 14th inst.:—

'Bye-law 21. The Administrative Committee shall consist of the Chairman, Vice-chairmen, Treasurer, and twenty-five members of Council, who shall be elected annually, at the seventh meeting after the general annual meeting of the Society, by the members of Council entitled to vote.

'Bye-law 22. The names of all those willing to serve shall be submitted to Council by the Secretary at the fifth meeting after the general annual meeting of the Society. The election shall be by ballot.

'Bye-law 23. Members of the Administrative Committee shall be eligible for re-election. Members of Council shall be at liberty to attend the meetings of the Administrative Committee as visitors. The Committee shall have power to fill up vacancies and report the same for confirmation at the next meeting of Council.

'Bye-law 24 to be the same as the present Bye-law No. 23.

'Bye-law 29. Add the words "and Sub-Committees of the Administrative Committee."

'Bye-law 30. The Administrative Committee shall appoint, to take charge of special branches of the work of the Society, such Sub-Committees as may from time to time appear to them expedient. Each Sub-Committee shall elect a chairman and vice-chairman from such of its members as are members of the Administrative Committee. Each Sub-Committee shall, on a recommendation to the Administrative Committee, be empowered to add to its number members of Council or members of any of the District Committees of the Society.'

[The Bye-laws in which alterations have been made are—

'21. The Administrative Committee shall consist of not fewer than nine members, and shall be elected annually within one month after the Annual Meeting, members being eligible for re-election. Any member of Council shall be at liberty to attend its meetings, and to vote.

'22. All new representative members of Council shall be placed on this Committee, unless they have served upon it at some previous time, and their names shall be kept upon the list for at least three months, provided they continue members of Council.

'24. If a member of the Administrative Committee has not attended for thirteen consecutive weeks, it shall not be necessary to send him notices when such are issued. (It is proposed to omit this Bye-law and substitute for it Bye-law No. 23, which is as follows:—'The Committee shall meet on Thursdays at 3 p.m., and at such other times as they may specially adjourn to, or the Council appoint.')

'29. The Chairman of the Administrative Committee shall vote with other members upon all questions, and shall have a second or casting vote in the case of an equal division. This rule shall apply to all Committees of the Council.')

The following letters have been received for the use of the East End Districts:—

One in-patient and one out-patient's letter, City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest;
Three letters for the City of London Truss Society;
Four out-patients' letters for the Royal Maternity Charity;
Three cards for the Provident Surgical Appliance Society;
And one in-patient's letter for the Royal Sea Bathing Infirmary, Margate.

The St. George's (Hanover Square) Committee are dealing with the non-resident cases of Donahue and Evans.

Two letters for the Eastbourne Convalescent Home, not available after December 30 next, may be had on application to the Paddington Committee, 20 Westbourne Park Terrace, Harrow Road, W. A similar letter for the Metropolitan Convalescent Institution can be had on application at the central office.

A letter for the Convalescent Home at Ventnor or at Bournemouth is urgently wanted.

A meeting of District Visitors and others interested in the welfare of the poor will be held at the Townshend Buildings, Vincent Square, Westminster, at 4.30 P.M., Wednesday, the 6th December. Rev. Brooke Lambert will read a paper. Rev. Canon Farrar, Miss Octavia Hill, and others will address the meeting.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE had met on Thursday last. There had been present—

J. R. Hollond, in the Chair; Lady Wilson, Major FitzRoy, Major Prendergast, Major Yard, Capt. Fortescue, Messrs. Barrington, Hill, Miner, Lawrence, and Peters.

FINANCE.—The Committee reported that during the week ending November 18, the receipts had been £56. 8s. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £213. 4s. 3d. and £176. 19s. 9d. respectively, the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—They had made grants of £20 to the St. Saviour's Committee, and £20 to the Woolwich Committee.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on Tuesday, the 14th inst., had been present—

Major FitzRoy, in the Chair; Miss Octavia Hill, Miss E. Howes, Mr. Bousfield, and Mr. Barrington.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee had been present—

Mr. Aspinall, in the Chair; Major FitzRoy, Capt. Gardner, and Mr. Barrington.

THE CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At this Sub-Committee had been present—

J. R. Hollond, Esq., in the Chair; Major FitzRoy, Major Prendergast, Rev. M. S. A. Walrond, Rev. H. F. Mallet, Mr. W. M. Wilkinson.

DISTRICT VISITING SOCIETIES.

Miss Octavia Hill said that while the District Committees of the Society were trying to benefit the poor by a wise distribution of charity, there were throughout London numerous 'Visitors' by whom the great mass of charity was dispensed, who had not adopted any method of investigation, and were guided by no fixed principles in the bestowal of their alms. The clergy had seldom the time to attend the meetings of the District Committees, and though frequently aware of the injudicious action of their visitors, were unable to pay sufficient attention to the details of parish work and remedy the defects. She suggested, therefore, that one lay member of each body of District Visitors should attend a District Committee of the Charity Organisation Society; that this person should act as secretary to the visitors, and that all communications from the District Committee should be made through her. By this means one of the visitors would gradually instruct the rest, information would find its way to all those personally engaged in work amongst the poor, investigation would be introduced, and the system of giving relief would be reformed by the visitors themselves through the agency of their secretary. The plan she proposed was applicable to the system of distributing relief adopted by Nonconformists and to all Visiting Societies; she did not wish to restrict it to parochial visitors. As a rule the secretary should be a lady.

Rev. H. F. Mallet drew attention to the article written by Miss Hill that appeared in Good Words for July last. It seemed to him impossible to reform the relief system except through the visitors themselves.

Mr. Russell Barrington pointed out that in many districts of London there was no real organised system of visiting.

Miss Collett said that at South St. Pancras they had received great help from Mrs. Ranyard's Bible women, in watching cases which the Society had relieved.

Sir Charles Trevelyan said that the Charity Organisation Society dealt with special cases; the visitors were brought face to face with the entire mass of pauperism. In the West the visitors formed large active bodies; but in almost every part of London there were Bible women or some local organisation. He then explained the system of Parochial Councils at work in the St. George's (Hanover Square) District. The system was based on the report of a conference of the clergy and ministers of all denominations, held at the Board Room of the Guardians four or five years ago. Twenty Councils were formed. The visitors were made members, and undertook to give no relief on their own responsibility, except in urgent cases, which were reported at the next meeting of their Council. A member of the District Committee of the Charity Organisation Society served on each Parochial Council. By this means new principles were gradually introduced, and cases of special difficulty were referred to the Committee of the Society. He thought some system such as that proposed by Miss Hill should be adopted throughout London.

Major Prendergast considered that it was extremely difficult to secure effective co-operation on the plan of Parochial Councils. In St. George's they had in most cases become Church Relief Societies. He moved—

That Miss Octavia Hill be requested to embody her suggestions with reference to the relations of this Society to District Societies in a written communication, with a view to the further consideration of the question by Council.

Mr. Bousfield seconded the motion, and described a plan which the Kensington Committee had attempted to introduce in that district. The Committee had made a grant to a body of district visitors, on condition that it should be distributed according to the principles of the Society; and it was arranged that one member of the Committee should attend the meetings of the visitors. But the visitors generally spent the funds entrusted to them in the immediate relief of apparently distressing cases. He believed the only successful plan would be to educate the visitors, as Miss Hill proposed, through members of their own body. In some parts of London, where there were very few visitors, the Society might be able to give the clergy great assistance by obtaining visitors for them.

Rev. J. D. McGachen dwelt on the difficulties of carrying out any metropolitan scheme. In his parish, with a population of 11,522, he could not reckon on having more than £1 a week for relief purposes.

Mr. H. N. Hoare gave the details of an arrangement recently made with Canon Nisbet by the St. Giles Committee.* Each case referred to the Committee was, during investigation, assisted, if there was urgent want, by relief in kind. It was visited by a member of the Committee, and subsequently decided by the Committee on the principles of the Society.

After a few words from Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. H. H. Hill, and others, Miss Hill replied briefly, and the motion was put and carried unanimously.

The Council then adjourned.

The following contributions were received during the week ending Saturday, November 25, 1876:—Donations: E. L. Ames, Esq., £5; F. Calvert, Esq., £10; Miss Susan M. Harrington £1; H. D. Skrine, Esq., £1. 1s. Annual: Rev. H. F. H. Burchell-Herne, £2. 2s.; G. Loch, Esq., £1. 1s.; Miss Phillips, £10; Sir John Robinson, £2. 2s.—D. C. A. Fund: Mrs. Dunville (a) £1.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

HACKNEY.—The Annual Meeting.—The Annual Meeting of the Hackney Committee was held last week, at the Old Town Hall. The Chairman, Mr. Robert King, in opening the proceedings, said they had now arrived at that stage of the history of Charity in this country in which, from its enormous sphere of action, both public and private, it was attracting the gravest thoughts of the public. Public alms were recognised as indispensable; but the proper form of their administration had always been a subject of controversy. Poorhouses formerly were mere prisons. Now there were infirmaries conducted on humane and scientific principles—poor, he hoped, to be recognised by the poor as kind hospices into which they might enter. London occupied an area of 78,000 acres; its population was 4 millions; with a yearly accretion of 75,000. It administered a poor rate of nearly £2,000,000. But the private charities of London were estimated, as dispensed, at £7,000,000. Of the great hospitals, and of the large educational establishments, and of most of the 900 charities enumerated in the Handbooks of the Charities of London, he did not speak, but of the many smaller centres of charity scattered broadcast over the whole of the metropolis. A most mischievous system of relief was pursued, has it consisted for the main part of the small dole system; and when the visitor gave it, was simply a miserable pittance, and a link in the chain which bound down the recipients into just so dependents. There was another system of relief resorted to, which it mischievous, viz.: that of promiscuous almsgiving without object or aim. A tale of woe excited sympathy; the purse was opened, and relief given. But what right had any man thus to show to the poor was better to beg than to work? To parody a well-known saying, it was a game requiring two to play it. Certainly the strength of one of the parties concerned depended materially on the strength or weakness of the other. It might be within their remembrance a few winters ago there was a large amount of distress in the East of London, which attracted attention and sympathy from the West. Numbers of benevolent men came from the West End with pockets full of money ready to help. But it became apparent the more was given the more distress became. Now, there was one amongst those men, whose name must command reverence—he alluded to Mr. Edward Denison—estimated for himself the cause of that extraordinary state of things, the simultaneous increase of distress and of alms-giving. He came to live amidst the misery; and his conclusions were certainly startling. He left a record of his experiences which ought to be a text-book dispensers of charity. One of his conclusions was that sensational and reckless almsgiving were doing terrible evils, by pouring money into the haunts of misery and vice. And that every act, however beneficial, which seemed or defeated a man's responsibility, was an usurpation of the work of Divine Providence. Then came the extraordinary axiom that idleness and pauperism were like two connected reservoirs which always kept at the same level. Charity was indeed a science difficult to study, because it dealt with the ever-shifting, the ever-changing phases of human life and action. What would answer in the one case would not possibly in the very next instance. It could therefore only be pursued by study, by patiently collecting information; and that this Society professed to do. The information collected by the Committee of the Charity Organisation was open to all; and he urged that every body or congregation of men who dispensed alms should have a representative at that Board, not to reveal what they were doing, but to gain information of what others were doing, so as to stop, if possible, the overlapping of gifts. They would then be doing a great good, as one thing: however disappointed they might be because some of their efforts were unsuccessful, yet they would have a bright future before them as the educational movement passed over the country, and washed away the great impediments to progress—ignorance and vice.

Rev. L. E. Shelford read the annual report. It dwelt upon the tendency to misunderstand the aims of the Society, and accounted for the feeling against it from two facts: 1. Charitable people had learned to look upon the glaring evils the Society had already removed, the ground of the beggar being cleared and the overlapping of charity removed; 2. The public heard of every attempt to repress unwise or unneeded charity, but did not hear the continued efforts to help the deserving. Some had been made in the working of the Hackney Committee, chiefly as regulations for visitors, each case being now brought before the committee.

The report mentioned the resignation of Mr. C. Kemp as one of the secretaries. His untiring attention to the office for eight years, his sympathy with the poor, and ability in dealing with cases, would be his loss severely felt. The Committee prayed for enlarged support. The cases brought before the Committees, exclusive of all brought by the visitors before the alterations came in force, were nearly 100 more than last year.

ILES'S AND BLOOMSBURY COMMITTEE.—District Visiting.—Following are the terms of an arrangement made by this Committee with Mr. Nisbet:—

at on any case of distress coming under the notice of the Clergy, (according to printed form) be sent by them to the office of the Committee.

at the Committee consist both of gentlemen who undertake to visit personally and of others who only undertake to be present at Committee meetings.

at the Committee undertake that there shall always be one gentleman to visit personally any case the particulars of which shall be sent to the office before 9.30 A.M.

at a rota be kept by the Secretary of Visiting Gentlemen, and a list sent by him, at the beginning of every month, to each Visiting Gentleman, the days on which he will be expected to attend at the office, and visit.

at in the event of any gentleman not being able to visit on his own behalf as soon as possible endeavour to make arrangements with another gentleman to take his duty.

at if the case appears to such gentleman specially pressing and if immediate relief, he be empowered to relieve at once by tickets not exceeding 2s. 6d. in value, and to bring the matter before the Weekly Relief Committee for further consideration.

7. That if the case be not pressing, it be brought before the next Relief Committee meeting.

8. That if the case appears doubtful, or undeserving, or requiring to be verified, the inquiry to be entrusted to the Charity Agent.

9. That the Charity Agent shall not visit any in the first instance.

10. That the Clergyman who forwards the case to the Committee be expected to attend the Committee meeting next after sending a recommendation, and also that every gentleman who during the previous week has visited any case be expected to attend.

11. In consideration of the valuable assistance rendered by the Committee, and in the hope that they will be able to raise funds for the efficient working out of such a system, the Rector of St. Giles's is willing to give an amount equal to half of the relief given to such cases as are brought under the notice of the Society by the Clergy of St. Giles's. As the plan, however, is tentative, it is to be understood that such aggregate sum given by the Rector will not necessarily exceed £100 before the end of March 1877. He is to be informed, at the end of every month, how much money is due from him.

PROVINCIAL.

OUTDOOR RELIEF AND VAGRANCY.

OXFORD.—The Annual Meeting, Charity Organisation.—The annual meeting of the Oxford Anti-Mendicity and Charity Organisation Society was held on the 3rd instant. The Rev. W. A. Spooner, the Treasurer, read the report. It appeared that there had been a large increase in the amount of loans made by the Society. In 1874, £62. 10s. was thus distributed; in 1875, £129. 19s. 5d.; and during the past year, £205. 12s. 6d. The Provident Dispensary, with which the Society is connected, though only opened at Lady Day of this year, had three doctors on its staff and as many as 658 provident members on its books. The report was adopted, on the motion of the Rev. W. H. Duggan, seconded by Rev. A. Acland. The President of the Society—the President of Trinity College—moved a vote of thanks to the Hon. Colonel Sackville West, who was subsequently elected President of the Society for the ensuing year.

Colonel West, in returning thanks, said:—When he came to Oxford he had been at this sort of work in London, and he was naturally anxious to continue it here, and it was a very great gratification to him to be able to do what he had been able to do for the last four or five years. In thanking them, he should like to take the opportunity of saying one or two words about the working of the Society, as it appeared to him. He thought he could cordially agree with that part of the Report which spoke somewhat hopefully of the work of the Society. He thought it had done good service in one branch of the work to which it had directed its efforts; it had done something to encourage provident habits, and he thought it had helped a little to diminish pauperism. He thought that by its rigid investigation of the cases submitted to it, it had detected a great deal of imposture. It had cut off from the undeserving a deal of the help which they ought not to receive. So far that was satisfactory, and it was also in another branch, by the Provident Dispensary, which was working in the same direction of encouraging provident habits.

But looking to the second of the Society's objects, he did not think it was quite so satisfactory. The Society, it appeared to him, was not sufficiently widely known among those who were engaged in charitable work in Oxford to be able to prevent that waste of alms which were to a very great extent given at random. It had been confined, and its operations were known but to a few of the charitable persons in Oxford, and those who had used it would, he thought, be ready to confess the benefit it had been. But there were a vast number who did not use it at all, who scarcely knew of its existence, who did not take the trouble to inquire what it was doing, and if by any means that large class could be reached he thought the Society would be carrying out what was to his mind the most important of its work, the organisation of charity. He thought it was at that time especially important that the Society's attention should be directed to that; as the Report pointed out, here and elsewhere there was a gradual conviction growing that outdoor relief afforded by the Poor Law must come to an end. It had been diminished very much in this place, as they knew, and it had been the greatest of the causes which had produced the diminution of the poor rates of this place to something like 7d. in the pound during the last five years, and that was a great thing. He called on those who worked among the poor to say whether there had been any increase of poverty among them in consequence. He believed not the least, but that there had been an increase of provident habits among them; and if outdoor relief were to cease altogether, and the relief afforded by the rates were to be simply and solely that given in the workhouse, then there was a grand field for organised charity. There must be a large number of cases one did not wish to send into the workhouse; they should be dealt with out of doors, and that could only be done by organised charity—not by individuals giving away money, as now, to individual cases, and perpetuating all the evils of the outdoor system, but by persons combining together and rigidly investigating the deserving cases, and providing for them properly, instead of letting them go to the workhouse.

Subsequently the following resolution was moved by Colonel West, seconded by the Rev. G. S. F. Glanville, and carried:—'That it be an instruction to the Committee to consider what means they should take for bringing to the notice of the County Magistrates the desirability of introducing some such system into Oxfordshire as prevails in Dorsetshire and elsewhere.'

CROYDON.—The Annual Meeting of the Croydon Charitable Society was held on Thursday evening the 23rd inst., in the magistrates' room at the Town Hall. Rev. Canon Hodgson (Vicar) was in the chair. It appears from the Annual Report that one of the most successful of the Society's undertakings is a 'Boys Employment Brigade.' There are now seven boys in this. The boys are housed, fed, clothed, and trained. During the year three have been provided with permanent situations. Each is obliged to lay by in the bank a certain proportion of his earnings. One boy joined the Brigade on the 2nd January 1876, and though wholly unused to work of any kind, and then only eleven years of age, he has, by continual good conduct and industry amassed in his bank no less a sum than £5. 7s. 7d., besides having paid entirely for his own clothing, schooling, and food, and 3d. a night for his lodging.

BRIGHTON.—A Begging Impostor.—The following is taken from the Brighton and Hove Daily Post of the 11th inst.:—'A singular application was made on Thursday to the Brighton magistrates by a middle-aged man, who gave his name as Frederick Watkins. He had, he said, been convicted five years ago for fortune-telling, and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment, which he underwent. Since that time he had been struggling hard to gain an honest livelihood, and could produce weighty testimonials, one being from the Earl of Chichester, to that effect; but whenever he obtained a situation he was dogged by the officer of the local Charity Organisation Society, who made such statements that those who took an interest in him would have no more to do with him, so that he was constantly losing his situation. He therefore asked whether such conduct of the officer could not be stopped. The Bench said the matter did not rest with them, and told him he had better consult a solicitor.'

In the same paper, on the 18th instant, appeared the following:—'At a recent meeting of the Borough Magistrates, Mr. Brandreth, the Solicitor to the Charity Organisation Society, attended to refute a statement made by a man named Watkins, who was before the Bench a few days since, to the effect that in his endeavours to gain an honest livelihood he was continually being dogged by the officer of the Charity Organisation Society, in consequence of which he was always unable to obtain a situation. Mr. Bigge said that the question could not be discussed before him. Mr. Brandreth pointed out that the charge was of a serious nature, and it having gone forth to the public by means of the press, he thought it right to give an entire denial to it. To this we may add, by way of friendly hint to Mr. Watkins and others of his class, that if they will only refrain from sending begging letters and getting tradesmen, who know nothing about them, to write misleading certificates of character, they will have nothing to fear from the Society's agent, who merely does his duty in accordance with his instructions, and can have no motive for "persecuting" anyone in the way represented by the complainant.'

CARDIFF.—The Cardiff Board of Guardians have resolved to distribute, as far as possible, bread instead of money as outdoor relief, it having been noticed that outdoor paupers in receipt of money relief are sometimes summoned for drunkenness.

FOREIGN.

NEW YORK.—We have just received from New York a 'Manual for Visitors of the Poor,' written by J. W. Kramer, M.D. The writer, in the introduction, says:—'A Handy-Book for Visitors of the Poor in London,' by Charles B. P. Bosanquet, M.A., Secretary of the Charity Organisation Society, a little work of many valuable suggestions, may not be said to have inspired this effort of mine, but certainly it urged me to the performance of a task that had been put aside. Had it been possible to adapt that book for London visitors to our work, an original Manual would not have been attempted. But the wide differences encountered in so many features of social life made it impracticable to do so.'

These are three of the 'Instructions for a Visitor':—1. There is a radical distinction between paupers and those poor who have not been pauperised. The welfare of society, and, above all else, the virtue and prosperity of the individual, demand that the utmost solicitude and care be taken that no man, woman, or child be pauperised. It is a sad fact that you will do this very thing, as there are cases which will most urgently appeal to your humanity, and which you cannot relieve without the disastrous consequence. Let them be as few as possible. Social science has discovered for us that this is the disheartening feature of the work; and mental and moral philosophers will bear their testimonies to the sure harm that most benevolent work is doing. You have made that person a pauper who begins to lean upon you or anyone else rather than on his own exertions. You have planted the seed of pauperism in a child when you permit that child to know that you are ready to help the child or the parent where one can help himself. "To beg I am ashamed," is one saving principle of humanity. There is a deep and broad truth beneath the prevalent idea that it is disgraceful to be a beggar. When anyone can beg without shame, self-respect is gone, if it ever existed. 2. Money or its equivalent is the last thing to be given anyone who is able to earn for himself. 3. The best service you can render to anyone needing aid is to help him to help himself.'

BOARDING OUT.

Mr. W. Tallack, the Secretary of the Howard Association, in a paper read by him at the meeting of the British Association at Glasgow, in September last, says:—

'There are 563 Poor Law Unions in England, of which 127 have adopted the boarding-out system, in greater or less degree, for some of their children. There are, in addition, forty-seven Welsh Unions, of which thirty have adopted the system. The total number of children thus placed out is about 1,900 in England and 900 in Wales.'

'Perhaps the largest and most successful experiment in this direction has been made in and around Birmingham, mainly through the exertions of Miss Joanna M. Hill and other ladies, forming a Committee of more than fifty in all. They have issued three reports, in the last of which they state that they have eighty children under their care (twenty-five boys and fifty-five girls), located in selected homes, in Birmingham, Bewdley, Malvern, Worcester, Atherstone, &c. The total cost of each child is 4s. per week, or £10. 8s. per annum. The Committee remark—"We have observed a marked improvement in health: the individual care and attention bestowed by the foster-mother upon her charge—an attention impossible where many children are collected together—seems to exercise a most beneficial influence upon their physical welfare."

'Another very successful Committee is that at Clifton, near Bristol. Its Secretary, Miss Woodward, writes to the National Committee (July 29, 1876):—"We continue to feel satisfied with the success attending the boarding-out, particularly in respect to girls, the home-life they lead qualifying them to become useful servants." About thirty-five orphans are cared for by the Clifton Committee.'

'A third very successful Boarding-out Committee is that in Chorlton Union, Manchester, where about forty children are placed out. The total expense of each child is less than £10 per annum. After seven years' experience, the Committee report that the system "affords the best prospect of enabling the children to escape, or throw off, the evil effects of their association with children of the lowest classes constantly passing through the schools, and of placing them in as good a position for making their way in the world, and for fulfilling the purpose of their existence, as the working classes generally enjoy." The foster-parents of the children placed out by this Committee include thirteen artisans, six widows, three policemen, a clerk, a postman, a city missionary, a parish clerk, a schoolmaster, three foremen, and two warehousemen.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of November 1876 was 37,005, and 43,557 received outdoor relief, making a total of 80,562. This was an increase of 925 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 3,178, 11,592, and 20,968 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 681. This was an increase of 17 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and 79 on the corresponding day of last year.

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, Dec. 11:—

I. To consider the Bye laws recommended by the Administrative Committee (vide Reporter, No. 196, p. 165), and the proposed amendments (vide p. 170).

II. To consider the following alterations in the Bye-laws recommended by the Administrative Committee with a view to the improvement of the Meetings of Council:—

(1) That the following words be added to Bye-law 8, viz.:—'Questions may be asked at one meeting of Council and discussed at the next, due notice being given in the Reporter in the interval.'

(2) That the following Bye-law be adopted:—'The Administrative Committee shall arrange that at 4 P.M. on the second Monday in each month, during the sittings of Council, a short practical paper be read on some subject connected with the work of the Society. The Administrative Committee may on these occasions invite a Vice-President of the Society, or any gentleman of special experience, to take the chair during the discussion.'

(3) That the following words be added to Bye-law 9, viz.:—'Speeches, with the exception of those of the mover and seconder of a motion, shall be limited to 10 minutes.'

8. The questions referred to in Bye-law 5 (D) shall be in writing, and shall relate only to peculiar cases coming under the notice of the District Committees, or to subjects in regard to which the information and experience of other members or Committees are desirable. In these cases the Chairman shall allow short answers to be made, but not more than one quarter of an hour shall be devoted to this head.]

III. To receive from the Administrative Committee an ad interim report on the financial condition of the Society and the District Committees, based as far as possible upon the estimates for 1876-7 and balance-sheets for 1875-6, forwarded by District Committees in accordance with the resolution of Council of 3rd of July last.

District Committees are reminded that their Annual Reports should be made up to September 30, 1876, and should have been issued early in November.

We have to thank Subscribers, for Convalescent letters received for the benefit of the urgent case for which we appealed last week.

In-patients' letters for the Hospital for Paralysis, Portland Place, Regent's Park, and the Hospital for Women, Soho Square, may be had on application to the Secretary.

STRAND.—The Annual Meeting of the Strand Committee will be held in the room of the Society of Arts, John Street, Adelphi, on Friday, the 8th instant, at 4 P.M.

FULHAM.—Sir Douglas Forsyth, C.B., has been elected chairman of this Committee, in the place of Mr. E. B. Eastwick, C.B., resigned.

ST. GILES.—Mr. H. M. Keary has been elected representative of this Committee, in the place of Hon. E. F. Kenyon, resigned.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE had met on Thursday last. There had been present—

J. R. Holland, in the Chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major Yard, Capt. Fortescue, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Douglas Brown, Barrington, Hill, Hoare, Miner, Lawrence, Burdett-Roberts, and Peters.

FINANCE.—The Committee reported that during the week ending November 25 the receipts had been £32. 6s. for the General Fund, and £71. 6s. 7d. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £159. 14s. 9d. and £208. 6s. 4d. respectively, £207. 6s. 4d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—They had made grants of £20 to the Islington Committee, £10 to the St. George's East Committee, and £10 to the Newton Committee.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on Tuesday, the 14th inst., had been present—

Major FitzRoy, in the Chair; Miss Octavia Hill, Miss E. Howes, Messrs. Barrington and Bousfield, and Sir Douglas Forsyth, Rev. J. D. McGachen, Rev. W. A. Richmond, Messrs. Graham, Smith, and Montgomerie, as Visitors.

THE CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At this Sub-Committee had been present—

Sir C. Trevelyan, subsequently Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, in the Chair; Major FitzRoy, Major Prendergast, Rev. M. S. A. Walrond, Rev. H. F. Mallet, Mr. A. H. Hill, J. R. Holland, Esq.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee had been present—

Capt. Gardner, in the Chair; Major FitzRoy.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—This Sub-Committee had held two meetings.

Wednesday, November 29, 1876.—Present: Major Yard (in the Chair); Sir R. M. Stephenson, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Major Prendergast, Messrs. E. Corrie, A. H. Hill, C. A. Miner (Visitor).—Monday, December 4, 1876.—Present: Major Yard (in the Chair); Rev. H. I. Cummins, Sir Macdonald Stephenson, Messrs. Hill and Miner.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

Mr. J. Whitcombe, before the adoption of the alterations of the Bye-laws, recommended by the Administrative Committee, was moved, rose to order, and stated that the proposed Bye-laws would, if adopted, necessitate the alteration of some of the Rules of the Society at a general meeting.

It was pointed out that if the Council thought it well to adopt the proposed Bye-laws, the constitutional course would be to refer them to the Administrative Committee or a special Committee to report upon; and to submit to a general meeting of the Society such alterations in the Rules as the Council, on the report of the Committee, might adopt.

Notice was given of the following amendments:—

By Rev. R. J. Simpson—

That the word 'twelve' be substituted for 'twenty-five' in proposed Bye-law 21.

By Mr. C. A. Miner—

That the words of the second clause of the proposed Bye-Law 23 be as follows:—'Members of Council shall be at liberty to take part in the proceedings of the Administrative Committee, but shall not vote.'

By Mr. J. Whitcombe—

That the words 'as Visitors' be omitted from the proposed Bye-law 23, and that the words 'to take part in the proceedings of the Administrative Committee and to vote,' be substituted.

By Rev. R. J. Simpson—

That the second clause of the proposed Bye-law 23 be omitted.

By Major FitzRoy—

That proposed Bye-law 30 be referred back to the Administrative Committee with the recommendation that all members of Sub-Committees be members of the Administrative Committee.

Major FitzRoy, in moving the adoption of the recommended Bye-laws (with the exception of the 30th), said that the Administrative Committee were anxious, as he had been, to make the Administrative Committee more of a reality. At present, since any member of Council could attend and vote, no one could be certain who were the acting members of the Committee as distinguished from the, as it were, ex officio members who were members of Council. Only constant attendants knew who were likely to be present. And the uncertainty that prevailed in the composition of the Committee affected also its responsibility. In no published report or paper of the work of the Society did it appear who were the responsible executive Committee of the Council. The unrecognised position of the Committee in the papers of the Society corresponded to the vague and uncertain position which the Committee practically held.

He then dwelt on one or two points. The Committee wished to have a larger and more regular attendance; the definite number of 25 had therefore been fixed by them after considerable discussion. The seventh meeting after the annual general meeting of the Society was chosen for the election, as by that time the representatives of the district committees would have been selected, and due notice of the candidates proposed for election might be given.

Sir Charles Trevelyan seconded the motion. He had at first advocated a more open and liberal principle in the constitution of the Administrative Committee, but after great consideration he had come to the conclusion that the inconveniences that might ensue from the adoption of the proposed Bye-laws would be obviated by the following circumstances. Not more than twenty-five members of Council were likely to be both efficient members of and regular attendants at the Committee. Secondly, the Council had some weeks before passed an important resolution to continue their weekly meetings; and the Minutes of the Administrative Committee were thus subject each week to the criticism and revision of the Council. Lastly, the election of the Administrative Committee was annual, and conducted on the most free and liberal basis.

After a few words from Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. C. A. Miner, and the Chairman, it was agreed to take first the proposed Bye-law 23.

Major FitzRoy then moved the adoption of the Bye-law, saying that its object was, to secure the regular attendance of at least twenty-five members at the meetings of the Administrative Committee and its Sub-Committees.

Major Prendergast seconded the motion. He urged that the proposed change should not be made unless there was an unanimous vote in its favour. The delegation of the executive work suggested by the Bye-law was of the most usual nature, and was carried out every day by the Executive Committees of the District Committees of the Society.

Mr. C. A. Miner, seconded by Sir Charles Trevelyan, then moved the amendment given at length above; and Mr. J. R. Hollond, in support of the amendment, said that the whole gist of the proposed alterations was to fix the responsibility of the executive on a definite body. The Committee existed as an undefined body at present, and the Society and the public hardly recognised its existence. At times the attendance of the Committee was small; and there was no certainty as to who would be present.

Rev. R. J. Simpson, having given notice of his amendment to omit the second clause of the proposed Bye-law 23, at the suggestion of Mr. G. P. Bidder, the Council gave precedence to the amendment of which Mr. J. Whitcombe had given notice, viz. :—

That the words 'as Visitors,' be omitted from the proposed Bye-law 23, and that the words 'to take part in the proceedings of the Administrative Committee, and to vote,' be substituted.

Mr. Whitcombe said that the Bye-law proposed by the Administrative Committee involved a transference of power from the Council to the Committee. He considered this undesirable, since it was an organic change endangering the relations of the Council to the District Committees, and would necessitate a public delegation of the powers of the Council to a smaller and non-representative body.

Mr. H. N. Hoare, in seconding the amendment, said that the system of administration now in force was that usually adopted by public societies.

Mr. C. E. Maurice pointed out that the proposed change would throw the work of the executive on a larger number than those who at present undertook it. In practice therefore it would be a less exclusive arrangement.

Rev. H. I. Cummins said that there was no question of special delegation. The delegation, such as it was, had already been made. The power to vote at the Administrative Committee, now possessed by all members of Council, destroyed the character of the Committee, and occasioned a fluctuating attendance and a want of responsibility.

Mr. Russell Barrington and Rev. Harvey Brooks questioned whether any practical evils had resulted from the present arrangement.

Mr. Roberts thought that sufficient cause for a change had not been shown. He had been absent for a long time, but, notwithstanding the statements made by the Vice-Chairman of the Committee, believed, from his previous experience of its meetings, that there was a sufficiently regular attendance and a fixed responsibility.

Mr. G. P. Bidder then said that the Council was greatly indebted to the Administrative Committee, and that if a more definite recognition of it was desirable, it ought to be given. But he knew, he believed, generally speaking, who composed the Committee and was averse to what appeared to him to be a needless change. He then discussed seriatim the headings of Council business set down in Bye-law 4, and held that, as the Minutes of the Committee were not confirmed weekly by Council, the Council, notwithstanding the right possessed by all members to appeal against any decision of the Committee, had no check on the proceedings of the Committee, except by reason of their right to attend and vote at its meetings. The Council by its vote bound its representatives; the Administrative Committee was not a representative body, and the transference of so much power to the Committee would increase the difficulties of administration.

The adjournment of the debate was then moved by Rev. Harvey Brooks and carried.

The Council then adjourned.

The following contributions were received during the week ending Saturday, December 2, 1876:—Donations: Miss Claydon, 2s. 6d.; Harrockses, Miller & Co., £10. 10s.; Hampstead Committee, £10; Miss A. C. Jackson, 10s.; T. B. Woolley, Esq., 10s. 6d.—Annual: Rev. George Ayscough Booth, £1. 1s.; Mrs. Washington Hibbert, £1; Lord Onslow, £3. 3s.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

WANDSWORTH AND PUTNEY.—District Visiting.—On the 27th ult., at a meeting of Visitors recently held in this district, a Referee and Secretary was chosen to communicate with the District Visitors and the Committee of the Charity Organisation Society. It was also agreed that the office of the Committee should be used for the meetings of the Visitors, and that the Referee and Secretary should be present there one day in each week to meet the Visitors and hand on cases to the Committee.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of November 1876 was 37,415, and 44,265 received outdoor relief, making a total of 81,680. This was an increase of 1,118 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 2,776, 11,102, and 20,932 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 629. This was a decrease of 52 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 127 on the corresponding day of last year.

PROVINCIAL.

BRIGHTON.—The Annual Meeting.—Vagrancy.—The fifth annual meeting of the Charity Organisation Society for Brighton, Hove, and Preston was held at Brighton on the 27th of November. The Mayor, Charles Lamb, Esq., was in the chair. Dr. Hamilton and others addressed the meeting. According to the Report, 266 cases were 'Dismissed or unfavourably reported,' 54 'Recommended,' and 206 'Assisted.' Of these last we regret to find only one case under the head of 'Assisted by Loan.' The Report shows an increase of vagrancy similar to that recorded in the West Sussex Mendicity Society's Annual Report (vide Reporter No. 194, p. 155). It says:—'In the Report of last year a great decrease was observed in returns of vagrancy, both at the Society's office and also at the Brighton Workhouse. This year a very considerable increase is observable: an increase of 1,099 relieved at the office and 1,616 at the workhouse. At the same time it must be borne in mind that vagrancy has increased over a great part of England. Depression in trade and other causes may partially account for this, but the ebb and flow of the tide with these unfortunates will be often difficult to account for, until Boards of Guardians are either persuaded or forced to adopt some uniform system in the treatment of this impracticable class.' In speaking on this subject the Rev. R. P. Hooper said that 'the increase of vagrancy had been confined to certain districts, and, in his opinion, to those districts where Poor Law administration is more lax than in others.' In the Steyning Union, where a stone-breaking machine had been introduced, the number of vagrants had decreased. 'It stopped the visits of many there. They knocked at the gate of the house and asked the porter if the machine was at work. If the reply was "Yes," they said, "We will go on to the nearest place," which was fourteen or fifteen miles distant; but these miles they would rather walk, on a winter night even, than do a few hours' stone-breaking in return for their dinner.'

MEDICAL CHARITIES.

PROVIDENT DISPENSARIES.—We have received from the St. Giles's Committee copies of a tabular statement of the provident dispensaries of the metropolis, containing evidence on the following points:—The number of years each dispensary has been in existence; their origin; the competition against which they have to contend; the number of their members; their income; the number and position of the medical staff; the medical payments; number of attendances; and amount of subscription payable by members monthly.

It appears that the oldest provident dispensary is that at 104 Star Street, Paddington, founded thirty-nine years ago; the largest is that in Ordnance Road, St. John's Wood, which has 9,649 members. The Camberwell Dispensary, with 7,896 members, has the largest income, viz. £1,430. 18s. 8d. The number of the medical staff varies from three to eleven, and in all but one case the remuneration appears to be considered adequate. The subscription for adults varies from 4d. and 6d. to 8d., and for families from 6d. to 1s. 4d. and 2s.

Out of the fourteen provident dispensaries at present existing in London, six have been converted from charitable to provident dispensaries. In nine instances there appears to be no competition. In three instances the opposition to the dispensaries appears to have been slight, or to be now subsiding. In two instances there is still considerable competition. The following are the totals:—Members, 37,111; income from members in the course of the year, £3,686. 0s. 11d.; total income, £6,712. 0s. 11½d.; medical staff, 81; medical payments, £3,998. 8s. 11d. Attendances—At the House, 28,892; at the Dispensary, 110,125. In no case is it reported that the number of members is falling off. The Dispensaries are, with one exception, well supported by the poorer classes; but in most instances their benefits are confined to persons not in receipt of more than 30s. a week.

DWELLINGS OF THE POOR.

The Local Government Chronicle, in an article on the Metropolitan Board of Works, says:—'Under the Artisans' Dwellings Act twenty-two localities were proposed to be dealt with, but a committee has reduced the number by half; and for these detailed schemes are to be prepared at once, and submitted for confirmation to the Secretary of State. They will be at Bedfordbury, St. Martin's-in-the-Fields; at Great Wild Street, Drury Lane and Princes Street; at Pear Tree Court, Clerkenwell Close; at Whitecross Street; at High Street, Islington; at Elizabeth Place, Waterloo Road; at King Street, and at Mint Street, St. George's—two desperately ill-conditioned localities; at Old Pye Street, Westminster; at Goulston Street, Whitechapel; and at Flower-and-Dean Street, in the same parish. The unlucky Holborn District scheme, so summarily rejected last year by the Secretary of State, seems to be silently dropped. The aggregate cost is estimated at somewhat under a million, of which half is expected to be returned. These improvements, it is said, will displace 14,314 persons.'

THE AFFLICTED POOR.

THE BLIND.—A Correspondent writes:—'If A. B. was born in a city parish, or is a member of any city company, there are Blind Charities open to him. There are also Blind Pension Charities, such as "Day's Blind Charity," to which application might be made. Failing these there is only the Poor Law that I know of.'

BETHNAL GREEN.—On Tuesday, at the meeting of the Guardians, the Rev. E. F. Coke, in pursuance of notice, called the attention of the Guardians to the increase in the expense for the maintenance of lunatics chargeable to the parish, amounting to £3,000 in one year; and, after some discussion, it was resolved that the matter be referred to the Finance Committee for consideration and report.—Metropolitan, Dec. 2, 1876.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES.—IV.

AN AGENT OF CHARITY.—What we most desiderate in an agent of charity is to have one with the taste and the inclinations of a thorough localist—one who rejoices in a home-walk, and would like better that it should be pervaded thoroughly, than that he should scatter his regards among the thousand objects of a wide and distant philanthropy. I would rather that he restrained his ambition for what is great, so as that he might give himself wholly to the little which he can fully overtake. It is not to the magnificent survey of him whose eyes, like those of Solomon's fool, are on all the ends of the earth, that I would look for any solid contribution to the amelioration of our species, but to the humble painstaking of many single labourers, each giving himself dutifully and devotedly to his own manageable sphere, and satisfied that he has not lived in vain, if he have raised the tone of character or added to the comfort by rectifying and improving the habits of fifty families. The result universal is made up of many items, and can only be arrived at by a summation of particulars. For the book of philanthropy, like that of philosophy, is a book of many pages; and it is not to universalists that we look for the completion of either, but to the manifold assiduities of those who, whether by patient study on the one field or persevering action on the other, each fill up a single leaf or a single line of them.—On the Sufficiency of the Parochial System, by Dr. Chalmers.

DIMINUTION IN PAUPERISM.—The return for the quarter ending September 29, 1876, shows that the number of paupers in receipt of relief from the rates in England and Wales (minus about 3 per cent. for lunatic paupers in asylums and vagrants not included in these returns) was 647,710 at Michaelmas last. This is less than the number at Midsummer by 10,135, or 1·5 per cent. It is also less than the number at Michaelmas 1875 by 27,303, or 4 per cent., and less than at Michaelmas 1874 by 73,828, or 10·2 per cent. The comparison of Michaelmas 1876 with Michaelmas 1875 shows a decrease of 4·9 per cent. in the metropolis, 6·4 per cent. in the South-eastern division, 4·9 in the South-western, 6·3 in the South Midland, 7·7 in the Eastern, but only 1·5 in the West Midland and 2·7 in the Welsh division. In the North Midland division (Notts, Derby, &c.) the decrease is as much as 5·2 per cent., but farther north a much smaller improvement is shown. In the North-western division (Lancashire and Cheshire) the number of paupers is less by 2·3 per cent. than at the same period last year; but in Yorkshire the decrease is only 0·4 per cent., and in the Northern division 0·7 per cent. No division, however, shows any increase of pauperism.

ERRATUM.—District Visiting Societies.—Sir Charles Trevelyan writes that twenty Parochial Councils have not been formed in the St. George's, Hanover Square, Union, but that, in six of the twenty-two ecclesiastical parishes in the Union, the District Visitors have been formed into local Committees, under the name of Parochial Councils, acting under rules framed on the principles of our Society, and that in some of the remaining parishes, although no formal change has been made, the spirit of these rules is understood and more or less acted upon.—Vide Reporter, No. 194, p. 166.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE had met on Thursday last. There had been present—

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the Chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major Prendergast, Major Yard, Capt. Fortescue, Lady Wilson, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Hoare, Miner, and Peters.

FINANCE.—The Committee reported that during the week ending December 2 the receipts had been £27. 7s. for the General Fund, and £60 for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £40. 2s. 5d. and £223. 12s. 4d. respectively, £207. 6s. 4d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—They had made grants of £10 to the South St. Pancras Committee, and £10 to the Stepney Committee.

SCHOOL BOARD CASES.—It appeared from the Report of the Committee that they had decided that, whenever necessary, District Committees should send in monthly accounts and receive monthly instalments for expenses incurred in assisting School Board cases.

QUARTERLY FINANCE COMMITTEE.—The Finance Sub-Committee had held their usual quarterly meeting. It appeared from their Report that in the quarter ending September 30 there had been, in the receipts in the General Fund, an increase of £440 as compared with the corresponding quarter of last year. The receipts in the District Committee Aid Fund had been £978. Of this, £100 was an anonymous donation disbursed to District Committees for convalescent cases. District Committees had contributed £363. The expenditure in the three first quarters of the year had been £1,751. 10s. as compared with £1,360 in the corresponding period of 1875. The Committee add that 'they cannot but congratulate the Council that the increasing expenditure thus shown is in the direction most desired by the Society, viz. the increase of efficient work in the Districts.'

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on Tuesday, the 5th inst., had been present—

Major FitzRoy, in the Chair; Mr. Bousfield, and Mr. H. Long, Visitor.

THE CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At this Sub-Committee had been present—

Mr. A. H. Hill, subsequently Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, in the Chair; Sir C. Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Major Prendergast, J. R. Hollond, Esq.

OUT-DOOR RELIEF.—The Sub-Committee had passed the following resolution, and sent up the subjoined interim statement on the subject of Out-door Relief—

Resolved,—That the information already obtained in regard to the three Metropolitan Poor Law Districts, in which the reduction of out-door relief has been carried to the greatest extent, be submitted to the Administrative Committee with the suggestion that it be published in the Reporter, in the hope that it will elicit further information on this interesting and important subject.

In their last annual report the Local Government Board observe as follows upon the administration of out-door relief in London:—

'The careful personal consideration recently given by the members of many of the Boards of Guardians in the Metropolitan District to the disposal of applications for relief has resulted in the sounder administration which was recommended in the report of our late inspector, Mr. Longley, and has been followed, in several instances, by so remarkable a diminution in the number of paupers in receipt of out-door relief, coupled with so striking a reduction in the total number of paupers relieved, as to call for special notice.'

Our attention has been particularly drawn to the cases of the Stepney and Whitechapel Unions, and of the parish of St. George-in-the-East.

In the Stepney Union the number of out-door paupers has fallen from 4,347 in the second week of April 1868 to 224 in the same week of 1876, being a decrease at the rate of 94 per cent.; and in the Whitechapel Union at the same dates from 3,000 to 150, being a decrease at the rate of 95 per cent. This result has been attained simultaneously with a reduction in the number of in-door poor.

In the parish of St. George-in-the-East the numbers in receipt of out-door relief have declined from 4,272 in the second week of April 1870 to 197 in the same week of 1876, being a decrease at the rate of 95 per cent. The pecuniary result is also very favourable, and deserves the careful attention of the Guardians of unions and parishes, in which a more indiscriminate distribution of out-door relief continues. That result shows a saving of £60. 11s. 11d. in the second week of March 1876, as compared with the corresponding week of 1875, being at the rate of £3,150. 19s. 8d. a year, and refutes the assertion that it is practically more economical to give out-door relief than to offer relief in the workhouse.

In these three Poor Law Districts the Guardians co-operate with the Charity Organisation Society, and all new applications for relief, if apparently suitable for pensions, are referred to the District Committee of the Society, either by the Relieving Officer or by the Board, the result up to the present time having been as follows: In Stepney only one case has been considered deserving of a pension. In Whitechapel only three or four aged people or couples, generally weavers, whose trade has declined by no fault of their own, have seemed to merit charitable allowances; such cases, the Rev. S. A. Barnett, Guardian of Whitechapel, remarks, 'will gradually decrease, if the supply is not kept up by unwise gifts.'

In St. George-in-the-East not more than six cases were suitable for pension, and no case considered suitable is without one. About a dozen more cases are having permanent or intermittent assistance from private persons through the District Committee, because they are supposed to have been struck off the relief list without sufficient reason, after having received it for twelve months at least. Mr. Crowder, Guardian of St. George-in-the-East, remarks that the action of the Guardians has evoked a great deal of private charity from persons having no connection with the Charity Organisation Society, on many of whom the recipients have a legitimate claim. It has also greatly drawn out family affection in all kinds of ways.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee had been present—

Mr. Aspinall, in the Chair; Capt. Gardner, Major FitzRoy.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—This Sub-Committee had held two meetings.

Wednesday, December 6, 1876.—Present: Major Yard (in the Chair); Sir R. M. Stephenson, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Major Prendergast, A. H. Hill. —Saturday, December 9, 1876.—Present: Major Yard (in the Chair); Messrs. Hill and Miner.

CONSTITUTION OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Secretary read a report of the Administrative Committee on the proposed Bye-law 23—

Members of the Administrative Committee shall be eligible for re-election. Members of Council shall be at liberty to attend the meetings of the Administrative Committee as Visitors. The Committee shall have power to fill up vacancies and report the same for confirmation at the next meeting of Council.

The Committee recommended that, in consideration of the opposition to the proposed change manifested at the last meeting of Council, they should be allowed to withdraw the bye-law.

They further recommended that the proposed alterations in the Bye-laws 21, 22, and 29 should be withdrawn, viz.:—

21. The Administrative Committee shall consist of the Chairman, Vice-Chairmen, Treasurer, and twenty-five members of Council, who shall be elected annually, at the seventh meeting after the general annual meeting of the Society, by the members of Council entitled to vote.

22. The names of all those willing to serve shall be submitted to Council by the Secretary at the fifth meeting after the general annual meeting of the Society. The election shall be by ballot.

29. Add the words 'and Sub-Committees of the Administrative Committee.'

Major FitzRoy moved, and Sir Charles Trevelyan seconded, the motion for withdrawal of the proposed Bye-laws, urging that, while it was most necessary to have a larger and more regular attendance at the Administrative Committee, no change would be welcome to the Committee that was not cordially adopted by the Council.

Mr. J. Whitcombe regretted that the Administrative Committee had, without informing him, so suddenly recommended the withdrawal of the proposed Bye-laws. He would be glad to have the opinion of Council on the question, whether members of Council should be at liberty to vote at the meetings of the Administrative Committee. After a few words from the Chairman and Dr. Daniel, Miss O. Hill said that the Marylebone Committee were in favour of the change suggested by the Committee in the second clause of proposed Bye-law 23, but they thought that in the election of members of the Committee there should be some proportion of representative and additional members, such as was by the 10th Rule of the Society required in the formation of the Council. She did not think there was any strong opposition in the Council to the proposal.

Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe said that the Kensington Committee were unanimous in their opposition to the change. After a few words from Mr. Burdett-Roberts, Mr. G. P. Bidder, and Rev. J. D. McGachen, the proposed Bye-laws were withdrawn.

The proposed Bye-law 30 was then considered, viz.:—

The Administrative Committee shall appoint, to take charge of special branches of the work of the Society, such Sub-Committees as may from time to time appear to them expedient. Each Sub-Committee shall elect a chairman and vice-chairman from such of its members as are members of the Administrative Committee. Each Sub-Committee shall, on a recommendation to the Administrative Committee, be empowered to add to its number members of Council or members of any of the District Committees of the Society.

Miss Hill moved its adoption. She earnestly hoped the Bye-law would be carried; it would enable the Administrative Committee to obtain for the work of the Society the services of many most efficient helpers who were now excluded from the Sub-Committees, because they were not members of the Council.

Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe seconded the motion, and Sir Charles Trevelyan spoke in its favour.

An amendment moved by Mr. Barrington, and seconded by Rev. W. H. Langhorne, that in the second clause of the proposed Bye-law the word 'Council' should be substituted for 'Administrative Committee' having been lost, the Bye-law was carried nem. con.

THE FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE SOCIETY.

An interim report of the Finance and Collection Sub-Committee was then read, and discussed at some length by Mr. C. L. Corkran, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, Mr. Seton-Karr, Mr. C. A. Miner, Mr. Aspinall, and others. The Secretary pointed out that so large a Society, dealing with so many important social questions, must look forward to obtaining its most permanent support from the great mass of the people. He urged that the District Committees should, in the course of the winter, arrange small public meetings, at which addresses should be given, or papers read on subjects connected with the work of the Society, and every opportunity should be given for hearing, discussing, and answering objections to the Society.

IMPROVEMENT OF MEETINGS OF COUNCIL.

The following recommendations were carried, on the motion of Mr. Russell Barrington, seconded by Rev. W. H. Langhorne:—

That the following words be added to Bye-law 8, viz.:—'Questions may be asked at one meeting of Council and discussed at the next, due notice being given in the Reporter in the interval.'

That the following Bye-law be adopted:—'The Administrative Committee shall arrange that at 4 p.m. on the second Monday in each month, during the sittings of Council, a short practical paper be read on some subject connected with the work of the Society. The Administrative Committee may on these occasions invite a Vice-President of the Society, or any gentleman of special experience, to take the chair during the discussion.'

A third recommendation—

That the following words be added to Bye-law 9, viz.:—'Speeches, with the exception of those of the mover and seconder of a motion, shall be limited to ten minutes.'

was moved from the Chair, but was withdrawn after a short discussion, in which Mr. H. Peto, Mr. C. A. Miner, and others joined.

The Council then adjourned.

The following contributions were received during the week ending Saturday, December 9, 1876:—Donations: Col. Ainslie, £1; Anonymous, £5; Mrs. Austen, £5; F. Braby, Esq., £5; Rev. H. G. J. Clements, £2; The Earl of Eldon, £20; Hon. H. S. Law, £2; R. W. Melvil, Esq., £10; Lord A. Russell, M.P., £2. 2s.; J. L. Walker, Esq., £10; Miss Whiteley, £5; Rev. T. Woodruff, £1. 1s.—Annual: Hon. W. Ashley (1877), £1; Miss E. O. Ward, £1.

PROVINCIAL.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Annual Meeting.—PROGRESS OF CHARITY ORGANISATION AT SOUTHAMPTON AND WINCHESTER.—The annual meeting of the Southampton Charity Organisation Society was held at the Hartley Institution, Southampton, on the 29th ult. Mr. A. R. Naghten, M.P., was in the chair. The report having been adopted,

Mr. C. J. Ribton-Turner was invited to address the meeting, and said the subject of charity organisation was a very vast one, and the difficulty was to curtail any remarks as to the possibility of raising the condition of the poor by such a movement as that they were initiating. We had in this country, roughly speaking, some four millions of people in a dependent or a nearly dependent condition—that was to say, one-sixth of the population. He was speaking only of England and Wales, not of Scotland or Ireland; and this proportion of the people were dependent on the rest of the population for their support. The question was, could that be a good thing?

The report showed that the sum of £26,455 had been expended on the poor, and capitalising that sum, or making a large reduction from it, showed half a million of money which, he might say, was really wasted. He meant wasted in the sense that it was non-productive; if it was thrown into the mud it would be non-productive, and would be doing no mischief, but where it was not only non-productive, but was in many cases doing mischief, it was a positive evil in itself. Consider the benefit to Southampton if that half a million of money was applied in a productive way. In dealing with the question of charity organisation they had of course a large number of difficulties to contend with, and he by no means professed that they in London had solved them all; indeed, they were only upon the very threshold of them. It was all very well to talk about making a man sober, but that would never be done while the homes of men were in their present condition; and while no improvement was made in this respect these men would go to the gin-palace, where they could get light, air, and companionship.

Charity organisation meant the raising of the condition of the poor by bringing into one focus all that energy which, impaired by a thoughtless distribution of money, could not now work with success.

One of the first things they had to deal with was this. They went into a neighbourhood and found a benevolent clergyman. He need hardly say he believed in the good work the clergy were doing, and therefore he did not wish to throw any disparagement upon them in what he said. Well, this clergyman would say he knew everyone in his district, that the Society, being strangers, could not assist him in any way whatever, and that he could deal with the poor more efficiently than any outside agency. He (the speaker) ventured to ask of anyone present how much he knew of the character of his poorer neighbours? There was nothing more complicated in this universe than the human character. They went into a house and put their hands in their pockets to help the person there, but in doing that were they quite sure they were not assisting the head of the family to go to the public-house, as he had too often done before, and paying him a premium to beat his wife, to put his children in rags, and to neglect his own duties towards his family altogether? If they did not inquire into the objects of their charity they might be doing all this. What was needed was to find out how it was that that family had slid down in the social scale, to find out how the man had gone wrong, and to prevent him, if possible, going wrong again.

He would by no means assert that because they found matters wrong they were not to give assistance, because if they resolved to help none but deserving cases they would give no help at all. There was some preventable cause for every case that comes up for charity, which, if taken in time, would prevent the recipients of it descending into pauperism, and a most thoroughgoing investigation of that would enable them to deal with all the cases efficiently.

Charity organisation could only be carried out by co-operation on the part of different charities and the giving up of individual idiosyncrasies. The thing, too, could not be undertaken in a revolutionary spirit, but it was obvious to everyone reading the report of the Charity Organisation Society by the light of what had been done at Stepney and Hatcham, that a great deal was wanting to be done here which could only be done by co-operation. That one-sixth of our population should be dependent upon the rest could not be a good thing; that such an enormous amount of capital should be spent in doing, not good, but positive harm, could not be an advantage. They wanted to raise the moral tone of the people while there was yet time; they wanted to keep in the path of progress, but unless they got together the requisite human materials for the work—for human interest in it was wanting more than pounds, shillings, and pence—they would not do it. It was by taking an intelligent interest in the welfare of the poor, and trying to learn the causes which led to pauperism and endeavouring to remove them, that they hoped to succeed.

Mr. F. Morhead, late Mayor of Winchester, said: They found Winchester thoroughly eaten out with pauperism and endowed charities of different kinds. Putting aside the County Hospital, which was an unmixed good to everybody; putting aside Poor Law relief, which had been diminishing yearly; putting aside various endowed charities, lying-in societies, and innumerable others bestowed by the parish clergymen, they found there a sum of £3,000 a year bestowed in charity, distributed by trustees acting independently of each other, the result being: just that which might naturally be expected, that the judicious beggar realised from them a comfortable income without any exertion whatever. He related as one instance the case of a pauper who was found to have accumulated £40 in the bank; and referring to the system which prevailed in regard to coal-tickets, created some laughter by speaking of those documents as being in many cases negotiable securities to be realised at the nearest public-house.

In Winchester they started with three distinct objects—first, to co-operate with the different charities in keeping a kind of register to prevent that overlapping spoken of in the Report before them; second, to do all they could to promote providence among the lower classes; and third, as far as they possibly could to assist those cases which would seem likely to be permanently benefited by such assistance. In regard to the first object, they had been partially successful only, for of the charities who were applied to to register with the Society the majority had declined. Some people said they did not believe in such a society at all, and that it was too hard-hearted, while others had looked upon the gifts as a patronage of their own, and he had heard of charity tickets being given to tenants and dealt with in the rent account afterwards.

In referring to the preliminary action of the Society, he pointed out that the patronage of the Town Council in regard to coals was now vested in it, and said that in the ward he lately represented some of the people said that whereas they used to have coal-tickets they have none now, and would not elect him again, and they did not elect him; but if that was the ground on which he lost his seat he was glad, because it proved that the Charity Organisation Society was doing some good. The Society had formed a provident coal club, which now numbered upwards of 400 subscribers, and had in other ways endeavoured to promote provident habits during the summer months, in view of a lack of work in the winter. They had also established a penny savings bank, and had induced various schools to co-operate with them; and in order to meet the abuse they found prevailing in regard to hospital tickets, they had formed a provident dispensary, which was working extremely well.

The meeting was subsequently addressed by Mr. W. Wynyard, Dr. Maclean, C.B., and others.

BRIGHTON.—*Loans.—We have received the following letter from the Brighton Charity Organisation Society:—

'In your notice of our Annual Report you regret to find only one case under the head of "Assisted by Loan"; and that, I may add, is an exceptional case (a few shillings wanted immediately for railway expenses). As a general rule, the Society does not lend, because that kind of assistance is rendered most efficiently by an admirable institution, the Benevolent Loan Fund, among the managers of which are some of our principal members, as Dr. Hannah, our Chairman, and Mr. Hayes, our Treasurer. When loans are asked for or deemed advisable, the parties, after due inquiry, are referred to the Fund.'

DISTRICT VISITING SOCIETIES.†

SCHEME FOR A RELIEF COMMITTEE FOR ST. PAUL'S, PADDINGTON.—At a meeting held on Tuesday, 5th December last, the following scheme was submitted and approved:—1. Applications for parochial relief may be made to the Parochial Relief Committee—

(a) By the District Visitor, who must fill up a printed form‡ giving particulars of the case, and forward it to the Relief Committee at the Mission Room, where District Visitors may obtain forms.

(b) By applicants for relief personally at the Mission Room daily, between 9.30 and 10.30 A.M., to the Mission Woman, who will be in attendance and must fill up the same form and lodge it at the Mission Room.

(c) By the Clergy or any other member of the Relief Committee, or other person interested in applicant, who must fill up the same form and lodge it at the Mission Room.

2. On a second or subsequent application for or by the same person, only such information as will correct and supplement previous information and bring the history of the case to correct date need be supplied.

3. Unless application be made by District Visitors, a copy of the printed form as filled up will at once be sent by the Mission Woman to the District Visitor, who is requested to enter on the back any remarks she may have to make respecting the case, and to forward the same to the Relief Committee by 10 A.M.

4. The Committee may refer all such cases as they see fit to the Charity Organisation Society for investigation.

5. In order to prevent the overlapping of relief, the Committee will place themselves in communication with the Board of Guardians, with a view to obtaining from them a statement of all persons in St. Paul's parish in the receipt of relief from the Guardians, and will also, if possible,

* See Reporter, No. 197, p. 172.

† See Reporter, Nos. 194, 196, 197, pp. 168, 169, 167, 172.

‡ The particulars will consist of name and address, time of residence, and rent of applicant; man's and woman's health; occupation and earnings; ages and earnings of children; club or benefit society or provident dispensary; amount of relief from parish or other sources; relations able to help; total means of subsistence; what assistance asked for.

obtain from them and from the Charity Organisation Society a weekly statement of any new cases in which relief may have been granted during the previous week.*

6. The Committee shall consist of the Vicar, Chairman; the Curate, Vice-chairman; and the Churchwardens, all ex officio, and of (say) four or five ordinary working members, one to be Lady Secretary, another Hon. Secretary. The ordinary members will, in the first instance, be selected by the Vicar, but where any vacancy is caused by the death or retirement of any ordinary member, every such vacancy shall be filled by a person chosen by the Committee.

7. The Committee will meet twice weekly, on Monday and Thursday, at the Mission Room. Three to be a quorum; Mission Woman to be in attendance. Any District Visitor may attend and be heard on any case of her own. Applicants for relief may be required to attend. All applications, together with reports of District Visitors thereon, shall be brought up and considered. The Committee will decide in private.

8. The relief granted will be as follows:—(a) Money. (b) Orders on tradesmen for meat, coal, grocery, bread, flannel. (c) Orders for dinner on Parochial Invalids' Kitchen or medical comforts, but under this head on medical certificate only.† (d) Hospital letters. (e) Orders on Needlewoman's Institute. All applicants for loans will be referred to the Charity Organisation Society.

N.B.—It is in contemplation hereafter, if the Committee should have sufficient means at their disposal, that a system of granting pensions or weekly allowances (possibly, in some cases, in co-operation with the Guardians) to deserving poor persons whose infirmities alone prevent their earning a livelihood should be added to this scheme. It would remain for the Committee hereafter to decide upon the limits of age, time of residence, and other conditions which should be required as qualifications for such pensions, and also upon the amount of such pensions.

9. After the Committee meeting the decision of every case will be communicated at once to the District Visitors (if any), either in person or by letter from the Lady Secretary. If the District Visitor be present the relief will be handed to her at once, otherwise it will be obtainable by her, at the Mission Room, from the Mission Woman; but if not applied for by 12 noon on the following day it will be taken to the applicant by the Mission Woman, unless (in cases where relief in money has been granted) an intimation be in the meantime received by the Mission Woman that the District Visitors are attending to the case. Where a weekly allowance has been granted, the District Visitor (if any) will receive for the benefit of the applicant payment in one sum of as many weekly payments as the Committee shall direct.

10. Where there is no District Visitor the Committee will send the relief direct to the applicant; and in order to meet urgent cases the Committee may, if they see fit in any case, send the relief direct to the applicant, but notice thereof will be sent by the Lady Secretary to the District Visitor.

11. It will be incumbent on the District Visitor to ascertain in every case that the relief granted reaches the applicant.

12. In urgent cases immediate relief may be given by the Clergy or other member of the Committee, or, in cases of sickness, by the District Visitor, if they think it would be unwise to withhold relief till the Committee meeting; but such relief must be at once reported to the Hon. Secretary. It is expected that the number of cases thus dealt with will be reduced to a minimum, and that the relief so granted will be no more than sufficient to meet the emergency.

13. In every case where the relief is granted in money the person charged with the duty of carrying the relief to the applicant is to sign a receipt and forward it to the Treasurer, as his voucher for the payment.

14. The accounts will be kept by the Treasurer.

15. Applications will be filed, and a register of cases, recording all information received and relief granted, will be kept by the Hon. Secretary, or other member of the Committee.

16. The Lady Secretary will attend at the Mission Room, after the sittings of the Committee, to meet District Visitors, and discuss cases with them.

17. Provision should, if possible, be made that every house inhabited by the poor should have its District Visitor.

18. The intimate acquaintance of the District Visitors with all details relating to those under their charge is of the highest importance, and District Visitors are urged to keep a private record in which all such details shall be noted. Any District Visitor desiring to assist a family in St. Paul's parish out of private sources is invited to communicate with the Committee on the subject through the Hon. Secretary.

19. In order to ensure the efficient working of this scheme, it is essential that no money should be given to the poor of the parish by individual members of the Committee or District Visitors without the knowledge of the Committee.

* It has already been arranged with the Charity Organisation Society that this information should be supplied to the Committee.

† Forms of medical certificates may be obtained at Mission Room, and when filled up are to be lodged there for the Relief Committee.

NOTES.

We have received the following further explanatory notes on the above scheme:—The normal form of relief contemplated is through the District Visitors. These provisions are to meet the case of the District Visitors' absence, and of the rural sections of the parish which have no District Visitors.

The question of investigation is difficult and most important. On the one hand an authentic and accurate knowledge of the applicant's character and position is of primary importance, and must be secured. On the other hand, detailed official inquiry, which it must be admitted does in some cases wound the self-respect even of those who have no cause to shrink from inquiry, should be dispensed with, if full, necessary, and trustworthy information could be otherwise obtained. The parish for which this scheme was prepared is a compact one, and many of the cases in it are fairly well known. It is thought that in this case no definite rule for the investigation of all cases need be provided, it being left to the discretion of the Committee to send for investigation by the Charity Organisation Society all cases in which the information is not satisfactory to the Committee.

The proposed Hon. Secretary is a member of the Local Committee of the Charity Organisation Society. It would be desirable (if possible) that some member of the Board of Guardians should be on the Relief Committee.

If working members can be secured, it is thought that a Committee few in number would be desirable.

Relief by orders on tradesmen is continued from the old system, not because those who are putting forward this scheme have decided that it is a good form of relief, but in order to prevent the complication of the change to the new system of administering relief by a simultaneous change in the nature of the relief given.

The reasons for the establishment of a Committee of Parochial Relief in accordance with this scheme are as follows:—1. To produce uniformity of relief throughout the parish. 2. To secure by proper investigation that recipients are deserving, and thereby to prevent the funds which should be reserved for the deserving and industrious, from being bestowed inadvertently on the undeserving and idle. 3. To secure, by acquaintance with the circumstances and means of applicants, that the relief is adapted to their wants and that they are proper objects for relief.

4. To stop the systematic mendicancy and degradation of the poor that arises from many agencies being engaged in distributing relief independently of each other, and without the knowledge of the relief given by each other; and generally to encourage self-reliance and self-respect by withdrawing the perpetual expectation of small doles. 5. To make it possible, from the reduction effected in small doles, that more substantial help should be given to the deserving poor in temporary difficulty. 6. To encourage the duty of well-to-do children to help their aged parents. 7. To give prominence to the importance of making a thrifty provision for the future by means of Benefit Societies or Provident Dispensaries.

8. To establish proper relations between the poor on the one hand and the Clergy and District Visitors on the other, that these may henceforward be regarded as being in their respective spheres the friends and counsellors, and not the almsgivers, of the poor.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of November 1876 was 37,637, and 44,610 received outdoor relief, making a total of 82,247. This was an increase of 567 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 2,535, 11,468, and 21,012 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 684. This was an increase of 55 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 156 on the corresponding day of last year.

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, January 8:—

Mr. Alsager Hay Hill to move:

'That early steps be taken to make the principles and work of this Society more effectually known to the industrial classes.'

The next meeting of Council will be held on Monday, January 8.

The Central Office will be closed at 2 P.M. on the 23rd instant, and will be re-opened at 10 A.M. on the 27th instant.

The next number of the Reporter will be published on Thursday, January 11.

On Monday, January 15, at 4 P.M., a short paper will be read on a subject of interest to persons engaged in work among the poor. Of this meeting special notice will be given.

It is recommended that District Committees should be careful to forward to the proper offices inquiries which may not happen to be in their district; and that on inquiring of a District Committee for further information respecting a case previously reported, they should mention both the name and the number.

The following is taken from a letter recently received:—

'On the coast of Wales I have built, in addition to a farm-house, two rooms on the ground-floor, three above, besides bath-room, kitchen, servants' room, &c. I always keep a servant there, and it is thoroughly furnished, including plate and linen. I built it chiefly to lend—and to lend to overworked, deserving clergymen at the East End. I have plenty of applications for the summer, but none for the winter; if you know of anyone who would like to go for a month or so, I shall be glad to hear—either Church or Dissenter—but, of course, someone who would take care of the furniture &c. The climate in winter is stormy, but mild and remarkably healthy.'

Information respecting the cases of Charles Wilkinson, John White, and James White can be obtained at the Central Office. Application has been made by the two former to the Brighton Charity Organisation Society; and James (not John) White (as stated in our last number) has applied to the Paddington Committee.

WHITECHAPEL.—The Rev. Arthur Wedgwood has been appointed Hon. Secretary of the Whitechapel Committee in the place of the Rev. S. A. Barnett, resigned.

FULHAM.—The Rev. Herbert Wilson has been elected representative of this Committee, vice Rev. A. Scott, resigned.

WANDSWORTH.—Miss Harriet Gurney has been elected representative of this Committee in the place of Mr. R. M. Hensley.

BRITTON.—Mr. Alexander McArthur, M.P., has accepted the office of President of the Committee.

Mr. Aspinall, in the Chair; Capt. Gardner, Major FitzRoy, Hon. H. R. Scott, Mr. Edcombe.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee had been present—Wednesday, December 13, 1876.—Major Yard (in the Chair); Sir R. M. Stephenson, Major Prendergast.

BYE-LAWS.

Dr. Daniel gave notice of various amendments to the Bye-laws, which, in accordance with a resolution of Council of 16th February 1874, were referred in the first instance to the Administrative Committee.—EN.

The report of the Committee on the arrangement with the Ormond Street Children's Hospital was read and discussed. [We hope to publish the debate in a subsequent number.]

Sir Charles Trevelyan presented the resignation of Mr. T. J. Phillips Jodrell, one of the additional members of Council. He regretted that on account of increasing ill-health Mr. Jodrell was unable to continue his attendance at the meetings of Council. He would always take a very great interest in the work of the Society.

The Secretary was directed to convey to Mr. Jodrell the expression of the thanks of the Council for the services he had rendered to the Society.

The Council then adjourned.

The following contributions were received during the week ending Saturday, December 16, 1876:—Donations: Montague Ainslie, Esq., £5. 5s.; Capt. J. S. Black, £5; Lord Blantyre (for 1876 and 1877), £20; E. Bond, Esq., £5; C. S. Cantrell, Esq., 1s.; Lady Carbery, £5; J. Cropper, Esq., £20; Raikes Currie, Esq., £5; Rev. R. DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

EAST END COMMITTEES—At a meeting of the East End Committees held on the 8th inst., according to notice, for the discussion of the following subjects, viz.:—

(1) The formation of a Loan Society for the East End Districts of the Charity Organisation Society, by Mr. R. J. Rignall.

(2) The relief of urgent cases, by the Rev. S. A. Thompson-Yates.

(3) Answers to the attacks made on the Society through the East End press, by Mr. Jno. Jones.

It was resolved—after the first subject had been discussed—That each Committee should be requested to consider the paper read by Mr. R. J. Rignall, and, if necessary, to elect a representative who should attend a meeting for the consideration of the question of the formation of a Loan Society; and that the name of the member elected should be sent to Mr. Peters at the Stepney office, in order that arrangements for a meeting might be made.

With reference to the relief of urgent cases, the majority of the meeting were of opinion that relief ought to be given in exceptionally urgent cases, even where the inquiry may not be absolutely complete.

With reference to the paper read by Mr. Jones, it was resolved that the following suggestions be made to the East End Committees:—

That the proprietors of the various East End newspapers be invited to attend their meetings as visitors.

That a monthly report of the proceedings of the Committees, with specimens of interesting cases, appear weekly in the East End papers.

That a letter should be sent to the papers, inviting those persons who have attacked the Society through the press to meet the Hon. Secretary or members of Committee at their office, to be enlightened as to the working of the Society.

The discussion of a fourth subject on the agenda paper was postponed for want of time.

ST. GEORGES, HANOVER SQUARE.—PAROCHIAL COUNCIL.—The Parochial Council for the parish of St. Peter, in the St. George's (Hanover Square) District, have published a most useful series of instructions to their District Visitors with a view to avoiding or mitigating the outbreak of smallpox.

DISTRICT VISITING SOCIETIES.—We hope in our next number to give a summary of the paper read by Rev. Brooke Lambert, at the meeting of District Visitors and others, and held at the Townshend Buildings, Vincent Square, Westminster, on the 6th instant. An account of the meeting appeared in the Times of the 7th instant.

THE STRAND UNION.—The Strand Committee held, on the 8th inst., a meeting of their subscribers, at the Society of Arts, John Street, Adelphi. The Rev. R. J. Simpson took the chair. The annual report having been read and adopted, Mr. F. E. Colenso laid before the meeting a statement of the finance prospects of the Committee for the ensuing year, and Mr. E. W. Garrett explained the circumstances of the embezzlements committed by the Committee's late agent, Lawrence Ryan, showing that they had not been occasioned by any remissness on the part of the gentlemen who were the hon. secretaries at that time. He also stated that a small portion of the sums embezzled had been claimed and recovered from the Guarantee Society, but that the greater part were not recoverable within the terms of the policy. The meeting concluded with the usual votes of thanks, and a few words from the Chairman.

PROVINCIAL.

CARNARVONSHIRE.—A New Mendicity Society.—The Organising Secretary addressed the following letter to the editor of the Carnarvon and Denbigh Herald, on the 2nd instant:—

'I venture to address you on the subject of the advantages of establishing a Mendicity Society for Carnarvonshire, as I fear from your report of what took place at the court of quarter sessions on the 19th October that some misapprehension exists with regard to the matter.

'Many people appear to think that punishing vagrants by sending them to gaol has a strong deterrent influence on them. This, I venture to think, is a mistake. Repressive laws have been enacted against vagrants from the year 1349 down to our own day. The vagrant has been whipped, branded in the hand and on the shoulder; he has had his ears bored with a hot iron; has been transported to her Majesty's plantations; and oftentimes hanged; and, yet, still survives to annoy us. The only utility I can see in imprisoning the vagrant is that it to some extent prevents outsiders from following his example. The vagrant himself does not mind it; he merely regards it very much as others do the drawing of a tooth—a necessary but disagreeable operation. The real secret of putting down the beggar is to get the public to discountenance him; for as he loves sloth and ease, directly these necessities of his existence are cut off he ceases to exist as a beggar, and has to earn his own living instead of subsisting on the earnings of other people. The system I venture to recommend is that a Mendicity Society should be established in the county, the committee of which should be constituted of magistrates and members of boards of guardians; that this society should be supported by voluntary contributions; that it should issue tickets to every householder in the county to be given to vagrants in lieu of money; that these tickets should entitle the bearer to one pound of bread at points arranged as nearly as possible five miles apart from each other throughout the county; and that to prevent an improper use of the orders, each vagrant should be entitled only to one pound of bread at each station, no matter how many tickets he may present. This system would conciliate the public, because it would convince them that no vagrant could starve under it, and, on the other hand it would deter the vagrant from entering the county, as he would feel that all the pleasures of his existence were cut off.

'The result of the adoption of this system in the county of Dorset, where it has been working for six years, has been that crime has been reduced by more than one-half, the indictable offences having fallen from 137 in 1869 to 65 in 1875, and the number of persons apprehended for all classes of offences from 1,220 in 1869 to 581 in 1875; whilst the percentage of undetected crime in 1875 was also less than in any preceding period. Whilst crime has thus decreased in Dorsetshire in six years, it appears from the Judicial Statistics that in the adjoining counties there has been in the same period an increase in the number of minor offences, viz. those summarily dealt with.

'To those who have not hitherto studied the question of vagrancy, I would recommend a perusal of the Poor Law Report on Vagrancy issued in 1866.

'In the report, the master of the Wrexham Union states that 'Vagrants are for the most part, if not criminals, at least on the verge of crime.' And in other parts of the report, evidence is given of their committing the following crimes:—Robbing clothes lines and stables, setting fire to stacks, house-breaking (for which some are stated to carry knives constructed for the purpose), highway robberies, grotto robberies, pocket-picking and petty larceny, and felony generally. The master of the Newport Union says that the tramp who comes to him 'are the most worthless and reckless class that he has any knowledge of, and that they are composed of thieves of every kind, deserters from the army, bad characters discharged from the army as such, runaway apprentices, and idle vagabonds of every sort, who will not work, and prefer the vagabond life of a vagrant to any other.' The Inspector of Police in Scotland states that a great proportion of crimes and offences is committed by vagrants. 'Hawkers and pedlars,' he observes, 'generally accompanied by women and children, are frequently only beggars in disguise, on pretence of selling wares, although their whole stock-in-trade is sometimes not sufficient to maintain the party for a day.' Rural murders are most frequently committed by vagrants. As instances of this, I may among others cite the frightful murder of five people committed in 1870 at Denham, near Uxbridge, by John Owen, a tramp, and the comparatively recent attempt on the part of a tramp to murder the late Captain King, of Presaddfed, near Holyhead.

'The annual cost of carrying out such a scheme I have sketched is about £40 a year, made up thus: Bread, £24. 10s.; printing and stationery, £10. 10s.; postage, £1. 10s.; collector's commission, £2. 10s.; notice boards, £1.; £40.

'The saving effected by the adoption of such a system is very great. The rates are saved—1st. By the diminished number of vagrants relieved in the workhouse. 2nd. By the diminished number of criminals committed to prison.

'The public save in the following ways: 1st. By not losing much of the property now stolen or damaged. 2nd. By not losing valuable time in attending before the magistrates to prosecute. 3rd. By excluding from their families the contagious diseases frequently disseminated by wandering vagrants. 4th. By causing vagrants to work for their own living.

'There are at least 60,000 vagrants in England, Wales, and Scotland, who, if thrown into the labour market, would cause a sensible diminution in the price of labour, and, as a natural consequence, in the price of necessities, so that the labouring classes would not suffer loss. The amount now given in alms to vagrants in the county of Carnarvon must surely exceed £40 a year, so that it would not be too much to expect that this sum would be provided by the general public for carrying out the system I have sketched.'

CROYDON.—The Croydon Charitable Society informs us, that during the month ending December 3 the number of cases which came before the Inquiry Committee of the above Society was as follows:—Applied to the Society—tramps, 179; residents, 13; total, 192. The cases of residents were carefully inquired into: 10 were relieved, 3 refused; the value of relief given during the month £6. 3s. 4d.

MANCHESTER*.—OUTDOOR RELIEF.—The Manchester Board of Guardians have issued the following 'Public Notice as to Parish Relief':—

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR HEREBY GIVE NOTICE AS FOLLOWS:—

1. Outdoor relief will for the future be allowed only to persons of good character, who can satisfy the Guardians that their destitution has not been caused by their own improvidence or intemperance, and that whilst in work they did all they could to make provision against times of sickness or want of employment. Those who cannot satisfy the Guardians as to this will, if relieved at all, be required to enter the workhouse with their families.

2. Outdoor relief will not be granted, except in special cases, to any workmen or other operatives when on strike; to outdoor labourers out of work through frost; or to any other able-bodied person in good health who is only temporarily out of employment. Such persons will only be relieved inside the workhouse.

3. Outdoor relief will also be refused to persons of any of the following classes:—

Single able-bodied men; single able-bodied women; able-bodied widows without children, or having only one child to support; married women (with or without families) left destitute through their husbands having joined the Militia and being called up for training; persons residing with relatives, where the united income of the family is sufficient for the support of all its members, whether such relatives are liable by law to support the applicant or not. Also, except in special cases, to married women (with or without families) whose husbands, having been convicted of a crime, are undergoing a term of imprisonment; married women (with or without families) deserted by their husbands.

* Vile Reporter, No. 193, p. 156.

The Guardians give this warning in the hope that persons who have been in the habit of relying on assistance from the parish may endeavour, by thrift and economy, to make some provision for themselves, instead of becoming a burden upon the ratepayers, many of whom are not much better off than those who receive relief. The Guardians also take this opportunity of intimating that they think it probable that, in the course of a very few years, outdoor relief will be discontinued altogether, except in very urgent or special cases.

GLASGOW AND SCARBOROUGH.—Reports of Annual Meetings of Charity Organisation Societies at these places have been received. Accounts of them will be inserted in our next number.

FOREIGN.

A FOREIGN OPINION OF THE CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—The Bulletin du Bureau Central de Bienfaisance, published monthly in Geneva, says, in its November number, under the heading, 'Societies of Private Charity in England':—'In our last number we mentioned two societies, "La Société Helvétique de Bienfaisance de Paris," and the Central Agency for Inquiry and Help, established in the same town under the management of M. Bless, as having adopted the principles and the mode of action of our office.

'If we study what has been done in England during the last few years, we shall find that in that country, where Christian philanthropy calls forth such great, and, above all, such persevering individual efforts, the evil which is the consequence of unwise help ought necessarily to stimulate an inquiry as to the mode of doing good which would best secure the more efficacious employment of the resources of private charity.

'This is what has, in fact, taken place, and among the associations which especially accomplish this end, the one most worthy of notice is the Society for the Repression of Mendicancy and for the Organisation of Charity, with a view to the help and relief of the poor.

'This important institution is the more worthy of our notice since we read in one of its reports: "The principles and various aims of the office at Geneva are so like our own, that if it had not been established some years before our Society, we should not have hesitated to suppose that it owed its origin to us." Let us add that one of its most active members, Mr. Ribton-Turner, who is its organising secretary, came in 1872 to our director to make inquiries as to all the particulars of our work.'

Then follows a detailed account of the work of the Society.

STARVATION CASES.

The Society has, from time to time, made inquiries into the circumstances under which deaths of persons in alleged distress have occurred, and have been reported in the newspapers under some such heading as 'Death from Starvation.'

An account of one such case appeared under the heading 'Death through Privation,' in a daily journal of November 28. It appeared from the account that Richard Greenslade, aged 70, 'formerly a baker, had for the last 12 months been unable to follow his occupation on account of infirmity, and had to depend on his wife, who earned a few shillings a week at her needle, for their support. He often complained of want of food, and his body had become much emaciated.' Upon inquiry the following facts appeared; the information being obtained from the landlady, from the doctor, from a report in a local paper of the proceedings at the inquest, and from other reliable sources:—The deceased, who was a journeyman baker, had been married about seven years; his work had, partly through illness, been only casual, and from August 18 to August 22, having applied for relief from the Guardians, he was received into the workhouse. He left at his own desire, in order to take some work from a former employer, who failed soon after, and left the district. At the inquest, the doctor who had made the post-mortem examination, stated that the result showed that the cause of death was sanguineous apoplexy.

In another case, that of Ann Corney, which was reported in the papers as 'The Death from Starvation in Southwark,' it appeared, upon inquiry, that the deceased and her husband, an aged couple, had for the last seven years, been in receipt of 4s. 6d. weekly out-relief; that, according to her own statement to the relieving officer, she earned 3s. to 4s. at needlework, and that they received—from friends in the country—about 10s. a month. They had also received some casual help—e.g. a dinner a fortnight ago—from a baker living near, and for the past 18 months had, in consideration of their long tenancy, scarcely paid any rent; they had, therefore, about 10s. for all their other requirements. On his wife's death, the husband, who was weak-minded from old age, went into the workhouse, when 13s. 3d. was found upon him, 8s. 9d. of which he stated was in his wife's pocket at the time of her death (the remainder being the weekly out-relief he had since received). The jury, not having the above evidence before them, had, says one of the newspaper accounts, returned, 'in accordance with the medical evidence,' a verdict of 'death from starvation.'

A third death—that of Mary Day—was stated to have occurred in consequence of the reluctance of deceased to enter the workhouse; but it appeared upon inquiry, from the evidence of the parochial medical officer, and from the verdict of the jury, that her death ensued upon her not having applied for medical relief, though advised to do so by the doctor in question. She had occupied for 20 years the room in which she died, had been for a long time in receipt of 3s. a week out-relief from the St. Pancras Board of Guardians, and, according to her landlady's statement, though 'not a drinking woman, she occasionally indulged,' but had never, to the landlady's knowledge, wanted for food, and had up to the time of her death half-a-pint of beer a day. A benevolent lady, and the Scripture reader (who was with deceased two hours before she died, and was 'quite certain' she never wanted the necessaries of life) had 'looked after' her for the last three years.

The fourth case, which occurred at the end of November in Westminster, was that of Ellen Sullivan, aged 76, who, according to the reports in two daily papers (in one of which the heading was 'Death before the Workhouse'), died from want of sufficient food. Deceased had lived with three grown-up daughters and one son in one room, and out-relief to the amount of 2s. had been granted, but, about two years ago, had been discontinued on the refusal of deceased to enter the workhouse, and had, upon a recent application, been again refused. The verdict at the inquest attributed the death to 'natural causes.' The family had been, since 1871, on the books of the St. George's Committee, and had received from them assistance in the form of loans.

DIFFICULT CASES.

No. 3.—A man whom it is not thought desirable to pauperise by forcing into the house has in a Roman Catholic Home two children, aged 11 and 6, for whose maintenance he has been paying 5s. a week. He is unable at the present time to continue this payment; but he has a good character from his employers, who state that it is only from the slackness of trade that he is out of work. The managers of the Home ask us to take up the case. The mother is a confirmed drunkard, and has lately been in prison for theft. Is it desirable to pay for the children till their father gets work again, in order to keep them from the evil influences to which they will otherwise be exposed?

MEDICAL CHARITIES.

Correspondence.—The Council does not consider itself responsible for any of the opinions expressed by their correspondents.

We have received the following letter on the subject of the statement respecting PROVIDENT DISPENSARIES:—

'In the Reporter for December 7, a resumé is given of the Tabular Statement which the St. Giles's Committee has lately drawn up showing the position of Provident Dispensaries in the metropolis. In this resumé it is stated that the Provident Dispensary in Ordnance Road, St. John's Wood, is the largest, having 9,649 members; yet it only divides one hundred guineas among its seven medical officers. How is this? In running one's eye down the columns it is impossible not to contrast this dispensary with that at Haverstock Hill, which stands immediately before it on the list. The leading particulars of the two are as follows:—

'Haverstock Hill.—No. of members, 3,396; Payment by members, £575; number of medical officers, 4, among whom £416 were divided for ordinary cases, and £115 for midwifery; while the dispenser received £33. 15s.

'At St. John's Wood, the number of members is 9,649; their payments, £254; there are 7 medical officers, who received £105 for ordinary cases and £86 for midwifery; while the dispenser's salary was £150.

'Surely this contrast is very unfavourable to the institution at St. John's Wood, and requires some explanation. On whose authority is it stated that the medical officers are "content" with their remuneration?—Yours faithfully,

'M. D.'

The British Medical Journal.—We note in the numbers of this Journal of the 9th and 16th December a correspondence on the abuse of hospitals and dispensaries. The writer of the first letter, signed 'A Member of the Charity Organisation Society,' promises to continue the correspondence, a summary of which we hope to be able to publish in due course.

ERRATUM.—Reporter, No. 198, p. 176, second column, fourth line, for 'rural' read 'special.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of December 1876 was 37,821, and 44,986 received outdoor relief, making a total of 82,807. This was an increase of 660 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 3,429, 12,192, and 21,172 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 656. This was a decrease of 28 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 109 on the corresponding day of last year.

INTEMPERANCE.*—In an article on Intemperance in this month's Contemporary, Mr. Francis Peek gives some startling figures. He says: 'There are about 203,000 apprehensions in each year for drunkenness; and, calculating that for every one apprehended at least two will escape, we have the appalling total of over half-a-million of drunkards in Great Britain. Assuming that no more than two-thirds of these are heads of families, and that each head represents, according to the usual rate, four persons besides himself, we have nearly 2,500,000 men, women, and children existing under the misery and degradation implied in the words "members of a drunkard's family." He further states that, "at the present moment fully three-fourths of England's paupers, or nearly 600,000, are such through the direct or indirect effects of intemperance." 'The chief remedy,' he says, 'is to be sought in the diminution of drinking places; . . . the number of drunkards in any locality is determined by the number of drinking-places; . . . in going through a list of towns and villages, the amount of intemperance is shown, with few exceptions, to be in proportion to the beer-shops and public-houses; . . . wherever drinking places have been diminished, a decrease of intemperance has followed.'

THE Charity Organisation Reporter.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 200.

THURSDAY EVENING, JANUARY 11, 1877. [DOUBLE NUMBER.] PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

The special meeting, of which a preliminary notice was given in the last number of the Reporter, has been postponed.

Copies of a new edition of the Manual can be had on application to the Secretary.

The title-page and Index of the Reporter for 1876 will be issued with the next number.

FULHAM.—The address of the Fulham and Hammersmith

Committee has been changed from 7 Brook Green Terrace to 56 Hammersmith Road, W.

ST. GEORGE'S, HANOVER SQUARE.—The Hon. J. Lawrence has been appointed one of the representatives of this Committee, vice Mr. W. W. Moore, resigned; and Lord Richard Grosvenor will, during the absence of Lord Sudley, attend the meetings of Council as representative of the Committee.

ISLINGTON.—Lady Wilson has been appointed one of the Hon. Secretaries of this Committee.

HACKNEY.—Mr. Edward Bernard has been appointed one of the Hon. Secretaries of the Hackney Committee, vice Mr. Charles Kemp, resigned.

BETHNAL GREEN.—The Rev. J. D. McGachen has resigned the Hon. Secretaryship of this Committee.

WOOLWICH.—The address of the Sub-Office of this Committee will, in future, be Rose Cottage, Shooter's Hill Road, S.E.

DEPTFORD.—Mr. C. J. Lambert has been elected one of the Hon. Secretaries of this Committee, vice Mr. H. Wilding, resigned.

NOTICE TO DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

SCHOOL BOARD CASES.—District Committees whose expenses in dealing with School Board Cases, in accordance with the arrangement made with Mr. F. Peek, are more than £10 a quarter, may in future, if they wish it, be paid monthly, on filling up copies of a short form, which can be had on application to the Secretary. The form must be received at the Central Office within three days after the 1st of each month. Applications not received before the 4th of each month will be deferred to the following month.

District Committees which have not sent to the Central Office copies of their Annual Report are requested to forward them with as little delay as possible. In accordance with a recent decision of the Administrative Council 125 copies only should be sent, 100 without and 25 with the list of Subscribers.

Much needless labour having been caused by requests to District Committees to inquire regarding addresses in their districts, which have proved to be either non-existent or incorrect, the attention of Hon. Secretaries and Agents is drawn to the importance of verifying and testing, by means of the 'London Post Office Directory,' the statements of applicants respecting their previous addresses, or the addresses of their employers, references, &c., before writing to other Hon. Secretaries to make the necessary inquiries.

At this time of year secondhand copies of last year's Directory, price 12s., can be obtained of Messrs. Walford Brothers, 320 Strand, W.C. The same firm will supply new copies of the Directory for 1877.

Sets of County Directories, Clergy Lists, and other books of reference are kept at the Central Office.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee met on the 21st and 28th December, and on the 4th instant.

There had been present at these meetings—on the 21st ultimo—

Mr. A. H. Hill, in the Chair; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Sir Graham Briggs, Lady Wilson, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Major FitzRoy, Major Prendergast, Major Nares, Major Yard, Capt. Fortescue, Messrs. Brown, Ellis, Edgcombe, Mitchell, Miner, and Peters.

On the 28th ultimo—

Major Prendergast, in the Chair; Sir R. M. Stephenson, Major Nares, Capt. Fortescue, Rev. H. I. Cummins, and Mr. Burdett Roberts.

On the 4th instant—

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the Chair; Sir T. Graham Briggs, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Major Prendergast, Capt. Fortescue, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Brand, Brown, Ellis, and Peters.

FINANCE.—The Committee reported that during the week ending December 30 the receipts had been £222. 9s. 4d. for the General Fund, and £52. 2s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £312. 19s. 7d. and £265. 5s. 4d. respectively, £207. 6s. 4d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—They had made grants of £30, £25, and £25 to the Bethnal Green, Stepney, and Mile End Committees respectively, the respective amounts granted to these Committees since the 1st of October last being £50, £85, and £95.

EFFICIENCY OF DISTRICT COMMITTEES.—The Administrative Committee had adopted a recommendation of the District Sub-Committee, that the Sub-Committee should send up for submission to Council reports respecting matters of special importance connected with the work and wants of District Committees.

Mr. A. P. Fletcher and Mr. C. Lewes, of the St. Marylebone Committee, had been elected members of the Districts Sub-Committee.

ANNUAL REPORTS.—An order had been given that the annual reports of District Committees should not be sent to District Committees as hitherto, on their receipt at the Central Office.

COLLECTION OF FUNDS IN THE DISTRICTS.—It appeared that, on the report of the Finance and Collection Sub-Committee, the Administrative Committee had determined that the Collectors of the Council should be placed under the direct control of the Central Office, but that the money collected by them should be paid into the respective bankers of the District Committees, subject to the commission ordered by the Administrative Committee. It was to be distinctly understood that the Collectors should have the active co-operation and support of the Committee of the District in which they were acting.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meetings of this Sub-Committee had been present—on the 19th ultimo:—

Major FitzRoy, in the Chair; Miss Howes, Miss Octavia Hill, Messrs. Bousfield, Graham, and Lewes. Messrs. Seton-Karr and Fletcher (Visitors).

On the 2nd instant—

Mr. A. D. Graham, in the Chair; Sir Douglas Forsyth, Miss Octavia Hill, Messrs. Bousfield and Lewes.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 3rd instant had been present—

Sir C. E. Trevelyan, in the Chair; Major Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Rev. H. F. Mallet.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meetings of this Sub-Committee had been present—on the 19th ult.—

Mr. Bevan, in the Chair; Miss Howes, Major FitzRoy, and Mr. R. V. Tidman (Visitor).

On the 3rd inst.—

Mr. Aspinall, in the Chair; Capt. Gardner.

THE FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meetings of this sub-committee had been present—on the 20th ult.—

Mr. A. H. Hill, in the Chair; Sir R. M. Stephenson, Messrs. C. A. Miner, Corrie, and Rev. H. I. Cummins.

On the 4th inst.—

Mr. C. A. Miner, in the Chair; Major Prendergast, and Mr. Corrie.

THE INUNDATIONS.—The Secretary reported that he had visited the parts inundated in the Lambeth District, and had been in communication with the Lambeth Committee. Two of the Clergymen in Lambeth had appealed through the daily papers, and he understood that one of them had obtained as much as £700, besides clothing and other articles. The Lambeth Vestry had formed a Relief Committee, of which several of the Charity Organisation Committee were members. But he regretted that the Relief Committee of the Vestry had not accepted the offer of the Committee, to place at their disposal the services of the Charity Agent.

He had communicated with the Stepney and St. George's East Committees respecting the inundation at Wapping. In the former district there was but little distress; in the latter the distress appeared to be considerable. The Committee had offered the Relief Committee, in whose name the Rev. S. Buss had appealed, every assistance in their power. The Secretary had forwarded to the St. George's East Committee several contributions, received for the relief of persons suffering from the inundation.

Mr. Douglas Brown, Hon. J. Lawrence, and others made a few remarks. It appeared that the Lambeth Committee had not acted with sufficient promptitude.

CO-OPERATION WITH THE INDUSTRIAL CLASSES.*

Mr. A. H. Hill moved—

That early steps be taken to make the principles and work of this Society more effectually known to the industrial classes.

He said that there was a strong feeling in the minds of the public that the Charity Organisation movement was a movement of the upper and middle classes. Sometimes the Society was condemned as being too doctrinaire and sometimes as too clerical. But, whatever impression might exist on these points, it was clearly the principle of the Society to rely on the support of no one class, but, recognising, of necessity, the strata into which society divided itself, to approach each class through the means of communication which each offered. In some members of the Society there appeared to be, arising from ignorance, a horror of trades' unions; on the other hand, the industrial and working classes were profoundly ignorant of the work of the Society. The Society ought to be generous to these organisations of labour, which were producing a result similar to that for which it was itself working, viz. the diminution of pauperism.

To understand the inner condition of, and thus be enabled to act with, the industrial classes, members must make an effort to come into closer contact with them; and at the district offices of the Society more complete information should be available respecting industrial and provident trade organisations.

The industrial classes had, as a rule, for their place of meeting, no alternative between the public-house and the school-room. The latter appeared to him to have an air of uninhabitableness which could not compete with the more cheerful aspect of the public-house. Clubs had been tried; but hitherto, at least, they had not been successful. If the Society could influence these classes it must be prepared to meet them halfway. Why should not a short popular statement of the work and aims of the Society be put up, like the advertisements of the Post Office Directory, in the public-houses which were houses of call for the different trades? Similar statements might be placarded at the offices of the Penny Bank. Or, again, could not the Loan System of the Society be enlarged, and its advantages clearly set forth and more generally made known? There was no doubt that workmen were often hard-pressed by the sums they had to contribute for their fellow-workmen: ought not some attempt made to induce employers to put up notices of the Society in workshops? There was among the industrial classes, also, a ignorance respecting the nature of the Poor Law, and the of opinion with regard to the restriction of out-door relief. were inclined to believe that, as ratepayers, they had a right to out-relief; and such opinions were constantly uttered during the period of the agricultural labourers' movement. Could not a ar treatise on the Poor Law be published, to explain and warn of the changes taking place in the administration of Poor Law p ere was prevalent among the working classes an uneasy feeling he public-house was not to continue as the place of resort for anaction of general business. Could not the large rooms at e's Cafés, &c., be utilised for conference on subjects in which were of necessity interested? Could not more be done to erate with those who formed the committees of the numerous ing Societies now springing into existence; and above all was his a fitting time to assist in the organisation of the labour of ing women in the metropolis?

Society was essentially a distributive society; it was for it to own the lines of work, by which societies differing in their t might co-operate for the benefit of the people. He suggested the subject of his motion should be considered at a special ng of Council.

O. E. Maurice seconded the motion. There was undoubtedly lice and counter-prejudice on the part of the working classes of the Society; and he considered that in some of the papers had been written about the Society some injustice had been to the working classes by the hard tone that had been adopted. er a short discussion, in which Major FitzRoy, Mr. H. N. , Mr. A. H. Hill, Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, and Mr. J. R. Hollond part, the motion was carried, on the understanding that the t should be further considered at a special meeting of Council, conference or otherwise.

Council then adjourned.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

KENSINGTON.—Annual Report, 1875-6.—VAGRANTS.—The Report of this Committee has the following passage respecting vagrants:—

'Persons charitably inclined give them a ticket or the address of our Office, or perhaps they come of their own accord. They are relieved with bread, to be eaten on the premises, unless it is obvious to the person in charge of the Office that they are not distressed wayfarers, as they usually represent themselves to be. Of these, during the past year, 384 came to the Office, and 345 of them had bread. The great majority were able-bodied men between twenty and forty, and probably impostors eating the bread of idleness; but, unless the imposture is transparent, we give it them, rather than leave the public any excuse for indiscriminate almsgiving. We are satisfied, from inquiries made by ourselves and information given us by the Poor Law authorities and others who have examined the subject, that street beggars are very rarely honest labourers in search of work. They are usually persons who, from long indulgence in idleness or vice, have become unfit for regular employment, or to whom it is irksome. It is very difficult to determine how such characters should be dealt with, but the most injudicious and unkind thing which anyone who wishes to befriend them can do is to give them money, and so enable them to remain as they are, and encourage others to become equally useless and wretched.'

The total number of cases reported and cases dealt with by this Committee, exclusive of vagrants, was 1,091 in 1876, as compared with 1,122 in 1875.

ST. GEORGE'S, HANOVER SQUARE.—Annual Report, 1875-6.—Respecting Co-operation in Charity the Report says:—

'When the Charity Organisation Society first came into existence, it was calculated, as has been mentioned above, that the charitable funds of London were sufficient to maintain every eighth person in comfort. Theory, however, in this instance, as in many more, has to yield to fact; and your Committee find that, until the streams of charity can be conducted into truer channels, the stubborn fact meets them that the proper local agency or private person cannot at a moment's notice be found to meet the pressing emergency.'

It appears from a note on page 13 of the Report that during the past year, on the average, the sum of £28, divided amongst 28 cases, has been distributed monthly.

The Committee dealt with 1,233 in the year 1874-5, exclusive of Reports sent out, inquiries for other Committees, and vagrants. During the past year they have dealt with 1,231.

The forms filled up in the case of applicants in receipt of pensions, granted in the manner explained by the Hon. Secretary in Reporter No. 192, are given at length. It is noteworthy that the Committee publish a list, and thankfully acknowledge the receipt of Hospital letters received during the year.

PROVINCIAL.

SCARBOROUGH.—ANNUAL MEETING.—Begging Petitions, District Visiting, &c.—The sixth annual meeting of the Scarborough Society for Repressing Mendicity was held on the 8th of December last. During the year 250 cases have been brought before the committee, of which 159 were refused relief, 7 referred to guardians and private persons, and 84 were assisted. In the course of his speech Archdeacon Blunt referred to the action of the Society with regard to begging petitions. 'These used to come round,' he said, 'very frequently; and while money was often got by them, nobody ever knew whether it reached the proper object or not, or how it was expended. This Society entertained all the petitions that were submitted to it, and sanctioned those that were found, upon examination, to be deserving.' We should have been glad to hear what safeguards are taken by the Society to prevent any abuse of endorsed petitions. What ultimately comes of the petition? If the petition is for £10 are any effective steps taken to prevent more than that sum being collected, &c.? During the subsequent reading of a paper by Mr. John Hart, that gentleman advocated the employment of more visitors. 'No doubt investigation in the first instance is best done by a good paid officer. He is able to verify statements as to residence, earnings, employment, to visit references and employers; but, to make his efforts bear their full value, he should be assisted by a body of good visitors, who would give the finishing touches of investigation—the little personal facts, the desires, and hopes, and to a certain extent the capacities of the applicant would be more thoroughly learnt by a volunteer visitor. . . . One of the real and lasting benefits such a body of visitors would confer on the poor would be teaching them to really do more for themselves, and by watching over each family with continuous interest, and trying to get them to see that by careful industry they can best help themselves; but when they find a family, who from misfortune or sickness really wants help, they do not hesitate to give liberally if adequate help will secure permanent good.' S. F.

GLASGOW.—ANNUAL MEETING.—Charitable Relief.—The Glasgow Charity Organisation Society held its third annual meeting on the 15th of December last. According to the Report, 1,061 cases were investigated during the past year. Of these, no less than 560 were found to be undeserving. Of the remainder, 406 were recommended to various agencies or private persons for relief, and 95 assisted by the Committee. The Report adds, 'A number of the undeserving list were ascertained to be such gross impostors that it was felt requisite to take some notice of them in the newspapers, in order to put the public on their guard; and also, as far as the Society could, to prevent the persons from carrying on successfully their fraudulent designs.' We should have been glad to have had more details respecting this action on the part of the Society. 'Deeming it desirable to possess a full and reliable list of the different charitable societies connected with the city, the Council appointed a small Committee to execute this work. Considerable difficulty was experienced in obtaining the necessary information. Societies that neglected to send a report of their work, or furnish the necessary information regarding their objects, have been excluded. Very few really good societies, however, have in this way been omitted.' What co-operation could do in Glasgow is very clearly shown. . . . the large sum of £157,000 is annually collected by 68 societies alone; while, by the various churches, there is probably not less than £14,000 expended on the relief of the poor connected with them. There is also what is given away privately—of the extent of which it is impossible to form any idea—and probably it is not far off the mark to set it down at half a million raised annually from all sources on behalf of the poor. Of course, the whole of this cannot be available for this purpose; but, allowing that £200,000 go for cost of management, &c., there remains the large sum of £800,000, which would still allow of grants of about £16 a year to all the registered and unregistered poor in the three parishes.' S. F.

DWELLINGS OF THE POOR.—The Sanitary Record, in its weekly summary of medical officers' reports, says, in reference to Tamworth:—'The medical officer also specially refers to the want of proper accommodation for the poor, whose dwellings are so shamefully overcrowded "that it is by no means uncommon to find ten persons sleeping in one room of 8 or 9 feet square, with no other means of ventilation than a rude window containing four small squares of glass." We think this, to a considerable extent, accounts for the large amount of infant mortality.'

At Bolton the medical officer states his belief that the high death-rate was partly caused by want of sufficient ventilation and the filthy dwellings in which many of the poor live, and quotes a paragraph from Dr. Playfair that 'death, like the evil demons of old, shuns cleanly places.' Acting on this opinion the inspectors had obtained improved ventilation in more than 300 houses.

DISTRICT VISITING SOCIETIES.

WORK AMONG THE POOR.—A meeting was held on December 6, 1876, in the Townshend Schools, Vincent Square, Westminster, to discuss work among the poor in London. Lord Claude Hamilton was in the chair.

The Rev. Brooke Lambert read a paper* on the 'Province of Benevolence,' of which the following are extracts:—

'I have suggested four levers to help in raising the inert mass of hopeless misery—work, saving, cleanliness, schooling. Leave them to do their work. They will work automatically if you oil the wheels now and then; but don't expect great results at once; work and wait, and wait rather than work.'

'You will have acquired considerable education in the process of district visiting when you have got thus far. You will have grasped the fact that you are not so much to try to remedy the evils directly as to set at work the forces which will do the work for you. And your work will be the more effective when you recognise the fact that the first condition to justify you in undertaking a case is that it is remediable. You will have to leave to other agencies than private charity the remedy of many cases. You will, in fact, throw them on one side as not within your province; whilst you attack the cases which seem capable of real help. You find this in all pursuits. You begin to collect fossils, insects, flowers. At first you roam far and wide, and fill your box, bag, or net with things creeping innumerable; you gather every flower and pocket every stone. A little exercise teaches you what to look for, diminishes your field of labour, and increases your crop of results.

* Copies of this paper, reprinted from the Guardian of December 20, 1876, have been, through Mr. Brooke Lambert's kindness, placed at the disposal of the Council. They can be had free on application. In the Guardian of the 20th ult., a full account of the meeting will be found.

'And this will stand out as a salient fact—that to relieve one case thoroughly is worth more than to touch half a dozen. Then you will realise the value of this Charity Organisation Society. Money is wasted in London—charities overlap frightfully. The water which might turn the mill-wheel is scattered in wasteful dribblets, which saturate instead of sweetening the land. The difference between 40s. spent by as many people on forty different families, and the 40s. spent on one case to get the sick man off his bed, to send the sick child to its friends in the country, or to transfer a family bodily to a more congenial sphere of work, is enormous.

'Slowly and reluctantly, but very confidently, you will arrive at the truth that some cases are best left untouched by you—not left alone—for there is another agency at work, the Poor Law, with its stern restrictions and its prison-like refuge. You will learn by experience that its sternness is true kindness—that, were its help given as freely as you once gave your shillings, the mass of the poor reduced to this low ebb of hope could never resist throwing itself into its arms. The Poor Law is a stern mother—like the mother teaching her child to walk, she must be insensible to the child's cries till the task is done.

'And now may I say a word or two to you on the general spirit of visiting? First, I hope you will not mind my saying plainly that the jam and powder system of district visiting is a bad one. You will guess what I mean. When you were young you were bribed to take the powder by the jam in the spoon. Well, when you go into the poor man's room with a tract in one hand and a shilling in the other, I call it the jam and powder system. You know that the person takes the tract because of the shilling. You know, if you will examine yourself, that you would not dare to offer the tract without the shilling. Tracts are good—at least, some of them, and charity is good; but you must keep the two apart. Relief humiliates when it is accepted from a superior, not from a friend. Religion disgusts when it is offered as a condition of relief.

'And so, secondly, you must get rid of the I and My system. You don't go to people who can look on life from your point of view; you must try and see what is practicable in their situation, not what you think desirable. You have laughed often enough at the lady of the ancien régime, who, when told that the poor people had no bread to eat, asked why they didn't eat buns. But, frankly speaking, we talk as much nonsense when we expect the poor to observe the niceties we use in the management of our houses and children.

'Thirdly. Remember that none are so sensitive as those who receive favours. Approach the poor from above, and they may cringe, but they will never open to you. They are like the sea anemones. Touch them, and they close over everything, but you will not see what you want to see. They will take all you give, but you will get nothing for your pains.

'Fourthly. Believe well of them; you won't go long among them without finding such jewels as you little expected to find in such a place. The representation of the poor as a drinking, wife-beating set is in one sense true. They have not the money for the dissipation of society in balls and parties. They don't dance all night, get a fit of indigestion from too good a supper, and then feel lazy next morning, and put off this or that bit of business till they feel in the humour for it. No; they take their pleasure in a more vulgar and concentrated way. They drink one dram, and then another and another, and they, too, are unwell next morning, and don't do all they ought to do. Drunkenness is more common in the poor than with our class. Neglect of duty is not. And as for wife-beating—it is terribly common in some families, but I mention it because it brings out a virtue which puts us to shame, in the grand forgiveness which the sufferers extend to the wrongdoers. It must be a bad case indeed which is prosecuted; and when the man is sentenced, who but the beaten wife ceaselessly wearies her friends with importunities to help her to find the money necessary for the fine or for the security?

'Lastly. Infinite patience. How the doctors and the legislators in whose company we started would laugh at the idea that you could remedy an evil by an Act of Parliament, or cure a cancer with a day's trouble! Those who have read human nature have learnt, like the doctor and the legislator, that time, working with other remedies, is the main factor in the cure of evils. You must not hope that the evils wrought by centuries of social wrongs—for the evils of the poor are due largely to social wrongs—that the demoralisation wrought by a life of careless, hopeless drifting can be cured in a day, a month, or a year. Be patient with the sufferer.

The husbandman waiting for the fruit hath long patience. And One has longer patience still. Do you know the story Jeremy Taylor rescued from oblivion? One evening there came to Abraham's tent door a man weary with his journey. "Turn in, my friend, turn in and rest thyself," said Abraham; and, washing his feet and spreading the food, he made the wayfarer comfortable. But when at sunset the traveller made his orisons to the sun, Abraham turned him from the tent. And in the night God called Abraham, and he said, "Here am I." And the Lord said, "Abraham, where is the old man I sent thee?" And Abraham said, "O Lord, I sent him forth, for he worshipped not Thee, but worshippeth strange gods. There shall no such tarry in my sight." And the Lord said, "I have borne with him these eighty years. Couldst not thou bear with him one night?"

Canon Farrar moved the following resolution:—"That, in the interests of the poor, it is of vital importance that relief should be bestowed more advisably than at present, so as to secure real and permanent benefit to the persons relieved." The harm, he said, done by a good deal of almsgiving in London was one of the first things which struck him on coming to the Metropolis. He spoke with great deference to their longer experience, but money was thrown to the daughters of the horse-leech, who cry 'Give, give,' which might be devoted not merely to the necessities, but even to the highest wants of life. The late Charles Kingsley said that if all the charities in his village were suddenly to strike, every publichouse in the village would also close its doors. Probably the scant welcome which the visitor to the poor often received was due to the knowledge of the poor as to the inefficiency of the present mode of relieving. They should be taught to be gentle, and he told the little boys in his elementary schools the great rule of Epictetus, that virtue (manliness) alone makes the gentleman.

Miss Octavia Hill seconded the resolution. She said that within her observation a great many more had come forward to work among the poor; but, unless they were well guided, their self-sacrificing devotion might even do harm. Some doles ate out the heart of the people, and, by the expectation of their continuance, caused the poverty they were intended to alleviate. Suppose, among every group of visitors, one should be selected to be a sort of secretary to the others and to communicate to all new visitors particulars of the case. The plan had already worked successfully in more than one parish, and its general adoption would make a great difference. The secretary would have great assistance from the district committees of the Charity Organisation Society, and she would soon learn what cases to refer to the Guardians, the School Board officers, the Inspectors of Nuisances. The National Penny Bank propaganda, rules for the suppression of infection, &c., would be work to unite together the district visitors in different parishes. When people come face to face with those they pity they will give doles unless they can be convinced by investigation what is the result of that which they are doing. They must trace the history of the family they have to deal with. The larger outlook required can only be attained by organisation. The responsibility of the whole question rests with the visitors and with the clergy, who are the centre of the visitors. The rich and the poor must be linked together, the vigour with the refinement of the nation. The Rev. the Hon. W. H. Fremantle proposed the second resolution:—"That it is desirable, with a view to the promotion of this end, that the Clergy (of all denominations) should so organise their staff of helpers, that individual visitors may be able to refer to recognised advisers of special experience in such matters with regard to families or persons who may seem to need relief." He joined Mr. Lambert in protesting against associating religion with little doles. In his own parish there was a committee, due in its inception chiefly to Miss Hill and Mr. Barnett, now of St. Jude's, Whitechapel, to which all cases are referred. Great use is made of the Charity Organisation Society, but for inquiry only. The Rev. W. Tennant seconded the resolution.

CASE OF W. J. PLUNKETT WADE.

At the Marylebone Police Court on Saturday, 16th December, 1876, before Mr. Mansfield, Magistrate, Walter John Plunkett Wade was charged for endeavouring to obtain money from Sir Edmund Beckett, Bart., Q.C., of 33 Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Square, by means of false pretences, to wit—a begging-letter. The prisoner was brought up in custody, a warrant for his apprehension having been obtained on the day previous (Friday). Mr. George Lewis, junr., instructed by Mr. C. J. Ribton-Turner, prosecuted on behalf of the Charity Organisation Society.

Mr. Lewis: I appear on behalf of the Charity Organisation Society to prosecute the defendant on a charge of attempting to obtain charitable contributions by fraud; and I think when you have heard the circumstances you will come to the conclusion that the case is a very serious one, so far as the prisoner's misconduct is concerned. From 1868 to the present period you will find that the prisoner has lived on charitable contributions sent to him by persons who have been touched by pathetic appeals, contained in letters sent by the defendant to charitably disposed persons.—I will now, sir, read you the letter sent to Sir Edmund Beckett, which was calculated to excite the sympathy of the charitable, and when the true facts are made known to you you will see what sort of a person the prisoner is. The letter is as follows:—

HERNE, NEAR CANTERBURY, 7TH NOV., 1876.

SIR,—I trust you will kindly pardon the very great liberty I take by addressing you as a perfect stranger, which the desperate state of my circumstances alone could induce me to do. I was educated at Eton, and have served in the army. Since leaving the service I have gained my livelihood by taking pupils for the military examinations, and kept a small establishment for that purpose exclusively. After living in uninterrupted happiness with my wife for several years, she suddenly left me with one of our three children. I commenced proceedings in the Divorce Court, which I could not continue for want of means, against her worthless paramour Capt. —, late of the — Regt., who had previously seduced her married sister in India, for which he had to pay heavy damages. She afterwards died. Thus did Capt. — become the destroyer of two married sisters. This catastrophe, sir, led to the breaking up of my once happy home—which home was my bread—for I was obliged in consequence to return my pupils to their parents, and ask by my own exertions to support myself as well as to maintain and educate my two remaining children, both girls, feeling sensible that upon their education must depend their future bread. To add to my sorrows, sir, my second child is afflicted with a weak constitution—curvature of the spine—upon which account she has been rejected as a candidate for St. Anne's Society School, and which necessitates wine and other nourishing food, I am no longer able to afford her; whilst my own health and eyesight are rapidly failing me, so that my working days are numbered; and being in my 49th year they will soon be over. In consequence of the recent reduction made in the army examinations, as well as the great competition among tutors, I am now reduced to starvation, being without the commonest necessities of life. During the last two years I have placed my second child, aged 16, at a good school as governess pupil, but I am now called upon to remove her, being unable to pay in advance the next quarter's premium, and I have not a shilling to offer her. In order, sir, to avert this dreadful calamity, I am endeavouring through the kindness and charity of my friends to raise a sufficient fund to enable me to set up a small school, so that I may be able to support myself as well as to maintain and educate my children. May I, sir, so far presume upon your benevolence as to solicit a small contribution towards this fund, by which you may help to be the blessed means of saving my poor motherless girls from ruin. I am also suffering great anxiety, sir, for the fate of my youngest child, a little girl of 14, who ought to be removed from the fearful example of a mother living in sin with her paramour, Capt. —, a convicted felon, who has recently undergone a term of imprisonment with hard labour for defrauding a bank in Cornwall! For the truthfulness of my statements I beg to refer you to Rev. Henry J. Dixon, Yarncombe Vicarage, near Barnstaple, N. Devon. This gentleman has known me for 21 years, and has kindly undertaken to receive contributions and to take charge of the school funds.

I have the honour to remain, Sir,
Your most obedient Servant,

(Signed) W. J. PLUNKETT WADE.

Sir E. Beckett, Bart.

You will find, sir, from the evidence I will bring forward, that at the time he wrote this letter in which he stated that he was 'reduced to utter destitution, being devoid of the commonest necessities of life,' that he was engaged in a house, at Herne, near Canterbury, as a tutor, receiving his board and lodging, and living in every comfort, and with reference to—The Prisoner: Without any salary; I had no salary.—Mr. Lewis: That, I believe, is true, that he did not receive any salary, but he writes on this date, the 7th of November, that he was living without the commonest necessities of life. The truth is, that at that time he was living in the house receiving his board and lodging and educating two children, and the statement he made is utterly false. With reference to the statement that his wife ran away from him, you will find that in 1865 he was brought before Mr. Flowers at Bow Street, charged with attempting to commit suicide by pretending to throw himself over Waterloo Bridge. He saw a policeman on the bridge, and he ran to one of the seats to put his foot on the parapet, when the policeman held him. He said then that he would commit suicide at some time or another. He told the same story before Mr. Flowers, at Bow Street, and a remand was granted. At the following hearing a solicitor appeared for the wife, and told the magistrate that the prisoner had married a young lady, he being at the time a married man, and three or four children were born of the marriage. About this time he paid his addresses to another young lady, and subsequently seduced her. The magistrate heard what he had to say, and in the meantime some charitable persons, moved by his story at the first hearing, sent some subscriptions to Mr. Flowers. These subscriptions Mr. Flowers refused to give him, and he discharged him, stating that he did not believe the prisoner ever intended to commit suicide, and from that time to the present the prisoner had been in the habit of writing begging letters asking for charitable assistance on the ground that his wife had left him, his home is broken up, he has no means of living, and is anxious to obtain sufficient to enable him to provide for the education of his daughters, the fact being that they are with their mother, and not in any way dependent on him. Here are a bundle of the letters written by the prisoner, which have come into the possession of the Charity Organisation Society, setting forth the same tale and relating the alleged troubles of his life. He would have remained at Herne to this day in this situation at Mr. Marshall's perfectly comfortable, but for some misconduct, which I shall state to you. Subsequently to writing this letter to Sir E. Beckett, from what came to the knowledge of the gentleman in whose house he was living, he was discharged. I should state that the prisoner professed to be a religious man. The following letter, written by the prisoner, was found, which was addressed to one of the servants:

DEAR SALLY,—I leave for Richmond on the 16th of Dec. I am going into lodgings

. I will then take a furnished house near Richmond. I will send you the money to me when I am settled. The doctor says I will never be well as long as I am in prison.—Yours affectionately, WALTER.

is at once discharged from the situation, and the facts being related to the Charity Organisation Society, they obtained a warrant for the prisoner's arrest. When the prisoner was arrested he had in his possession a cheque for £3, and in his possession were a large number of letters addressed to members of Parliament, and thirteen others, all of the same story, that he was utterly destitute, and enclosed in a letter. The Charity Organisation Society feel that when this case is investigated it will be discovered that although the defendant is the son of a man in the Coast Guard, and that although he held at one time a commission in the Royal Artillery, from which he was cashiered at the Cape of Good Hope, that he is a worthless person, that he has been living on the contributions which he has obtained by a recital of his alleged misdeeds, which money has been spent not to any good purpose, but to keep him in idleness, and that a person who is guilty of this kind of conduct writes letters professing to be a religious man, is one with whom we should deal and one whose true character should be made known. I call Sir Edmund Beckett.

Beckett, examined by Mr. Lewis, said: I am a baronet, and one of the Queen's counsel; I reside at 33 Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Square. The prisoner is a perfect stranger to me. On or about the 7th of November I received the letter produced, which is signed 'W. J. Wade.' I took it to the Charity Organisation Society, as I myself was engaged in investigating the truth or falsehood of it.—The Clerk (to the witness): Do you wish to ask any questions of this gentleman?—Witness: No, sir; I do not.

Mr. Linslow, examined by Mr. Lewis, said: I am a detective of Scotland Yard. I have long been acquainted with the prisoner's name; I received a warrant from this Court for the prisoner's apprehension, and I proceeded to Richmond yesterday to find him. I found him occupying a sitting-room and bedroom in Richmond, and he was in a sitting-room and was writing two letters. This is one of them (letter produced).—Mr. Lewis (reading): 'I will kindly pardon the very great liberty I take by addressing a perfect stranger, &c. This is an exact copy of the letter sent to the prisoner.—The Clerk (to witness): Is it a duplicate of that letter?—Mr. Lewis: Did you tell him what you arrested him for?—The witness: I did, and he said, 'What name did you say? I don't remember the name I write to so many.' He further asked me in what month, and I told him of this year, and he then said, 'I don't have the money, but my brother-in-law' (mentioning his name). I then took him to the Police Station and searched him, and found upon him a cheque for four shillings in silver. In the room where he was living I found a letter addressed to Mrs. Hughes, acknowledging receipt of the cheque. The letter was as follows:—

ADAM.—Pray accept my heartfelt prayer of gratitude for your most kind and noble contribution of £3 in this hour of distress! May the Almighty reward you for it! I am deeply grieved to hear of the sickness which has seized your house. If my poor unworthy prayers, which I offer unceasingly for you, at morning and noon, are of any avail, you will long be spared to be a blessing to the happiness of your friendship and need your comfort. Wishing you to remain, dear Madam, yours most faithfully, W. J. P. WADE.

Witness: That was written to my wife's aunt. The prisoner told me that was to his wife's aunt. In the letter I found some letters, begging letters, addressed to Mr. Leatham, Mr. Phipps, M.P., Mr. H. Chaplin, M.P., Mr. R. Fothergill, M.P., Mr. A. Brassey, M.P., Mr. E. Hermon, M.P., Dowager Countess of Devon, Mr. J. Corbett, M.P., Mr. A. Goddard, M.P., Mr. T. Fielden, and thirteen other begging letters unaddressed.

Witness to the Magistrate: You will see, sir, they are all in the same handwriting. The only difference between these letters and that sent to the prisoner is that in these he states, 'I am at present inhabiting a room at five shillings a week, enduring the bitter pangs of cold and suffering my life very precarious.'—The Prisoner: There was no room?—Witness: No, there was no fire in your room.—The witness: That relief was for my poor child, who is only 16, and she has to go to school. She has been at school, where I have kept her, for years.—Mr. Lewis (to witness): Will you look at the letter sent to the prisoner, and say whether you think it is in the same handwriting as you found in the prisoner's room?—Witness (looking at it): I think it is in the prisoner's handwriting. The letter addressed 'Dear Sir' signed 'Yours affectionately, Walter,' is in his handwriting.—The Prisoner: I received a letter from the cook, stating that she was in her situation there as cook. I had had a strong glass of brandy water, and I penned it merely as a joke. The idea of it being so serious at my time of life!—The Clerk (to prisoner): Do you wish to ask any questions?—The Prisoner: No, sir; I never intended to go to Richmond. How can I? I am in a state of great distress.—I am in a state of extreme nervous debility; and as to that letter, it was written under the influence of spirits. It wants explanation I know.—Mr. Lewis (to Magistrate): You will see, sir, whether it looks as if it were written under the influence of spirits.

Mr. Joachim Curth, examined by Mr. Lewis, said: I know the defendant's handwriting. I am the chief enquiry officer of the Charity Organisation Society, 15 Buckingham Street, W.C. In August 1873 I saw the prisoner. It was on the 5th of that month. He admitted that they were in his handwriting, and we conversed about them. So it was I became acquainted with his handwriting. That letter to Sir E. Beckett is in the prisoner's handwriting.—The Magistrate: I don't think it is necessary to carry that any further.—Mr. Lewis: Very well, sir. (To witness): In consequence of the receipt of this letter at the Charity Organisation Society's office did you proceed to Herne?—Witness: I proceeded to a house called 'The Limes,' at Herne, in Kent, on Wednesday last. Mr. Marshall lives there. I went there with a view to ascertaining whether, on the 7th of November, the prisoner was destitute of the commonest necessities of life. I ascertained that, on the 7th of November, he was tutor at Mr. Marshall's, and was living there. Mrs. Marshall is unable to attend to-day. I received from Mrs. Marshall the letter which has been handed to the magistrate, and commencing 'Dear Sally.' I received that yesterday. That letter is in the prisoner's handwriting.—The Prisoner: Did Mrs. Marshall say that I was receiving any salary?—Mrs. Marshall said that you received no salary. She said that you had been there nine months educating her nephews without any salary.—The Prisoner: I was there from February to November 15. I was so reduced that I had not money enough to come to London; and my brother officers in Ireland sent me a sovereign, and a friend of mine, General Lefroy, sent me some left-off clothing. I was reduced to the last state of destitution.—The Magistrate (to witness): Did she tell you why he was dismissed?—Because of immorality.—The Prisoner: In what way was I dismissed? Where and how was I immoral? I was not immoral.—Witness: You were found visiting the cook in her bedroom at night, and she visited you in your bedroom.—Prisoner: There ought to be evidence of that.—Witness: That was what I was told.—Mr. Lewis: Upon that evidence I ask you to remand the defendant. We must at the next hearing call Mrs. Marshall and other witnesses.—The Prisoner (to the magistrate): Will you kindly read that endorsement from Mr. Clabon in the year 1870? and there has been very little difference in my case since then. Since then my case has been one of agonising struggle.—The Magistrate: The case is remanded until Friday next at 11.30.

The prisoner Wade was brought up on remand before Mr. Mansfield, at Marylebone Police Court, on Friday, December 22, 1876. Mr. George Lewis, jun., appeared to prosecute for the Charity Organisation Society; the prisoner was defended by Mr. Sampson.

Sir Roland Knyvett Wilson, examined by Mr. Lewis, said: I reside at No. 3 Mecklenburgh Square. The prisoner is an entire stranger to me. About the 9th of November last I received the letter which is produced, dated the 8th of November. The letter asked me for assistance. I sent it to Miss Collett, of the Charity Organisation Society.—Mr. Lewis: This letter is similar to that sent by the prisoner to Sir Edmund Beckett.—Mr. Sampson: Will you select one letter, Mr. Lewis, on which to go?—Mr. Lewis: That one to Sir Edmund Beckett, to Sir Roland Wilson, and to Lord Wolverton. Is Lord Wolverton here?—(There was no response).—Cross-examination of Sir Roland Wilson by Mr. Sampson: I had no personal knowledge of or acquaintance with the prisoner. On receiving the letter I made no inquiries as to the prisoner's position. I sent it at once to Miss Collett. I am not at present a member of the Charity Organisation Society. I suppose you may take it that I am a witness to-day on behalf of the Charity Organisation Society.—Mr. Lewis: What is the use, Mr. Sampson, of asking Sir Roland such a question when he is being examined as you know as a witness for the prosecution. Do you attend here, Sir Roland, under a Crown Office subpoena?—Witness: Yes.—Mr. Sampson: Will you produce it? I have a reason for asking it. (Subpoena produced).—Mr. Lewis: Will you look and see if that is the letter you sent to Miss Collett?—Witness: Yes. That is dated the 9th of November, and I received the letter from the prisoner the day before.

Mrs. Emily Marshall, examined by Mr. Lewis, said: I am the wife of Mr. John Marshall, and I reside at the Limes, Herne, in the county of Kent. I know the prisoner. He entered the service of my husband in February or the beginning of March of this year as tutor to two boys. He left our service on the 14th of November. He received no salary, but he received his board and lodging, living with the family.—Mr. Lewis: Is it true that on November 9th, when in your house, he was reduced to utter destitution, being without the commonest necessities of life?—Witness: No. My husband dismissed him from our service. He was dismissed in consequence of something which came to our knowledge with reference to the cook. I know the prisoner's handwriting, and that letter commencing 'Dear Sally' is in his handwriting.—Mr. Sampson: This may be a matter of prejudice, but I don't see that this has anything to do with this case. A cook is not a common necessary of life. I object to the production of that letter, on the ground that it is imported to prejudice my client.—Mr. Lewis: I submit that the letter should be received, and for this reason—the prisoner says in his letter, 'Dear Sally . . . I will then take a furnished house at Richmond;' and that shows he is not in a state of utter destitution, and that he is not the man he pretends to be. He further writes to her, 'I will send you the means for you to come to me,' &c.—Mr. Mansfield decided that the letter could be put in.—Mr. Lewis then read the letter.—Cross-examined by Mr. Sampson: I have the charge of some children belonging to my sister who is in India. I have known the prisoner only since he came into our house. We became acquainted with him by his answering an advertisement from us two years ago. We advertised for a gentleman to give a few hours in the day to mathematics. The remuneration we offered was board and lodging, and the gentleman was to be engaged for two or three hours a day. I offered to pay for his washing or to have it done for him, but he preferred having it done himself. It was not part of our agreement with the prisoner that he was to have any money when he left us. He never told me while he was with us that he had two children dependent upon him. There was no time in conversation mentioned between us as to when he was to leave our house. When he first corresponded with us he gave us a reference, and it was good as far as it went. The cook was with me about three months, and she came into my service about August. I had a good character with her. I was told that she was under an engagement to be married. I did not make the whisky and water for the defendant very strong and stiff. The first I saw or heard of that letter to 'Dear Sally' was that my husband had it given to him by a policeman. I have no letters belonging to the cook in my possession, nor has my husband.

Mr. Lewis: The manner in which this letter addressed 'Dear Sally' came to the possession of this witness was as follows: The cook could not read or write, and she was acquainted with the wife of a policeman, who conducted her correspondence for her. It is not an unusual thing for a policeman to know a cook.—Mr. Sampson: Have you at any time seen the prisoner guilty of acts of impropriety with your cook or any of your servants? Witness: I saw him once speaking to a servant in a familiar way, and I warned her that I could not allow her to conduct herself improperly. I allowed the prisoner to remain in the house after that.—Re-examined by Mr. Lewis: The cook lost her character by her misconduct with the prisoner, and I dismissed her from my service. The letters to Sir Edmund Beckett and Sir Roland Wilson are in the prisoner's handwriting. After the prisoner left our service he wrote a letter to my husband apologising for his misconduct.

(The remainder of the report of this case will appear in our next issue.)

DIFFICULT CASES.

The Reporter of December 21st contained the following 'difficult case': The husband of a very drunken wife has been paying five shillings a week towards the support of his two young children in a 'Home.' He is out of work on account of slackness of trade, and therefore unable to keep up the payment. He bears a good character. Is it desirable to pay for the children till the father gets work again?

If the man has been provident and bears an exceptionally good character, and has really been unable to make sufficient provision for the usual winter slackness of work to enable him to keep up the payment, a loan on the usual security, with a caution, seems to me to be the most safe form of assistance. An able-bodied man might be able to keep himself and spend five shillings a week on the support of two children, surely. Many widows have to do it in East London.

I quite agree with Edward Denison that there is hardly an able-bodied man who cannot, by the exercise of ordinary prudence, tide over times of sickness and slackness of work.

A. G. C.

The following is another reply we have received in regard to this case:—
'If the man is only temporarily out of work, would not the proper course be to make him a loan? The payment of 6s. for two children is so small that to discharge it for him is to relieve him of his proper responsibilities. If his circumstances are so bad, and his prospects so poor that he cannot undertake to repay a loan, it is probably a Poor Law case.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of December 1876 was 38,122, and 45,409 received outdoor relief, making a total of 83,531. This was a decrease of 138 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1875, 1874, and 1873, this was a decrease of 4,476, 13,826, and 23,348 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 706. This was a decrease of 17 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 379 on the corresponding day of last year.

OUT-DOOR RELIEF AND EDUCATION.

The Elementary Education Act seems to have furnished the Kensington board of guardians with an efficacious test of the necessities of claimants for out-door relief. It was stated at a recent meeting of the board that 244 persons had applied for out-relief. The condition of granting it was that their children should be sent to the School Board schools; but only seventy-eight of the claimants accepted the relief the guardians were prepared to give upon these terms. This test, therefore, reduced the claimants by nearly four-fifths of the whole number. . . . It would be of practical interest to have the experience of other parts of the metropolis on the education test of out-door pauperism. During the half-year which ended Michaelmas 1876 the payments made by a number of the metropolitan unions from the common poor fund for the education of out-door pauper children was £867, or £114 more than in the previous half-year. The unions which made no claim upon the fund for this object were Chelsea, St. George's-in-the-East, St. Giles', and St. George's, Hampstead, Holborn, Kensington, City of London, Marylebone, St. Saviour's, Strand, Westminster, and Whitechapel.—Fall Mall Gazette.

OUT-DOOR RELIEF.—The guardians of the Tunbridge Union have issued conditions for obtaining out-door relief almost identical with those issued by the Manchester board, and quoted in the Reporter for 1876, p. 179.

THE FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 10th instant there had been present:—

Mr. C. A. Miner, in the Chair; Rev. H. I. Cummins, Major Prendergast, Mr. E. Corrie.

THE INUNDATIONS.*

The Secretary reported that at Hammersmith the Fulham Committee had taken vigorous steps for the judicious distribution of relief. The clergy and the Committee were working in concert. At Deptford the distress did not appear to be so great as was at first reported. There was an Inundation Committee in the District. At St. George's-in-the-East the Relief Committee, appeared to have the necessary funds; and consequently the sums, stated last week to have been sent to the St. George's East Committee, had been transferred to the Fulham Committee.

Mr. H. Hoper, the Hon. Secretary of the St. Saviour's Committee, said, that members of the Committee had made personal inquiries respecting the amount and nature of the distress; and, with a view to meeting it effectually, had made an application for a grant from the Lord Mayor's Fund.

COMMITTEE ON INSTITUTIONS FOR IDIOTS ETC.

Sir Charles Trevelyan presented the Report of the Committee for Considering the Best Means of making a Satisfactory Provision for Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics, which was appointed at a Conference at the Central Office of the Charity Organisation Society on the 21st June 1875. He stated that the Committee had held thirteen meetings in May, June, and July 1876, besides two in April for settling the agenda, and a final meeting in January, at which the report was adopted; and deputations from the Committee visited the Earlewood Asylum, the Asylum of the Metropolitan Asylums Board at Levensden, their School for Imbecile Children at Clapton, and Dr. Langdon Down's establishment at Hampton Wick. He also observed that, as the three elements of Country Administration, Special Professional Experience, and Charity Organisation, were fully represented on the Committee, the result of their careful examination of the subject was deserving of the attentive consideration of all who were interested in it.

On a motion from the Chair, which was unanimously adopted, the Council expressed to Sir Charles Trevelyan their sincere thanks for the time, labour, and money which he had devoted to the Society by making the arrangements for the meeting of the Committee and printing the Report, together with numerous other papers required for the consideration of the Committee, and for the satisfactory conduct of their business.

THE 'REPORTER.'†

Sir Charles Trevelyan having, with the permission of Council, altered the terms of his motion, then moved:—

That the price of the Reporter be raised from 1d. to 2d. a number; or annually (including postage), from 6s. to 8s. 4d.

He said—The Charity Organisation Reporter has been a decided administrative success. It has maintained harmony of information and action between the Council and its thirty-eight District Committees and among the Committees themselves, with a promptness and exactness which would not easily have been secured in any other way. A glance at the first page, with its calendar of engagements for the next week, and its numerous miscellaneous notices, suffices to show this; and it must be remembered that, under the influence of railways and free trade, England and Scotland are assuming more and more the character of a vast urban population with subsidiary rural districts, so that the same social evils and the same remedies for them, with which our Society deals in the metropolis, are equally recognised at a hundred other local centres, and associations formed upon our model are springing up throughout the land. In order to maintain a good understanding among all these autonomous administrations, and to bring the experience of the whole to bear upon every part, the Reporter is invaluable. Our Secretary has been authorised to make it generally known that he is ready to receive memoranda containing information on the following subjects with a view to their insertion in the Reporter when space permits:—1. Meetings on subjects connected with the improvement of the condition of the poor; 2. Efforts made to improve the machinery and working of existing District Visiting Societies; 3. Efforts made to promote provident habits among the poor; 4. Efforts made to improve the dwellings of the poor; 5. Efforts made to promote the welfare of the afflicted poor; 6. Efforts made to suppress vagrancy; and when the Secretary sees anything done in any quarter which would be interesting to members of the Society and would help others working in the same cause, he suggests that it should be explained by a letter to the Reporter. The practice at Brighton of referring suitable cases to a loan society, and at Glasgow of noticing impostors in the newspapers, in order to put the public on their guard, are recent instances in point. Ours is really a missionary enterprise, and the Reporter is an essential part of our propaganda. It constantly happens that particular neighbourhoods or classes of persons are specially interested in particular parts of the subject, and the matter is then dealt with in the Reporter, and an extra number of copies is struck off for distribution. On a full and just view the Reporter is also a financial success. Several clerks would otherwise have to be employed upon the indispensable official work done by means of the Reporter, and, after all, it would not be done so well as at present, and sums have been contributed to the funds of the Society distinctly traceable to the influence of the Reporter, which more than make good the net annual loss upon it. The average expenditure of the last three years on account of the Reporter has been £208, and the average income £88, leaving an annual deficit of £178. The average number of subscribers has been 475. Nevertheless this annual deficit is damaging to the Society, because the circumstances which make the Reporter an administrative and financial success, even on its present footing, cannot be always known or borne in mind, and the constantly recurring deficit therefore gives an impression of lavish expenditure, and suggests doubts as to the expediency of continuing the Reporter. There is a general agreement among those who have given their attention to the subject that the Reporter ought to be something more than an official circular, and that it should be used in a more decided manner as a medium for propagating the principles of the Society. It ought, in their opinion, to be open to correspondence on matters in which the Society is interested, and it has been ascertained that, if an enlarged scope were given to the publication, a series of well-considered papers could be secured upon district visiting, outdoor relief, friendly societies, medical relief, and other kindred topics, by persons who have given special attention to them. The main advantage, also, of the conferences we have determined to hold on the second Monday of each month would be lost if provision were not made for publishing them. For these purposes it is indispensable that the Reporter should be enlarged, and as it would be altogether inexpedient to increase the annual deficit upon it, the price at which it is sold must be raised. I suggest that it should be fixed at 2d. instead of 1d. a copy, or 8s. 4d. a year, including postage. There would still be a deficit at first; but a large number of persons are interested in such subjects, many of whom would willingly give a higher price for a better article, and, if the plan is vigorously carried out, it is not unreasonable to expect that the subscribers to the Reporter will be at least doubled. Nothing, also, has yet been done to advertise the Reporter, and our present circulation holds out no inducements to advertisers. After all 2d. would be less than legal, clerical, and medical men pay for the periodical works relating to their respective professions, and much less than the great majority of the members of the Society of Arts and of the Social Science Association give for the privilege of receiving the journals of those Societies, without taking any active part in their proceedings. We also may hope for numerous supporters, who, although not able to work at the business of the Society, may be glad to be connected with it and to keep themselves informed of its operations.

Mr. R. Barrington seconded the motion, on the understanding that Sir Charles Trevelyan did not propose to increase the price of the Reporter till it had been improved in scope and character. He had heard that such a paper would pay well, but believed that a sub-editor would be required.

Sir Charles Trevelyan having stated that he was desirous of increasing the price and improving the character of the Reporter, pari passu and gradually, Mr. Willis-Bund said that large changes were involved in the proposals made by Sir Charles Trevelyan, and no hint of these changes was given in the motion, which dealt merely with the question of price. He believed that a sub-editor would be necessary, and that the proposed enlargement of the Reporter would il a large additional expense, which it would be unwise to incur he present time. He moved the previous question. r. A. H. Hill seconded the motion for the previous question. sidered as a circular of the Society, packed with useful items of rmation, the Reporter could do good work without competing any of the smaller special papers. If it became a more general r, as well as a circular of the Society, it would be more expensive less effective. It was impossible to calculate how far, indirectly, Reporter was a source of profit to the Society; but he did not k that it was wise, as a commercial speculation, to charge 2d. for all pennyworth.

With regard to the necessity of employing a sub-editor, the Secre- said that, as no immediate change was proposed, he believed the organisation of volunteer help in writing for the Reporter ld gradually reduce the labour of editing. If sufficient volunteer was forthcoming, the Reporter might be enlarged and made more resting without an increase of staff. Already, he was glad to say, ral members had given him assistance.

fter a few words from Mr. Seton-Karr, r. C. L. Corkran urged the advisability of arranging with one of general papers for the insertion, weekly, of matters of interest ected with the work of the Society.

r. Bousfield, supporting Sir Charles Trevelyan's motion, con- ceded that there would be no difficulty in obtaining the proposed in- sed subscriptions for the Reporter; while

r. J. R. Hollond pointed out the difficulty of combining the rter as a circular (which it now was) with the Reporter as a ogandist enterprise (which Sir Charles Trevelyan wished it to

CASE OF W. J. PLUNKETT WADE*—Continued.

Mr. Wm. Daniel Henry Oehme, solicitor, 167 Gresham House, examined by Mr. Lewis, said: I was concerned as a solicitor for Miss Hughes before she was called Mrs. Wade. In August 1865 I attended at the Bow Street Police Court, when the prisoner was in custody there. I understood from the magistrate that various subscriptions had been sent to the benefit of the prisoner—I believe they amounted to about £80. The magistrate told me prisoner that he would not give him any of the money subscribed, as he believed him to be an impostor, and he further said that he should write to the contributors asking their wishes with reference to the sums forwarded. I produce an office copy divorce petition served by the prisoner on his alleged wife, as well as a copy of the answer. The validity of the marriage was a verata questio. There were charges of adultery against the defendant as well as against the wife. The petition was dismissed. I am aware that the lady then called his wife has since married. I made a statement at the Bow Street Police Court in reply to that made by the prisoner, and which appeared in the papers.—Cross-examined by Mr. Sampson: The petition bears date the 9th of March, 1864, and the answer was put in on the 25th of April, 1864, and each party charged the other with adultery. It was stated that the prisoner did not continue the suit on account of his want of funds. I came here to give evidence on account of having received a subpoena.—Mr. Lewis (to witness): Just look at this letter dated the 8th of January, 1858. It states that 'Mr. Wade refers Mrs. Hughes'—Mr. Sampson: I object to this. I take this simple fact, that there was a petition and an answer, and that that suit was not prosecuted for want of funds; and also that it was dismissed.—Mr. Lewis: This is a letter in the handwriting of the defendant referring to the alleged marriage. The letters he wrote set out that he was married to this lady and that she ran away.—Mr. Mansfield: I see no objection to everything in the letter being read.—Mr. Lewis: He was described as a widower?—Witness: Yes. That marriage was on December 27, 1855; this letter is in January 1858, and the divorce suit was in 1864. Then the marriage was denied, and the charge of adultery was made against him.

Mr. Lewis: That is the case for the prosecution, and on the evidence I have brought before you, which shows that at the time he wrote those letters to Sir E. Beckett and Sir Roland Wilson he was not in a state of utter destitution and without the commonest necessities of life, I shall ask you to commit the prisoner summarily.

Mr. Sampson: Now, sir, before I go any further, I apply for summonses against Mr. Ribton-Turner and against Mr. Joachim Curths, of the Charity Organisation Society, for maintenance, and I make the application fully intending to prosecute the case to the utmost.—Mr. Lewis: Let us dispose of one case at a time; let us settle this charge first.—Mr. Mansfield: I think so; I cannot entertain your application at present, Mr. Sampson.—Mr. Lewis: The Charity Organisation Society is a society for the protection of the public from frauds such as have been perpetrated by the defendant. The Council of the Society consists of some of the most eminent men of the day.—Mr. Sampson: I know about the Council and the Committee, but I should have had some questions to ask Mr. Ribton-Turner if he had got into the witness-box.—Mr. Mansfield: Mr. Ribton-Turner is in attendance, and you had better call him.—Mr. Sampson: No, sir; I shall now leave the case in your hands and call on Mr. Clabon, who has kindly interested himself in behalf of the defendant. I do not know what evidence this gentleman is going to give.

Mr. John Moxon Clabon, solicitor, 21 Great George Street, said: I first knew the prisoner at the bar some twenty years ago, when I was living at Surbiton. He was then receiving pupils at his private residence to prepare them for the army. We knew each other socially. He was a teacher with me at the Sunday schools there, and I think that once or twice he delivered lectures there at my request. I left Surbiton in the year 1859, I think, and some years afterwards he came to me to consult me on the subject of the adultery alleged to have been committed by his wife. I took the proceedings which have been mentioned, but which were afterwards discontinued. His wife left him before the proceedings, but after the proceedings she went to live with the gentleman with whom she is alleged to have committed adultery.—Mr. Lewis: She has now been married to that gentleman for ten years.—Witness: The prisoner was reduced, I know, by his wife and children leaving him, and on account of what he has told me from time to time I have interested myself on his behalf. He has recovered two of the children, and I think there were three.—Mr. Lewis: I think he got one.—Witness: For a time I allowed him to use my name as a referee, for the purpose of collecting money, and money was sent to me on his behalf, which the prisoner had from time to time. After a time I thought that he had collected sufficient, and I withdrew from him my authority for his use of my name. That was some four or five years ago.—Mr. Sampson: That was not on account of any impropriety of conduct, was it?—Witness: No, but because I thought he had collected enough. Since then I have often heard from him, and I may have written him a letter now and then, but I have altogether ceased writing to him for some time. I have paid now and again the charges of the schoolmistress with whom his daughter was for her schooling. He was desirous that that young lady should be so educated as to earn a living as governess by and by; and having heard that she was going to leave school this month, and supposing that her father would not be able to find a home for her, I wrote to some of my friends on or about the 5th of November on her behalf, and I put down £5 myself. I obtained something like £20. (The letter, written by Mr. Clabon, and which expressed his desire to raise £50 for the purpose of providing a home for the young lady above mentioned, was read.)—Mr. Lewis: Then as to Mr. Dixon?—Witness: Hearing that Mr. Dixon would apply some money for the defendant's use and would allow him £1 per week, I wrote to Mr. Dixon telling him that I would send him whatever money I obtained. I know that Mr. Dixon began allowing him £1 a week three weeks ago. It is now some years ago since I allowed him to use my name as a referee. I know nothing about Mr. Flowers saying at Bow Street that he believed the defendant to be an impostor. Mr. Flowers sent for me. I do not remember whether I made any inquiry into the truth of the charge of adultery alleged to have been committed by the prisoner. I cannot charge my memory with that. I think that when the petition came I asked him for a full explanation of the allegation contained in the petition that he was a married man when he married Miss Hughes, and I think he produced three opinions. I cannot say whether he described himself as a widower at the second marriage.—The Prisoner: A divorced man is a widower.—Mr. Lewis: Will you look at the petition and see if it is not alleged that at the time of the marriage he stated that he was a widower?—Witness: I do not see it.—Mr. Lewis: He said he was lawfully married to her.—Witness: At that time I knew nothing of the first marriage.—Mr. Lewis: You have been very kind to the prisoner from time to time—how much have you raised for him, should you think?—Witness: In the two or three years he used my name I received £300 or £400 on his behalf, which I gave to him from time to time. I was not aware that after 1873 he was writing letters similar to those which were sent to Sir R. Wilson and Sir E. Beckett. I only knew recently that he wrote such letters in 1874, 1875, and 1876. I have, however, some sort of memory of Mr. Dixon writing to me once or twice. I do not think I have seen the defendant during the last three years; and I know nothing of what he was doing. I recollect that some four or five years ago he was in my outer office. I think I heard that he was in a situation at Brighton for some time and some other places. I did not know that he was at Malvern Link last year and dismissed for the same cause as that at Mrs. Marshall's. I have been no party to his letters for certainly more than two years. I have taken an interest in the young lady, his daughter, because I had a friendly feeling towards the defendant, and I was anxious to do what I could to put the girl into a fair way of earning her living. I think I used to give the prisoner £5 or £10 at a time during the period over which I received money for him, when I allowed him to use my name as a referee. I have heard that Mr. Dixon is his brother-in-law. I was not aware that when the defendant was arrested some twenty or thirty letters similar to those sent to Sir R. Wilson and Sir E. Beckett were found in his possession.—Mr. Lewis: At this time he was receiving £1 per week.—Mr. Sampson: Did you know that for the last few weeks he had been in very great distress?—Witness: I know from his own letters that he was utterly without money, and I did not hesitate to obtain any little subscriptions for him that I could.

Mr. Sampson: That is my case.—The Prisoner: I obtained the money for the education of my daughter, and I can show receipts of my having paid £112 during two years for her education and living.

The Magistrate: You are charged with obtaining money or attempting to obtain money by falsely representing yourself to be without the commonest necessities of life, and that has been clearly proved to my mind to be utterly untrue at the time you wrote those letters. You have also, it seems, for some years past, been leading a very discreditable life, and have been persecuting everybody—even utter strangers to you—with begging letters. Then there is the letter to the cook, in which you offer to send her money to come to you, and your excuse for writing that letter is that you had been indulging too freely in whisky and water. I don't believe that excuse; and I think that under the circumstances the very least I can do is to commit you under the Vagrant Act for three months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

Mr. Sampson: I apply now, sir, for summonses for maintenance against Mr. Ribton-Turner and Mr. Joachim Curths, of the Charity Organisation Society. Of course, in the hearing of those summonses it will be necessary to have the defendant brought into court, and I can bring him up on a habeas. You have it on clear evidence that neither of the two baronets, Sir R. Wilson and Sir E. Beckett, has contributed one farthing towards this case. The cost of the witnesses and of the prosecution has been borne by the Charity Organisation Society. That Society has no more right to take this case up than has the most disinterested person in the world. They are a class of men who have no right to band themselves together; they have no corporation, they have no charter, and I shall ask you for summonses against those two gentlemen I have named. It is stated by these baronets that the evidence was laid by Mr. Ribton-Turner and Mr. Curths, and you have it from Mrs. Marshall that she communicated solely with the Charity Organisation Society, that she was paid her expenses by the Society, and therefore it is I ask for summonses. The law applies to civil and criminal matters, and if you will grant the summonses I will undertake to prosecute the case.

The Magistrate: I see no ground for granting the summonses, and nothing short of a mandamus will induce me to do so.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of January 1877 was 38,331, and 44,625 received outdoor relief, making a total of 82,956. This was a decrease of 565 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 3,755, 15,164, and 22,839 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 832. This was an increase of 126 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and 270 on the corresponding day of last year.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 202.

THURSDAY EVENING, JANUARY 25, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

Mr. Aspinall (in the Chair), Miss Howes, Capt. Gardner, Mr. Bevan.

COMMITTEE ON INSTITUTIONS FOR IDIOTS &c.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, having read letters from Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Devon, Sir R. Alcock, and others, moved the following resolution:—

That this Council cordially approves and adopts the Report of their Special Committee on the Education and Care of Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics.

He summed up the leading features of the Report. It was estimated that there were 49,041 idiots, imbeciles, and harmless lunatics in England and Wales, and that of these more than two-thirds, or at least 32,694, were chargeable to the poor-rate. Of the remaining 16,347, probably one-fifth, or 3,269, belonged to the classes just above paupers. At least 35,963 cases, therefore, had to be provided for.

British humanity had not reached this afflicted class, partly because they were harmless (the dangerous acute cases were well cared for), and because, hitherto, they had been considered unimprovable.

Dr. Reed, the founder of Earlewood Asylum, and others, had made it clear that they were improvable; and Earlewood and other charitable institutions had furnished models, in accordance with which it was now proposed to extend the system of education and classification which the Metropolitan Asylums Board had been the first to adopt on a large scale. No provision was usually made in Lunatic Asylums for the training and supervision which idiots specially require; and upwards of ten thousand idiots and imbeciles were scattered among the six hundred Union Houses of England and Wales, in which nearly all the conditions required for their proper management were absent. The Metropolitan Asylums Board by a system of classification had separated children from adults, and those who could be trained to some industrial occupation, or who could under proper regulations be employed in the washing and other domestic service of public institutions, such as the Idiot Asylums themselves, Lunatic Asylums, and Union Workhouses; while those unfit to be restored to society were maintained in Adult Custodial Asylums. It was proposed, in accordance with this precedent, to remove idiots, imbeciles, and harmless lunatics from workhouses and county lunatic asylums into separate asylums, and to train and educate young persons of these classes; to entrust their education and care to specially appointed and responsible governing bodies, composed of representatives of the local magistrates, representatives of the local guardians, and persons nominated by the Crown; to divide the country into districts, each sufficiently large to fill an asylum (on the 'pavilion,' or 'block' system) containing not more than 2,000 adults, and schools containing at the utmost 500 young people; to defray the expenditure out of the rates, with assistance out of the public revenue; and to extend to this afflicted class the privileges accorded by Parliament to the blind and deaf and dumb, viz. that relief given to children should not be deemed to be parochial relief given to their parents. It was apparent that while private establishments offered every advantage to the wealthy, persons belonging to the lower middle and upper artisan class were as a rule unable to pay the full cost of maintenance, and could not appear before their Boards of Guardians to claim the benefit of the legal provision for destitute imbecile children; for these it was necessary that the institutions supported on the voluntary principle should, by admission at the proper age, by the removal of restrictions, and by the adoption of a suitable rate of payment, be specially adapted.

There were three stages in the history of the question; the solution of the problem by Dr. Reed and others, who showed that idiots and imbeciles could be educated and improved and established institutions in accordance with this principle; the application of this system to a population of three and a half millions by the Metropolitan Asylums Board; and lastly the proposed extension of the system, on the plan so successfully worked by the Board, to the whole of England.

Sir Charles Reed seconded the motion. He regretted that his absence from England in the summer had prevented his attending the meetings of the Committee. He agreed with the Report entirely. It was time to claim, on State grounds, the large extension of a system, begun on the benevolent foundation, developed in the metropolis, and now proved to be applicable to the whole of England. Benevolent institutions were not furnished with funds large enough to enable them to take every case. He quite concurred in the opinion of the Committee that the census was no guide respecting the actual number of idiots. It was not unusual, as School Board visitors had ascertained, for parents to secrete their idiot children. Deaf and dumb children, the care of whom should, the report recommended, be entrusted to the same governing bodies as those responsible for the education and care of idiots, received in London, under the School Board, daily efficient instruction.

Dr. Brewer, the Chairman of the Metropolitan Asylums Board, said the Board relied for success on two things—just classification of the patients, and the capacity for imitation, which enabled them to develop, under good associations, higher powers. These were some results:—Out of 330 children at Clapton, 269 were at school; 32 were tailors, and their work during three months was estimated at £26. 3s. 10d.; 32 others were shoemakers, whose work was during the same period estimated at £26. 5s. 9d.; 2 others, again, were carpenters, and their work was valued at £7. 16s. What would have been the condition of these children, if nothing had been done for them? They had strong sensations and suffered pain and agony, which they could not express; and they had no consciousness of any kind of relationship outside themselves. A strong rhythmical melody would first rouse them, then the power of numbering, and reading and writing, and habits of attention were gradually acquired; till at last, by education and care, they appeared no longer as children forsaken of Providence, but able to take their place in life and assist their parents by their employment.

Rev. R. J. Simpson, seconded by Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, then moved—

That a deputation be appointed to present the Report to the President of the Local Board, and to represent to him the urgent need of early legislation for the proper education and care of idiots, imbeciles, and harmless lunatics belonging to the pauper, and to the poorer portion of the working class; and that a copy of the Report be also forwarded to the Chairman of the Commissioners in Lunacy, with a request that they should give the benefit of their valuable experience and support to this object.

The motion was carried unanimously, and the Chairman having read the vote of thanks to Sir Charles Trevelyan, passed by the Council at their last meeting, the Council adjourned.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

LEWISHAM.—Annual Report, 1875-6.—LOCAL BEGGARS.—With regard to local beggars the Report says:—

'Then as to the local beggar. How should he be treated? Is it little short of mockery for a resident in the district, well-to-do probably, and possibly wealthy, to offer a few coppers to a poor neighbour who represents himself to be in deep distress or it may be utterly destitute? Would not real charity rather prompt him to go to the home of his neighbour, ascertain if his story be true, and if so, give him, or endeavour to obtain for him from some source or other substantial relief for his necessities, and employment by which the poor man might for the future earn his daily bread? And if for want of time or other reason such resident is unable to inquire case himself, he need but refer it to your Committee, who will readily refer him. They will send him the result of their investigations, when help the applicant in such way as he thinks best, or failing his necessity to do so, your Committee will deal with the case to the best of ability.

And anyone who has been referred to your Committee's Office return, that his case has not been properly attended to, the resident to such statement may be made is requested to communicate at once to the Hon. Secretary.

As a table of resident cases, classified according to occupation, it is that out of 138 applicants, 35 were labourers, 13 painters, 10 gardeners, 8 clerks, 6 railway servants, and 6 charwomen.—Cf. Notes of a table compiled by the Shoreditch Committee, Reporter, No. 195. A resident cases dealt with by this Committee have been 165, as recorded with 115 in the year 1874-5.

Committee publishes the following totals in a general summary of endowed and Unendowed Charities in Lewisham, Lee, and Blackheath.—Money (inclusive of £2,665 spent in Out-door Relief), £3154.2s. 10d., £983.6s. 3d. Clothing, £296.14s. 9d. Blankets, £16.15s. 4d. Houses, £1,177.16s. 5d. Education, £381.12s. 7d. Apprenticeship, Medical Attendance, £27.10s. Clergy and Church Officers, £13.9s. 4d. of Charitable Societies, £40.10s. The total is £6,128.18s. 2d. The population of the district is 27,953.

PROVINCIAL.

THAMPTON.—Annual Report, 1875-6.—MENDICITY.—'In Southampton the Committee have good grounds for believing that there is a in which is kept a list of all the ministers of religion and benevolent resident in the town and neighbourhood, with a measure of the abilities and gullibility of each, which list is open for the inspection vagrant on payment of sixpence.'

LOCAL CHARITIES.—'The Committee having a firm belief in the lasting which results to the poor from the lax administration of out-door relief, both by the Poor-law authorities and the governors of local charities, gladly took part in a conference with deputies from local charities and the medical society. They have the gratification to at they believe shortly the governors of some of these institutions asked to add the provident system to the existing one. They trust general public will cordially support any well considered step in this on.'

Report, from which the above are extracts, is a very complete one, als with a large number of subjects which it is of great importance
Charity Organisation Societies should bring to the notice of the public.

LEWISBURG.—Extracts from the Annual Report, 1875-6.—MEDICAL SOCIETY.—'Each year's experience affords your Committee fresh encouragement to relax their efforts to accomplish the two main objects of the Society—'the development of self-dependence and the suppression of mendicity.' It is now two years since the most important scheme yet originated Society for the benefit of the working classes was suggested, viz. that subscribers of the Dispensary should substitute Benefit Members' for free recommendations. Objections were immediately raised was harsh and unfair to make those whose scanty earnings could support their families pay for what others would or were willing to on them. The working of the scheme, which has been in operation x months, has set all these objections at rest, and proves that the g classes do appreciate all efforts made for their advantage, and d to them in a spirit of self-dependence, cheerfully and regularly g whatever payments may be required of them.

AL Beggars.—'That mendicity has been greatly suppressed there can doubt. A local beggar is now a rara avis; and by none is the work Society in this respect so much appreciated as by the tradesmen of the town, who used to be sadly annoyed and inconvenienced in their business by professional mendicants.'

GLASGOW.—IMPOSTORS.—We have received the following letter from Glasgow Charity Organisation Association:—

Now we briefly state, in reference to this matter, that hitherto we confined ourselves to cautioning the public through the Press, by giving the appearance of the persons and their mode of operations, or naming the names they take, in order that they may be identified.

We are fully persuaded that the most effectual mode of stopping the of impostors is by the community at large making use of the very placed at their disposal by such societies as ours. We are of course, to assist anyone who may wish to prosecute, by giving evidence, but are not anxious to become the prosecutors, and so far our has been confined to warning the benevolent against encouraging the serving.'

DISTRICT VISITING SOCIETIES.

CORRESPONDENCE.—The Council does not consider itself responsible for any of the opinions expressed by their correspondents.

We have received the following letter:—

'SIR,—Now that special attention is being given to the subject of district visiting, and to the ways in which it can be rendered more efficient, a word may perhaps not be out of place upon the very different conditions under which the work has to be carried on in different parts of London. In West end or suburban parishes it may be possible to secure so large a staff of visitors as to provide for periodical house-to-house visitation—and in this case the workers will be so numerous that it may possibly be advantageous to let them form an organisation distinct from the local Committee of the Charity Organisation Society—but in the poorer parts of London, I think it is worth considering, whether the wisest policy would not be to strengthen the visiting power of the Charity Organisation Committees. We cannot in these parts attempt the Elberfeld plan; the numbers to be dealt with are far too large. What we do want is that every poor family in London should know where to apply in the event of exceptional distress; and this result would soon be attained if our district offices were in proper communication with the paid parochial staff, Bible-women, Scripture Readers, and others, and if they commanded at the same time the services of a few active and intelligent visitors. Defective visiting power is a weak point with most of our committees, and if, where our volunteers are few and far between, they should be encouraged to join or to form other associations, there will be a danger of our becoming more formal and official than we are at present: which God forbid!—I am, &c., 'Y.'

CHARITY AND EMPLOYMENT.—'In connection with such a Labour Exchange as I have here roughly indicated, an arrangement might, I think, also be effected, under which the clients of the various charities, whose only request often is to be shown work, might be tested by the visit and inspection of the overseers and gaugers of the great contractors, and such as were available be taken off and set to work. I am well aware that the very large proportion of the protégés of our charitable institutions belong to the incompetent class, sometimes through feeble health, and sometimes through vice, but in some cases a little consideration on the part of employers during the early stages of the work, and improved diet, would convert unemployed and deteriorating material into useful, industrial stuff. The growing dearth of hands in the great constructive trades, and the extensive demolitions which are likely to take place during the next few years, under the Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings Acts, would give special opportunity for such an experiment as I have here indicated, being made with more than an ordinary prospect of success. Could some of the great contractors be induced to recognise some short period of training and probation with town labourers, as they now often do with raw country material, with a little care and pains, and an absolute withdrawal of all charitable assistance to fall back on, much might be done to reduce the ranks of the intermittent unemployed class.—Labour News.

MISS STRIDE'S HOMES.

It appears from reports in the Enfield Observer of the 2nd, 9th, and 16th ult., of the proceedings of the Edmonton Board of Guardians, that—‘A matron from Miss Stride’s Home at Tottenham waited on the Board in reference to a child named Louisa Barrow (at present in the Home), whom it was desired should be received into the Union. It transpired that some time ago Miss Stride gave admittance to the mother and her child, and subsequently obtained for the former a situation, and supplied her with a box full of clothing, agreeing also to retain her offspring until its mother was able to do so herself. Instead of returning for the child, however, the young woman absconded, and Miss Stride now applied to have the child taken charge of by the Union authorities, giving as a reason for so doing, that of late she found she could not carry on her work to the extent she formerly had, and her expenditure had in consequence to be limited. She believed that the matter could be traced by the proper authorities. After some deliberation the Board informed Miss Stride’s matron that, under the circumstances, they had no alternative but to receive the child.

‘At the next meeting the master (in his journal) reported that the child Louisa Barrow (aged five years), recently removed from Miss Stride’s Home, Tottenham, to the workhouse, was infected with lice, suffering from ringworm, and also had the whooping-cough. The chairman, after hearing the report read, said it was a matter which should be particularly noticed, as it gave the public an idea of how children were kept at these “Homes.” The Clerk was then instructed to communicate with Miss Stride, and send her a copy of the report, expressing at the same time the Board’s astonishment that what was stated should have been the case.

‘At the meeting on December 13 the Clerk read a communication from the above lady in reply to a letter which he was requested last week to forward to her, with a copy of the report, stating that the child Barrow (lately received from the Home into the house at Enfield) was suffering from disease and infested with vermin. Miss Stride said: “I am exceedingly surprised and vexed to hear that the child Louisa Barrow is in the state you say, for although ours is not a home for children, yet she ought to have been kept clean. Unfortunately we have been obliged largely to reduce our staff of helpers lately, and my own health having failed, I have not been able to give the same personal supervision I did formerly. I regret now that I did not send her to the workhouse when her mother deserted her, but she was in such a fearful state of disease and dirt that I kept her, contrary to our rule, to see if we could improve her health, which, by good food, we have done to a certain extent. I can only, in conclusion, express my deep and sincere regret to the Guardians.” The matron of the Home, A. Janson, also wrote: “Miss Stride has forwarded to me Mr. Ty’s report respecting the child Louisa Barrow. I cannot understand her being in such a dreadful condition as is stated, for she was daily with my own child playing about the house. She had whooping-cough towards the end of summer, and was so far recovered that she was only troubled with the cough when there was any dampness in the weather. She certainly was in a terrible state of disease and dirt when we first had her, but I should suppose that the change of air and diet may have brought out any impurities that might exist in her skin.”

REFORMATORY AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

It is a relief to turn for a while from the more discouraging aspects of London pauperism—its terrible vis inertia—the accumulated evil habits and failure of legislation which it represents, and the vices which are its necessary offspring, to the picture drawn by Mr. Sydnor Turner, late Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools in Great Britain, in his 19th Annual Report of a work for good which, unlike that of most of our charitable institutions, has the double merit of being both positive and preventive in character.

Mr. Turner, aware that this would be his last report, makes it the occasion of introducing a short retrospect of the origin and growth of the Reformatory and Industrial Schools movement, which it will interest many to read for themselves. We gather from it that more than 25 years ago the Reformatory Schools system now embodied in the Reformatory Schools Act 1866, was introduced from France, under the auspices of a few prominent members of the Philanthropic Society, with such variations as English institutions and methods of dealing with the pauper and criminal class seemed to require. In 1854 the first Reformatory Schools Act was passed, upon the lines suggested by a conference held at Birmingham in the previous year; and this Act was finally revised and the law relating to Reformatory Schools consolidated in 1866.

The general outline of the Reformatory Schools system is well known. It will be enough to say, that while the Continental elements—viz. long compulsory detention, management of the schools (as far as practicable) on the ‘family’ system, and employment on probation—are retained as essential, the distinctively English features of it are (1) the recognition and enforcement of the duty of the parents of young offenders sent to Reformatory Schools to contribute towards their maintenance while under detention; (2) the commitment of the offender to prison for a short period before he is sent to the school; and (3) the voluntary management of the schools, imparting to them ‘an independent and partially charitable character.’

Improved school treatment for disorderly and vagrant children outside of the criminal circle received a stimulus from the growth of a system framed solely for the reclamation of young criminals, and kept even pace with it. The present Industrial Schools Act was passed in the same year (1866), and side by side with the present Reformatory Schools Act.

Turning now to the working of these two classes of schools and the numbers brought yearly within their corrective discipline, we may notice briefly a few suggestive facts. There are nearly double as many Industrial Schools as there are Reformatory Schools, viz. 117 of the former and 65 of the latter; and the number of inmates of the two kinds of schools are in like proportion, the total number of inmates in the year 1875 of Industrial Schools being 11,776, and of Reformatory Schools, 5,615. The admissions last year into the schools were 1,443 into Reformatory Schools, and 2,937 into Industrial Schools. Thus, 4,380 children were in the year 1875 rescued from a life of ignorance or crime; and of those thus rescued we are told that from 70 to 90 per cent. are reclaimed, and put fairly in the way of becoming useful members of society. The admissions into Reformatory Schools have been decreasing of late years; in fact, Mr. Turner anticipates that under certain conditions to be presently mentioned, no new Reformatory Schools will be required. Now, although if we remember that the number of admissions will necessarily depend partly on the existing accommodation, partly on the practice of magistrates, and partly on the number of neglected children otherwise provided for, we shall not hastily conclude this to be a mark of real improvement; yet the following encouraging fact may be taken in connection with it, viz. that the number of juvenile commitments has been decreasing for the last two years, and in 1875, as compared with the previous year, the decrease amounted to 2·4 per cent. This result may be contrasted with the steady increase of adult commitments since the year 1861, amounting in the year 1875 to 8·7 per cent.

Notwithstanding, too, the decrease of admissions above noted, there was in the year 1875, as compared with the previous, a proportionate increase of 7 per cent. of admissions of children not before convicted—an evidence that the plan of sending children to Reformatory Schools on the first offence is being largely acted upon.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of January 1877 was 38,796, and 44,942 received outdoor relief, making a total of 83,738. This was a decrease of 782 on last week’s returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 3,675, 15,799, and 21,792 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 681. This was a decrease of 151 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 163 on the corresponding day of last year.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

203.

THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 1, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor: by bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.

by securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases. by granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.

by repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, to remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct touch with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, will be happy to furnish further information.

There will be no meeting of Council on the 5th instant. The meeting of Council will be held on Monday, the 12th, at 3 p.m.

District Committees which have not yet done so, are requested to forward their Annual Reports to the Central Office as little delay as possible.

District Committees are informed that contributors to amounts of £5 and upwards will in future, if they desire it, receive the Reporter free. Hon. Secretaries are requested to give notice of this to the contributors to the funds of District Committee, and to send to the Secretary the names and addresses of those persons who wish to have the Reporter sent to them, in accordance with the recent order of the Administrative Committee.

BORN.—Mr. T. W. Gorst has been elected one of the representatives of this Committee, vice Sir R. Wilbraham.

HOSPITAL LETTERS.

Letters of recommendation to the following hospitals and institutions can be obtained from the Secretary of the Council by the Honorary Secretary of any District Committee having suitable cases before it:—

In-patients:

Charing Cross
 King's College
 London
 Middlesex
 North London
 St. George's
 Westminster
 New Hospital for Women, Marylebone Road
 Hospital for Women and Sick Children, Vincent Square, Westminster Hospital for Diseases of Women and Children

 Royal Sea Bathing Infirmary, Margate

The Secretary would be glad to receive any letters for the In-patients' Departments of Hospitals not mentioned above.

Letters for Convalescent Homes, for Hospitals for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, and Surgical Aid letters are especially wanted. Last year, and in previous years, many letters were received so late in the autumn, that it was found impossible to make use of them, while, during the spring and summer, it was very difficult to obtain with promptness letters, especially convalescent letters, for which there was the largest demand at that time of the year.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee met on Thursday, January 25, and Friday, 26.

There were present on the 25th :—

Mr. J. R. Holland, in the Chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Hon. J. H. Lawrence, Major FitzRoy, Major Prendergast, Major Yard, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Brown, Barrington, Hoare, Lawrence, Miner, Peters, and Roberts.

There were present at the adjourned meeting on the 26th :—

Mr. J. R. Holland, in the Chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, and Mr. Peters.

FINANCE.—The Committee reported that during the week ending January 20 the receipts had been £190. 8s. 6d. for the General Fund, and £40 for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £787. 12s. 11d. and £59. 0s. 7d. respectively, £7. 6s. 7d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—They had made grants of £30 each to the Holborn and Newington Committees, the respective amounts granted to those Committees since the 1st of October last being £50 and £70.

GRANTS TO DISTRICT COMMITTEES, 1875-6.—The Secretary had submitted the following return of Grants made to District Committees for general purposes in the course of the financial year ending September 30, 1876:—Fulham £120; Westminster (St. James's) £37; North St. Pancras and Highgate £50; South St. Pancras £90; Islington £125; Holborn £105; Shoreditch £148; Bethnal Green £195; Whitechapel Union £130; St. George-in-the-East £125; Stepney Union £205; Mile End Old Town £218; Poplar Union £140; St. Saviour, Southwark £158; Newington £150; St. Olave, Southwark £205; Lambeth £30; East End Finance Committee £56. 5s.—Total £2,287. 5s.

THE 'REPORTER.'—The Committee had decided to send a circular letter to the Affiliated and other Charity Organisation Societies, to ask them whether, and in what way, the Reporter might be of more service to them in the extension of their work, and for the circulation of information useful to those interested in the progress of Charity Organisation.

The Committee had further resolved that the rule by which contributors of £5 and upwards to the funds of the Council received the Reporter free, should no longer be confined to contributors to the Council only, if they wished it, but that all such contributors to the funds of a District Committee should have the same privilege.

ELECTIONEERING PLACARDS.—As it had come to the knowledge of the Committee that some District Committees had, during recent School Board and other elections, exposed in their offices electioneering placards, the Committee had passed a resolution recommending that District Committees should not display such placards in their offices.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of the Committee on the 23rd ult. there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the Chair; Miss Hill, Miss Howes, Sir Douglas Forsyth, Messrs. Barrington, Fletcher, and Lewis.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 24th ult. had been present:—

Lieut.-General Cavenagh, and subsequently Rev. H. I. Cummins, in the Chair; Major Prendergast, Messrs. Miner, Corrie, Hoare, and Roberts.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 23rd ult. had been present:—

Capt. Gardner, in the Chair; Miss Howes, Hon. H. R. Scott, Messrs. Barrington, Bevan, and Edcombe, and Mr. R. V. Tidman (Visitor).

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 24th inst. had been present:—

Mr. A. H. Hill, in the Chair; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Major Prendergast, Rev. H. F. Mallet, and Mr. W. M. Wilkinson.

CO-OPERATION WITH THE INDUSTRIAL CLASSES.

Mr. C. E. Maurice mentioned that the Council of the Workman's Club Union had recently recommended, as a subject for discussion in the Workmen's Clubs, the work and objects of the Charity Organisation Society.

GRANTS.

A grant of £30 was made to the Poplar Committee, on the motion of Major FitzRoy, seconded by Sir Charles Trevelyan.

AGENTS' MEETINGS.

Major FitzRoy moved, and Mr. R. Barrington seconded the following resolution:—

That a meeting of the Agents and Inquiry Officers of the District Committees be held at the Central Office: that a short paper be read at the meeting; and that the Hon. Secretaries of the District Committees be specially invited to attend.

The Secretary said that the principle of holding Agents' meetings at the Central Office had been adopted by Council; and that last year a series of these meetings had been held. It had, however, been considered advisable to make this recommendation to Council, in order to obtain, as far as possible, the co-operation of Hon. Secretaries and other members of Council. It was very desirable that these meetings should be made, more than hitherto, a means of creating a stronger esprit de corps among the officers of the Society, and of bringing them into closer contact with the Hon. Secretaries and some of those most deeply interested in the Society's welfare. It was proposed that all Agents and Inquiry Officers should be invited; that a paper should be read by one of the Agents or by an Hon. Secretary, on some subject of practical importance, such as loans, urgent cases, a right manner in inquiry, &c.; and that the paper should be followed by discussion. Several papers were promised. It was very important that the meetings should not be formal and quasi-official. He hoped that with the cooperation of both Agents and Hon. Secretaries they might be made really interesting as well as instructive. He believed that by conversation and the interchange of experiences many difficulties would be met, and that the work of the Society would be done in a more careful and intelligent manner, and with a greater unity of spirit. If this meeting, which it was proposed to hold towards the end of February, proved successful, he hoped that other similar meetings might be arranged.

The motion was carried.

The Council then adjourned, on the motion of Mr. R. Barrington, to the 12th of February.

CONTRIBUTIONS.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

STRAND.—Annual Report.—INVESTIGATION: ENDOWED CHARITIES.—Alluding to the necessity for a thorough investigation, the Report states that:—
'Putting aside for the moment the hospital cases and labour registry cases, it may be stated roughly that one in three of the applicants to the Committee for charitable relief in the last year were found underserving. Surely this shows that the expense incurred in thoroughly investigating every case is fully justified. The investigation, to be worth anything, must be made by competent agents, and these cannot be obtained at lower salaries than those now paid by the Committee.'

Committee publish Tables* of Endowed and other Charities in the t, compiled partly from the Reports of the Charity Commissioners, partly from information supplied by the Incumbents of the several es.

appears that there are in the parish of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, almshouses and annual distributions of 15 complete suits of g. and of sums varying from £1 to 2s. 6d. (the proceeds of the of a farm and rectory) charities amounting to £22. 10s., one of which is 6 cripples with £1 each and coals, while the other furnishes brown and coats to 10 poor persons annually. There are seven unendowed as. In the Liberty of the Rolls there are charities amounting to s. 8d., all of which appears to be distributed in small sums. One of 10s. 6d. is distributed 'in cake or small sums.' In St. Clement's the endowed charities amount to £4,891. 2s. 6d. Of this, £4,350, is the Holborn Estate Charity, is expended in subscriptions to a d, to almshouses, and to schools. One charity of £294. 14s. 4d. is ted among maid-servants who have served one master or mistress years. Their names are placed on a list, and they receive £12 in From another charity £48. 8s. 2d. is distributed among 20 poor , who each receive 8s. half-yearly. £186. 19s. 8d. is distributed , bread, tea, and sugar. There are three unendowed charities. In l's, Covent Garden, there are charities amounting to £1,169. 7s. 9d., h about £690 is contributed to the King's College and Charing Cross ls. With regard to St. Mary-le-Strand, alias 'Le Savoy,' the tee have had to insert a note, that the gentleman to whom the tee were referred for information about these charities stated 'that, willing to give full particulars to the Committee for their own use, t refuse them for publication.'

Committee has dealt with 340 cases in the past year, as compared 8 resident cases in the year ending September 30, 1875.

GEORGE'S, HANOVER SQUARE.—District Visiting Societies.— e received the following letter from the Hon. Secretary:—

following conditions under which the Committee will subsidize al Councils were passed on Wednesday, January 17, 1877:—

The Council must be undenominational.

The money relief must be voted by Members or Associates of this tee only.

In all new cases the visitor, after making the usual inquiries nd the application form to this Office, in order that the information supplemented, if necessary, and the case recorded on our books.'

HAM.—The Committee have received a grant of £35 from the smith Police Court.

MEDICAL CHARITIES.

PORTLAND TOWN PROVIDENT DISPENSARY.—We reprint the following e British Medical Journal of the 20th ultimo. It is part of a letter r. J. W. Allon, Alexandra Road, St. John's Wood, and contains a o questions similar to those asked by a correspondent in the Reporter 11st December last:—

Paragraph in your last issue, headed Metropolitan Provident Dis- as, contains a reference to the St. John's Wood and Portland Town nt Dispensary. As I am well acquainted with the history and of working of that institution, you will perhaps allow me to make marks on the subject. The objects of provident dispensaries are, t to be, two. The first is to afford, at small regular fixed charges, aid to such of the provident poor exclusively as are unable to pay the proper manner; but by a rule of the Portland Town Dispensary, scribe of a nominal sum may recommend to all the benefits of the ion any one he pleases absolutely free of charge; and this rule is dvantage of by many to get gratuitous medical advice for their out- id in-door servants, by which means they are able both to save nd to pass as charitable benefactors. This licence, you will agree , ought never to be conceded to the governors: it strikes at the root nstitution, and is inconsistent with its fundamental principle; yet I ain that a proposition to rescind this rule would not be entertained present committee. The second object of these dispensaries should benefit, professional and pecuniary, of their medical officers, who ach to be remunerated in exact proportion to the number of patients ids. At the Portland Town Dispensary the following plan pre- For each midwifery case attended by him the surgeon receives one and at the end of the year what is called a "gratuity" of £35 is o each, quite irrespectively of the amount of work done. At all ovident dispensaries that I am acquainted with, the surgeons are ording to the number of their patients. At the St. John's Wood ary it does not signify how few or how many he has attended. He ve had one patient or one thousand—his pecuniary position is not altered one jot. I was surgeon to the Dispensary for nearly eleven uring six of which I did quite half the work. On a fair system of a similar table published by the Lewisham Committee, vide Reporter, No. 302, remuneration, I should have received not £35, but £52. 10s. In other words, in the six years I refer to, I ought in justice to have received £105 more than I did. I did not complain of this at the time, because I believed my colleagues were as well disposed to me as I certainly was to them. But this delusive circumstance was speedily dispelled. I resigned my office because an appointment was made which would have thrown, without any more pay, nearly the whole work of the dispensary upon me, and because I declined to act as unpaid assistant to the two largest medical firms in the place. The fair and right plan obviously is to divide the surplus amongst the members of the staff according to the number of their patients, and to have this done by an exclusively medical sub-committee. . . . The Dispensary possesses its own house, has money in the funds, a good annual surplus, and liberal support in the district. It has been established over thirty years, and yet it divided last year among its medical officers £58 less than did the struggling Kilburn Provident Institute at the end of its first year of existence.

HAVERSTOCK HILL PROVIDENT DISPENSARY.—A meeting was held at the beginning of this year of the 'free' members of the Haverstock Hill Dispensary, 'to take into consideration the desirability of all free members qualifying themselves as voters, and to take a more active part in the working of the institution by being represented on the committee of management,' and resolutions were passed requesting the committee of management to permit 'that every free member above 14 be allowed to qualify himself or herself as a voter at the election of medical officers, by subscribing five shillings a year to the honorary fund, at one payment or by instalments,' and 'that the free members so subscribing to the honorary fund shall be represented on the committee of management and at the general meetings by some of their number; . . . ' Dr. Ford Anderson, who was in the chair, and who bore witness to the good feeling on the part of the free members towards the honorary subscribers, expressed his pleasure that 'the wishes of the meeting were so moderate, and that no desire existed to revolutionise the dispensary by swamping the present management with free members' votes. Although a liberal himself, he knew that such an extreme course would result in the decadence of the dispensary. He had learnt that by studying the history of provident dispensaries where it had been tried.' From the report of the proceedings it would appear that no strong opposition is expected. Dr. Alford, however, the chairman of the committee of management, in writing words of warning against creating 'a spirit of opposition between the free and honorary members,' suggested that the free members should qualify some of their number as representatives in the governing body by subscribing 'the qualifying sum, viz. 10s. subscription per annum.'

S. F.

BATTERSEA PROVIDENT DISPENSARY.—In their report for 1875 the Battersea Committee expressed their satisfaction at learning 'that it is proposed to establish a Provident Dispensary in Battersea; which will have its head-quarters under the same roof as the Charity Organisation Office, though its affairs will be managed by a different committee.'

The first report has lately been issued, and shows very gratifying results. After 23 years as a charitable institution, the Battersea Dispensary was re-organised, and entered on its work as a Provident Dispensary in January 1876. 'At the end of June, 2,479 benefit members had been entered upon the books, and at the end of December the number had increased to 3,634; but it may be concluded that a considerable proportion of these entries are not to be regarded as permanent. Many persons have doubtless joined in time of sickness, who with returning health have allowed their membership to lapse.' 'During the year nearly 2,000 cases of illness have received help from the medical officers. About 7,400 attendances have been made by the sick at the dispensary; and nearly 2,700 visits have been paid to the houses of patients who were unable to quit their homes.' Figures are then quoted to show that the Provident Dispensary has 'afforded more relief to the suffering, and has also given a more appropriate acknowledgment to the medical officers than the old dispensary had done.'

REFORMATORY AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS—continued.

The number of boys admitted into both Reformatory and Industrial Schools is about four times that of the girls. In Reformatory Schools about six-sevenths of the whole number of admissions were between the ages of 12 and 16; the numbers admitted between 12 and 14 being about equal to those admitted between 14 and 16. In Industrial Schools more than two-thirds of the admissions were between the ages of 10 and 14, the numbers admitted between 10 and 12 bearing, to those admitted between 12 and 14, the proportion of 13 to 8. Out of the total number (1,197) admitted into English Reformatory Schools, five-sixths had one or both parents alive at home. In 992 cases proceedings had to be taken for the recovery of contributions for maintenance; in respect of one-fourth the excuse of poverty was allowed; from the other three-fourths an average contribution of nearly 1s. 6d. a week was obtained. The amount obtained in the year from these contributions* if divided by the total number of admissions would reduce the weekly contribution to about 11d. per week. But if the total number of inmates (viz. 5616) be divided by the total amount (viz. £8,378. 4s. 11d.) of the contributions of parents in the year, we get an average contribution of about 5d. a week. These figures seem to show the steady growth of the system of contribution from very small beginnings; and the improved average of contributions on each year's admissions will raise with it the average of contribution in respect of each inmate of the schools. Last year the number of inmates of Industrial Schools being 11,776, the contributions for maintenance in England from parents and in Scotland from parents and parochial boards amounted to £11,666. 13s. 11d.

But the inmates themselves contribute on an average to their own maintenance far more than their parents do for them. In both Reformatory and Industrial Schools the children are taught and set to work at various handicrafts; and the net profits arising from the sale of their work in the year 1875 (after deducting the loss in those schools where a loss resulted) came to nearly £34,500, or about £2 a head for each inmate of the schools. Whether any of this profit has been made by selling below market value the articles produced, is a question that will probably be answered officially in the course of next Session.

Very suggestive are the following facts as to the family circumstances of the children admitted in 1875 into Industrial Schools. Out of a total of 2,937, no less than 1,088 had both parents alive and able to take care of them—that is, considerably more than one-third; and 992 more had one parent alive and neither destitute nor criminal.

With reference to the class of children admitted, Mr. Turner advocates certain legislative changes which it may be worth while to particularise and consider. Having first suggested that the usual age for admission into a Reformatory School should be raised from 10 to 12—a measure which would have diminished the total number of admissions in 1875 by about one-seventh, offenders under 12 being sent, it is presumed, to Industrial Schools under the 15th Clause of the Industrial Schools Act—he proposes that the qualification of 'being without proper guardianship' should be more strictly defined, explaining that he would send all orphan and destitute children to the Union Schools, and give the latter schools power to detain such children. If in this category be included (1) children both of whose parents are dead, (2) children one or both of whose parents are destitute or criminal, and (3) children deserted by both parents, the number of admissions in the year 1875 (viz. 2,937) would have been reduced by nearly 700. Mr. Turner's object is to keep the number of Industrial Schools as far as possible within their present limits by drafting into the Union Schools children whose circumstances are such that no contributions for their maintenance can be obtained, and who are therefore, in his view, naturally chargeable to the Union.

In pp. 12-13 of his Report, Mr. Turner advocates the introduction in any amendment of the present Industrial Schools Act, of a clause having for its object to render parochial authorities equally liable with the parents of a child under detention in an Industrial School to contribute towards the maintenance of such child, if, by itself or by its parents, it had been chargeable to the parish within three months of its being sent to the school. A like provision is a marked feature of the Scotch Industrial Schools Act. Pecuniarily, the effect of a twofold security being provided for contributions to maintenance has been that the proportionate contribution in respect of every inmate is in Scotland considerably higher than in England and Wales, the figures last year being, in England and Wales, £7,774. 10s. 5d. in respect of 8,230 inmates; and in Scotland £3,892. 3s. 6d. in respect of 3,546 inmates. But Mr. Turner considers the chief value of such a provision to lie in its being 'a check on the possible abuse of Industrial Schools,' and he argues that local authorities are naturally responsible for the destitute and ill-trained classes, who are for the most part the ordinary inmates of the schools. This is doubtless true; the general condition of a district (especially a country district) largely depends upon local administration of Poor Law, and the due enforcement of measures having for their object the health and education of the poor in the district; and an efficient reminder of these local duties is the prospect of an increased rate.

In the Metropolis it is clear that such an additional burden ought to fall upon the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund. The unequal distribution of wealth and poverty in London—their striking separation from each other—has arisen largely from natural and economical causes that no human foresight or legislation could have greatly altered; and since the districts inhabited by the poorer classes are the natural nurseries of neglect and crime, it would be unfair to charge upon these exclusively the expense of contributing to the maintenance of inmates of Industrial Schools belonging to each district.

Both the above suggestions, if carried into effect, would be, pro tanto, an additional charge upon the poor-rates; but in most districts the expense might be recouped several times over by a stricter administration of outdoor relief, and it will be a satisfaction to local authorities to think that the money of their ratepayers so spent will, instead of being thrown away, prove to be literally a good investment.

The Editor, in his introductory note, says:—'Four millions of money enormous as the amount is, must not be regarded as the sum total of money contributed annually to charities in the metropolis. To this must be added the incomes of numerous institutions which do not make returns, and amount distributed in relief by church and chapel congregations. There are also the amounts received by fraudulent charities, which, according to a statement made by the Earl of Shaftesbury, reach at least the large sum total of £250,000. In addition to the sums thus misspent, there are the receipts of professional begging-letter writers, street mendicants, and others, who prey upon the charity of the public. The aggregate total therefore be put down as between £6,000,000 and £7,000,000.'

The incomes quoted in the first (1876) edition amounted to £3,975, as against £4,114,849 in the 1877 edition, showing an increase of £139, which is shared principally by the Bible and Tract Societies, the Mission Societies, the Societies for aiding the Afflicted Classes, the Medical Charities and the Institutions for the Aged.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of January 1877, 39,026, and 45,832 received outdoor relief, making a total of 84,858. There was a decrease of 1,120 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 4,129, 15,058, and 22,050 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 728. This was an increase of 47 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 244 on the corresponding day of last year.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 204.

THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 8, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

There will be a Special Meeting of Council and a Conference on Monday next, the 12th inst., at 4 P.M., at the rooms of the Society of Arts, John Street, Adelphi. A paper, on 'Personal work among the poor,' with special reference to the uses and improvement of district visiting, will be read by the Rev. S. A. Walrond, Hon. Secretary and Representative at Council of the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association. Numerous invitations have been issued. Persons, not being members of Council, may obtain cards of admission on application at the Central Office, or at the offices of any of the District Committees.

The Earl of Lichfield will take the chair, as Chairman of the Council.

The ordinary meeting of Council, for the despatch of business, will be held as usual, at 3 P.M.

The Secretary will be glad to receive from time to time Memoranda containing information on the following subjects, with a view to their insertion in the Charity Organisation Reporter when space permits:—

Meetings on subjects connected with the improvement of the condition of the poor.

Efforts made to improve the machinery and working of existing District Visiting Societies.

Efforts made to promote provident habits among the poor; to improve the dwellings of the poor; to promote the welfare of the afflicted poor; to suppress vagrancy.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.*

The Administrative Committee met on Thursday, February 1.

There were present:—

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the Chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major Nares, Major Prendergast, Major Yard, Captain Fortescue, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Barrington, Brown, Lawrence, Miner, and Peters.

FINANCE.—During the week ending January 27 the receipts had been £103. 14s. for the General Fund, and £1 for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £809. 6s. 8d. and £80. 0s. 7d. respectively, £7. 6s. 7d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANT.—They made a grant of £15 to the Stepney Committee, the amount granted to that Committee since the 1st of October last being £100.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of the Committee on the 30th ult. there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the Chair; Miss Hill, Miss Howes, Messrs. Bousfield, Barrington, Edgcombe, Fletcher, Graham, and Lewis.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 31st ult. had been present:—

Rev. H. I. Cummins, in the Chair; Messrs. Hollond, Miner, and Peters.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 30th ult. had been present:—

R. A. Aspinall, Esq., in the Chair; Major FitzRoy, Hon. H. R. Scott, Mr. Bevan.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 31st ult. had been present:—

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, in the Chair; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Rev. H. F. Mallet, and Mr. J. R. Hollond.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

ST. SAVIOUR'S.—ANNUAL REPORT, 1875-6.—Beneficent Charity.—The Committee purposely abstain from introducing into this year's report a repetition in detail of the rules by which they endeavour to be guided in dealing with their various classes of cases, but there is one general principle which it may be well to bring into distinct prominence, because it underlies all their action, and because a clearer apprehension of it may much assist their subscribers, and others who make use of the office, to understand that action and the grounds on which assistance is often withheld. The principle is, that it is good for the poor that they should meet all the ordinary contingencies of life, relying not upon public or private charity, but upon their own industry and thrift, and upon the powers of self-help that are to be developed by individual and collective effort. Ample room will still be left for the exercise of an abundant charity in dealing with exceptional misfortune, and also in connection with large schemes for the benefit of the working classes which may require, in the first instance at all events, the fostering of wealth and leisure. But it is a hurtful misuse of money to spend it in assisting the labouring classes to meet emergencies which they should themselves have anticipated and provided for. The working man does not require to be told that temporary sickness is likely now and then to visit his household; that times of slackness will occasionally come; that if he marries early and has a large family, his resources will be taxed to the uttermost; that if he lives long enough, old age will render him more or less incapable of toil—all these are the ordinary contingencies of a labourer's life, and if he is taught that as they arise they will be met by State relief or private charity, he will assuredly make no effort to meet them himself. A spirit of dependence, fatal to all progress, will be engendered in him, he will not concern himself with the causes of his distress or consider at all how the condition of his class may be improved; the road to idleness and drunkenness will be made easy to him, and it involves no prophesying to say that the last state of a population influenced after such a fashion as this, will certainly be worse than the first. One thing there is which true charity does require the working man to be told, and it is the aim of this Society to tell it to him, not in words merely, but in acts that cannot be confuted. We desire to tell him that those who are born to easier circumstances sympathise with the severe toil and self-denial which his lot imposes upon him; that many are standing beside him ready and even eager to help if proper occasion should arise; that if he should be overthrown by sudden and unexpected misfortune, a fresh start will assuredly be given to him; and that if he, or wife, or child should be stricken with protracted sickness, or with some special infirmity, such as we all hope to escape, there are those at hand who will gladly minister to his necessities, and do their best at least to mitigate the suffering which it may be beyond their power to remove.

There is, in pp. 10 and 11 of the Report, a statement of work done by the Committee in exceptional cases of distress, which we should be glad to have space to insert at length. The number of cases dealt with by the Committee were, in 1875-6, 574; as against 340 in 1874-5. The following extracts from the Report shows how far one branch of the work of the Society—'Co-operation between Charities and the Poor-law, and amongst the Charities'—is being carried out:—

'The following is an account of 50 applications received during the month of August, and it may be taken as a fair sample of the rest. 8 persons were sent by the clergy, 4 by district visitors, 3 by Bible-women, 6 by Scripture-readers, 5 by the School Board authorities, 3 by relieving officers, 1 by a magistrate, 3 by private persons, 2 by societies, 1 by the central office, 2 by district offices, 2 had heard of the office, 3 saw it in passing, and 7 were advised to come by their neighbours.'—p. 6.

'Whilst this Report is being written 8 young children, whose cases have come before the Committee during the past twelve months, are being trained or otherwise cared for in various Homes and Institutions. In only one case was the admission free; in the other cases the cost has been met by friends to whose notice they have been brought by the Committee. It will be well understood that to effect in each such instance the necessary arrangements, to discover the most suitable Home, enlist the requisite assistance, and to conduct the matter to an issue, means an expenditure not merely of money but of thought, labour, and time. It is here that a Committee, each member of which has his own circle and can do a little, one for one case, one for another, is so much stronger than a single individual, working only by himself, and familiar perhaps with only a few Institutions. In most of these instances some special and serious infirmity affecting the wage-earning power of the family was the ground on which they were taken up.'—p. 10.

EAST-END COMMITTEES.—STEPNEY AND POPLAR have received £15 each from the Thames Police-court; St. George's and Whitechapel £15 between them.

PROVINCIAL.

EDINBURGH.—Annual Report, 1876.—WASTREL CHILDREN.—The ninth Annual Report of the Edinburgh Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor gives us an opportunity of chronicling the extensive and very multifarious operations of the Association. Taking the various departments of work in the order in which they are mentioned in the report, we find that during the past year 2,841 orders for food, coals, &c., have been given. A Sub-Committee for the distribution of clothing has given away 444 articles. A sewing-room, opened during six months of the winter of 1875-6, was attended by about 80 women, who received temporary employment and assistance. A fire-lighter factory is used as a labour test: 460 have been offered employment; but while the offer of work 'has been accepted by 270, by far the larger number never troubled themselves to go to the factory at all; and out of the total number sent, only one-half availed themselves of the opportunities it affords, and many of these only for a short time.' The Association has been instrumental in getting employment for upwards of 200 persons.

Referring to the provision of food and clothing to such children as are prevented by destitution from attending school,* the report states, 'that a Sub-Committee of five was appointed to act in conjunction with a Sub-Committee of the School Board; that from December to May (1875-6) they held nine meetings, at which 220 cases, including 516 children, were decided upon, 'after a full inquiry into the circumstances of each individual case had been made by the School Board compulsory officers, and through the Organisation of the Association.' Of these 516 children, food and clothing were granted to 112, clothing only to 63; food, two meals a day, to 167. On the reopening of the schools, 180 out of the 220 cases were reconsidered at meetings held before the publication of the report: the decision on 33, was delayed for further inquiry, 80 were recommended for food, and the remainder were dismissed; 11, as not having benefited; 28, as not requiring relief owing to improvement in their circumstances, and 28, as having left town, died, or as not having been found. 53 new cases, including 123 children, were considered: to 77 of these, food was granted; to 5, food and clothing; to 14, clothing.

It would be satisfactory to know what proportion the 220 cases approved by the Sub-Committee in the first instance bore to the number of cases submitted to the Sub-Committee; and also how many out of the 53 new cases were rejected: 27 children out of the 123 were not assisted: this, taking an average of three children to a case, is a rejection of 21 per cent. Out of 19,173 cases dealt with by the Charity Organisation Society in 1876, 7,195, or 37 per cent., were dismissed as not requiring relief, or undeserving, or cases suitable for the Poor Law, or otherwise ineligible. There does not appear to be any means of checking this side of the work of the Association. At the same time the following passages bear witness to the fact that the Committee are on their guard lest such relief should be unwisely administered:—

'Your Committee think it only proper to state that, in every case which came before them, they have duly considered the circumstances of the parents or parent, or other guardian of the child or children before them, and, wherever they thought that such could be provided for otherwise, they did not hesitate to refuse all relief whatever, and repeatedly referred cases back to the School Board to be dealt with by it in the usual legal form.' 'No doubt the feeding and clothing children to enable them to attend school is a necessary evil, and ought always to be regarded as a temporary provision, which requires to be conducted with the greatest caution; and it has required all the skill acquired during long years of experience to prevent this movement being perverted to the increase instead of to the decrease of pauperism, and the degradation instead of the elevation of the really deserving poor. The clothing supplied has been of the greatest service, and, so far as can be ascertained, little or no abuse of such has occurred. The Committee are sure that the names of those gentlemen who, as a Sub-Committee, undertook and so faithfully carried out the task of investigating the individual cases, is a sufficient guarantee that every pains are taken to arrive at a proper decision in each case, and your Committee cannot but express to these gentlemen their warmest acknowledgments for the service so faithfully rendered.'

* Vide Reporter, No. 188, p. 135.

The children receiving food, &c. from the Association appear to be more regular in their attendance at school than the other children.

There remain several other branches of the work of the Association: they have a medical kitchen and supplied 68 invalids with nourishing food—some of them for very lengthened periods; they have 'an Improved Sick and Friendly Society, not held in a public-house, and whose funds (amounting to £833) are securely kept; of this 572 men and women availed themselves; 10,000 names of persons, respecting whom inquiry has been made, are on the register of the Association; 1,800 inquiries have been made; beggars have been detected and punished (but of this there is no classified return); private charity to old servants of the donors and others has been dispensed; and £400, donations for other charities, has been received and paid over.

The Association, it may not be generally known, has divided Edinburgh into 28 sections, in each of which there is a Committee.

PLYMOUTH.—It appears from the last Report of the Plymouth Mendicity Society that the wayfarers and tramps dealt with by the Managing Committee have increased from 62 in 1875 to 117 in 1876.

BURSLEM.—ESTABLISHMENT OF A CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—At a meeting held on the 10th ult. at the Town Hall, Burslem, Mr. T. Hulme, the chief bailiff, was in the chair. Mr. W. Boulton, seconded by Rev. A. A. Walton, moved a resolution proposing the establishment of a Charity Organisation Society. Mr. W. Woodall then moved a resolution inviting the co-operation of the Poor-law Guardians, Benevolent Societies, District Visitors, and the inhabitants generally. After alluding to the tramps and others with whom such a Society would enable the public to deal, he said:—There would, however, still remain in their midst a large number of people with regard to whom great discrimination would be required. It was a great irony upon the wealth of this country that one-sixth of the people should be dependent upon the other sixth for their maintenance. In that summary of historical progress of the poor-law which the chairman had given them, they had seen various means resorted to for checking and controlling it. It was not surprising to find that the severe treatment resorted to defeated its own ends, just as they found that capital punishment for various kinds of offence broke down by reason of its severity. This agency would enable them to apply to those who were really deserving, not precisely the amount of aid which would benefit them best. He asked leave to read a few lines from a work by a distinguished writer, Edmund About, who described under the head of "Parasites" three classes—thieves, beggars, and gamblers. He spoke of men who had spent their lives in rags, and in whose mattresses, after death, large fortunes were found. M. About went on to observe that if that were the common experience of beggars, there would not be much to find fault with; but then, he added, that that which was so easily got was usually squandered. Then those people became a sort of caste, married, multiplied, and founded a stock of "parasites." M. About went on to say "Does begging create almsgiving, or does almsgiving give rise to begging? Each does its part. We are in a vicious circle. I have dwelt in succession in the part of France where the most is given to the poor, and the part of Italy where charity lavishes its larger alms. At Quimper, as at Rome, my first care was to search by what miracle so much money spread abroad had increased distress instead of curing it. At Rome, as at Quimper, the wisest and best people replied to me 'It is quite simple: the more you water weeds the more abundant their growth.' * * * Do you wish to manufacture beggars by the hundreds? Open your windows and throw a franc to those who come and sing or grind organs in street or court. On the morrow you will be visited by all the professional beggars; before a week is over fifty persons in your district who have not yet begged will desire to profit by the alms, and the evil of mendicity will spread from neighbour to neighbour like an epidemic; Heaven only knowing where it will end. There are villages in Italy and even in France where children run after strangers asking for coppers. The stranger gives the copper and thinks he acts the great man; he never thinks he is the corrupter of these children. Among us the modern spirit is strong enough to combat and cure this vice of education; yet I shall never forget that in 1858 in the province of Loretto peasants left their harvest which was splendid, to come and beg from us. I turned to one of them and asked him how he had the face to beg on the border of his own field. He replied, 'Sir, I have never missed doing so from my earliest boyhood; and as I have always got something, I continue doing so.'"

A committee and officers were then appointed.

The Staffordshire Advertiser in commenting on the meeting says:—'A hopeful beginning to the good work was made by the assurance that the benevolent societies and parochial associations would give hearty co-operation, and by the reading of a list of subscriptions to a very respectable amount. Now, what is strongly to be wished is that the other Pottery towns may join in the movement thus commenced, and so clear the neighbourhood of a real and infectious nuisance. In Charity Organisation, almost more than in any other matter, union is strength. If we are to get rid of a most vicious, mischievous, and disgraceful class of the community, the crusade against them must spread all over England.'

NOTTINGHAM.—IMPOSTORS.—We have received the following letter from the Nottingham Society for Organising Charity:—'For some six months we have made it a practice to caution the public, by means of letters to the local newspapers, against giving alms to any impostors of whom we may get a description and whose doings are sufficiently extensive to merit such a notice. We give a description of the person and dress, the story, and alleged name and address of the mendicant in question. We find this practice very effective in checking further imposition, and in opening the eyes of the public to the advantages of Charity Organisation. It has also made our office a centre for information of this kind, so that we frequently receive communications from the police and from strangers.'

THE CASE OF LOUISA BARROW.—MISS STRIDE'S HOME.

It will be recollected that some few weeks ago a considerable amount of correspondence took place between the Board and the officials of Miss Stride's Home at Tottenham, in reference to the above child, who had for a long period been an inmate of that institution. She was deserted by her mother, and eventually Miss Stride communicated with the Union authorities, and the child was removed to the schools at Enfield. It was, however, discovered that she was in a lamentable state from disease and dirt; and on a report to that effect being sent to the Guardians, great astonishment was felt. The clerk was then instructed to forward a copy of the report to Miss Stride, and a reply was received from that lady and one of her matrons, conveying their surprise to the Board that such should have been the case—the matron adding that perhaps the 'change of air and diet' brought about the child's condition.

The following letters were now read from Mr. H. N. Capel, of 16 Upper Woburn Street, W.C.: 'Dear Sir—As chairman of the council of Miss Stride's Home, will you favour me with the date of the Master's report on the case of Louisa Barrow, a copy of which without date is enclosed in your letter to Miss Stride of the 1st ultimo?' 'Dear Sir—You will plainly see that this child left Miss Stride's Home in a clean and proper condition, as I believe Miss Janson has already stated to you—sufficient time having elapsed between her departure from the Home and the Master's report to admit of both statements being true. I have deemed it necessary to address you on the spot, especially as I have heard that the fact was mentioned in other quarters. In this, as in many other matters, strict accuracy as to date is all that is necessary to prevent misapprehension.'

Mr. Tye, Schoolmaster and Superintendent of the House at Enfield, wrote thus:—'January 16th. Dear Sir—In reply to your letter of the 11th instant, enclosing one from the Honorable Capel, relative to the child sent to this House from Miss Stride's Home, I cannot do better than simply state the facts connected with the case, without any comment. She was admitted November 29, 1876, in the afternoon, and examined on the following day by the medical officer, and immediately ordered into the infirmary. I saw a large ringworm underneath the chin, one on the right eyelid, and many on other different parts. I also saw great lice taken out of the hair of her head. Immediately after her admission into the infirmary the nurse discovered that she had the whooping-cough, and the child stated that she had medicine given to her while at the Home for it. I reported the case to the Board at their first meeting after the child was admitted.'

The report of the medical officer (Dr. Collyer) was also read, which corroborated the statement of Mr. Tye. The officer also gave his opinion to the effect that, judging from the condition of the child when it was admitted, it must have been suffering for several weeks previous.

It was resolved that the Chairman of the Council of Miss Stride's Home should be made acquainted with the latest particulars.—Enfield Observer, January 20, 1877.

DIFFICULT CASES.

No. 5.—A lady is desirous of putting into a home for cripples a boy about 10 years old who was born without arms. He is not eligible for the Homes that only receive inmates that have become cripples. Can any of our readers furnish us with the name of a home that makes no distinction between those who were born cripples and those who have become so?

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of January 1877 was 39,229, and 46,338 received outdoor relief, making a total of 85,567. This was an increase of 709 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 3,582, 14,082, and 21,858 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 758. This was an increase of 30 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 177 on the corresponding day of last year.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 205.

THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 15, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 7th inst. had been present:—

Mr. A. H. Hill, in the Chair; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Major Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Rev. H. F. Mallet, and Messrs. J. R. Holland and Wilkinson.

The standing business having been disposed of, the Council, on the motion of Mr. J. R. Holland, seconded by Mr. R. Barrington, adjourned to Monday, the 26th inst.

PERSONAL WORK AMONG THE POOR AND HOW TO ORGANISE IT.

The Special Meeting of Council was held at the Society of Arts, John Street, Adelphi, at 4 P.M. The Earl of Lichfield took the chair. There were upwards of 300 persons present, including a large number of clergymen and ministers of all denominations. The Secretary having read letters from Lord Hatherley, the Right Hon. Cowper Temple, M.P., Dean Stanley, the Rev. H. Adler, D.D., Rev. Brooke Lambert, and others, regretting their inability to attend, the Chairman said that this Special Meeting and Conference had been convened, not in order that the Council might submit any special plan of personal work among the poor, but to obtain from those in whom the administration of this branch of charitable work was vested, definite information for the guidance of the District Committees of the Society. It was most necessary in this department of work that there should be inter-communication and co-operation between the charitable. It was also quite hopeless to fulfil the main object of the Society, to 'improve the condition of the poor,' if a sufficient knowledge had not been at first obtained respecting the conditions under which personal work among the poor was being done. But setting aside the question of the utility of District Visiting, a special difficulty met the Committees at work in the East of London: viz. that there were there so few visitors and charitable agencies with which to co-operate. Should an attempt be made to obtain visitors from the West? And, if so, how should the system be organised, and what instructions should be given to visitors to make their visits really beneficial? The Council wished that the meeting should afford an opportunity to those who had a personal acquaintance with charitable work amongst the poor of obtaining and interchanging information. He hoped that thus a more thorough co-operation between them and the Society might be brought about.

The Rev. M. S. A. Walrond, Hon. Sec. of the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association, then read a paper on Personal Work amongst the Poor and how to Organise it.

He dealt only with one special kind of 'Personal work amongst the Poor,' viz. House-to-house Visitation at the Homes of the Poor; and this he again limited to such visitation in the East of London, as it affected or might affect charitable relief. And lastly he confined himself to the consideration of the circumstances of the three Poor-law Unions of Whitechapel, Stepney, and St. George's-in-the-East. Out of a population of 200,000 in these Unions, he considered that 130,000 were likely to be those amongst whom house-to-house visitation might be wise and useful. The number of bond fide visitors in these unions he estimated at about 50: they were mainly ladies, generally non-resident, working with little or no inter-communication, and occasionally, as gift-distributing rivals. These were not all who visited the poor; there were 8 relieving officers, 10 or 12 School Board visitors, 3 agents of the Charity Organisation Society, about 50 clergy and recognised dissenting ministers, 12 almoners of the Society for the Relief of Distress, above 100 lay agents, such as city missionaries, Bible-women, Scripture readers, and the like, besides all sorts of religious adventurers, Gospel missionaries, and quite an army of Sunday-school teachers, who visited the homes of the poor from time to time, but did not as a rule visit regularly. The usual state of things might be described by what a clergyman in the East End had recently told him; viz. that a court in his parish might go unvisited altogether from year's end to year's end until some special calamity befell it, such as a police case, etc.—'then there was a swoop of rival charitable eagles from all sorts of religious quarters to settle on the body.' Personal work was thus inadequate, unorganised, and often tainted with religious prejudice and partisanship.

Referring then to the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association and the Charity Organisation Society, he said that the scheme of the Association was a system of house-to-house visitation; but this had not been found practicable. The Charity Organisation Society must undertake the work if an improvement was to be made in the East End. But members of this Society might object that house-to-house visitation was a wasteful plan, intrusive, inquisitive, gossiping, resultless: a careful inquiry by an experienced agent and an impartial decision were what was really necessary. Yet, surely, the whole question of relief should not be considered such a desperate matter of science; paid agents could not supply the place of visitors, who gradually and by degrees became acquainted with the poor, and did not visit them to make inquiries. Instead of dreading lest their method should be relaxed, the District Committees of the Society ought to become, more than at present, centres round which the charitable should gladly rally for advice and counsel. They should be content often to supply intelligent principles of action. House-to-house visitation in connection with the District Committees would lead to this.

Those assisted by the Society were at present, usually—those who applied: the deserving poor did not generally apply, or often, when they applied, they did so when they could find no help nearer home, or were past help. House-to-house visitation would find those who were in want in time to give them remedial assistance. He believed that this Society would not by any other means repress mendicity (stopping it at its outset), and really meet the wants of the people, or gain human and public sympathy.

The following proposal might be found an experimental method which would possibly lead to the solution of the difficulty. Take a small District, say in Whitechapel; secure the co-operation of the clergy and all other charitable workers, the artisan and tradesman class; obtain the aid of the almoners of the Society for the Relief of Distress, and the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association; above all, obtain the aid of those who, like Edward Denison, are willing to live amongst the poor: induce ladies to help you. Map out your district, and assign to each a division; lay down general principles of visiting &c., and make it a sine quid non that each visitor report at the District Committee, each week, fully and unreservedly respecting visits made and relief given. Such a system might be tried for a year, and would throw more light on East End poverty, its causes and cure, than statistics, theories, and reports could produce in twenty years.

Sir Charles Trevelyan pointed out that the subject had engaged the attention of the Council as early as 1870, and that in July of that year they had approved a system of house-to-house visitation. He then explained at length the system of Parochial Councils adopted in the St. George's (Hanover Square) District.*

Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, Manager of the National Penny Bank, considered the subject from a point of view entirely different from that of Mr. Walrond. He inquired what was meant by 'the poor,' and how were 130,000 people thus divided from the rest of the people in the three unions, that they should be subject to visits, while others were not? Was it not likely that such a system carried out by persons migrating from the West to the East would tend to make the people ask for relief; and thus make charity more often than it was at present, a step to ruin? It had been said that the most deserving did not often get relief. He believed that their long-suffering patience was most noble and should not be thus assailed. Personal visitation on this scale would check thrift, which he believed to be the power on which reliance must be placed, if there was to be any improvement in the condition of the poor.

Rev. J. D. McGachen, Vicar of St. Bartholemew's, Bethnal Green, said that Mr. Walrond and Mr. Bartley had spoken from quite different standpoints—the one considered District Visiting a right condition prior to giving relief; the other was opposed to any possible increase in the amount of relief given. He had in his—an East End—parish 11,500 people. Among these he had perhaps, in the course of the year, £50 to distribute; this could be used only in special cases, and it was manifestly impossible to distribute it in connection with any system of personal visitation.

Rev. J. M. Murphy, of the Borough Road Congregational Chapel, and a member of the London School Board, said that however careful the visitors might be, and however necessary it was to relieve cases in which there was real need, the assistance of an agent acquainted with the ways of the poor was absolutely necessary to prevent deception, and to ascertain what money was earned and how it was spent. Visitors of one sort and another were only too numerous. It was misuse of means, not the want of them, that the people suffered from.

Rev. J. Thomas, of Zion Chapel (Independent), Whitechapel Road, said he had been twenty-one years in Whitechapel. He begged that no visitors might be sent there. There were enough there already. Missionaries and Biblewomen were able, while engaged in their work, to find out indirectly what distress there was; and this was unostentatiously relieved. Any system of visits, visiting to find out wants, would fail. The clergy and Nonconformist ministers were ready to deal with all deserving cases, and the East End, if left to them, and if no money was sent to irresponsible persons without committees, &c., would be able to right itself.

Mr. C. L. Corkran, of the Domestic Mission, Spicer Street, one of the representatives of the Whitechapel Committee, endorsed this opinion.

Rev. — Hawkins, Canon of Llandaff, having pointed out that the discussion had turned to the question whether it was not better to administer charitable relief without any system of personal visitation, said that Hackney, a union not quite so large as those mentioned by Mr. Walrond, had, in 1866, at the time of the cholera, been divided into districts for the purposes of visiting. All the visitors, very many of them shopkeepers, were residents and members of the District Committee of the Society. The visitation was from house to house, was conducted with great zeal and perseverance. The visitors were on the spot, reporting after a week. The system had now been in existence ten years, and had stood the test of experience. He believed that every year their charity was administered on sounder principles, and he was glad to have an opportunity of expressing admiration of the steady and progressive manner in which the work was being worked.

* Vide Reporter, No. 196, and No. 197, p. 172.

Mr. A. H. Hill, Director of the Labour Agency, Greek Street, approved generally of the line of argument adopted by Mr. May. The plan suggested by Mr. Walrond would perpetuate a class feeling which was one of the greatest difficulties in carrying out any social reforms, and would tend to draw between the rich and poor, and the visited and not-to-be-visited, a dangerous hard-and-fast line. The first and greatest function of the Charity Organisation Society, the best abused Society in London, was to be a great moulding, shaping, ingathering power; it was in this spirit its work should be achieved. He feared the day which the invasion of these lady-brigades from the West would do to the East. Would it not be better to let those who are neighbours visit and help one another, and let those who wished to sit and help the poor, make themselves neighbours of the poor, and then, while they lived among them? There was no necessity of multiplying agencies; what was wanted was, that the poor should be referred to whom, in trouble, they might without difficulty refer. There was a need of certain vital centres in each locality, to which the poor might go, and might be dealt with candidly and courteously. Such should be the District Committees of the Charity Organisation Society—composed, in accordance with the original theory of the Society, of representatives, of members who were visitors, going in search of need to the houses of the applicants, or lawyers giving advice to solve some of their numerous petty legal troubles, or doctors, or nurses, visiting the sick. It was not the fault of the Society that the District Committees were not such now.

Mr. Rev. H. I. Cummins, of St. Alban's, Wood Street, disapproved of any system of real house-to-house visitation. But friendly visitors, acting in co-operation with the District Committees of the Society, would be most useful. They were wanted to take up cases which the Committees had helped; to see what result the loan or the gift or assistance of any kind had produced. Volunteer visitors would not, he thought, be almsgivers. The gift of money imposed on the donor, as a matter of duty, the necessity for inquiring whether the want was real; and this scrutiny made the visitor an inspector. The visitor should be the friend and advocate of the poor; he should have a tribunal to which he could go if cases arose in which he believed relief was required; the relief should come from another and independent source.

Mr. A. G. Crowder, one of the Guardians of St. George's-in-the-Fields, supported Mr. Cummins, and pointed out that this plan would be a reason for going among the poor. It would be of the greatest service to the poor and to the Society, if persons would be forward who would bestow their time and thought rather than money in taking up and watching over cases, and obtaining for them what had been decided to be the wisest form of relief.

Mr. George Charles explained a plan which had recently been adopted in the parish of St. Paul's, Paddington.* All funds passed through the agency of the Committee, thus uniformity of relief was secured after inquiry had been made by the District Visitors, or, if necessary, by the Committee of the Charity Organisation Society.

The Committee also received from the Guardians a list of those who were in receipt of monthly allowances. Adequate pensions for deserving cases were sometimes arranged by co-operation with other charitable agencies.

Mr. Rev. Father Kay, of St. Mary's, Horseferry Road, Westminster, said he was only a junior member of the Society, but had experience of work amongst the poor in Liverpool, Glasgow, and elsewhere. He was a member of one of the Parochial Councils to which Sir Charles Trevelyan had referred. He had seen the harm that had been done by the confusion of charitable effort, and was sure that the degraded condition of the poorer Catholics in Westminster was due to a continuous flow of ill-directed and indiscriminate charity. He suggested that Committees might take a more parochial form; that all relief-givers of all sects should assemble at small local committees. The Parochial Council to which he belonged was composed entirely of residents; and he could bear witness to the great good it was doing.

Rev. J. L. Elliott, of St. Mary's, Newington, said that there was in some districts a great lack of persons who, after a case had been decided upon, and assisted by the Society, could follow it up, working on the spot as residents. Such persons could give advice as to joining clubs, &c., and cases having been transferred to them, they might report as to results.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, of the English Presbyterian Church, Somers Town, pressed that a resolution should be passed. So far from district visiting being unnecessary, he believed that the only really serviceable plan would be to divide London into small districts for the purpose, without drawing any distinction between rich and poor. Thus he believed a great amount of good might be done, while, if each visitor reported as to the resources of the locality, it would be possible to know where such help was wanted. This would be a practical result of this special meeting.

Mr. H. N. Hoare, one of the Hon. Secretaries of the St. Giles's Committee, thought the system of personal visitation was generally approved by the meeting. Members of the District Committee should, he believed, take up and visit the cases relieved by the Committee, and thus try and secure good results.

Mr. J. Jones, one of the Relieving Officers of the Stepney District, considered that one of the best means of raising the poor was to bring them in contact with a superior class. A Relief Committee composed of the visitors, the givers of relief, but yet independent of them, appeared to him the best plan. In his neighbourhood there was no systematic visitation. Clergymen, ministers, and visitors worked without co-operation. The dole system should be suppressed, and something practical should be done to organise these various workers round a common centre.

After a few remarks from Mr. C. A. Miner,

Rev. M. S. A. Walrond replied that it appeared that a system of personal visitation had been approved by the Council; if such a system were right and good, the question was, how to organise and complete it. This was the problem which the Society had before it.

The Chairman, in summing up, said that it had been clearly shown that a great deal of the District Visiting now done was unsatisfactory. There was a want of 'system'; more care and discretion was wanted; a careful selection of the houses to which the visitor should go; a choice of fit persons as visitors; more insight as to cases in which relief was really wanted; but, above all, the variety of opinions expressed at the Conference had shown the absolute necessity for greater and more hearty co-operation. To give scope to the free expression of opinion on the subject no formal resolution had been submitted; yet if members had become convinced of this one conclusion—the necessity for co-operation—the meeting would have produced most positive and beneficial results.

Mr. H. N. Hoare then moved, and Mr. Fitch seconded, the following resolution, which was carried unanimously:

That District Visitors and persons willing to work personally among the poor be invited to co-operate, as far as possible, with the District Committees of the Society.

Rev. H. F. Mallet having then moved a vote of thanks to the Chairman, the meeting adjourned at ten minutes past six.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

ST. GEORGE'S (HANOVER SQUARE).—SELF HELP.—We are informed that the following resolution has been passed by this Committee:—'That it is the duty of this Committee to ascertain what further steps can be taken to promote self-help among their poorer neighbours, and to elevate those who are living just on the verge of pauperism. And that it be referred to a sub-committee to consider by what means the best suggestions and ideas can be obtained, whether by arranging a conference or by some other practical plan.' The sub-committee was appointed on January 31, and held its first meeting on February 5.

STRAND.—MEDICAL RELIEF.—Referring to their inquiries on behalf of the Ormond Street Children's Hospital, the Committee in their Annual Report quote the following case which recently came before them:—'A. B. applied to have his hospital letter stamped, and stated that his wages, as a tailor, amounted to about 25s. a week. On inquiry it was found that the applicant had earned sometimes as much as £8 a week, and that his average wages were between £2 and £3. The man, on finding that inquiries had been made, withdrew his application.'

MILE END.—The magistrates of the Thames Police Court have sent a contribution of £15 to the funds of the Mile End Old Town Committee, and have expressed their desire to co-operate with the Society by assisting deserving cases after investigation by the Society.

MEDICAL CHARITIES.

The following is a report of the Medical Society at Liverpool:—

'The Medical Society at Liverpool, having had under its consideration the question of gratuitous medical relief, as afforded by our local charities as well as in the practice of some members of the profession, considers it incumbent, especially on the present occasion, to direct both public and professional attention to the following points:—

'1st. That whilst recognising the need of measures for affording gratuitous medical aid, it believes those now in operation in Liverpool to be considerably greater than are necessary, and the number of persons admitted to their benefits to be much larger than is either legitimate or just, and much more numerous in proportion to the population than is the case in any other town in the United Kingdom, as indicated by the following statistics derived from the Medical Register, 1875:—

Liverpool—excluding Homœopathic Dispensaries, Hospital for Consumption (Mount Pleasant), and others	159,063
Manchester—allowing 10,000 for Salford and Pendleton Hospital	94,265
Birmingham	81,113
Edinburgh	59,782
Glasgow—allowing 5,000 for Dispensary for Diseases of Chest, and two others	48,032

'2nd. That the indiscriminate bestowal of gratuitous medical relief interferes to a large extent with the rights and maintenance of medical men, and so far from its being a real boon to the working classes, it encourages many of them to take advantage of institutions intended to be utilised only under special circumstances, thereby fostering in such persons acts of imposition and dishonesty, which lead too often to the sacrifice of self-respect and to improvidence and pauperism.

'3rd. That, in order to ameliorate these conditions, this Society would suggest the formation of a committee for the purpose of acquiring additional information on the subject, and to institute such further action on the matter as may be thought desirable.

(Signed) D. W. PARSONS, President

'Dr. Maunsell, Hon. Sec. of the Northern Medical Society, brought forward the subject at the Medical Institute, and it was referred to the Council to appoint a sub-committee to make full inquiries on the matter. The question, however, was not mooted at the last Council meeting, but perhaps they are reserving it "to a more convenient season."—Medical Examiner.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

The Chief Registrar's first Report of Proceedings under the Friendly Societies Act, of 1875 has lately appeared, and, together with the reports of the Actuarial Commission, and the report of last year, which contains the Act, is full of value to, and even necessary for all who are connected with or interested in Friendly Societies. In order, moreover, to facilitate the working of the Act, a 'Memorandum for the Guidance of Societies under the Friendly Societies Act, 1875,' a copy of which is annexed to the Report, has been prepared as a pamphlet, and is on sale, at 4d. per copy, at Clowes & Sons, Charing Cross, and at other publishers'. The following extract from it is worth quoting: 'The Registrars will do their best for putting the Act into useful operation. But it is not their duty, nor is it possible for them to advise nearly 25,000 Societies, still less 4,000,000 of members of those societies, as to the proper conducting of their business . . . With so many societies to deal with, it is not to be wondered at that there have been some 'misconceptions and misconstructions'; still, in summing up, the Chief Registrar feels 'confident that, when once the friction of transition has ceased, the machinery of the new Acts will be found far better adapted than that supplied by any previous legislation to the sound development of these organisations, which exercise so large an influence on the well-being of our working and lower middle classes. How much that 'sound development' is needed is exemplified in the statement that 'nothing has been more common than for Friendly Societies to send in applications for registry with the heads relating to quinquennial returns, valuations, and the right of members to demand an investigation of affairs struck out.'

Though the Report is full of most interesting matter, from which it would be easy to quote largely, we wish to confine ourselves to a few notes upon the subjects of the New Model Rules, Public Auditors, Loan Societies, Savings Banks, and Insurance of Children:—

New Model Rules.—Amongst other duties thrown upon the Chief Registrar was that of 'preparing and causing to be circulated, for the use of societies, model forms of accounts, balance-sheets, and valuations, as well as causing to be constructed and published tables for the payment of sums of money on death, in sickness, old age, &c. These forms and tables, based principally upon the recommendations of the Actuarial Commissioners, are for the most part printed in the Report. As, however, the forms of accounts are not, we are unable to say what steps (if any) have been taken as regards a very important recommendation to the effect 'that it will tend to promote economy if the expenses of management be defrayed out of a distinct fund, raised either by a special levy, or by periodical drafts upon one or other of the benefit funds, so that the cost of management may be kept directly under the observation of the members, and any wasteful or illegal expenditure receive a prompt check.'

Public Auditors.—Under the Act the Treasury has vested in them the functions of appointing Public Auditors and Valuers. No Valuers have yet been appointed, but the country has been divided into districts, and Auditors appointed to most. 63 appointments in all will have to be made, viz. 50 for England and Wales, 3 for Scotland, and 3 for Ireland. The public Auditors are bound to accept for audit the accounts of any society within their districts at certain fees, and to make half-yearly returns to the Treasury. Their employment by societies is not compulsory. 'Very great good,' the Chief Registrar states, 'has been done by the provisions for a more stringent audit, by the requirement of uniform forms of returns, and by the appointment of public auditors. There is clear evidence from various quarters, and in various ways, that societies are paying much greater attention to their accounts, and in many cases calling in the help of public accountants, when not of public auditors. The public auditors themselves, through the steps which they have taken to make their appointments known to the societies, by advertisements or by printed circulars, are bringing home to the societies their obligations in the way of audits and returns, as they never have been brought home to them before.' In commenting upon the proposed appointment of Public Auditors, the Parliamentary agent of the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows, after recommending that the persons selected as auditors 'should be those who have had practical experience, and who possess present knowledge of the working of Friendly Societies,' adds, 'I am fearful that, unless the importance of this is made manifest, the official mind (I say this with all respect) may lead to the appointment of Poor Law auditors, or similar officials, and the men whom I conceive should be appointed left out entirely. There is also a very strong feeling manifested by the members against any connection between the working of Friendly Societies and the Poor Law; so much is this the case, that I am convinced if Poor Law officials were appointed auditors of Friendly Societies, the clause of the Act as to independent audit would become a dead letter.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fifth week of January 1877 was 39,466, and 46,666 received outdoor relief, making a total of 86,132. This was an increase of 565 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 2,791, 13,392, and 21,537 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 680. This was a decrease of 78 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 192 on the corresponding day of last year.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 206.

THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 22, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge each of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of a District Committee, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, February 26:—
 To adopt a report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on Soup Kitchens.

HOLBORN.—Mr. Alfred Hoare has been appointed one of the Hon. Secretaries of this Committee in the place of the late Mr. W. J. Barlow.

ISLINGTON.—Mrs. C. S. Loch has been appointed one of the Hon. Secretaries of this Committee.

BETHNAL GREEN.—Mr. J. F. Sapsford, junior, has been appointed Hon. Secretary of the Bethnal Green Committee.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee met on Thursday, February 15. There were present:—

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the Chair; Sir R. M. Stephenson, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Major Yard, Captain Portescue, Rev. I. Cummins, Messrs. Barrington, Bevan, Brown, Lawrence, Miner, Sters, and Roberts.

FINANCE.—During the week ending February 10 the receipts had been £81. 8s. for the General Fund, and £9. 0s. 4d. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £994. 0s. 9d. and £50. 2s. 11d. respectively, £7. 6s. 7d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—A grant of £50 was made to the St. Olave's Committee. To the North St. Pancras Committee a grant of £25 was made, on the understanding that it be repaid on the completion of the more energetic canvass about to be undertaken by the Committee.

PERSONAL WORK AMONG THE POOR.—In consideration of the manifest interest felt in the question debated at the special meeting of Council on the 12th instant, it was resolved, that the attention of District Committees be especially drawn to the following resolution passed at that meeting, viz. 'That District Visitors and those willing to work personally among the poor be invited to co-operate, as far as possible, with the District Committees of the Society'; that it be a recommendation to District Committees to consider the subject and report what immediate steps they can take to give practical effect to the resolution; and that the Districts Sub-Committee be requested to report on the whole subject with a view to its being further discussed by the Council.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of this Committee on the 13th inst. there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the Chair; Miss O. Hill, Messrs. Barrington, Fletcher, Graham, Lewes, and Mr. Beauford, visitor.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 14th inst. had been present:—

Lieut-Gen. Cavenagh, in the Chair; Rev. H. I. Cummins, Major Prndergast, Messrs. Hollond, Hill, Miner, and Peters.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 13th inst. had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the Chair; Hon. H. R. Scott, Capt. Gardner, and Mr. Bevan.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 14th inst. had been present:—

Sir Charles Trevelyan, in the Chair; Major Prndergast, Rev. H. F. Mallet, and Messrs. Hollond, Hill, and Wilkinson.

ARRANGEMENT WITH THE ORMOND STREET CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL.

The following is a Report of the Proceedings of Council of the 18th December last. (See Reporter No. 199, p. 178):—

The Secretary read the following Report of the Medical Committee on the arrangement between the Ormond Street Children's Hospital and the Society:—

Your Committee have considered the details of the existing arrangement with the Ormond Street Children's Hospital, described at length in Reporter No. 178, p. 91. They have also considered correspondence respecting an arrangement at present in force at the North Eastern Hospital for Children, and letters from the North St. Pancras, South St. Pancras, and Holborn Committees—the Committees of the Society in some of those districts from which a large proportion of the patients at the Ormond Street Children's Hospital are drawn; and they have compiled and analysed the subjoined tabular statement of the returns of cases dealt with by the District Committees of the Society.

The North St. Pancras Committee writes:—

'More recently the hospital authorities have granted a discretionary power to the District Committees to recommend applications in the event of there being exceptional reasons, although the parents may be earning more than 30s. weekly. This the Committee consider a wise course, and they have accordingly acted upon it occasionally.

'In several instances it has happened that merely asking the usual questions of applicants has been sufficient to cause them to decline proceeding further with their applications, and in others parents would rather forego the advantage to be gained than permit inquiries to be made of their employers respecting earnings. . . . Applications are frequently made from persons in fairly good positions, who would be glad to pay for advice &c., believing that such at the Children's Hospital is of a very superior nature.'

One of the Hon. Secretaries of the South St. Pancras Committee writes, with reference to deductions to be drawn from the returns of cases:—'There will still remain two important elements of uncertainty. Many cases are too simple to require a second attendance at the hospital at all; and many patients, no doubt, instead of coming to the Committees, get fresh letters either in their own names or other names, or go to another hospital.'

The Hon. Secretary of the Holborn Committee writes:—'I may say that, in general terms, the opinion of our Committee is that the present arrangement is working effectually to prevent the abuse of relief in this district. The arrangement has worked here in two ways. First, the inquiries that have to be made of the applicant have been a self-acting test, because those who are well off have refused to give information. Secondly, the inquiries of employers* have usually been readily answered by them, and their answers have been relied on by this Committee. Lately the Committee has had to deal with several cases within the margin of discretion which the newer arrangement gave them, and they think that this arrangement is working more satisfactorily than the older one.'

The tabular statement above referred to† gives the following results:—

Letters stamped	Stamped, but not called for	Not stamped	Totals
1,359	8	274	1,641	Quarter ending Sept. 30, 1875.
657	29	140	826	Quarter ending Dec. 31, 1875.
1,772	75	260	2,107	Half-year ending June 30, 1876.
3,788	112	674	4,574	Totals for one year.

It is noteworthy that there was an apparent gradual increase in the number of admissions to the hospital as soon as the supervision of the Society had given the first check to the abuse of the charity; that similarly also there was in the third and fourth quarters of the year an increase in the letters stamped, while there was a slight decrease in the letters not stamped, and in the letters stamped and not called for. The conclusion, therefore, to be drawn from these figures is, that the test which this Society has been able to impose on the cases referred to them has been gradually separating the eligible from those ineligible for charitable medical relief; and that a gradually larger number of applicants, but applicants of more suitable character, are being admitted to the benefits of the Out-patient Department.

At the same time it will be seen from Reporter No. 151, p. 125, that out of 3,498 letters referred to the Committees of the Society in the quarter ending September 1875, only 1,641 were taken to the offices of the Committees. The following analysis of returns for the quarter ending September 30, 1875, and the half-year ending June 30, 1876, has been submitted to the Committee:—51 per cent. of new cases apply at the offices of the District Committees; 12 per cent. of these are refused; 3½ per cent. do not call for stamped letters; 43 per cent. become permanent patients at the hospital.

* There is a natural wish on the part of applicants to prevent it coming to the knowledge of their employers that they are soliciting charity.

† Vide pp. 31 and 32 for a tabular statement of the cases dealt with by the Society, and a return of the attendance at the hospital.

Your Committee have fully considered these returns, and are of opinion that, while the present system has done much to reduce the abuse of the charity by those who apply to it for gratuitous relief, there is a numerous class which might pay a small amount, and would thus be enabled to take advantage of the medical advice to be obtained at the hospital, without impairing those habits of self-reliance which it is the object of this Society to inculcate, while their contributions would meet a portion at least of the large expenses which the Out-patient Department entails on the hospital. A larger range of patients will, by the scheme they propose, be available for the medical practice of the hospital, while all who receive aid will accept it not as a right, but as a charity administered with a wise discrimination; those who claim gratuitous relief will still have to submit to the necessary but slight investigation which is now required.

The following is the proposed scheme:—

1. That in all cases the applicant sign a statement in accordance with the terms of the accompanying form.*
2. That the applicant, as a rule, pay 1s. the first two visits and 3d. a visit afterwards.
3. That, while every case is liable to investigation by the Charity Organisation Society, investigation will be considered indispensable in those cases only in which application is made for gratuitous medical relief; and that all these cases be treated in accordance with the arrangements now in force.
4. That persons receiving more than 30s. and less than 50s. a week shall be charged 1s. a visit, but persons in receipt of more than 50s. a week are, as a rule, ineligible for the benefits of the hospital.
5. That no one in receipt of parish relief be eligible for the benefits of the hospital by payments or otherwise, except in special cases referred to the hospital by the Poor Law Medical Officers.
6. That when there is reason to believe that the statement made by the applicant is false, the clerk shall, with as little delay as possible, forward such statement to the proper District Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, with any further information he may think necessary, writing across the statement 'Please investigate specially.'
7. That a notice be set up in the hospital, stating the terms of admission &c.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, Chairman of the Medical Committee, moved

'That the Report be received, with an expression of the approval of the Council of moderate payments at Out-patient Departments of Hospitals by persons who can afford them.'

He said—

At present all applicants are presumed to need gratuitous relief and all are inquired into. But the fact is that the great majority belong to the large intermediate class between those who can pay the usual professional fees, and those who stand in need of gratuitous relief, and persons belonging to this class, although willing to make a small payment, do not like to be inquired into, or to incur the inconvenience and waste of time caused by such inquiries. The result is, that a considerable proportion of the applicants are repelled, and many of the lower-middle and working-classes do not take advantage of the hospital. The remedy proposed is, that all applicants should make a declaration as to their circumstances; that those who are willing to make a small payment should be admitted at once without further inquiry; and that those who claim gratuitous relief should have their cases investigated by the District Committees of the Society. In other words, it is proposed that an alternative should be presented to them—payment or inquiry. Applicants who ought to pay the usual professional fees will be checked by the declaration of means, which can always be tested by subsequent investigation.

Mr. A. H. Hill seconded the motion.

Mr. Bousfield asked whether the Poor Law Medical Officers were,

Rev. H. I. Oummins said that the introduction of a system of moderate payments would be to the advantage of the industrious poor, and would largely increase the permanent usefulness of the Hospital.

Miss Collett said that the Committee of the South St. Pancras District believed that many applicants obtained a second and third attendance by giving their names merely. No record of second attendances being kept at the Hospital, applicants to whom letters were given, with the instruction that they should take them to the Committees of the Society, might destroy the letters and repeat their visit to the Hospital without any possibility of detection.

Mr. A. H. Hill pointed out that by the proposed scheme a statement, containing name and address and other particulars, was required of every applicant. This would act as a check on the abuse Miss Collett mentioned. The recurrence of the name and address would in all probability be noticed; and the fact that the statement might be used as evidence that the applicant was obtaining money under false pretences would in some measure deter such attempts to defraud.

Dr. Lee, who attended the meeting as a visitor, said the arrangement with the Society had produced an immediate reduction in the numbers of the out-patients at the Hospital. A full year had passed since the arrangement was adopted, and he and others believed that the figures that had been read conveyed conclusive information as to the effect of the scheme on the medical position of the Hospital. Only half the applicants at the Out-patient Department came more than once; and a large class of working people who formerly attended were now deterred. At the same time many of the applicants had said they would be quite ready to pay a small sum for medical advice and assistance; and if this were arranged, the average expenses of the Out-patient Department, 1s. 6d. a head, would be met. He then compared the system adopted at the North Eastern Hospital for Children, and expressed a hope that the Council would approve a scheme which appeared to combine assistance to the deserving with a minimum of investigation and expense.

After a few words from Miss Octavia Hill, the debate closed with the adoption of the motion.

The Council then adjourned.

Addendum to the Report submitted to the Council on the 18th December, printed by the direction of the Administrative Committee.

I. Taking the returns from the Children's Hospital as a basis, the following conclusions may be drawn:—

1. In the quarter ending September 30, 1875, out of 4,068† persons attending the Out-patient Department of the Hospital, 3,498 were referred to the District Committees of the Society; of these 3,498 the letters of 122 were 'not stamped' or 'not called for.'

2. In the quarter ending December 31, 1875, out of 2,083† patients attending the Out-patient Department, 1,776 were referred to the District Committees; of these 1,776 the letters of 124 were 'not stamped' or 'not called for.'

3. In the half-year ending June 30, 1876, out of 4,646† patients attending the Out-patient Department, 4,124 were referred to the District Committees; and of these 4,124 the letters of 122 were 'not stamped' or 'not called for.'

4. The total number of cases sent to the District Committees in the year ending June 30, 1876, was therefore 3,498

4,124

— 8,798. Of these the letters of 368 were 'not stamped' or 'not called for.'

II. Referring to the returns of the Charity Organisation Society, it appears—

1. That in the two quarters and half-year above mentioned, 1,641, 826, and 2,107 cases were received by the District Committees of the Society; that of these 282, 160, 335 respectively were either 'not stamped' or 'not called for'; that the remainder, viz. 1,359, 657, 1,772, were stamped.

* The terms of the arrangement now in force are, 'The Committee of the Hospital have determined to exclude as a rule . . . children whose parents are in receipt of parish relief.' Vide Reporter No. 178, p. 91. According to the fifth of the proposed new rules, special cases may be referred to the Hospital by the Poor Law Medical Officers, but, in truth, urgent and difficult cases will always be admitted from whatever quarter they come.

† Exclusive of cases summarily rejected on account of the infectious nature of the disease &c., viz. 47, 24, and 34 in these periods respectively.

2. That in the year ending June 30, 1876, 4,574 cases were received by the District Committees; 786 were either 'not stamped' or 'not called for'; and 3,788 were stamped.

III. By comparing the two returns it appears that in the course of the year 8,798 cases were sent to the Society, while only 4,574 cases, or 51 per cent. were received by the Society. Of these 4,574, according to the returns of the Society, the letters of 786 were either 'not stamped' or 'not called for.' This involves a further deduction of 786, and leaves, as the total of those who become permanent out-patients, 3,788, or 43 per cent. out of the 8,798, the total number of cases sent by the Hospital to the Society; that is, only 3,788, or 34 per cent. of the 10,797 who (exclusive of infectious cases) attended the Hospital as out-patients, and received medical relief once, became permanent out-patients at the Hospital or attended a second time.

It would appear from this, that the action of the Society has produced two results: it has (as stated in the Report) gradually separated the ineligible from those whose poverty gave them a title to gratuitous medical assistance; but it has also deterred a large number of applicants for charitable relief who, presumably, if they had had the opportunity, would have been able and willing to pay a fair sum for such special medical advice as they could not perhaps conveniently obtain for a moderate sum anywhere but at the Hospital.

PROVINCIAL.

HEREFORDSHIRE MENDICITY SOCIETY.—At the first annual meeting, lately held, of this society it was stated that the receipts had amounted to £58. 17s., and the expenses (including £35. 9s. 10d. for bread) to £48. 5s. 3d.; and that out of 11,512 bread tickets distributed, 4,259 had been exchanged for bread. The report stated that 'the general depression in trade and the reduction of large establishments has thrown a great number of hands out of work; many of them, traversing the county in search of work, are grateful for the temporary assistance afforded by this society; and it is to be hoped that this will prevent their being encouraged and induced to lead a vagrant life. If tramping the country is found to pay, such persons will, to a certainty, become professional vagrants, but if money is not forthcoming, they will take to work the first opportunity; and if by adopting such measures as have been recommended the charitable can be induced not to give relief in money, professional vagrants will necessarily be forced to abandon their occupation.' In the discussion that ensued, it was clearly shown that, although the number of persons who had applied for relief had increased, professional vagrancy had been greatly checked. In the course of a very able speech, Mr. Meysey Clive said: 'Although the statistics from the different unions showed a large increase in the number of vagrants relieved this year, yet he believed the increase did not consist of professional vagrants. He had the testimony of the hon. secretary for that statement. He (the hon. sec.) had followed up a good many of those beggars who had obtained tickets, had seen them relieved in the bakers' shops, and had seen them consume the food they had obtained greedily and readily; and he also stated that he had been told by many of the shopkeepers that they had witnessed the same thing, and that they were quite certain the people who presented tickets for food had been only too glad to get it, as they appeared to be almost starving, and, in fact, that there could be little doubt in the majority of instances tickets had been well distributed, and very gladly accepted.' The testimony of the Master of the Hereford Workhouse was quoted to the same effect, as also was that of the Hon. Secretary of the Dorsetshire Mendicity Society.

FOREIGN.

TORONTO: Want of Employment.—The Organising Secretary has received the following letter from Mr. J. E. Pell, Secretary, St. George's Society, Toronto:—'Mr. A. E. Paull, our late Secretary, has handed me your favour of the 28th ult., and I have laid the same before our Board, who have instructed me to inform you somewhat of the state of affairs here at the present time. We have had to obtain the use of an old jail, from the County, wherein we have 150 young men who cannot get any employment. There are in round numbers 600 married men (Englishmen) besides, probably, a like number of other nationalities, who are seeking relief through want of employment.

'Of course, this state of things only continues during the winter season, say from December to April; but the distress in Toronto and other towns of Canada for the past two or three winters has really been fearful. Formerly, for some years, I voluntarily assisted Miss Rye and Miss McPherson in their work; but a sad change has come over things here; still I look forward to the time when business will rally again, when I shall be only too happy to render any fellow countryman any assistance in my power. You will thus see that it would not be in our power to assist the young man.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of February 1877 was 39,396, and 46,829 received outdoor relief, making a total of 86,225. This was an increase of 93 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 2,315, 12,992, and 21,076 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 670. This was a decrease of 10 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 151 on the corresponding day of last year.

JOHN LOCKE AND CHARITY ORGANISATION.—'He was naturally compassionate, and exceedingly charitable to those in want; but his charity was always directed to encourage working, laborious, industrious people, not to relieve idle beggars, to whom he never gave anything, or would suffer his friends to do so before him, saying such people as those were "robbers of the poor," and asking those that went to relieve them "whether they knew none that were in want and deserved help"; if so, "how they could satisfy themselves to give anything they could spare to such as they knew not to be in need, but who probably deserved to be so." . . . People who had been industrious, but were, through age or infirmity, past labour, he was very bountiful to; and he used to blame that sparingness with which such were ordinarily relieved, "as if it sufficed only that they should be kept from starving or extreme misery; whereas they had," he said, "a right to living comfortably in the world." Such is a picture of John Locke, drawn nearly two hundred years ago, and quoted by Mr. Fox Bourne in his recently issued 'Life of John Locke.'

BY THE
SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 207.

THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 1, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, February 22. There were present:—

Lieut.-Gen. Cavenagh, subsequently Mr. J. R. Holland and Major Prendergast, in the Chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Captain Fortescue, Messrs. Barrington, Bevan, Brown, Hoare, Miner, and Peters.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending February 17 the receipts had been £149. 13s. for the General Fund, and £8. 8s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £844. 8s. 1d. and £30. 10s. 11d. respectively, £7. 6s. 7d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—Grants of £30 had been made to the Holborn and Bethnal Green Committees respectively, the amounts granted to each of these Committees since October 1, 1876, being £80.

LEGACY.—A legacy of £100, less £10 duty, had been received from the executors of the late Miss Biggs.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 20th ult. there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the Chair; Miss O. Hill, Miss Howes, Messrs. Fletcher, Graham, and Lewes.

SCHOOL BOARD CASES.—The following is a report of the Sub-Committee on this subject:—

'The Sub-Committee on District Work, in submitting the returns of School Board cases for the quarter ending December 31, 1876, would draw the attention of the Administrative Committee to three points on which the treatment of School Board cases by the District Committees appears to be particularly defective—

'1. But little attempt is made to obtain co-operation with other Societies.

'2. With but few exceptions, no attempt is made to ensure permanent improvement.

'3. No attempts are made, in dealing with School Board cases, to assist by loans from the funds of this Committee, rather than by grants from Mr. Peek's fund.

'Your Sub-Committee are inclined to believe that, Mr. F. Peek's fund being at hand, grants, which would not be made in ordinary cases, are given without sufficient consideration in School Board cases.

'They have obtained your permission to circulate the following slip:—

'District Committees are earnestly requested to bear in mind—

'That the money placed at the disposal of the Society for the assistance of School Board cases, should, by Mr. F. Peek's wish, be expended in accordance with the principles of the Society.

'That School Board cases should therefore be dealt with, not as exceptional, but as ordinary cases; and should be decided simply on their merits, irrespective of the fact that, if necessary, there is money available for their relief.

'A paper containing the resolutions of Council on the subject, explanatory notes, and illustrative cases, will shortly be published and forwarded to the District Committees and the Divisional and Sub-Divisional Committees of the School Board. They hope that by these means School Board cases will be decided in strict accordance with the Society's principles, and that the quarterly returns will in future bear witness to greater uniformity of action on the part of District Committees.'

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 20th ult. had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the Chair; and Mr. Beran.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 21st ult. had been present:—

Lieut.-Gen. Cavenagh, in the Chair; Mr. Miner.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 21st ult. had been present:—

Mr. A. H. Hill, in the Chair; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Major Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Rev. H. F. Mallet, and Messrs. J. R. Hollond and Wilkinson.

INSTITUTIONS FOR IDIOTS.

The Second Report of the Charity Organisation Committee of the Statistical and Social Inquiry Society of Ireland, on Imbeciles, Idiots, and Harmless Lunatics, was submitted.

SOUP KITCHENS.

Sir Charles Trevelyan moved the adoption of the Report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on Soup Kitchens.* He said that Soup Kitchens were a class of charity of great value in those very exceptional circumstances in which large present relief must be given without much regard to present abuses. During the Irish famine in 1846 the system of relief-works had been adopted; this drew together from their homes upwards of 750,000 able-bodied men, representing about three millions of persons, and, necessitating exposure to the weather and other evils, added to their misery. In the middle of the winter soup-kitchens were established throughout the country; and these saved the lives of the people. Since 1846 the scheme of soup-kitchens had been more than once tried—in Manchester, during the cotton famine, with much more doubtful results, and recently for the sick, wounded, and starving at Belgrade.

Soup-kitchens were established in London in consequence of their acknowledged usefulness during the Irish famine. In Ireland, as soon as the calamity was past, they were abolished. In London, having, as may be seen from the reports of the Leicester Square or Ham Yard Soup Kitchen and the Model Soup Kitchen, acquired some capital, purchased houses, &c., they continued.

The Report of the Council on Soup Kitchens and Dinner Tables,† published in 1871, thoroughly exposed the evils of the soup-kitchen system; but these charities were still supported by persons whose sympathies were excited by the lamentable and sensational appeals they received. Other modes of charitable relief were capable of abuse, but it was hardly possible that this mode of relief should not be abused. 'Soup was a perishable article, which must be rapidly brought into use in some way or other; and as it was made daily or two or three times a week, in fixed quantities, what was not wanted for ticket-holders had to be given to others who might happen to be present.' The prospect of such a distribution must, as he knew from personal inspection, draw together idle vagabonds and the most worthless and criminal portion of the lower classes. He had seen the cauldrons of soup: the first 'helping' given to a selected number of not very desirable applicants—often female tramps; the second 'helping' distributed among ticket-holders, still less desirable applicants; and then the remainder divided among those who had gathered together on the chance of getting a meal.

'The Committee of the Leicester Square Soup Kitchen had lately offered to place five hundred soup tickets at the disposal of our District Committees for the relief of cases of urgent distress; but the gift was declined by the Council on the ground that there was nothing to prevent any of the Committees of the Society, in cases in which soup might be considered the best form of relief, from sending applicants to the Leicester Square Soup Kitchen with the means of purchasing at such rates as the Committee of the Soup Kitchen might determine; and that in cases of urgency it might be undesirable to send applicants as far as Leicester Square, our Charity Agents having full power to furnish the necessary sustenance on the spot.' A meeting of residents in the district had lately been held to protest against this soup kitchen. The daily congregation of worthless persons from other parts of London creates endless inconvenience and annoyance, and is a great discouragement to the neighbouring poor who are struggling to obtain for themselves a respectable position.

But, while disapproving this system of improvident and indiscriminate charity, the Sub-Committee believed that self-supporting public kitchens would be most useful. Workmen's public-houses, people's cafés, temperance public-houses, cocoa-houses, coffee palaces, were being tried, and the information gained by these experiments proved that such institutions were producing a better moral effect, and could be worked at a fair profit. To establishments of this class the money wasted, and worse than wasted (for they do positive mischief), upon soup kitchens, ought to be given.

Mr. F. D. Mocatta seconded the motion.

Lord Dunsany, in supporting the motion, said that he could not approve the soup-kitchen system; but the necessity for an improved dietary among the poorer classes, and the great usefulness of soup as an article of food for the people, could not be doubted. What good and cheap nourishment the French had in their pot-au-feu! Soup had two excellences. It was hot, and it usually contained onions—a most wholesome vegetable, and an antiscorbutic. It was proved that soup kitchens, and other similar institutions, might be made self-supporting. He would suggest that they be also made centres for the teaching of cookery, and thus supply an educational want.

Mr. F. D. Mocatta considered the supply of cheap food, advocated by the report, a question of great importance. He had visited the well-known institution at Glasgow, and had seen the food supplied—homely nutriment of all sorts, various kinds of meat, sandwiches, broth, and soup—at wonderfully low prices. The rooms were crowded by the working classes at certain times in the day. He had lately seen a similar establishment at Hamburg. Both were appreciated by the people, and produced a fair profit.

Mr. A. H. Hill expressed the indebtedness of the Council to Sir Charles Trevelyan for having drafted the report. He had visited a soup-kitchen in Commercial Road, with Mr. Corbett's agent, and was struck by his remark to the servant, 'Eh, but, lassie, what about the bones?' He feared that a want of economy in the management made it more difficult to make such institutions self-supporting in England than in Scotland.

Mr. Russell Barrington thought that the Council should be as careful to advocate the supply of good cheap food as to abolish these most injurious charities. He had seen a small experiment in Chelsea—a kitchen at which a meal was provided for a penny. Till ousted by a larger and more attractive 'association,' the kitchen was self-supporting and most useful.

Rev. R. J. Simpson said he was the parochial proprietor of a soup-kitchen. When he first took charge of his parish he distributed the soup gratis. Sometimes the recipients threw it away; often they sold a large portion of it. He therefore charged a penny for a quart of soup, with a piece of bread. He had since made special inquiries, with a view to ascertaining whether the charity was still abused; but had discovered no case of imposture. He believed that free kitchens on a large scale were most objectionable, but that kitchens at which soup might be obtained on payment were most useful in winter time.

After a few words from Mr. Bousfield, Mr. J. Sapsford said that, though unwilling to discredit the usefulness of the introduction of commercial principles in the management of soup kitchens, he could not help stating that several such kitchens which had been established in the East End had proved failures.

Mr. A. H. Hill suggested that this was due to want of economy, and pointed out that the Liverpool Cocoa Company had recently issued a report, and declared a dividend of 10 per cent.

Major Prendergast said he was anxious that charitable persons should not overlook the reason why these soup kitchens were peculiarly injurious. Sir Charles Trevelyan had quoted the words of the report—'Soup was a perishable article, and must be rapidly brought into use in some way or other. There was no alternative but to distribute it quickly and indiscriminately.' The Society wished to co-operate with existing charities; this was a kind of charity with which co-operation was impossible.

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in support of this, mentioned two recent cases in which the nourishment of a good dinner was wanted day by day for a short period. But in neither case had it been found possible to utilise the local soup-kitchens.

Miss Octavia Hill said that a soup-kitchen in a street near Drury Lane had recently been converted into a coffee shop—open every day of the week. It was made a means of teaching the elder girls to cook; and the upper room of the house was used as a club-room. Between six and seven hundred workmen and others had their meals there in the course of the week. It was only just opened, and was in an out-of-the-way place. She had noticed in a local paper that the tradesmen and residents objected to a soup-kitchen in Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road; they complained that it caused an influx of idle people, who blocked up the road, and whose presence prevented people coming to their shops.

Mr. C. L. Corkran said the discussion pointed to a real want on the part of the Society—it made too little provision for giving the public information on these matters. Papers, informing the public of the principles of the Society, giving details and explanations on this and other subjects important for the well-being of the poor, would, if distributed by the members of District Committees and Charity Agents, be a useful educational medium. The poor often could not cook the simplest things—they wanted education. And to this end a Publication Fund and a Publication Committee of the Society would be most useful.

After a few words from Rev. H. F. Mallet and Mr. W. Bevan, the adoption of the Report was carried unanimously, and the Council adjourned.

VOLUNTEER VISITORS OF THE POOR.*

SIR,—Now that there has been a formal discussion upon this subject, I should be glad if you would allow me to explain a little further the suggestion made by me in the Reporter of January 25.

I believe that those who have expressed apparently opposite opinions in respect to 'House-to-house Visitation' agree more nearly than might be at first supposed, only that, as so often happens, the parties engaged in the controversy are not disputing about the same thing; those who take the affirmative side having in view ideal visitation conducted by perfectly competent persons, the opposition thinking only, and very naturally, of visitation as it can be, with the materials now at our disposal.

* See 'Reporter,' Nos. 205; 202, p. 15; 200, p. 5; 198, p. 175, &c.

If this view be correct, it is not improbable that an intermediate scheme—preparing the way for house-to-house visitation in the future, whilst recognising the impossibility of organising it immediately—might win a certain amount of support from all parties.

Let me, then, begin by making the admissions which will place me en rapport with the disputants on both sides.

1. House-to-house Visitation is an admirable thing, linking together class with class, and blessing all concerned in it.

2. House-to-house Visitation is an objectionable thing; a cause of mere weariness to the visitor, humiliating and demoralising to the visitee.

When I assert the first proposition I have in view visitation by competent persons. But I go on to assert the second because I know that house-to-house visitation, if suddenly organised, would mean visitation by inexperienced and incompetent persons, and such visitation I take to be wholly bad. Why is it bad? Why is it a weariness to the visitor; a humiliation to the visitee? House-to-house visitation means the calling in a friendly way, at a poor man's house, without any immediate object in view beyond the establishing of pleasant relations with him and his family. I must not trespass upon your space by dwelling upon the bright side of such a practice. It would be enough to say that I believe it has a very bright side, that it is good for those who live softly to see something of the lives of those who have to endure hardness, and, on the other hand, that it may be good for those who live rough and hurrying lives to come in contact with those to whom circumstances have permitted more culture and refinement. The point I have to press is, that to do this sort of visiting will require, in most cases, a good deal of experience. It would be foolish to expect to find in the general run of inexperienced persons the combination of qualities necessary to make such visiting a success. As a rule, it is a failure, and the failure is covered by the dole. The visitor, unable to play his part as a casual caller, falls back on almsgiving to cover his retreat. The result is the complete obliteration of the higher aspects of his visit, and the rapid demoralisation of those he goes to see.

The question, then, before us is how to train our volunteers. Experience can only be acquired by visiting. Under what conditions can the inexperienced make a safe beginning?

1. The first condition is that when they visit it should be for a specific object. Then the call will be a natural one, involving no awkwardness on either side.

2. The second condition is that the responsibility of giving or withholding relief, in the event of there being distress, should not be borne by the visitor himself. I need not enlarge upon this point, as it is well understood by all who are likely to read the Reporter.

These conditions would be realised if the District Committees of the Charity Organisation Society would associate with themselves ladies as visitors. These ladies might in some instances be found working already in the District, in connection with the clergy and other agencies. Whenever a case had been taken down at the office a 'visitor' would be told off to attend to it. Resident visitors might, if they preferred it, take charge of a particular spot, but to assign cases to visitors in rotation would secure a better distribution of work. A combination, however, of both methods would very likely be found desirable. There would be no vague, formal, objectless visiting. The visitor would acquaint herself at the office with all that was there known about the applicant; she would visit the latter with the definite purpose of talking about the application; she would, when possible, be the instrument for carrying out the decision of the Committee; she would keep up her acquaintance with the family; she would get gradually and naturally to know other persons in the house, the court, the street; she would cultivate friendly relations with all whom she found working amongst the poor, and thus she would form a connecting link of a pleasant sort between the Committee and other agencies, with which at present the Society has too little to do. At the same time she would be a member, or associate, without vote, of the Committee, and thus by occasional attendances learn its principles without becoming responsible for its action.

In this manner a body of trained visitors would gradually be formed, able in turn to train others, and thus preparing the way for the ultimate institution of that house-to-house visitation which, I believe, under present circumstances, to be inexpedient, and which is, on a large scale, most certainly impossible.—I am, &c.

THE PAUPERISM OF OUT-RELIEF.

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to a letter in the Tower Hamlets Independent of the 17th ult. by the Rev. J. O. Harris, on the subject of the refusal of out-relief to a sick man, who appears to have been entirely without means, and who was consequently ordered by the Guardians to go into the Infirmary. Into the proper mode of treating this particular case, of which I know nothing beyond what appears in Mr. Harris's letter, I do not propose to enter. My object is merely to notice a fundamental confusion of ideas, which appears to me to underlie the whole argument of the writer, and which may be seen constantly cropping up—as in a letter to the Echo of the 5th ult.—in these discussions on outdoor relief. It is said that you ought to give outdoor relief, because you pauperise a man by offering him the workhouse or the infirmary, and it is implied that one form of relief pauperises, while the other does not. But surely this position involves a confusion of ideas as to what 'pauperising' or 'being pauperised' really means. What constitutes pauperism is a failure to provide for the ordinary contingencies of life—such a failure as involves the necessity of coming upon State-aid for support and maintenance; and we speak of persons being pauperised when their dependence upon such compulsorily levied alms of neighbours has become permanent. The state of the case is in no way altered by the form in which the aid is given; both outdoor and indoor relief come from one and the same source; they are only available for those who have failed to provide for themselves; and the man who is dependent upon the one is as much a pauper as he who is dependent upon the other.

But perhaps it will be said that this is merely a technical point; that, though true in fact, it is not felt to be true; and that the extent to which one form of relief pauperises depends upon the extent to which it is felt to be degrading. But this again will not bear examination. It is a strange thing to make the laxity of opinion with regard to receiving outdoor relief an excuse for giving it, and perpetuating a system which has done so much in the past to lower the status of the English labourer. The thing that really pauperises is what tends to make the poor think that others will provide for them, and that they need not provide for themselves. The less agreeable, therefore, the form of relief is, the less temptation there is to rely upon it, the stronger the motives to forethought and self-help. So far, therefore, from pauperising, the refusal to grant outdoor relief has a direct tendency to do the reverse. Such seems at least, according to Mr. Harris's own showing, to have been the case in Stepney. It appears that the great decrease in the number of those in receipt of outdoor relief in the last few years has been accompanied by a decrease also in the number of those in the Workhouse and District Schools; but so far from joining Mr. Harris in his regret that this should be the case, I think the inhabitants of that district should be congratulated on the fact that their Guardians have so well succeeded in arresting pauperism on the slope that leads to the workhouse, and that a smaller number of persons are compelled to come upon their neighbours for support.

Yours, &c.

DORSET MENDICITY SOCIETY.

The number of vagrants relieved in the 13 unions of Dorset during the quarter ending December 31 last amounted to 1,708, being an increase of 764 as compared with the corresponding quarter of 1875, but a decrease of 46 per cent. as compared with the year previous to the formation of this Society.

This system of dealing with vagrancy is now in operation in Dorset, Hereford, Kent, and West Sussex.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of February 1877 was 39,202, and 46,540 received outdoor relief, making a total of 85,742. This was a decrease of 483 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 3,187, 12,722, and 21,569 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 712. This was an increase of 42 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 216 on the corresponding day of last year.

DIETARY AND DWELLINGS OF THE POOR.—In this connection the question of a more economic method of living and diet becomes highly important, and I think it might without much difficulty be shown that very large numbers of our town labourers are now subsisting on lower wages, and under far lower dietetic conditions, than any class of agricultural labourers in the worst-paid rural districts. Various recipes and manuals have been put forward showing how some are "to live on sixpence a day", and others to live and "marry on a shilling a day"; but without attempting any Draconian code of diet or discipline, I am convinced that the resources of the labouring poor might be very largely economised. In the matter of lodgings far larger and better provision should be made for single men, who are at present perforce almost driven to the common lodging-houses, or induced, at a very early age, to form improvident marriages. It is to be hoped that some of the great companies which have been projected for carrying out the provisions of the "Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings Act, 1875," will not overlook this direction of extensive and remunerative development. Such well-organised quarters for single men as I here suggest would also facilitate that locomotion and migration of labour which so many of the manufacturing and constructive industries of the country now necessitate, while even in country towns and villages suitable accommodation for single labourers is urgently required. With the growth of popular clubs, arranged to meet the requirements of the working classes throughout the country, this accommodation of single men might be provided under the most probable conditions of success.—Labour News.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 208.

THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 8, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, March 12:—

1. To receive the Annual Report of the Sub-Committee on District Work.
2. To adopt the following recommendations of the Administrative Committee:—
 - (1) That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants to the Stepney Committee, at their discretion, to the amount of £121—the remainder of the estimated deficit of that Committee for the current year.
 - (2) That, at Special Meetings of Council, persons who are not members of Council be allowed to second motions.

The Eighth Annual Meeting of the Society will be held in Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's, on Wednesday, March 14, at 3 P.M. Lord Elcho will take the chair. The Right Hon. Earl Granville, K.G., the Earl of Lichfield, Mr. J. F. Shaw Lefevre, M.P., Mr. Albert Pell, M.P., and others will take part in the proceedings.

District Committees are informed that a man named Cop-pinger is obtaining money from clergymen in London, by falsely representing that he is a son of the Rev. R. Chester, Rector of Middleton, County Cork, Ireland, and that he has returned from Australia penniless, and deeply repentant for past transgressions.

District Committees are also warned against a man named 'Richard Nott,' a draughtsman, of St. Neot's, who gives as reference the Rev. — Steele, a clergyman of St. Neot's, who knows nothing of him.

ST. SAVIOUR'S.—Mr. Russell H. Barrington has been elected an Hon. Secretary of this Committee.

NEWINGTON.—Mr. C. Stuart Barker has resigned the Hon. Secretaryship of this Committee.

STRAND.—Mr. W. W. Wood has been elected Hon. Secretary of the Strand Committee, vice Mr. E. W. Garrett, resigned.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, March 1. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Holland, in the Chair; Lieut.-Gen. Cavenagh, Miss Octavia Hill, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Major Yard, Major Nares, Rev. H. F. Mallet, Rev. S. A. Barnett, Messrs. Barrington, Bevan, Brown, Bond, Hoare, Hill, Miner, and Peters.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending February 24 the receipts had been £173. 2s. 11d. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £903. 8s. 11d. and £79. 10s. 11d. respectively, £7. 6s. 7d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—Grants of £30, £30, and £25 had been made to the Fulham, Shoreditch, and Mile End Committees respectively, the amounts granted to each of these Committees since October 1, 1876, being £60, £30, and £100.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 27th ult. there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the Chair; Miss O. Hill, Miss Howes, Messrs. Barrington and Lewes, Miss Huntington (Visitor).

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 27th ult. had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the Chair; Hon. R. Capel, Major FitzRoy, Captain Gardner, Miss Howes, Messrs. Barrington and Bevan.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 28th ult. had been present:—

Mr. Wilkinson, in the Chair; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Major Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, and Messrs. J. R. Hollond and Hill, Mr. A. G. Crowder (Visitor).

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 1st instant had been present:—

Lieut.-Gen. Cavenagh, in the Chair; Rev. H. I. Cummins, Major Yard, Messrs. Hollond, Miner, Peters, and Corrie.

SOUP KITCHENS.

With reference to the following letter from Mr. G. Hintzen, of Rotterdam:—

In the last number of the Charity Organisation Reporter I read the discussion on Soup Kitchens, an institution well known here, though usually badly managed. For several years an analogous establishment, with a view of providing cheap meals, and also issuing tickets, which were given to the poor, was managed by a philanthropist who lately turned out to be an impostor. For this reason the dinner-house had to wind up, but the usefulness of such an establishment being generally acknowledged, if based on sound economical principles, some gentlemen resolved to have it continued under their supervision. The success depends, of course, upon the management of the concern. Being aware of the existence of many institutions of the same kind in London, but not knowing their relative value, I venture this inquiry as a member of the Committee—

Sir Charles Trevelyan inquired what establishments had been formed in London of the kind recommended in the last paragraph of the recent report upon soup-kitchens, that is, houses 'of a better sort, at which not only soup, but also coffee, cocoa, and well-cooked food of various kinds are supplied at moderate prices, and some of the advantages of club life are also afforded in well-lighted and warmed rooms, provided with newspapers and other means of instruction and amusement.' Information on this point was given by several members of Council, and further details were promised, showing that the movement in favour of establishing places of refreshment of this description in London had already made some progress, and was full of promise for the future.

LOCAL SECRETARIES.

A report was read respecting endeavours recently made to obtain (for the District Committees of the Society) the services of gentlemen as "Local Secretaries." It appeared that several gentlemen suitable for the work had come forward.

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.

It was resolved that the Annual Report, having been carefully revised by the Administrative Committee, should be taken as read, and distributed to Members of Council; and notice was given that it would be considered again by that Committee at their meeting on the 8th instant.

PERSONAL WORK AMONG THE POOR.

The Rev. M. S. A. Walrond then moved—

That the Council reconsider the Report on house-to-house visitation adopted by them in 1870, with special reference to the principle involved in that report, of house-to-house visitation as an indispensable basis of an effective system of charity.

He summed up the leading points of the paper which he had read on the 12th ultimo at the special meeting of Council, viz., that relief, to be rightly given, must be coupled with personal visitation; that in East London there were but few visitors; that the Charity Organisation Society should supplement the staff of visitors at present at work, or, when necessary, organise such a staff; and that, in the first instance, a small district should be chosen for the experiment of a thoroughly adequate and complete system of District Visiting. These propositions were in harmony with the Report adopted by the Council in 1870, the opening words of which were—'the systematic visitation of the poor at their own homes is an indispensable basis of an effective system of charity.' But Members of Council had entirely dissented from the proposals contained in his paper. He wished, therefore, to ask the Council to reconsider their Report. With a view to assisting those who desired to organise charities and to bring them into co-operation, some line of action, some explicit policy on this important subject should be adopted by the Council.

District Visiting Agencies would exist—they were strongly supported. It was for the Society to set before them definite principles, the gradual recognition of which would necessarily result in more thorough co-operation and more effectual charity.

Rev. W. T. Thornhill Webber seconded the motion.

Sir Charles Trevelyan acknowledged that the expression of opinion at the special meeting of Council had thrown great light on the subject, and had led him to modify his views. Previously he had accepted house-to-house visitation as a tradition, handed down from Dr. Chalmers, and, subject to certain modifications, he still considered it the basis of an effectual system of charity. The Sub-Committee that drafted the Report had before it the management of some West End parishes, in which almost all the residents were members of the Church of England, where the number of the rich and the poor were nearly equal, and where a quasi-feudal relation between the rich and poor still existed. In these the system proposed in the Report would work well. But it would not work in districts of a different character—such as those in the east of London—in which almost all the residents were persons of the industrial class. In these the District Committees of the Society might be centres, or 'pivots'; there might be associated with them, as visitors, members of all classes, who would visit all the cases dealt with by the Committee, and might in time obtain a special knowledge of a particular locality and visit the cases in it. But no system like that at Elberfeld was practicable. At the special meeting all were agreed on two points: that the Society was founded on a right principle, and that in the extension of personal work among the poor the District Committee should be the 'pivot.'

The Chairman thought that in the scheme suggested in Mr. Walrond's paper there were two blots. The visitors were to be allowed to relieve; and persons of leisure (but not necessarily persons of experience), resident in the West of London, were to be asked to become visitors in the East. All who had been present at the special meeting acknowledged that the contact of the rich with their poorer neighbours would be beneficial.

Miss Octavia Hill said no one had objected to wise house-to-house visitation. Among those that had dissented from the opinions expressed by Mr. Walrond were persons who had themselves communicated with her, with a view to obtaining, with her assistance, visitors in their districts. They were, however, afraid of an influx of unwelcome visitors. District Visiting Societies existed, and were at work; and this Society had to deal with them in the same spirit as it would with other existing charitable agencies. There was, doubtless, a very great difference in the circumstances of East and West London; yet it would be deplorable if this Society undertook to meet the deficiencies of personal work among the poor in places in which there were already a certain number of visitors. Such a course would inevitably lead to the District Committees relaxing their efforts to bring in visitors. It had been so with relief. District Committees which could give relief, did not exert themselves to get relief. Where District Visitors were too few, the District Committees should reinforce them by obtaining for the local visiting agency new recruits. The system should grow out of the needs of the poor. It was well in the first instance that the visitor should visit special cases of distress; information about other cases would thus gradually reach her, and in time she would know everybody in the court. She had found it best to give a visitor a large district, and then to divide and subdivide, as the circumstances of the people became better and better known. Thus, as a visitor gained more experience, she would have a smaller division. If out of the local Visiting Societies a good hon. secretary could be found, a large amount of definite work would immediately be forthcoming in connection with the Guardians, the School Board, and the Charity Organisation Society. The initiative should not come from the Charity Organisation Society. The Charitable Societies should come forward. The clergy should assemble their visitors, and out of them select an hon. secretary. The whole body of visitors could not serve in connection with the Local Committee of the Society; but one out of their number might easily do so, and under her the visitors would be educated rapidly.

Mr. H. N. Hoare moved the following amendment—

That although the principle of House-to-house Visitation appears to this Council to be practically inexpedient, it is nevertheless desirable that District Committees of this Society should appoint certain members who would undertake the duty of visiting personally any case coming before the Committee, in case such visitation seemed likely to be beneficial.

He advocated visiting in connection with the work of the District Committees on the same principle as that upon which it was usual for a Committee to try and obtain adequate and suitable assistance for cases which the ordinary charities were unable to deal with. Personal visitation, when no district agency was at hand to take up a case, gave the District Committee the means of obtaining prompt information respecting it, such as could not be expected from the official statements of an agent.

Rev. H. I. Cummins seconded the amendment. Mr. Walrond appeared to him to advocate a division into 'visitable' and 'non-visitable,' but gave no reason for such a distinction. Why should the poor and 'visitable' be separated from the rich and independent? Would it not be more logical—perhaps equally beneficial—if the industrial classes in the East of London visited in Belgravia, the social arrangements of which they might be disposed to question, while persons from the West visited the poor in the East? One other flaw in Mr. Walrond's scheme appeared to be, that he left the visitors to do pretty much as they liked; they had only to report fully to the District Committee of the Society. A visitor who relieved must be received as a Charity Relieving Officer, and must be subject to the same attempts to defraud and cheat as those to which the administrators of State charity were liable. They purchased their right to visit by the gifts they were expected to make. The Report of the Council appeared to him to be based on deductive principles, and to suggest an impracticable reproduction of the Elberfeld system in the administration of charity in England. The fact was that, by assisting an applicant, the Committee established a claim which might prove the beginning of a further connection, and which, if supported by experienced visitation, might ultimately be the means of elevating his condition.

Sir Charles Trevelyan gave notice of the following amendment:—

That, although this Council entirely adheres to the principle of visitation of the poor, they are of opinion that the proper mode of applying it to the different districts of the metropolis requires special consideration, and that a Special Committee be appointed to report upon the subject.

Mr. J. R. Holland pointed out that Mr. Hoare's amendment required the Council to reconsider the Report of 1870, and come to a very important conclusion respecting it in the course of a single debate. He believed it to be most desirable that the Council should reconsider the Report. It had a manifestly doctrinaire tone; and a fresh scheme, based on its reconsideration, would accord better with the real circumstances of charitable work in London. The co-operation with visiting societies, which Miss Octavia Hill urged, was going on. No time would be wasted by a careful revision of the report; and the Council should be slow in coming to a decision on so important a matter.

Mr. F. D. Mocatta thought the Council might do well to omit a discussion on a document now seven years old, especially as the Education Act and the Society itself had produced changes that had largely altered the circumstances of charitable work amongst the poor. It was undoubtedly the work of the Society to organise charity—to strengthen beneficent agencies that were weak, and to add to the strength of the strong. This was what Miss Hill asked them to do. But the existence of numerous religious denominations, each of them with their visitors and workers, greatly enhanced the difficulty.

After a few words from Mr. W. Seton-Karr, Rev. W. T. Thornhill Webber, and Major Prendergast, Miss Hill said the Society had two courses before it. It might either with much earnestness and with great difficulty obtain the co-operation of already existing charities; or it might establish a new and different system of district visiting. What Mr. H. N. Hoare had said showed how some of the Committees, reinforced from a distance, would be compelled to do work which, if the representatives of local charities joined them, they would leave in the hands of residents.

The following modification of the motion having been proposed by Mr. Walrond, and accepted, viz.:—

That a Committee be appointed to reconsider the Report on House-to-house Visitation, adopted by the Council in July 1870, the amendments were withdrawn.

Rev. M. S. A. Walrond, Miss Octavia Hill, Mr. A. H. Hill, Mr. A. D. Graham, Rev. H. I. Cummins, and Mr. H. N. Hoare were appointed members of the Committee.

The Council then adjourned.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Council does not consider itself responsible for any of the opinions expressed by its Correspondents.]

A COFFEE PALACE.

SIR,—With reference to the recommendation at the close of the recent Soup-kitchen Report, that the pecuniary support hitherto given to Soup-kitchens should for the future be employed in establishing houses for providing cooked food on an improved self-supporting footing, including some of the advantages of club life, such as are afforded by well-lighted and warmed rooms, provided with newspapers and other means of instruction and amusement, I beg to call attention to the following description, which has been kindly furnished by Sir Douglas Forsyth, of the refreshment and lodging-house which has been built according to a carefully considered plan opposite to the Knightsbridge Barracks, and opened under the name of a 'Coffee Palace.' Persons wishing to undertake the same good work in other parts of town may profit by the experience thus acquired, and some may be induced to pay a visit to Knightsbridge and judge for themselves. There ought to be a 'place of entertainment' of this description in every neighbourhood frequented by working people, and arrangements should be made for keeping it open on Sunday, without unduly interfering with anybody's Sunday rest. Of all the days in the week Sunday is the one on which opportunities of innocent refreshment are most required, because our people are most on the move on that day, and they ought not to be driven to the gin palace in the absence of the coffee palace. The margin of profit seems ample for this or any other useful purpose.—I am, &c.,

March 3, 1877.

C. E. TREVELYAN.

To-day I visited the Coffee Palace in Knightsbridge, opposite the Barracks, with Lady Hay, who was so kind as to show me the working of the establishment in all its details.

This Coffee Palace was started about two months ago by a few ladies and gentlemen who subscribed £2,000, and purchased the premises lately occupied by a disreputable public-house, which has now been thoroughly renovated, and converted into its present form of eating-house and club, with lodgings for single men.

It is conducted on purely commercial principles. The eating-house department is managed by a respectable man and his wife, who receive a salary of 17s. a week, with board and lodging. Eight servants are kept to wait on the lodgers and people who frequent the eating-house.

The refreshments supplied are all of the very best kind, and well cooked, and at the lowest prices consistent with a fair profit. A scale of prices is attached to this. Comfortable little tables and separate accommodation in the outer saloon are provided. There are inner rooms where greater privacy can be had; or, if it be desired, the refreshments can be bought and taken away. Dinners of hot beef and potatoes, costing sixpence, are constantly taken out. An excellent cup of coffee can be got for one penny.

Upstairs there is a large reading-room, where the chief daily newspapers are to be found. This reading-room is free, and coffee or tea may be served here.

This establishment is opened at 5 A.M. and closed at 11.30 P.M. It is not opened on Sundays, partly for religious reasons, and also because the managers require rest, and no arrangement for supplying their place on Sundays has as yet been made.

The lodgings for single men are exceedingly comfortable. By a very ingenious distribution of space three comfortable bed-compartments have been made out of an ordinary-sized room; a good spring bed, washstand, dressing-table, and looking-glass is in each compartment, and there is a good bath in a room on the stairs. The cost of the rooms is from 4s. to 4s. 6d.

a week. Separate rooms are charged 5s. a week. A matron and one maid occupy—or are to occupy—a room at the top of the house, to look after the comfort of the lodgers. These lodgers can have their meals cooked on Sundays.

The financial results, so far, are most encouraging. Out of the £2,000 subscribed, only £1,700 have been expended, and in less than two months a profit—clear profit at the rate of £160 per annum has been made—or more than 9 per cent.

There is a religious element in this undertaking, which must not be lost sight of. Texts of Scripture are placarded on all the walls, and a special missionary is employed to give lectures or services on Sundays in the reading-rooms, and to be ready at all times to give religious aid.

CASE OF LOUISA BARROW.—MISS STRIDE'S HOMES.*

The Edmonton Board of Guardians were engaged for a long time inquiring into the case of Louisa Barrow. The matter has been repeatedly before the Board, and has been fully reported in our columns. The circumstances are simply these: Some time ago, a young woman named Barrow was received into Miss Stride's Home at Tottenham, and brought her infant child with her. Both were maintained in the Home for a considerable period, but the mother eventually deserted her offspring; and after keeping it a time, Miss Stride applied to the Guardians—through one of her matrons, who waited on the Board on the 29th December last—to receive the child into the Union. This the Board agreed to do, but at their next meeting, a report from Mr. Tye, the Schoolmaster and Superintendent of the House at Enfield, stated that 'the child Louisa Barrow, aged five years, recently removed from Miss Stride's Home, Tottenham, to the Workhouse, was afflicted with lice, suffering from ringworm, and also had the whooping-cough.' General astonishment was expressed at this, and the authorities at the Home were communicated with. Replies were received, which substantially denied that the child had been neglected by Miss Stride and her officials, or that she (Barrow) was in the state described while an inmate of the Home. Since then the subject has on several occasions received the attention of the Guardians. It would seem that through publicity the matter has become widely circulated; and Miss Stride, considering that the welfare of her institution was endangered in consequence, if a refutation were not forthcoming, has not allowed the question to remain in abeyance.

To-day, Mr. H. N. Capel (chairman of the Council of the Home) and Miss Stride attended. Mr. Tye was also present. Mr. Capel having reminded the Guardians of the object of the interview, said that the matron was present to assist in the investigation, and that she would be able to state what condition the child was in when it left the Home.

On the suggestion of the Chairman, the clerk read the correspondence which had ensued between the Board and Miss Stride and her officials. After this had been done, Mr. Capel said they admitted the whooping-cough, but denied that the child had received the ringworm or the vermin in the Home. He considered it very improbable that she should, because she was in the habit of playing with the matron's child, who was quite free from anything of that sort.—Rev. Hugh McSorley: Are you able to nullify the medical evidence?—Mr. Capel replied that he was in a position to adduce medical evidence himself. As he had said, the whooping-cough was admitted, but with respect to the ringworm he thought that complaint could have been received by the child even while being conveyed to the Union, or elsewhere.—Mr. Bennett: Oh! that won't do for me.

A member inquired the explanation of the condition of the child's head.—Mr. Capel replied that that also might have occurred while Barrow was being removed—it might have been brought about by the journey in the train ('Oh! oh!' and laughter).—Mr. Ingersoll: Save me from the train, then.—Mr. Tye, in reply to a question, said he had had several cases of ringworm brought under his notice, and his experience led him to believe that it could not be received as stated.—Miss Stride said the matron was ready to state on oath that Barrow left the Home in a proper and cleanly state.—The Chairman remarked that they could not administer the oath there.

Miss Stride said the matter was of great importance to her, and she would like to prove how the Home was conducted.—Mr. Tye said the child was admitted under his own eyes to the House at Enfield, and the next morning, when the medical officer was paying his usual daily visit, he noticed the condition Barrow was in. A nurse discovered the whooping-cough the same day.

Miss Stride said the subject had become circulated; it had been reported in the newspapers, and she was anxious to show how the matter really stood.—Rev. H. McSorley said they could not prevent the Press from giving publicity to the proceedings; the reporters were there independent of them (the Guardians), and he was very pleased to think it was so.

Mr. Capel said he read in the Enfield Observer accounts of the case, and he noticed it stated that the Board expressed its astonishment that 'such should have been the case.' Was that so?—Several Guardians: Yes, and quite right too.—Mr. Capel: There is also this: 'The Chairman, after hearing the report read, said it was a matter which should be particularly noticed, as it gave the public an idea how children were kept in these "Homes."—The Chairman: I was not in the chair on that occasion.—A member observed that it was Mr. Richmond.—Mr. Capel: I wish to know if you agree with that expression; whether the Board endorse it?—The Chairman said he did not think the Guardians should be asked that; it was not necessarily their utterance.

Miss Stride said it had gone forth that the children under her charge were neglected. She had brought with her that day two children, inmates of one of her Homes, and she would like the Board to look at them, and judge of the treatment received.—The Chairman: I do not think that has anything to do with what is before me.—Rev. H. McSorley was of a similar opinion.—Mr. Capel said he also wished the Board to see the children.—The Chairman repeated that it had nothing to do with the present matter.—Mr. Ingersoll thought there could be no harm in having them brought into the Board-room.—Miss Stride: If you say such is the manner in which we treat children, it is but right you should see those we have brought.—The Chairman failed to see how that could alter the case of Barrow.—Miss Stride said it would go to show that she had received proper care.—Several Guardians took the same view as the Chairman.

In the course of some other observations Miss Stride said, that 'beautiful Society for the Organisation of Charity' had interested itself in the case. With regard to the report on the condition of the child, she held it to be false.—The Chairman said it was by no means the wish of the Board to injure any charitable institution, but they could not prevent it from being reported.—Mr. Capel said he complained that the accounts of the child forwarded to the Board by their officers were garbled ones, the dates were not precisely given, and it was a notable circumstance that the child had slept one night in the Union after she had been removed from the Home.—Miss Stride having again suggested that the Matron should be called in and questioned, Rev. H. McSorley objected, on the ground that Dr. Collyer (the medical officer) was not present.

The Chairman inquired if Mr. Capel or Miss Stride had any objection to have the matter adjourned for a week, so as to have Dr. Collyer in attendance. This course was acquiesced in, Mr. Capel adding that his desire was to act courteously with the Guardians throughout the case, it being only sought to have the matter fully gone into. The Chairman assured Mr. Capel that a similar feeling pervaded the Board.

It was then decided that the investigation would be resumed next Wednesday, at two o'clock. The Board shortly afterwards adjourned.—The Enfield Observer, February 3, 1877.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of February 1877 was 39,179, and 46,692 received outdoor relief, making a total of 85,871. This was an increase of 129 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 3,185, 12,480, and 22,674 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 739. This was an increase of 27 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 243 on the corresponding day of last year.

THE SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.

The Annual Report of the Sub-Committee on District Work was read.*

GRANT TO THE STEPNEY COMMITTEE.

On the motion of Major FitzRoy, seconded by Major Yard, the following recommendation of the Administrative Committee was adopted, viz.:—

That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants to the Stepney Committee, at their discretion, to the amount of £121—the remainder of the estimated deficit of that Committee for the current year.

SPECIAL MEETINGS OF COUNCIL.

Sir Charles Trevelyan moved, and Mr. R. Barrington seconded, the adoption of the following recommendation of the Administrative Committee, which was unanimously agreed to, viz.:—

That at Special Meetings of Council persons who are not members of Council be allowed to second motions.

On the motion of Mr. R. Barrington, the Council adjourned to Monday, the 26th instant.

* The Report is printed at length on p. 42.

THE LATE MR. JOHN GLENNY.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. John Glenny, of Highbury, who has long been conspicuous as an earnest supporter of the Charity Organisation Society. He was chiefly instrumental in forming the first Islington Committee, and acted for several years as one of its Hon. Secretaries. Till the beginning of his last and fatal illness he continued to be a zealous and most liberal member.

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.

In presenting this first Annual Report, your Sub-Committee wish to draw attention to the system of work they have selected as the one best calculated to accomplish the object for which they were appointed; and, further, to point out the way in which other members of the Society can best forward the same object—one that demands the co-operation of every member.

The efficiency of the Society depends on each District Committee recognising that it is part of a larger whole, and that the strength of each is the strength of all. This fact is not yet sufficiently realised either by the Council or the Committees. While seeking to leave local effort free to develop itself in all ways to the utmost possible extent, it must be borne in mind that a weak or wayward Committee is a grievous blot on the whole Society, certain to attract the attention of the public, and to impede the work of the better organised District Committees. The desire of your Sub-Committee has been, therefore, so to act as to encourage in members of the Society the feeling that they are parts of a corporate body, that they have a common cause to advance, and that one spirit should animate them. The isolation of the District Committees was due to very natural causes. London is a gigantic whole; the parts of it are various in character; residents in outlying districts have few opportunities of meeting and learning to understand one another. Your Sub-Committee felt that their first duty was to learn something of the characteristics and requirements of the several District Committees, and to become acquainted with the men composing them. They therefore sent representatives to visit District Committees, when questions arose on which a conference seemed advisable, or invited members of District Committees to attend their meetings whenever subjects of local interest were to be discussed. They are satisfied that thus a more united spirit is growing up in the Society, and that they have themselves gained a far better understanding of the special strength and special need of each Committee. It is encouraging to come face to face with the earnest men who are grappling with the difficulties of Charity Organisation in out-of-the-way districts; helpful to study what each Committee has found out for itself; valuable to carry hints gained at one Committee to others in remote places; and essential to learn where the weak points of each Committee lie.

In order to be able to spare visitors for this important branch of work, and yet to secure a quorum at the weekly meeting, your Sub-Committee have, in accordance with the permission lately granted by you, added to their number several experienced members of District Committees.

In contemplating London as a whole, it has been increasingly clear that it is necessary to find some method of presenting forcibly to residents in one part their obligation to fellow-citizens in another. There is a tendency in District Committees to claim the right to decide some important points without due regard to the effect of those decisions on the whole Society—such points, for instance, as retaining inefficient agents, closing during summer holidays, failing to secure thorough investigation. There is also a strange insensibility as to the great claims poor districts have on those which are stronger in men and money. As an evidence of this, it may be shown that there are places where there are two or even three hon. secretaries, each able to supervise agents and to give some time to help besides; where, moreover, there are frequent Committee meetings, attended by many members; or where there are hundreds of rich residents and few poor; yet neither secretaries, members of Committee, nor residents respond to any appeal to go into districts where there is no hon. secretary with time to supervise agents at all, where the Committee meets only once weekly, and is but poorly manned by busy clergy and others who are overworked. Your Sub-Committee cannot help thinking that however important it may be to develop local interest and effort, for the present considerable assistance must be sent from the rich localities to the poor ones. Until the principles of the Society are more heartily and fully recognised, many parts of London must depend for some of their leaders and workers on the places where there are more men of leisure. Whenever the care of the poor becomes one which every citizen feels it a duty to deal with wisely, there will, no doubt, be forthcoming men and women enough, and abundant small subscriptions, even in the poorest neighbourhoods, to support a well-managed office. But it is a question whether, even then, we should desire that the heaviest claims on charity should thus fall most heavily on the poorest and most overworked men, as our Poor Rate has done.

At any rate, for the present, help is needed. Your Sub-Committee are convinced it would be offered, if the necessity for it were as deeply felt by members of Council as it is by them. And the problem before them is how to get these wants distinctly presented to those who may help to meet them.

Your Sub-Committee have, of course, great facilities for judging of the defects of District Committees, from its power of comparing one with another. They, therefore, think it well to summarise the facts which are thus before them, in the hope that the statement of them may suggest means of meeting the wants as soon as possible.

I. The agents employed in many offices are far below the standard which it is desirable should be maintained. Especially is this the case where little supervision of them is to be had. It is important not only to secure a trustworthy man, but one with judgment as to the duties of his office. A fair education, business-like habits, some interest in the work, kindly manner, and prompt attention to all business are most important. To meet this want advertisements have been issued for local secretaries—gentlemen so far interested as to undertake, at a very moderate salary, either the actual work of agents or the direction of the agents. Several such have applied, and a few appear likely to fulfil the requirements of your Sub-Committee. Your Sub-Committee have recently also sent to Council a recommendation, which met with approval, that meetings of agents should from time to time be held, at which papers should be read. It is hoped thus to promote a more intelligent interest in the work of the Society; to bring the agents and hon. secretaries into closer communication, and thus produce a stronger esprit de corps.

II. The great need of more volunteer workers has been referred to above. Hon. secretaries are needed at several Committees, and additional help in many places is urgently required; at the same time it is noticeable that there never has been a time at which more, and more valuable, volunteers have come forward, and during the past year the number of those who have gone to districts wanting help has been considerable. Your Sub-Committee ought to add that the accession of volunteers, and the hope they have from the local secretaries, postpones, at any rate for the present, the necessity of further paid work at the centre.

III. In many Committees very little effort has been made to obtain additional funds. This appears to arise sometimes from the Committee being engrossed in dealing with the work that comes to the office, and finding it easier to ask Council for funds than to make a vigorous canvass in its own area; sometimes from its being discouraged by the poverty of its neighbourhood, from the labour involved in collecting even a small sum, and forgetting that the process of collection is also one of advertisement and explanation; and thirdly, the neglect of collection arises sometimes from the fact, that enough comes in from rich neighbours for the needs of the District Committee itself, and that it is absolutely blind to the wants of more than half the rest of London, for which it should be helping to collect funds. Your Sub-Committee have endeavoured to impress on District Committees the advisability of telling off some of their members to supervise the finance and collection, or to appoint a financial secretary. The arrangements made for lending collectors from the centre will also materially alter these deficiencies.

IV. One of the most serious flaws in the work of the District Committee which has come before your Sub-Committee has been that of defective investigation. Part of it appears to arise from want of discretion as to the points to be ascertained, part to insufficient records being kept of cases dealt with. Cases of delay, which might have been avoided, have also come before them.

V. But the most fatal of all the wants revealed to the Sub-Committee, as they reviewed your District Committees, has been the want of detailed, individual, careful dealing with the cases which came before them. Sometimes the deepest need of the applicant is not discovered; sometimes it is discovered, but a mere dole is given; sometimes the right thing is done at the crisis, but the absence of a continued watchfulness makes the help useless. These mistakes arise largely from the want of cordial, continual co-operation between the District Committees and the vast number of persons visiting among and relieving the poor. Such charitable persons, each taking charge of the family which belonged to his or her district, or came under his or her care, would supply for the poor what no agent, no hon. secretary, no Committee even, in its corporate capacity however excellent, can provide—that individual watchfulness which is essential to discover, and to apply the remedy for individual want. District Committees require the co-operation of various people—of ladies, of clergymen and ministers, of guardians, of tradesmen, and artisans. They require also on every Committee persons who will undertake to find or to give separate attention at their houses to applicants who need this help. Such help is essential if the Society is not to become a mere machine for discovering impostors. If it is to organise charity, it must win the charitable, and use them. It would be better to find than to supply visitors such as are needed, for the same reason that it is better to find than to supply relief, because we want to gather in existing agencies, not to establish new ones. A vigorous effort should be made to secure the co-operation of the charitable. A member of the Sub-Committee has lately succeeded in interesting the Archbishop of Canterbury in the subject, and he has kindly promised to preside at a meeting of Metropolitan Clergy at Lambeth Palace, a step which it is hoped will bring the necessity of their co-operation, and that of their visitors, fully before them. During the past few months, partly through the assistance of the same member of your Sub-Committee, three meetings have been held of workers among the poor to bring this subject before them, and other meetings are planned. District Committees should be urged to welcome most hospitably all who may come forward to help them. The work before them is a very large one, and there is need not only of many workers, but of every kind of worker; and the Charity Organisation Committee should be the largest, most hospitable-hearted body, willing to welcome all workers, or would-be workers, among the poor.

VI. Many of the District Committees appear to find it most difficult to deal with School Board cases in accordance with the principles of the Society. It is noteworthy that in the agreement with Mr. Francis Peek no mention is made of boots and shoes to enable children to go to school; and yet a glance at the returns shows that, notwithstanding the circular letter sent to District Committees in April last, this is by far the most usual form of relief. Your Sub-Committee are still of opinion that the School Board authorities have misunderstood the object of the gift, and that they send cases for boots and shoes, the chief need with which, as a rule, they concern themselves; when, however deserving the case may be, relief of this nature is frequently both inadequate and inappropriate if any permanent good is to be done to the recipients. It is hoped that a paper containing "the arrangement," "illustrative cases," &c., which is to be distributed among the divisional and sub-divisional Committees of the School Board and the District Committees of the Society, will produce a real reform in the administration of this fund.

During the past year the Assistant-Secretary has carefully examined and reported on the Annual Reports of the District Committees. A series of recommendations were in consequence sent to the Committees, and your Sub-Committee believe that there has been a considerable improvement in the arrangement and compilation of the reports. Much useful matter of local interest has, in some cases, been added.

The following, amongst many other general subjects, have been considered:—1. An exhaustive set of questions, specially intended to assist those who are good enough to visit and confer with District Committees, has been prepared; this was printed at the expense of the Chairman of Council. 2. Much general and detailed information has been obtained from the District Committees as to their relations with the almoners of the Society for the Relief of Distress and the Guardians. 3. Arrangements have been made for the investigation of applications for out-relief at the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's Inn Road, and of applications for the benefits of the Samaritan Fund established in connection with the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat, Golden Square.

Your Committee have had the greatest possible interest in the work which you have entrusted to them, and are glad to have had the opportunity of learning to know so many good workers from all parts of London. The sight of so much earnest and devoted work is a real satisfaction; and if, when the work of District Committees has come under their notice, they have, in many instances, rather pointed out flaws than paused to comment on successes achieved, it has been in the certainty that members of District Committees, having to look forward to a great and difficult work, a stupendous work, the issues of which are of the deepest importance to the citizens of London of all classes, and which cannot adequately be dealt with by any body of men yet gathered together without much reinforcement, are sure to desire to set their faces steadily and with awed sense of responsibility on what they have not yet managed to do, and to note where their greatest dangers lie, rather than to listen to pleasant words of thanks or even of appreciative sympathy.

BRITISH WORKMAN PUBLIC-HOUSES.

SIR,—Surprise having been expressed that the Knightsbridge Coffee Palace is making a clear profit at the rate of more than nine per cent., I beg to call attention to the Report of the Directors of the 'Liverpool British Workman Public House Company, Limited,' dated only last month. They have opened ten houses during the year, making, in all, eighteen houses now in operation, and, in addition to the Huskisson Dock Branch, three other houses are now being got ready. The Directors are gratified by the support given to their houses by working men and their families; and they look upon it as a proof that such refreshment houses are greatly needed, and are found to be a suitable substitute for the ordinary public-house. They recommend a dividend on the paid-up capital of the company of ten per cent., free of income tax, and that the balance at the credit of the profit and loss account be carried forward to next year. They also recommend that additional capital be raised by the issue of 5,000 shares of one pound each, to be offered pro rata to the present shareholders.

I am, &c.

C. E. TREVELYAN.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of February 1877 was 39,174, and 46,429 received outdoor relief, making a total of 85,603. This was a decrease of 268 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 2,820, 12,723, and 23,235 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 719. This was a decrease of 20 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 179 on the corresponding day of last year.

CASE OF LOUISA BARROW.—MISS STRIDE'S HOMES.*

The Board, at two o'clock, resumed their investigation into the case of Louisa Barrow, already fully reported in the Observer.

There were present in the room, besides the Guardians: Dr. Collyer (medical officer for Enfield), Mr. Tye (schoolmaster and superintendent of the House at Enfield), Nurse King, Miss Stride, Mr. Capel, and Mrs. Jansen, matron of the Home at Tottenham.

The Chairman remarked that he was not present on the last occasion, and suggested that the Clerk should read the correspondence which had ensued on the matter. This having been done, the Chairman said he supposed Miss Stride and Mr. Capel had attended to deny the statement of the child's condition when received. Mr. Capel said they had come there to produce evidence of the state the child was in when she left the Home. He thought it would facilitate matters if the medical gentleman would explain the condition he found the child in.

Dr. Collyer said he examined the child the day after she was admitted. He found that she was suffering from porrigo; her head was infested with vermin, and the hair was covered with knots; from the appearance of the child's head he had not the slightest doubt that they had been there for some time. In reply to Mr. Capel the doctor said porrigo was a scalp disease, and it was apparent on the child's head to such an extent that almost a blind man could see it. This would not arise from a weak constitution.

Mr. Tye and Nurse King fully bore out the medical officer's statement. In answer to Mr. Capel, Nurse King said, from the appearance of the child, she believed the ringworm had existed for some time previous to the child's admission. She (the nurse) happened to be at the door when Barrow was received in the House at Enfield, and she noticed the ringworm directly.

Miss Stride then proceeded to detail the circumstances which led to her receiving the child into the Home, and having done so she emphatically stated that it was impossible for Barrow to be afflicted as described. She called upon the Matron, who stated that she combed the child's head the day before she left the Home, and there was nothing the matter with it. Had there been ringworm she must have noticed it.

The Chairman said he did not know how to reconcile the Matron's statement with the medical evidence. The Matron also said, in reply to a question, that a bath was given to the child shortly before she left, and nothing was noticeable. Mr. E. Clarke said the combing must have been very superficial. The Matron said Barrow had played while in the Home with her own child and others, and if she had ringworm some of the children must have also had it. The Chairman said the Matron could assume that, but although ringworm was contagious it did not follow that the other children were bound to be affected.

Rev. Hugh McSorley directed Miss Stride's attention to the following part of a letter which she had sent to the Board:—'I regret now that I did not send her to the workhouse when her mother deserted her; but she was in such a fearful state of disease and dirt that I kept her, contrary to the rule, to see if we could improve her health—which, by good food, we have done to a certain extent.' [The rev. gentleman emphasised the last four words.]

Miss Stride replied that the child was of a sickly constitution. She also said she supposed that Barrow was taken into the receiving ward; and she (Miss Stride) knew that often not very clean persons were taken there.

The Union officers denied that the condition of the child was attributable to her presence in the receiving ward.

Mr. Capel having asked if there was any mistake as to the identity of the child, Louisa Barrow was then called into the room, and Miss Stride said the child was the one she had had in her Home.

The investigation continued for some time longer, Miss Stride and Mr. Capel contending that the child left the Home in a cleanly state, and the Guardians holding an entirely opposite opinion. Eventually, the Chairman said he would not for a moment say that the Matron of the Home came there for the purpose of stating what she knew to be untrue. He had no doubt that she believed what she said, but still they (Miss Stride and the others) could not expect the Guardians to disbelieve their officers. With regard to what he had said at a previous meeting about the way in which these Homes were being conducted, it was not at all his intention to injure any one of them; but institutions such as those were dependent in a great measure upon the charity of the public, and it would only be just that the latter should know something about them. (Hear, hear.)

Miss Stride said she courted inspection of the Homes.

Rev. H. McSorley thought sufficient inspection had already been made.

The investigation having been concluded, the whole matter stands thus: Miss Stride and her friends emphatically deny that the child was in the state described when she left the Home, or that she had been neglected while in it; and the Guardians, on the other hand, adopt the statement of their officers, and as firmly believe that Barrow, when received into the house, was in the state reported.—Enfield Observer, Feb. 10, 1877.

OUT-RELIEF AND ILLEGITIMACY.

It is encouraging to find from the last Annual Report on the Relief of the Poor in Scotland that the experience of our neighbours is quite in favour of increased stringency in the administration of outdoor relief, as tending to improve the social life of the community.

There was a general idea that the restriction of relief in the case of mothers with illegitimate children to an offer of admission to the Poorhouse tended to the death of the children from inattention and starvation; 'it being found impossible,' in the words of a medical officer, 'to induce the mothers to go to the Poorhouse, the children are farmed out, with the too well known sad result.'

Fortunately an occasion presented itself for proving the accuracy of this opinion, as it was expressed in one instance by the Chairman of a Board, whose parish returns showed a high average of illegitimacy, 22·4 per cent. of the whole number of births, in a period of seven years, having been of this class. A careful inquiry in this parish showed that out of 118 illegitimate children, whose deaths were registered in the seven years, the mothers of only 19 had ever been applicants for relief, and of these only two refused indoor relief when offered—but not in either case while burdened with the children whose deaths are registered. There is therefore nothing in the registers to show that the 'hard and fast line,' or offer of the Poorhouse, will occasion the starvation of many children; but it may be argued, fairly enough, that it acts indirectly by preventing application being made; and with a view to meeting this objection a comparison was instituted between two periods of seven years—before and after the opening of the Poorhouse—from which it appeared that a slightly greater mortality had occurred among illegitimate children in the first period than in the second.

It may be noticed, in passing, that the chances of life for the illegitimate child would seem to be about one-fifth less than for the legitimate; and this is not to be wondered at, considering the adverse conditions before him as well as after.

The comparison mentioned above further showed a decrease in the actual percentage of illegitimate births in the second period—small, it is true (about 0·5 per cent.), but, such as it is, favouring the opinions expressed by Mr. Campbell, the General Superintendent of the Poor, 'that giving poorhouse relief alone in these cases checks immorality by detaching the burden of supporting the children on the parents instead of on the parish, the dislike of the mothers to enter the poorhouse causing them to look better after the fathers and obtain more assistance from them; and likewise, that the chances of the children for life are greater when dependent solely on their parents, than when natural instincts are deadened by the expectation of outdoor relief.' At all events, the benefit is plain and substantial; the supposed hazard, so far as could be ascertained by inquiry, has no existence.

GRANTS.—A grant of £25 was made to the Mile End Committee for general purposes, and a grant of £10 to the permanent loan fund of the Islington Committee, the total amount granted to these committees since the 1st of October last being £125 and £50 respectively.

THE CHARITY ORGANISATION REPORTER.*

The Administrative Committee have directed that the following letter should be sent to the Country and Foreign Societies with which the Council is in correspondence:—

DEAR SIR,—During the past few months the Council of this Society has more than once considered the question of the advisability of enlarging or altering the character of the Charity Organisation Reporter, with a view to securing for it a more extensive and remunerative circulation. At the last discussion the further consideration of the subject was postponed, and it is probable that at no distant date it will again engage the attention of the Council.

Meanwhile, I am directed to ask you whether your Committee are of opinion that there is room and scope for such a Charity Organisation Reporter as might become the official organ and journal of this Society and the Charity Organisation Societies throughout the country: whether your Committee believe that they could send to this office fortnightly, monthly, or from time to time, a letter or statement respecting their work and the organisation of charity in their neighbourhood: and whether members of your Committee or members of your Society would avail themselves of such a paper for correspondence, and for the discussion of those new questions, and new aspects of old questions, which continually come under the observation of those who are engaged in the organisation and reform of Charities.

In addition to these statements of work and correspondence, it is proposed that there should be criticisms of Parliamentary and other books and pamphlets which have special relation to the better administration of the Poor Law, Friendly Societies, and other forms of organised and unorganised charity. It is believed that such books, carefully reviewed from the stand-point of the principles of Charity Organisation, would often reveal difficulties and fallacies which escape the observation of those who draft the short notices and summaries which usually find their way into the general Press.

It is hoped, also, that from time to time short articles may be inserted, which may be of value in explaining the work and objects of Charity Organisation Societies, and thus educating the supporters of the movement and the public generally.

A journal of this character might also become a useful medium for notices of meetings and advertising.

It is extremely desirable that, by means of a paper or otherwise, those who in very many parts of England are spending their time, thought, and money on the work of Charity Organisation, or other kindred work, and are deeply interested in those social reforms which the success of the Charity Organisation movement must necessarily further, should be able to act with greater concert, and should, by the interchange of their experiences, add to their common strength. To be successful the movement must become national, and must obtain the support of thoughtful men of all classes throughout the country. It is with a view to effecting this, and raising those larger issues which are involved in the attempts hitherto made to promote a system of remedial and preventive charity, that these proposals are submitted to you.

If your Committee consider that they can assist the Society in the establishment of such a journal, I should be glad if you would let me know what circulation you would be able to secure for it: what suggestions you would offer as regards size, arrangement, and price: whether you would consider a weekly or fortnightly issue the most convenient. In short, I should be obliged to you if you would kindly give me the benefit of your assistance and advice on these and any other points that may occur to you.

I may add that the work of editing, &c., will be undertaken by the Council of this Society.

I am, dear Sir,
Yours truly,
C. S. LOCK.

COLLECTION OF FUNDS.*

The following resolutions, containing the conditions in accordance with which the Council is prepared to assist those Committees which apply for aid, or are invited to accept assistance, in the collection of their funds, were passed by the Administrative Committee on the 15th February 1877:—

1. That the Administrative Committee is ready to give District Committees every assistance in arranging local public meetings, and in forming deputations, including members of District Committees and other influential persons, to wait upon large firms and persons of known wealth in each district.
2. That the Administrative Committee is further ready to provide and pay the salary of a suitable collector to canvass and collect funds on behalf of the District Committee.
3. That all sums gathered in by the collector be paid to the account of the District Committee.
4. That if a deputation be organised by a District Committee, the funds obtained by it be paid into the account of the Committee; but, that if the deputation be organised by the Finance and Collection Sub-Committee from

* See Reporter No. 200, p. 1; and for the various Resolutions of Council on the subject, see Reporter, Nos. 181, p. 102; 184, pp. 115-116.

The Resolutions of Council to which the above more particularly refer, are as follows (see Reporter, Nos. 180, p. 98; 183, p. 112; 184, p. 115; 187, p. 128):—

That each District Committee shall collect funds within its own district; but that the collection should be made not merely for its own work, but also on behalf of the Society. That in districts in which the Council has reason to believe that much larger sums might be collected, the local Committee shall be invited to accept assistance in collection from the Council.

the Central Office, and the appeal be made for the wants of the whole Society, the funds raised be carried to the general account of the Council.

5. That the Committees in the poorer districts be informed, that in providing a paid collector it is the object of the Administrative Committee, not merely to obtain additional pecuniary aid for the Committee, but also to make known to residents the objects of the Society, and induce them to co-operate personally with the Committee.

6. That the District Committees be requested to take a special interest in furthering the efforts of the Collector, and to give him the local information and detailed guidance which cannot be given from the Central Office, but which is essential for the effectual performance of his work.

7. That the Collector be instructed to report regularly, and in detail, to the District Committee. And that he report the results of his work weekly to the Assistant-Secretary at the Central Office.

8. That the District Committee be requested to report to the Administrative Committee from time to time regarding the progress of the canvass and collection; also whenever a Collector appears inefficient or unsuitable for his work.

9. That, after consultation with the Collection and Finance Sub-Committee, the Assistant-Secretary arrange with District Committees in what district the Collector shall work, and the period for which he shall be at the disposal of the Committee.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

BENEFIT SOCIETIES.—During the year 1875-76 at Wandsworth 22 applicants out of 127 had subscribed to some club or benefit society; at St. Olave's, 64 out of 302; at Paddington, 209 out of 821; at Greenwich, 57 out of 417; at Holborn, 17 out of 364; at Bethnal Green, 62 out of 545; at St. George's-in-the-East out of 387 only 20 were in a first-rate benefit club. A considerable number had been, at one time or other, members of clubs. . . . Many were in burial clubs. At Newington, about 22 per cent had at one time subscribed to a provident club. The Committee add: ' . . . it is rare to find a case among those which come before the notice of this Committee in which the head of the family has put by a shilling a week out of his earnings as an insurance against temporary disablement by sickness or accident.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of March 1877 was 39,184, and 46,821 received outdoor relief, making a total of 86,005. This was an increase of 402 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 1,639, 12,472, and 22,229 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 621. This was a decrease of 98 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 104 on the corresponding day of last year.

PROVINCIAL.

CHARITY ORGANISATION AT SOUTHAMPTON.*—On Monday, February 5, a Conference of Clergy and Laity was held at the Audit House, Southampton, to consider the best means of obtaining co-operation between the various charitable agencies of the town, with a view to preventing the overlapping of charity, and ensuring that really deserving cases should not be overlooked. The meeting had also special reference to the aims and objects of the Local Charity Organisation Society. Amongst those present were several members of the Board of Guardians. Dr. Maclellan was voted to the chair, and in opening the proceedings, said that the Conference was invited to assemble not for the purpose of discussing the question of the formation of a Charity Organisation Society, but with a view to bringing about the harmonious working of the various charitable institutions of the town, so that the poor might be relieved in a wise way. The Rev. A. C. Blunt then proposed the first resolution:—“That it is desirable that charitable centres should administer their relief upon similar principles, and when relief has been offered by any centre and not accepted, other centres should be chary of giving it without full investigation and ability to give adequately.” This was seconded by Mr. G. Lungley, Deputy President of the Board of Guardians, and carried unanimously.

* Want of space has hitherto prevented the insertion of this account of an important meeting at Southampton.

The Rev. H. H. Carlisle, LL.B., moved the second resolution:—“That as charitable funds are of limited amount, good character, provident habits, and efforts at independence should give the first claim; when any surplus is applied to supplementary outdoor relief, discretion should be shown, as such supplementation tends to relieve the rates and the Guardians from the necessity of granting sufficient out-relief. It should also be remembered that out-relief is in a state of probation, and that the larger the charitable funds are that the Guardians suspect to be expended in supplementing out-relief, the more persons will they be inclined to throw continually on the support of the charitable.” Referring to the last clause of the resolution, he said he was not responsible for it, and he could not quite understand its relation to the rest of the motion, and it required some explanation. It was seconded by Dr. Longstaff, and supported by several gentlemen, and carried unanimously.

The Rev. Canon Wilberforce then submitted the third resolution:—“That it is important that all centres of charitable relief should be supplied fortnightly with a list of those relieved by the Guardians in their respective districts.” Mr. Hankinson seconded the motion, which was agreed to; and

The Rev. Dr. Wright moved that “In order to economise funds, and to ensure mutual knowledge as to the relief each charitable centre is giving, it is recommended that a fortnightly list of those relieved, with their addresses, be sent by each centre to the Charity Organisation Society; and further, that all doubtful cases be submitted to the Society for investigation.” Sheriff Le Feuvre seconded the proposition; when

The Rev. A. Blunt moved, and the Rev. Canon Wilberforce seconded, as an amendment, “That it would largely check imposture if a fortnightly list of such persons as the administrators of relief may think desirable, with their addresses, were sent to the Charity Organisation Society; and if all doubtful cases were submitted to the Society for investigation.” Both speakers objected to what they deemed the imperative character of the motion, maintaining that there were cases which it would not be desirable to report. Some discussion took place upon this amendment, but ultimately it was accepted by Dr. Wright and the Sheriff, and was carried as a substantive motion.

FOREIGN.

The following is an extract from a letter describing the system of poor-relief in Holland:—

“I advocate quite the same principles of charity as alluded to in your letter; I am sorry to say there are few persons in my country who, while troubling themselves with charity, have studied it and are convinced of the dangerous character of small gifts. Of course political economists must come to this conclusion, but practically a sound system has never been established. And this is not astonishing. The chief charitable institutions in Holland are the “diaconies,” the churchwardens having for ages taken care of the interests of the poor.

“There are large capitals, and the interest, &c., is used for the relief of the poor; but assistance is invariably given in the shape of weekly doles (clothing, bread, money). Rich diaconies are known to give up to 7s. a week; others confine themselves to 50 cents, or 1s. a week.

“They adhere to the old Christian benevolence principle, which Ramford, De Gérauds, and the old school have defended. With us the Church has always claimed the lion's share in charity matters; unfortunately Church quarrels are very common, and the higher and most intellectual classes have often been obliged to leave the interests of the Church to the less educated. I need scarcely add that charity is seriously affected by such proceedings.

“If diaconies refuse to relieve, the State may interfere; the Poor Law does not give any rule as to the mode of relieving by the authorities, but I know not of a single community where the system is based on other principles than those which custom has sanctioned.”

VOLUNTEER VISITORS OF THE POOR.*

SIR,—Before the interest in the subject of District Visiting evoked by the reading of the Rev. Mr. Walrond's paper, at the Society of Arts, subsides, perhaps you will afford me space to explain the system adopted at this East End parish—a system which, after some years experience, is found to answer well, in providing for both the spiritual and the temporal wants of the poor.

The parish of St. Stephen's, Spitalfields, with a population of about 5,000 of the poorest class of persons in the metropolis, contains a church and parsonage, with a clerical staff consisting of the vicar and two curates, all zealous men; an 'Institute,' partly religious, partly social, managed by the Society of Friends; and a Mission Hall, worked on independent principles.

In addition to these established agencies there are City missionaries and Scripture readers, whose duty it is specially to visit the poor at their homes.

By means of these various agencies it is thought that the religious wants of the people are sufficiently cared for, without the addition of visitors, who, unless trained, and submitting to some kind of direction, would be of little use in a neighbourhood like this.

With the exception of that supported by the Quakers, none of the institutions give relief. To provide for the temporal wants of the people a Relief Society is established, which is under the management of a committee composed of gentlemen connected with the district, who meet periodically—as frequently as once a week in times of exceptional distress. These meetings are attended by the clergy and the lay agents before mentioned, when they submit for the consideration of the committee such cases of distress as have come to their knowledge in the performance of their ordinary duties. If a prima facie case for assistance be established, the almoner (a member of the committee) in whose district it is, is requested to call, and afford such relief as in his judgment is required. The result of these visits is reported at the following meeting of the committee, when the further steps to be taken in regard to the cases are agreed upon. One of the committee attends the weekly meetings of the local Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, of which he is a member, and in cases of more than ordinary difficulty, or where there is suspicion of imposture, it would be his duty to apply for their assistance and advice; but recourse is rarely had to the funds of the Society, or any other aid sought but that which it is its primary object to afford, viz. investigation by the agent, or intervention to obtain special forms of relief—such as hospital letters, recommendations to convalescent homes, &c.

Under no circumstances are paid agents ever employed to give relief, their duty being simply to afford information for the guidance of the Committee. The advantages offered by such a system of relief over that of irresponsible visitors, however intelligent and painstaking, but without organisation, is manifest.

In the first place, there is a complete separation of religious from temporal ministrations, whereby the incentives to hypocrisy are done away with.

Secondly. No encouragement is given to imposture, for as soon as it is known that no relief is given without investigation, the undeserving cease to apply.

Thirdly. No case of real distress remains long unattended to, as it must come to the knowledge, sooner or later, of those whose duty it is to visit periodically every house and every room in the parish; in addition to which there are the almoners, who, of course, are well known in their respective districts, and the clergy, to apply to in cases of emergency.

Lastly. There is no overlapping, or would be none, if there was no interference with the working of the system, as each almoner visits only in his district, while anything approaching indiscriminate almsgiving is impossible where the almoners give only out of the funds of the Society and report every case.

It may be useful, in conclusion, to mention a few of the rules ordinarily acted upon in the administration of relief:—

Relief to be given in temporary cases by ticket, not by money.

To give relief at the home only.

To give liberally as the case requires, and to endeavour to get the whole charge of a case.

Not to assist an able-bodied man a second time, unless he either is or has been a member of a provident society or otherwise shown a disposition to save.

Always to see the husband (if alive) before assisting the family.

Never to give towards funeral expenses.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

Spitalfields, February 22, 1877.

COFFEE HOUSES.*

SIR,—The subject of Coffee Houses and Refreshment Rooms is becoming so important and interesting, that I am anxious to suggest if some plan cannot be adopted for aiding not only in the establishment of them, but in the more important work of carrying them on.

Having struggled through a year and a half in the management of one such Refreshment Room, I can speak most strongly of the need of some such central help, counsel, and advice, as I would suggest.

* See Reporter No. 207, p. 24; No. 208, pp. 28 and 29; No. 209, p. 42.

We have tried to enlist the co-operation of the Café Company in our effort, but the managers naturally consider a comparatively small local and parochial concern to be outside their scope and aim. At the same time, I am convinced how much failure, disappointment, extravagance and waste might be avoided if some such central company could give the assistance of experience and knowledge of business necessary to ensure success, as well as supply or recommend suitable persons as managers. I can only say that though it is easy to start such a work, I fear that under private management it is certain to be financially a failure, and that to a large extent. The success of the Knightsbridge Coffee House seems to prove that on a larger scale such places can be made remunerative, or at least self-supporting, which is all that we ask for in a parochial concern.

The sort of help I desire is much that which is supplied by the Central Working Men's Club and Institute Union, 150 Strand, and unless some plan can be adopted by which provisions can be bought on a large scale, and by experienced business people, I much fear that the present eager desire to extend this most excellent work will end in disappointment and failure, which these houses must do, if not carried out on commercial and therefore remunerative principles. Our experience has proved (in which I believe all similar trials agree) that it is impossible to supply meat dinners to working men on any terms that will repay the cost. What we want in London is just what the 'British Workmen Public House Company' seems to be at Liverpool. I rejoice to see that the subject is being brought forward in your columns.

Your obedient servant,

LOUISA TWINING.

ASSISTANCE OUTSIDE THE WORKHOUSE.

DEAR MR. LOCK,—I have been requested by the Tower Hamlets Pension Committee to forward the accompanying circular, in the hope that it may be allowed to appear in the Reporter. The Committee will feel much obliged to those who, taking an interest in the experiment, will kindly make it known amongst their friends; and I shall be happy to forward copies of the circular to any who may be willing to co-operate with us in this way.

Yours very truly,

ALLEN D. GRAHAM.

69 East India Dock Road, E.:
March 17, 1877.

'Tower Hamlets Pension Committee. [For the Provident Poor of the East of London.] Object: The object of the Committee is to provide Pensions, so far as its funds permit, for those poor persons who seem by their character and circumstances to be worthy of assistance outside the workhouse. Committee: Albert Pell, Esq., M.P., Chairman, Carlton Club, S.W.; the Rev. S. A. Barnett, Vice-Chairman, St. Jude's Vicarage, Whitechapel, E.; A. G. Crowder, Esq., Treasurer, 65 Portland Place, W.; Russell Harrington, Esq., 8 Queen's Gate Place, S.W.; the Hon. C. W. Fremantle, the Royal Mint, E.; Allen D. Graham, Esq., United University Club, S.W.; J. R. Holland, Esq., 67 Lancaster Gate, W.; Sir R. Macdonald Stephenson, 72 Lancaster Gate, W.; the Rev. M. S. A. Walrond, the Charterhouse, E.C.; the Rev. S. A. Thomson Yates, 396 Commercial Road, E.

'Committee Room: 69 East India Dock Road, E. All communications to be addressed to the Treasurer, A. G. Crowder, Esq., 69 East India Dock Road, London, E. Post Office Orders to be made payable at the Limehouse Office to Allen D. Graham. Cheques to be made payable to "the Tower Hamlets Pension Committee, or bearer," and crossed to the London and County Bank, Limehouse Branch.

'No part of the funds entrusted to the Committee will be expended on salaries or rent; full use will be made of the machinery of the Charity Organisation Society; and the rest of the work will be done by members of Committee, aided by other volunteers.

'The reduction of outdoor relief which is taking place in various parts of the country has been very strictly carried out by the Poor Law authorities in certain Unions in the East End of London. None who are conversant with the mischievous effects of a too liberal system of legal relief can feel themselves justified in objecting to what they believe will prove, in the long run, a salutary reform. At the same time, a sudden and unexpected change may in some cases entail hardship; and it is to meet such cases that this Committee has been formed.

'It is proposed to grant "pensions," not exceeding four shillings weekly, to respectable and deserving persons who have been careful and industrious, who are resident in Unions where out-relief has been, or is being abolished, and whose friends, if able to assist, are doing for them all they can.

'The scheme here briefly sketched out will, it is hoped, be free from some of the defects that have been found to accompany outdoor relief. The improvidence which cannot but be fostered where there is the universal expectation of a provision for old age in no way dependent upon the character or exertions of the recipient, will receive no encouragement when the boon is conferred as a matter not of right, but of favour, by private individuals instead of by the State, and lastly, not upon all that are destitute, indiscriminately, but only upon those whose past lives give evidence of industry and thrift. There will be no weakening of family ties, since the strict investigation to be instituted in every case will tend to secure the rejection of all whose relations are in a position to maintain them. And, finally, the rule that recipients must have attained their fortieth birthday on the 1st of January 1872, securing, as it does, the gradual extinction of the scheme, will clearly show that it is not the purpose of the Committee to create a permanent charity, upon which the younger members of the working classes can depend.

'This mode of dealing with the more respectable of the aged poor has the further advantage of throwing the burden of their support upon those who are both able and willing to bear it, and it thereby relieves the struggling ratepayer, who, taxed as he is with the cost of indoor relief, may well deem it hard that he should be called upon to maintain outside the workhouse a multitude of persons not very much worse off than himself.

'The Committee believe that many benevolent persons, aware of the evils incident to out-relief, and yet sympathising with the intense desire of the respectable poor to avoid the workhouse, will be glad to have placed within their reach an agency by means of which a salutary Poor-Law Reform may be facilitated, and its operation rendered less harsh in regard to the more deserving of those who, after living for many years under the influence of a defective system, find themselves suddenly confronted with a more strict and sound administration of the law.'

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

The eighth annual meeting of the Society was held on Wednesday, March 14, at Willis's Rooms, St. James's, Lord Elcho, M.P., presiding, and was perhaps the most numerously attended annual meeting the Society has ever held. There were present the Right Hon. Lord Hatherley, Earl Stanhope, Lord R. Grosvenor, Albert Pell, Esq., M.P., P. Ralli, Esq., M.P., G. J. Shaw Lefevre, Esq., M.P., A. McArthur, Esq., M.P., U. J. Kay-Shuttleworth, Esq., M.P., Sir Charles Trevelyan, K.C.B., Ven. Archdeacon Hannah, Sir Baldwin Leighton, Sir D. Forsyth, Sir Graham Briggs, Sir R. Wilbraham, C. B. P. Bosanquet, Esq., A. H. Hill, Esq., Lieut.-General Cayenagh, H. N. Hoare, Esq., the Rev. J. R. Simpson, M.A., the Rev. H. F. Mallet, &c.

Lord Elcho, who on taking the chair was warmly cheered, called upon the Secretary to read any letters he had received.

Mr. Loch, the Secretary, said he had received letters from several noblemen and gentlemen who had been unable to attend, but had written very heartily in support of the Society. His Grace the Duke of Westminster had written to say that he was prevented from attending, and Earl Granville, who also could not attend, had made himself an annual subscriber. (Cheers.) Lord Lichfield wrote to say he was very sorry at finding himself precluded from attending, and that nothing but unavoidable circumstances would have kept him from being present. Lord Wharfedale and Lord Rosebery also wrote regretting their absence, the latter stating that he was in Edinburgh; and the Bishop of Manchester was absent through having to discharge duties in his diocese. The Lord Mayor, Sir James Hogg, the Hon. E. A. Fremantle, and Mr. Wm. Burn, of Glasgow, had also written in excuse of absence.

The Chairman then proposed that the report should be taken as read.

This was put to the vote, and carried.

The Chairman, who was received with cheers, said that on finding himself presiding over that most important meeting he felt that he ought to apologise, for, although he yielded to no man in admiration for the objects and work of the Society, yet he had nothing to do with its management, and until lately knew nothing of its details, and little of its inner life. When, therefore, he was asked to preside at that meeting, he was told that the founders of the Society, in this the eighth year of its existence, considered it desirable that some one should take the chair who could bring to its work and objects an unbiassed mind, and view these with the same impartiality with which Sir John Lubbock studied his bees and his ants. The best thing would be for him to survey the general subject, to see what were the objects of the founders, to see whether those objects had been attained, and also if anything was wanting to render success still more successful. Before he entered upon these points, he begged his audience to cast their minds back eight years, and consider the state of the metropolis as regarded pauperism in 1869, at the time when this Society commenced its operations. There were then under Poor Law administration—receiving Poor Law relief—36,000 indoor and 110,000 outdoor paupers, all charged to the metropolis. Besides this huge amount of poverty receiving legal relief, mendicity, in the shape of mendacious mendicants, was at that time rampant, and sturdy beggars infested the streets—mostly of the West End—many of whom, if they had lived in the good old times, would have been punished by whipping for the first offence, mutilation for the second, and the gibbet for the third. In addition to street charity and the Poor Law relief, there were endless charities for giving relief in the metropolis. Taking the list of charities at present existing and in 1869 there were 1,060, and, excluding the religious ones, 930; and of these there were 24 for the blind, 98 for general relief, 100 voluntary homes, 172 institutions for the aged, with a total annual income of £4,114,849, and, excluding the religious charities, of £2,400,451; and, enormous as these sums were, they were not to be regarded as anything like the sum-total of the charity funds annually collected in London, which the editor of the 'Classified Directory to the Metropolitan Charities' stated at between £6,000,000 and £7,000,000 per annum, including £250,000 a year levied by fraudulent charities. In 1869 there was no organisation among these charities—no combination among them to prevent over-lapping—and the consequence was that there was great waste in many cases and inefficiency of relief. (Hear, hear.) The charities were, indeed, like a bundle of sticks without a wish to bind them, and this Charity Organisation Society was formed on the combined principles of the Mendicity Society and of the Society for the Relief of Distress, its purpose being to bring about concerted action, inter-communication, and organisation between all who were administering relief—the Poor Law authorities and the charitable societies. (Hear, hear.) In the Mendicity Society and the Society for the Relief of Distress they found the principles of the Charity Organisation Society. He was speaking of these matters, not for the information of the active workers in the Society, but for the information of the public out of doors, by whom it was not understood; for, intentionally or unintentionally, wilfully or accidentally, views of the Society had been spread which altogether misrepresented its aims, work, and operations. (Hear, hear.) Work was thus expected of it which the founders never intended; one part of its operations was brought prominently forward, while other parts were carefully ignored. It was spoken of as a harsh impostor-suppressing Society, but little was heard of the good it effected for the deserving, and of its efforts that not one deserving case should suffer from want. (Cheers.) The Society, in short, started with the main object of the improvement of the condition of the poor by bringing about co-operation between the charities and the Poor Law, and among the charities, by securing due investigation and fitting action in all cases, and by repressing mendicity. Thus there was a strong Samaritan as well as a police element in the Society, and while turning on the 'bull's-eye' of truth upon every case, it was at once really the handmaid of the charitable and the protector of the deserving poor. (Cheers.) He congratulated the Society upon the signal success which had attended its work up to the present time, even if it had not carried all the objects precisely as it had hoped. In the course of its existence the Society had established 37 district committees, one in every Poor Law district of the metropolis, each having communication with the Poor Law authorities, and ready to act with the charities too in each district; and, besides, there were now more than 30 towns in England carrying out the system, and places in all parts of the world had adopted it. (Cheers.) He held in his hand a long list of the places with institutions at which the Society was in communication—the meeting need not be afraid, he should not read the long paper (a laugh); but he might say that in different parts of Europe, America, and in the colonies, the principles had extended, so that the soundness of the views of the first zealous workers were proved by the extension of the work beyond the borders of our own land. (Cheers.) To those zealous workers he would not refer by name, for they would not wish it; but perhaps he might be allowed to mention the name of one no longer a worker—one who had settled in the East of London that he might be better enabled to deal with the poverty of that part on sound principles, and who injured his health probably in these endeavours to do good to his fellow-men—his lordship referred to the late Mr. Denison. (Cheers.) Money was certainly necessary to carry on the business of the Society; but what was most urgently required was a band of workers like the late Mr. Denison, who would assist in this task of bettering the condition of the poorer classes. (Cheers.) Now, what had been the indirect results of the work of the Society in six years? Well, the indirect results of the Society's working were very striking. Public opinion had been enlightened upon the principles which should guide relief; Poor Law outdoor relief had been nearly abolished at the East End, to the advantage of the people and the inculcation of independence; and the outdoor pauperism of the metropolis, which stood at 110,000 in 1869, now stood at only 41,000. (Cheers.) Besides this startling fact, the mendacious mendicant had been almost entirely suppressed, and this by the simple remedy of tendering to a beggar a ticket offering inquiry. The direct results of the Society during six years showed that the committees had dealt with 31,623 of the class not requiring relief, undeserving, or cases for the Poor Law; 27,272 of the class who were recommended for relief, either to Guardians, to institutions, or to local agencies, or to private persons; and 30,293 had been assisted by grants, by loans, by having employment found for them, or by receiving letters which they required for hospitals. In all, the Society had dealt with 89,188 cases and, moreover, the Society had dealt with 47,256 vagrants in addition to all the other classes. (Cheers.)

Now in these figures the public had a thoroughly satisfactory proof of the good work which the Society had done and was doing, and to do more the Society needed what he should point out presently. In addition to the direct dealing with the poor to the large extent he had described, the Committees had dealt with many other subjects of a kindred nature. (Hear, hear.) The Council had entered fully upon the subject of vagrancy, and had called upon others outside the Society to sit upon a committee to enter into an inquiry as to the best means of dealing with it, and he was himself among those thus invited to consider the question. Then, too, the Society had dealt with the subject of necessary sanitary reforms in working-class homes, and had been largely instrumental in getting the act passed for giving the industrial classes improved dwellings. (Cheers.) He held, too, in his hand another result of the labours of the Society, in the shape of a measure which was about to be brought into the House of Lords by Lord Shaftesbury, for the purpose of protecting charitable funds from fraud. (Cheers.) This was an excellent list of work, and showed the need and value of the Society. (Cheers.)

But he should ill describe the feelings of the active members of the Society if he said they were ready to rest satisfied with the grooves in which the Society worked, on the one hand, or with legislation they had promoted, and were promoting, for the benefit of society in general and the poor in particular. Excelsior was the motto of the Society; but it was as well, he thought, to see if, notwithstanding the great success of the Society for the time it had existed, there were any of the original intentions of those he would call the 'pious founders' which had not been carried into effect: to see, in fact, if every Committee and every member of the Society had given full effect to the intentions and principles laid down in the little 'Manual.' As he had said, up to the time when he undertook the engagement to discharge the duty of presiding at the annual meeting, he knew but little of the working of the Society, and it might, therefore, now appear presumptuous in him to speak of that working; but when he undertook the duty, he sifted for himself the whole action of the Society (cheers)—for a fortnight he made the lives of the hardworking officers—from the secretaries downwards—a burden to them. (A laugh.) The position he took was that, having consented to preside at the annual meeting, it was but right that he should, as it were, use his endeavours to the utmost to get at the facts of the case, and though he did not pretend to be a 'Daniel come to the judgment,' still he thought it was not impossible that he might give expression to some views, after a full examination of the Society and its working, which might be useful to those who were interested in the work it was endeavouring to carry out for the benefit of suffering human kind. (Cheers.) The conclusion he had come to was that there were two things which the Society would do well to look to. In the first place, taken as a whole, the system of the Society ought to be uniform, whether its Committee worked in the East or in the West of London. (Hear, hear.) But the fact is, there were exemptions from this uniformity. The Society did not have complete subordination, on the part of all its District Committees, to the guiding authority of the central body, and some of the District Committees did not work uniformly with the others; and to his mind it was necessary that there should be complete subordination to authority and complete uniformity of working in all parts of a Society which desired to have a long life. (Cheers.) That there should not have been this complete subordination and this complete uniformity at first, might only be the natural outcome of the rapid springing up of the Society at a time when its details of work had not been practically proved, and when many minds were striving to find a solution for the problems then presented. Perhaps, indeed, the time had not yet come for this uniformity; but then the Society was open to its being said by a subscriber, 'I send money to the Central Office in the belief that the administration of the Society is in accordance with certain principles uniformly carried out; but the Central Office gives aid to District Committees, and while there is one branch Committee which does not go exactly in the same lines as the other Committees, the money I send may go in directions of which I do not approve.' (Hear, hear.)

Another point which was open to consideration was the co-operation of the Society with other bodies, in dealing with the relief of the poor. There was no want of co-operation on the part of the Poor Law authorities, who co-operated and communicated with the Charity Organisation Society fully and completely. (Cheers.) Some of the members of this Society, in fact, had even become members of Boards of Guardians, and information between the District Committees and the Poor Law officers was interchanged as fully as had been proposed and intended when the Society was born. But besides this co-operation, it was intended to establish co-operation with the many existing charities, and to bind those charities with the withy without which they were so many sticks, each administering relief without any knowledge of what the other was doing. Well, the endeavour to bind these charities to defined principles, had, it must be confessed, to a certain extent failed. He was justified in calling attention to this point when he found a remarkable statement in the Report of the St. Marylebone District Committee, a Committee of which the Chairman of Council (the Earl of Lichfield) was the chairman. The passage to which he wished to direct attention referred to the fact that the 'pious founders' of the Society always assumed that the Committees should consist of members representing all the charities within the area of their districts; and the Marylebone Committee said, that though they were, perhaps, more than ordinarily successful in enlisting representatives of local charities in the work of charity organisation, yet they had to 'confess that this most essential point is very far from being arrived at.' The Committee further took the opportunity of 'impressing' (the word being in italics) the supporters of the Charity Organisation Society with 'the urgent necessity of using every influence to induce charities to co-operate with, and, by representation, to become an integral part of the Society.' (Hear.) The necessity which he saw of all the charities co-operating with the Society was not, then, his opinion only, but it was an opinion which was held by the Chairman of the Council, Lord Lichfield. (Hear, hear.) If, then, from any reason or cause, the representatives of the charities could not attend the Committees of the Society—if the mountain could not come to Mahomet, why, let Mahomet go to the mountain; let a special agent be appointed to go between the Committees to the charities. (Cheers.) Every subscriber to a charity, and every one else, should use every influence, in order that the charities might be brought to act with the Society in the way mentioned by Lord Lichfield. (Cheers.) Now, what was the consequence of the existing want of intercommunication with the charities? Why, the answer was, that, to a great extent, there was now that very overlapping, faulty principles in charity distribution, the multiplication of societies for one and the same purpose, the waste of funds, the encouragement of impostors, and the neglect of the deserving poor—evils which it was one of the main objects of the Charity Organisation Society to remedy and to overcome. (Hear.) If these evils still existed, the fault did not rest with the Charity Organisation Society, but with those charitable institutions and societies which did not come forward and lend their aid in order that the utmost should be done with the funds subscribed for charitable purposes. (Cheers.)

There were two courses open to the Society—one to accept things as they were, the other to go upon the lines laid down originally. The Society did not profess to be an alms-giving, but an alms-getting Society (hear, hear), and through the charities it was intended that relief should be given. (Hear, hear.) Then there was a necessity for uniformity in the action of the Committees; else the Society would drift, more and more, into a large alms-giving Society. (Hear.) It appeared to him, looking at the matter impartially and without bias, that endeavours should be continued for bringing about uniformity of action in the Society's various District Committees—the thorough co-operation with the charities, and a reasonable subordination of all the Committees to the guidance of the central representative body. (Hear, hear.) These ends ought to be attained; the charities ought, by some means or other, to be brought to unite, and to be brought into combined action with the Poor Law through the Charity Organisation. (Hear, hear.) He had thus troubled the meeting at some length in stating what he considered to be the condition and work of the Society. In so doing, and in pointing out what little hitches he could find, and in what way they could be overcome to give the Society that efficiency and that beneficial effect it ought to have, he wished it to be understood that he was speaking from his own impressions; but he also knew he was likewise expressing the views of some of the most able Members of the Council—some, too, who sat at the cradle of this Society; and his words ought to carry with them the weight of influence, as coming from those who had, from the outset, had at heart the good of this Society. (Cheers.) He hoped, therefore, the remarks he had made might be found deserving of some consideration, and that these matters—in this eighth year of the Society's existence—would be placed on a satisfactory basis. (Cheers.) Certainly, he had spoken only with that view and intent (cheers); because, as he had said before, no one could have, more than he had, the good of this institution at heart. (Cheers.) But he did not wish to end with what might be considered to some extent controversial matter; he should therefore conclude his remarks—which he thanked his audience for having listened to so patiently—with the expression of a wish, in which they could all heartily join, for the success and permanence of a Society which was founded upon the truest and, therefore, the most effective principles of sound practical benevolence; and which, by its action, was doing incalculable good to the deserving poor of the Metropolis, and, by its organisation and example, to the nation at large. (Loud cheers.)

Lord Richard Grosvenor moved the adoption of the report, and, after praising the practical and brilliant speech of the noble Chairman, said that, for himself, he had studied the detailed work of the Society. The classes of 'poor' which the Society had to deal with, and was anxious to deal with, might be divided into three; but no figures could be given of them, as they varied from day to day, from month to month, and from year to year. Taking the class of vagrants and criminal impostors, he was happy to say this was a class which the Society had been able to deal with most ally by the aid of his friend, Mr. Ribton-Turner, and at a very small upon the funds of the Society as compared with the charges for food (ing found for them at the cost of other and more official funds. ter and cheers.) The next class was one upon the fringe between ge-earning class and the vagrants. Sometimes the people in this ere wage-earning, and sometimes they were vagrants. The cause of eople coming into this position opened up good reasons for inquiry; reason for the condition of these people was not far to seek; for longed to a necessary class—those who had to depend upon casual ment. There was no doubt that the welfare of the country—that ditions of trade—necessitated that there should be a class who nly be casually employed; and it was necessary that an employer always be able to find as many hands as he required, even on a emergency. This was one of the effects in a country where the of labour was greater than the demand: a condition of things had a beneficial effect in increasing the wealth of the country by ting enterprise. (Hear.)

y asked where these casual workers came from, the answer was, that me from the class above them—from the regular wage-earning class. w that at times—at the end of the London season, in a time of lackness in any particular branch of trade, change of fashion, any change of trade when 'hands' have to be discharged—the er does not care to discharge his best hands: he dismisses those who apelled to keep 'Saint Monday'; in other words, those who 'went e drink,' as well as men who were not regular, from sickness and . All these fall into the class seeking for employment, and they casual workers—a class there would always be. There was another why men were out of work. This country maintained its superiority omy of production greatly by the subdivision of labour, and in this sion of labour, in which classes of men learnt only parts of a trade, a were unable, when out of work, to turn their hands to anything a fact, the Englishman could not move 'without the shop behind The American could turn his hand to anything, for he was much : than the English mechanic—a state of things which was the un- le result of the subdivision of labour in this country; and the man rown out of work was unable to work at anything else than that to e had been trained.

, in its effects of producing dependent people, arose the 'drink n.' (Hear, hear.) This drunkenness was unquestionably the curse ountry. He had listened to the most interesting speech made in use of Commons by Mr. Chamberlain (cheers), and that gentle- statements as to the terrible results arising from this evil could not adicted, and one point showed beyond doubt that drunkenness was increase. The coroners' verdicts in 1861 were to the effect that this from excessive drinking were 199, and in 1875 the number was a increase of 260 per cent.—while the increase of the population in e years had not been anything like 260 per cent. (Hear, hear.) e were bound to take the fact that where there was an increase perism it arose from the fact that the consumption of alcoholic e was also upon the increase. (Hear, hear.)

best method of encouraging temperance and promoting self-help grooves in which this Society worked, and a Committee was now to inquire into the circumstances connected with the drinking habits people, and to endeavour to bring about a diminution of this evil. .)

most careful inquiry had shown that the way in which the working could be best benefited was by teaching them the advantages of nd self-help. (Hear, hear.) To attain this purpose, not only was required but helpers also. The work so much needed among the ; classes could only be carried out by conversation with the indi- and, indeed, in this personal help was as much—in some cases, more ary than money. In some cases money was not of the slightest use a harmful in fact; and he had known cases where the best means of s in saying to an applicant, 'What you want is not money—it is to give you money—you want a little energy to seek for and find nd an economical use of your money when you have earned it.' To o the cases which had to be thus dealt with, required personal work, could tell individuals in conversation more in five minutes than he scribe in general terms in a speech of an hour; and in these cases tact had done good, while none would have been done—and harm f hundreds of pounds had been forthcoming for the same people. ear.) At the same time that he said this, he must say that money ssary: no society could get on without money, and this Society did many directions, and was ready, moreover, to take any hint of working l for the people by directing attention to the wants of the people, with- , departing from the original principles of the Society—principles with the Chairman, he held were the right principles to proceed upon. .)

This Society gave work and a duty to many. The words, 'Why e here idle all the day?' were not addressed to actual labourers in ay work, but to the class of society represented in that room.

(Hear, hear.) The vineyard in which they were told to work was at hand. Those who came in even thus late would receive the wages which would be given to those who had come in early, and those who remained aloof—those who remained outside idle—would have to answer for that idleness. The workers and helpers in this work would, he was certain, have their reward. (Loud cheers.) He proposed the adoption of the Report.

Mr. A. Pell, M.P., seconded the motion, and said that as his name had been referred to by the noble chairman upon the question of the diminu- tion of outdoor relief in London, he might speak generally upon the subject of charity—not troubling the audience with figures. He came rather late into the work of charity and relief; but having looked into it with great interest, he could bear testimony to this fact: that the dimi- nution of outdoor relief could not have been made if it had not been for the co-operation and assistance of members of this Society, especially of the co-operation and assistance of one who would not like to have his name mentioned. The assistance which this gentleman had given had enabled the Board of Guardians of St. George's-in-the-East (of whose body Mr. Pell is one), to refuse out-relief, and they could not have done this if they had been in doubt as to the question that the applicant's position rested between nothing on the one hand and the workhouse on the other. (Hear, hear.) Personally, he (Mr. Pell) was interested in this question, for his derivative settlement was in St. George's-in-the-East; so that if he ever stood in the position of needing, the relief which he now meted out to others would be meted out to him. (A laugh and cheers.) What the Guardians of St. George's-in-the-East had done was an en- couragement to thrift, and he, having the prospect of his settlement on that parish, was not likely to forget the lesson. (Cheers.)

Now he should proceed to say a word or two upon the subject of charity generally. It was not often that a layman had an opportunity of preaching to parsons, and therefore he would avail himself of his opportunity—there being many of the clergy present—to call to their attention how much the great virtue of charity lost because the clergy did not speak oft more plainly upon the facts when dealing with the subject in the pulpit. (Cheers.) He was speaking at a time of the year when the attention of the public was called from the pulpit of the church and chapel to the necessity of practising this great virtue; but how very frequently was the opportunity lost of teaching the public their responsibilities and their duties because the preacher preferred to look at the subject from a conventional point of view? (Hear, hear, and cheers.) Now, in this way of dealing with charity in the pulpit he should like to see some change. Lord Elcho had told the meeting that the operations of the Charity Organisation Society had been misunderstood—either carelessly or wilfully—and, indeed, the same thing might be said of the great principle of true charity itself. (Loud cheers.) It was often an onerous and disagreeable task to expose to those who had money to distribute that their protégé was undeserving, and that their ideas were wrong. He believed that on every occasion when a member of the Charity Organisation had had to place such unpalatable truths before persons who had asked for facts, those persons left with a sense of disappointment, and, indeed, with an ill-feeling. That mischief—the mis- chief of such feelings existing at the statement of the truth—must be undone, and the clergy would have to undo it. (Hear.) A very mistaken meaning had come to be placed upon the meaning of the word 'charity.' He believed that as man's practices fell below the ideal of that great Apostle who placed so much stress upon the blessedness of 'considering' the poor, the clergy had lowered their principles to meet their practice. (Hear.) There was the mischief; and now principles would have to be raised, and the clergy would have to do it. (Hear.) Principles have been lowered until of all the noble virtues which clustered around the Apostle's idea of charity, nothing now was left, speaking broadly, but the one action of almsgiving—the most dangerous one, and the most selfish one. (Cheers.) Now, alms- giving, to his mind, did not express charity, unless it was given in such a degree that its practice was accompanied by self-restraint and inconvenience at the loss of the money—that, in fact, the giver gave that which was not of his superabundance. (Hear.) What, however, was generally given produced no inconvenience to the giver. Look at the gift of a man who had made a fortune in trade or commerce, and let them conceive the difference between the gift of his money and his time. (Hear.) The gift of money would entail no sacrifice upon such a man; but look at the benefit which such a man would confer if he would but bring his mind to bear upon the question not only of relieving the necessities of his fellow man, but of removing the origin of the need. The gift of his time, too, would be a sacrifice. (Loud cheers.)

The Charity Organisation Society did for people what they could not do for themselves. Its first principle was to inquire into the necessities of cases, and the best mode by which they might be relieved—making these inquiries for those who had not the time or power to make the inquiries for themselves before they gave relief. Now this was a most useful func- tion, and he trusted that it would not be lost sight of in mere money-giv- ing; and also that this Society would not allow itself to become another agency for the distribution of funds. (Cheers.)

As reference had been made to the subject of the diminution of outdoor relief, he desired to protest against the too common idea that if a man became a Guardian he had merely to proceed upon the principle of withdrawing all outdoor relief, and might then rest satisfied with himself that he had done his duty. This, indeed, would be a very erroneous belief. Any man might vote in all cases alike—any man might harden his heart so as to vote for not giving out-relief in any case; but for all that he would fail in his duty. (Hear.) A great opportunity was given to everyone who engaged in this work to inquire into every case by means of the agency of the Charity Organisation, and unless this was done, the action of Poor Law Guardians, in regard to the diminution of outdoor relief, would fail.

In résumé, he would say that it is not the duty of the charitable to give money to the poor, but to 'consider' the poor. To quote the Bible and the words of One who was all-wise, we were told, 'Blessed is he who considereth the poor; not blessed is he who gives money to the poor; not blessed the man who practises almsgiving; for the one who practised only almsgiving harmed the poor morally and socially; while considering them, by finding the means of raising them, was the extreme blessedness, and this was the duty imposed upon all who desired to help the poor and honour the precepts of their religion. (Loud cheers.)

The Ven. Archdeacon Hannah, of Brighton, in supporting the motion for the adoption of the report, thanked Mr. Pell most warmly for his lay sermon, and said he should not dispute any one point he had presented, but he thought the clergy would be much obliged for the good discourse about charity which they had heard. (Hear.) He was himself one of those who had had to deal with the principles of Charity Organisation in one of the daughter societies mentioned—that of Brighton. This had been in existence for five years, and in that time it had got to be very firmly organised, and could be reported of as working very fairly in the principles of its parent. (Cheers.) Those principles had now been tried far and wide, and suggestions had come in as to the improvement of its machinery. It was no new claimant in the list of charities; but it was, in fact, a regulating spring in the machine of existing societies. It assumed that societies for the distribution of charity were already in existence; but it was seen that there was both much overlapping in the way of distribution, and much neglect of worthy cases—that while some people were overclothed, others were exposed to draught—that, in fact, better work might be done, and more effectively, with the same means, by the aid of Charity Organisation, which was, in fact, the coping-stone upon the arch of our charities; and without this coping-stone the others would fall and be a mere heap of stones. (Hear.)

Again, it was found in Brighton that, by means of Charity Organisation, a much broader platform had been established than was before possible. People came into the work who were not previously working with the clergy of the Church; brethren of the Nonconformist ministry attended; and both sides found the benefit of union on this neutral ground. (Cheers.) Then, too, relations had been established with the Guardians, with the magistrates, with the police, and with many of the charitable institutions. There had, certainly, been some reluctance upon the part of some of the charities, rather more than on the part of other bodies; but in Brighton the principles of Charity Organisation had secured a large amount of general co-operation. (Cheers.) He should only weaken his case if he put the figures of what had been done in a provincial town by the side of the work done in so enormous a place as London; but he must tell them that the Society had dealt with 16,000 cases, a number, though small in comparison with London figures, yet large for a provincial town. (Hear, hear.) There were two fallacies which people held about the Charity Organisation of which it was worth while to speak: one was that the officers were relieving officers, and the other was that they were policemen. They were neither one nor the other. (Hear, hear.) Sometimes they were considered to be officers to supply the relief which was needed in cases of pressing temporary distress, although the organisation was not a charity-giving society. Then, with respect to the idea of the officer being a policeman, some friends had told him that they did not approve of the clergy hunting up these poor people and preventing some vagabonds getting odd half-crowns. Now, the friends who spoke thus did not consider and did not know the mischief done by those who could speak thus lightly and carelessly of one of the greatest evils of the present day. (Cheers.) He was very glad to hear some very appropriate remarks by the preceding speakers regarding the necessity of personal work in regard to charity. If some of those who had spoken lightly about its being no evil for some impostors to get odd half-crowns would only give their personal aid in the cause of charity, the police officer fallacy would soon be corrected—the personal work of gentlemen, or, what was better still, that of ladies, would soon abolish the idea that the work of the Society was merely to prevent some poor rogue getting his livelihood by his miserable dishonesty. (Cheers.) The Charity Organisation Society was only, as he had said, a regulating spring in the great machine of charity, and its purposes were to be summed up in a few words: all it did was done in the interests of true charity, and it asked that the action of charity should be guided by that noble view of it which St. Paul laid before the world as the greatest of Christian graces. This was not to be confounded with the selfish indulgence of almsgiving. If charity was the first watchword of a people, discretion should be the second; and the two should be combined, so that true charity should be carried out to the benefit of the deserving by steady personal work. (Cheers.)

The Report was then put to the meeting and adopted sem. con.

Mr. Shaw Lefevre, M.P., said he was only a raw recruit of the Society, and had come for the purpose of hearing his friend, the noble lord in the chair, give the full explanation of its work which they had all listened to with so much pleasure. (Cheers.) If he had known, however, that he should have been placed in the prominent position of moving a resolution he should, perhaps, have followed the example of Lord Granville, and sent a cheque in place of making a speech. (A laugh.) As, however, his friend Mr. Ribton-Turner had asked him to move a resolution, he had great pleasure in doing so. The resolution was—

'That this meeting pledges itself to give the Charity Organisation Society every assistance in its power towards obtaining the hearty co-operation of charitable societies and individuals in encouraging a spirit of thrift and self-reliance.'

The exposition by the noble lord who occupied the chair was one which had been listened to with the greatest pleasure (cheers), and for himself he could say that he was convinced the Society had done good work in the past, and was founded upon true and good principles. (Cheers.) The object of the Society was not to repress charity but to organise it, to give it a proper direction, and to make indiscriminate almsgiving give place to true charity, by finding workers as well as givers in the interests of the deserving poor. He entirely concurred in the remarks of Mr. Pell, that mere almsgiving, in an indiscriminate manner, was selfish and mischievous. Upon the same subject Daniel Defoe wrote nearly 150 years ago, and laid down what were truly the same principles as those upon which this Society was founded; and it was interesting to look into the pamphlet which Defoe wrote and see how many of the evils of which society generally complained were then existing. Defoe pointed out that much of the charity which was intended to do good produced the opposite, and also that much of the evil and poverty existing arose from those same habits of drink of which complaint was made at the present day. (Hear, hear.)

In speaking of the objects of the Society, his noble friend in the chair referred to the action taken in regard to the Artisans' Dwellings Act. The Society found, early in its existence, that one of the greatest evils to which the poor were exposed and subjected were the miserable dwellings in which they were lodged; and one of the first legislative works the Society set about was to find a remedy for these evils. (Cheers.) Without wishing to detract from the merit of the present Government in framing the measure, it was but just to say that the main lines of that measure were laid down, after the most careful consideration, by this Society (cheers), and that it was brought forward by Mr. Kay-Shuttleworth. (Cheers.) In consequence of the warm support which was generally given to Mr. Kay-Shuttleworth, it was possible for the Government to take up the question, and to carry through the measure which had earned the gratitude of the public, and would benefit unborn generations of our people. (Cheers.) But, though the Act was passed, there was still much to be done; for it was extremely necessary that this Society should watch the proceedings under the Act, in order to take care that the principles of the Society, so carefully laid down, should be carried out in the details of the work. (Hear.) He had been lately asked to attend a public meeting in St. Luke's, where it was proposed to carry out one of the schemes under the Act, and no fewer than 7,000 persons were to be dealt with in that case. In that scheme there were two grave defects: there was no provision for the people while the places were being built, and, for another thing, the dwellings proposed were not suited to the people; nearly all of them were costermongers—a hard-working and useful class—and they were afraid that the practical effect of carrying out what was intended to be a beneficent measure would be to drive them from the neighbourhood where they carried on their trade, than which no worse thing could be done for them. (Hear, hear.) He hoped, however, that the utmost consideration would be shown to the wants and wishes of these people; and he put it to the Society that a watch should be kept on these things, to see that the principles of the Act were properly and fully carried out in letter and in spirit. (Cheers.) Then he urged that the Society should watch over the endowments given for charitable purposes, and illustrated his views by referring to a town of 8,000 inhabitants, which had forty charities returning about £6,000 a year, and were doing much harm, creating poverty, and causing simulated poverty. He congratulated the Society, not only upon the work it had done and was doing, but upon the fact that it was inculcating its principles of sound administration of relief upon gentlemen who would not allow those principles to be lost sight of. Already the Society had a large band of workers in all parts carrying out the most beneficial work, and animated by the great principles which the noble lord in the chair had so ably described. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. A. McArthur, M.P., seconded the resolution, and said he was connected with the Society on one of its Committees, and had also received great benefit from its action. It would not be disputed that charity was exercised more freely in this country than in any other part of the world. (Hear.) Especially was there a great exercise of charity in London, and there was no well-authenticated case of distress which would not receive ready help. There were hospitals, homes, asylums, all liberally supported; but, to his knowledge, charity was sadly abused, and thence the greatest injury was done to the deserving poor. (Hear.) This Society, therefore, was necessary; not to damp the liberal feelings, not to interfere with any genuine society in existence, but to direct the streams of charity into the proper channels, and to frustrate the designs of professional beggars, who were not proper objects of charity, but lived by plundering the poor and deceiving the charitable. (Cheers.) As the noble lord in the chair had shown there were upwards of 1,000 charitable institutions in London, whose annual income was between £4,000,000 and £5,000,000 sterling; and he had seen it stated that even £8,000,000 was not too large a sum to fix as the annual income of charitable societies. It was hard to get at the exact amount, for there was no church or chapel but had its fund for charity; but the conclusion must be arrived at that the charity funds of London were sufficient for all the legitimate wants of the poor. Notwithstanding this, however, there was an amount of poverty and wretchedness in London sad to contemplate, so that it was easy to see there must be great waste, and no small proportion of the charity funds grossly misapplied. (Hear, hear.) He then spoke of the benefit he had received from the Society in the detection of criminal impostors. Since these persons had been convicted, he had not been troubled with begging-letter impostors.

Mr. Corbett said he had applied for information to the Society, and had received it very frankly and very fully; but it was marked 'confidential.' It related to persons who advertised for money for charitable purposes, and gave no account of the money so raised. The Society marked its information 'confidential' because it did not want to spend its energies or funds in litigation; but he thought that publicity should be given to the action of such persons as ———. This publicity could be given in the newspapers, and in order to guarantee such publications against lawsuits he would be one who would, with nine others, guarantee £1,000 each. The Glasgow papers had effectually dealt thus with impostors and sham charities, and it now remained to be done in London. (Cheers.)

The Chairman then put the resolution, and it was carried nem. con., and, in reference to the remarks of Mr. Corbett, his Lordship begged to thank that gentleman for the practical offer he had made.

General Cavenagh, who rose amid loud cheers, said he was afraid that the subject upon which he had to speak, as Chairman of the Finance Committee, was one which even the eloquence of the preceding speakers would fail to make interesting. The sinews of war were as necessary in fighting the battle against pauperism and its associated evils as in moving armies, and if the Society was to prosecute a successful issue the contest in which it was engaged, it was absolutely essential that it should receive most liberal support. (Cheers.) He then proceeded to point out how greatly the work had grown, and the great labour thrown upon the Society by the very success of its principles—correspondence pouring in from all parts of the world. He also referred to the necessity for meeting the deficiency in the receipts of the Committees in the poor parts of the town, owing to which great responsibilities were thrown upon the Central Council, whose position, he said, was no longer supported by guarantors as at first. The work the Society had done and was doing, he urged, fully entitled it to the generous and hearty support of the public. He moved—

'That the financial position and requirements of the Society call for the earnest co-operation and support of all who are interested in the welfare of the poor.'

Earl Stanhope said he had the honour to second the resolution, and to say that though he had not, for the last few years, been a worker in London upon the principles of charity organisation, yet he had worked in the county of Kent, where there was a similar organisation extending throughout the whole county. He did not agree with the views of Mr. Lefevre that the Society should enter upon the question of the application of endowments, for there were plenty of other reforms more directly in the Society's work requiring attention, and the public had yet to be made fully convinced of the fact that, to give indiscriminately was not charity, but idleness. Before a person gave a sixpence in the streets, he or she should be convinced that the money would be of good service and was deserved. He ventured to suggest that sheets of tickets should be issued by the Society, as tradesmen and other persons would readily give small sums to the Society in return for tickets; by this means much support would be enlisted for the Society. In regard to charitable institutions, he should like to see the Charity Organisation Society stamp the application books for aid of such societies as had had their purposes and actions investigated, so that the public would know which charities could be with confidence supported. (Cheers.)

The motion was then put to the meeting and carried unanimously.

Mr. C. B. P. Bosanquet, who was received with warm cheers, said that now only one resolution remained, and that was to propose a vote of thanks to the noble lord who had so ably presided. (Cheers.) It was a great gratification to him to see so large a meeting, to witness so much interest, and to find so many new faces: all this bore testimony to the increasing importance attached to the work of the Society, in which he had a deep personal interest. (Cheers.)

Sir Charles Trevelyan, K.C.B., who was greatly cheered on rising, seconded the motion, and said that some years ago he had the happiness of acting with the noble Chairman in public business, and since that time, having some leisure, and purely for conscience sake, he joined this Society. He had reaped a rich reward, for he had found that he was brought into association with ladies and gentlemen who were endeavouring to solve some of the most interesting problems of human life. The noble Chairman had been studying the subject for a fortnight, and Sir Charles wished him joy of what he hoped would be the commencement of a systematic study of new aspects of society, and if the noble lord pursued that study with diligence long years would pass before he completed the training. He seconded with pleasure the motion proposed by Mr. Bosanquet. (Cheers.)

The motion was carried amid loud cheers.

Lord Elcho, in response, said: I have only to express to you, in the fewest possible words—having already troubled you with a great many—my thanks for the kind manner in which this resolution was proposed, and for the way in which you have received it. It has been a great pleasure to me to be here to-day; and it is a great pleasure, because it has not been simply blowing the trumpet of a Society of the advantages of which to the public I am convinced. (Cheers.) I have ventured to make some suggestions, and other speakers have done the same, and I am convinced that whatever has been said has had but one object—and that is, to give permanence and perfectness to this institution. I have said that it has been a pleasure to me to be here; but it is a greater pleasure to have had a vote of thanks proposed by Mr. Bosanquet, who sat at the cradle of this institution, and seconded by my old friend and colleague, Sir Charles Trevelyan. As he has told you, some years ago we met together for the work of another organisation. He has said that it will take years to get thoroughly acquainted with all the working of this Society. But there are certain things about it so patent that they must strike anyone who looks upon the organisation with an impartial mind, weighs its work with an unbiased mind, and compares its operations now with what they were originally meant to be. (Cheers.) It has worked well as a society; but look into it and see if it has uniformity in its branches, and if it is subordinate to any one body; for if it is not uniform in working and subordinated to one centre it stands in danger of becoming another alms-giving society instead of being an alms-getting one. It is not necessary that the Society should thus drift; it has two sources of work—in directing the six millions sterling now raised by London charities into the right channels, and in inducing individual workers to give their aid. To see these points will not take months or years; and having seen these points I respectfully submit them to the Council which so well manages its concerns. (Cheers.)

The meeting then closed.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.*

Loan Societies.—With reference to Loan Societies, under the Loan Societies Act of 1840, the Chief Registrar quotes a memorial from the Lords Justices to the Home Secretary, in which they express the opinion that, in the majority of cases, the operation of the Loan Societies works great mischief and misery among the poorer classes. 'Loans are granted in a wholesale and reckless manner by most of the societies, who depend for the ultimate recovery of the sums so advanced upon the power of the magistrate and the policeman. As some evidence of this it may be stated that, while the number of distress warrants issued for the recovery of our entire collection of all the poor rates, gas rents, and water rents, throughout the borough of Leeds amounted to 534, the number of distress warrants issued for Loan Societies in the borough in 1875 was no less than 771, each of these latter warrants generally including two or three persons as principals and sureties.' Friendly Societies are now permitted, under their Act of 1875, to create funds to be lent out; and the Chief Registrar looks forward to the 'growth of a more respectable class of societies in future.' What good work they can do will be gathered from the following figures extracted from the return of Loan Societies for 1875. During that year, out of 83,768 loans granted by 291 Societies, 6,028 summonses and 1,269 distress warrants had to be issued.

Savings Banks.—As regards Savings Banks, the Chief Registrar points out that the 'privilege of nomination for small sums . . . now granted to members of Friendly Societies, of Industrial and Provident Societies, and of Trade Unions, is one entirely adapted to Savings Banks, and which, if put in operation, would remove, probably, the great majority of the difficulties which now arise in cases of the intestacy of depositors.'

Insurance of Children.—Though the Chief Registrar 'is of opinion that the new machinery for payments on the death of children, created by section 28 of the Act, has been very beneficial' (no society can now pay any sum on the death of a child without the production of the certificate of death, issued on satisfactory evidence by the registrar of deaths), he states that 'the requirement of the registrar's certificate has indeed brought out the fact that the insurance of children beyond the legal limits has been practised in the manufacturing districts to an extent which the Chief Registrar feels himself justified in calling enormous. Although for the last 21 years (ever since the passing of the 18 & 19 Vic. c. 63) it has been penal for the officers of any society knowingly to pay any sum which should raise the whole amount receivable from one, or more than one, society, for the funeral expenses of a child under five years to a sum exceeding £6, or for a child between five and ten years to a sum exceeding £10, the Registrars of Friendly Societies have, since the coming into operation of the new Act, received letters from officers of societies, as well as from individual members and registrars of deaths, which show a perfectly amazing ignorance of the late law on the part of those whose business it was to carry it out.' The following is one of the instances of alleged over-insurance quoted by the Chief Registrar: 'Sub-district of Dukinfield.—Child under five insured in three societies for £6 in each; total £18: i.e. three times the legal amount.' In some cases the law has been defied. At one place the Society paid the legal amount on the required registrar's certificate, and then handed 'over a further sum to the applicants as a present.' A conviction, however, was obtained at the suit of the Chief Registrar. On the other hand, the following provision of the 'Sick Benevolent Burial Society' is quoted by the Chief Registrar as 'worthy of imitation': 'Provided always, that if, upon the report of any person, it appears to a majority of the committee of management, after due inquiry, that any deceased member under the age of 14 years had not been provided with proper and timely medical aid during sickness, or had not otherwise received proper care and attention, adequate food, clothing, or lodging (31 & 32 Vic. c. 122, s. 37), at any time within three months next before his or her death, no money shall be paid by the Society on account of the death of such member.' Finally, the Chief Registrar sums up by stating that he 'feels himself constrained to say that the frequency with which sums exceeding the legal limit are now shown to have been paid on the death of children in Lancashire and Yorkshire appears to him to give a new importance to the question discussed by the "Friendly Societies Commissioners" in Part I. of their Fourth Report (see paragraph 56 and following), of "the bearing of burial benefits on infant mortality," as it is impossible for him to doubt that the sums illegally received by insurers have been largely in excess of the cost of burial.' S. F.

REPORT AND SCHEDULE OF EDUCATIONAL ENDOWMENTS.

PRESENTED BY THE EDUCATIONAL ENDOWMENTS COMMITTEE TO THE SCHOOL BOARD FOR LONDON.

Early in 1875 a Committee was appointed by the School Board 'To consider and report whether, and in what degree, endowments available for the purposes of education within the area of the jurisdiction of the Board, can be properly rendered instrumental in providing for the higher education of scholars in Elementary Schools, and especially for the development of technical instruction; and what measures can be taken by the Board to bring under the consideration of the governing bodies of Endowed Schools and of the Charity Commissioners, the claims of the Metropolitan Elementary Schools in this respect.'

It might have been safely predicted that no very tangible results would follow from the action of a Committee not possessed of compulsory powers, where the persons to be approached possessed the sensitive and tenacious organizations with which the representatives of endowments may be usually credited; and it is manifest from the Report that the Committee encountered considerable difficulties in the prosecution of their inquiries. The Committee, however, may well feel that its time has not been wasted, for the facts it has elicited and the suggestions it has founded on them, will draw attention to the subject, and doubtless influence to some extent the course of events in the future.

The figures obtained relative to the endowments in question are avowedly far under the mark, but with this reservation 'the present return shows that the interests of learning and of labour within the limits of the jurisdiction of your Board have inherited from the munificence of the past an annual revenue of £222,459, of which £208,891 are appropriated to education, and £13,567 to industrial training—a sum which exceeds by £66,879 the whole amount of School-rate assigned at present in the metropolis to the current expenses of elementary education, irrespective of the cost of building, the interest on borrowed money, and the reimbursement of debt.'

The significance of these figures is to be found in the fact that 'the foundations referred to were in the main designed for the support, education, and advancement of poor children belonging to the humblest class, and they have been largely applied for the benefit of children who are not poor, or who are poor in a superior order of life.'

It is only natural that the London School Board, as the body to which the educational interests of the very poor are entrusted, should express concern at this state of things, and it is to be hoped that its influence will be successfully exerted to prevent at least further change in a direction which must be deemed at once unreasonable and unjust.

The Committee maintains that the resources of endowment may be advantageously applied to the support of Elementary Schools, to the establishment of prizes and scholarships, the assistance of Industrial and Reformatory Schools, the distribution of food and clothing, and to the promotion of technical education of a high order. Three members of the Committee dissented from the first suggestion; and most people, we think, would be ready to admit that a proposal to apply endowments 'to the institution and maintenance of public Elementary Schools,' would require at least grave consideration.

The Report asserts that there is 'a limited analogy between the operation of endowment and the operation of voluntary agency. Endowment is a voluntary agency of the past, or present, extending to the future. It is not the less acceptable because it is transmitted, or because it is durable. Surely there is some confusion of thought here. The valuable element in voluntary agency consists in the continuous exercise of the voluntary effort, by means of which a measure of vitality and efficiency is in all probability secured; but in the case of endowment there is no continuous exercise of the voluntary effort; it was exercised once, but once for all, and all that remains is a mechanical supply of funds, which goes on independently of results, and furnishes no guarantee whatsoever that those results are genuine or beneficial. The durability of the endowment—a durability in no way affected by the quality of the work done—is the feature which renders it 'less acceptable' to lovers of progress than voluntary agency, and which vitiates the analogy assumed by the Report to exist between them.

The recommendation that the representatives of food and clothing charities should co-operate with the Board, 'as the Charity Organisation Society has in a measure already done,' is satisfactory, as indicating that the Board is not dissatisfied with the endeavour so far made by the Charity Organisation Society to facilitate its operations; but those who have watched the experiment most closely will be the most ready to acknowledge that any extension of it would require to be very carefully conducted, and perhaps even to be protected, by being made to proceed along certain lines laid down in advance. For example, there can be little doubt that more harm than good would be done by making grants of food and clothing on a largesse to the children of able-bodied parents, whose distress was of the ordinary kind, and not due to some unlooked-for and exceptional circumstance. If, however, a proper discrimination were exercised, and sound principles applied, there is no reason to dissent from the opinion of the Committee that many opportunities would be found for bestowing temporary aid of this sort 'in an irreproachable manner.'

The moderate and conciliatory tone of the Report deserves all praise; and if each successive Board maintains the attitude of vigilant attention is regard to the matter which the Committee recommends, there will be good reason to hope that it will succeed in influencing public opinion, and in securing substantial advantages for the cause of elementary education in the metropolis. PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 211.

THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 29, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge each of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

ITALIAN CHILDREN.

The following letter from the Italian Ambassador was read:

[TRANSLATION.]

LONDON, 11 March 1877

35 QUEEN'S GATE, S. KENSINGTON.

VERY REVEREND F. PIUS MELIA.—It was with extreme satisfaction that I read the report you kindly sent me respecting the Society for Organising Charitable Relief and Repressing Mendicity. I am grateful to perceive that the benevolent intentions of the Directors of that good work extend also to those unfortunate Italian boys who have hitherto been victims of the most vile speculations.

In promulgating a very severe law against the traders in children, the Italian Government has done all in its power to extirpate the plague which, until quite lately, has afflicted several of our provinces. But it cannot attain its object as long as the guilty can find shelter with impunity in foreign countries, nor until the unfortunate children who have been taken from their parents find an efficient protection against the abuses to which they have been exposed through the basest cupidity.

It is for this reason that I, for my part, cannot but applaud the charitable intentions of the Directors of the above Society, and our Government will, I am sure, be grateful to those benevolent persons who lend their protecting aid in foreign countries to render efficacious the measures taken in Italy against the shameful traffic in children.

Begging you to express my feelings on this subject to the Directors of the Society for Organising Charitable Relief and Repressing Mendicity, I have the honour, &c.

(Signed) L. F. MENABREA.

THE INQUIRY DEPARTMENT.

The following urgent recommendation of the Administrative Committee was, after considerable discussion, adopted, on the motion of Sir Charles Trevelyan, seconded by Mr. J. R. Hollond, viz.:

That a chief clerk be appointed in the Organising Secretary's department, in the place of Mr. Howgrave.

The Council then adjourned.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of March 1877 was 39,150, and 46,792 received outdoor relief, making a total of 85,942. This was a decrease of 63 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 866, 13,018, and 21,600 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 545. This was a decrease of 76 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 2 on the corresponding day of last year.

* Miss O. Hill was not present at the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 13th inst.

PROVINCIAL.

CHARITY IN CANTERBURY.—The following is an extract from a letter recently forwarded to us:—

'I got your Parish Magazine and circulars this morning. We have a sort of Charity Society here, and it is doing some work, but kind-hearted people undo all they can by giving irrespective of it. It is calculated that between £7,000 and £8,000 a year are given away in endowed charities, and people, even comparatively well-to-do tradesmen, are not ashamed to put their friends and poor relations and themselves, if they can, in the way of getting a share. As to the poor (proper), though a man will earn his guinea a week (masons 5s. 6d. a day), not a rap is put by; but when sickness comes, then help is sought and claimed everywhere. The very schools are so gratuitous in their character that one dare not charge any more than 2d. a child, because children can go elsewhere for nothing.'

SOUTHAMPTON.—OUTDOOR RELIEF.—The Guardians of the Southampton Union have issued a notice of the conditions for obtaining outdoor relief similar to those issued by the Manchester Board, and quoted in the Reporter for 1876, p. 179.

INVESTIGATING CHARITIES.—We take the following from the New York Herald:—

'Recent developments must have satisfied every one that the management of all local charities which receive assistance from the public purse should be thoroughly investigated and subjected hereafter to periodical scrutiny. The greatest evil of any dishonest management of these charities is the injury it inflicts on the poor. It diverts from them money intended for their relief, and it discourages liberality on the part of the people. If there is any one offence meaner and more despicable than all others, it is that of putting on the mask of philanthropy for the purpose of robbing the poor. The Committee of the State Board of Charities is doing a good work in probing the affairs of the Juvenile Guardian Society to the bottom and in commencing an investigation of the management of the St. John's Guild. The Master of the Guild should court such an inquiry if its business has been honestly conducted. He will of course admit the authority of the State Board of Charities in the matter, as his counsel implies; but it is to be hoped that he will not consider it necessary to turn what should be, and no doubt will be, a friendly investigation, made with a determination to get at the whole truth, into a sort of legal contest to be fought by sharp lawyers and marred by legal quibbles.'

BLIND AND DEAF AND DUMB CHILDREN UNDER THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.

By the courtesy of the London School Board we are able to present the following papers respecting the blind and deaf and dumb children now being educated in their several schools:—

Victoria Embankment, 9th March 1877.

'Sir,—I must apologise to you for not being able, in consequence of press of work, to answer your letter sooner.

'(1) There are at present 31 blind children in regular attendance, distributed amongst 18 schools. For the special instruction of these children we have a blind teacher and an assistant blind teacher. I cannot tell you the names of the schools nor the ages of the children without obtaining a special report from the blind instructor. As to the cost of their education, it is, of course, a proportionate share of the cost of the schools which they attend, together with a share of the salaries of the two blind instructors, which amounts to £78 per annum. (2) The charge made to the parents is simply the ordinary fee of the school which the children attend. (3) I do not know whether the parents of any of these children are too poor to pay the school fee, but if they are the Board would, of course, remit them. (4) At present the two teachers are sufficient for the purpose. No arrangements are being made for educating a staff of teachers.

'Going over the same ground for the deaf and dumb. Question No. 1 has been answered already. (2) Same answer. (3) Same answer. (4) The staff for the instruction of the deaf and dumb consists of the Rev. W. Stainer and four assistant teachers, the salaries amounting to £540 per annum. At present this staff is sufficient, and no arrangements are being made for educating more teachers.

'Mr. Stainer, I believe, uses lip reading to a certain extent, but, in his view, this is only possible with those letters the articulation of which can be distinctly seen, such as labials and dentals. The system fails when you come to gutturals, &c.

'I do not know the average age at which either the deaf and dumb or the blind are received without getting in a special return.

'I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

G. CROAD,

Clerk of the Board.

'31 Children in 18 Schools, 16th March 1877.'

We have made the following analysis of the numbers of the deaf and dumb children now being educated under the London School Board, for the quarter ending—

March 1876—East District:	Wilmot Street, Bethnal Green	27
North "	Winchester Street, King's Cross	30
South "	Temporarily at Marlborough Street	12

June 1876—North District:	Winchester Street, King's Cross	33
East "	Wilmot Street, Bethnal Green	27
South "	Victory Place, New Kent Road	17
West "	Bell Street, Edgware Road	5
		82
Sept. 1876—North District:	Winchester Street, King's Cross	33
East "	Wilmot Street, Bethnal Green	27
South "	Victory Place, New Kent Road	23
West "	Bell Street, Edgware Road	8
		91
Dec. 1876—North District:	Winchester Street, King's Cross	35
East "	Wilmot Street, Bethnal Green	28
South "	Victory Place, New Kent Road	30
West "	Bell Street, Edgware Road	10
		103

The following are the rules under which the deaf and dumb children are admitted:—

'Classes for deaf and dumb children are held at the following Board Schools:—Winchester Street, Pentonville Road, N. (near King's Cross); Wilmot Street, Bethnal Green Road, E. (near Bethnal Green Junction Station); Victory Place, New Kent Road, S.E. (near Elephant and Castle); Bell Street, Edgware Road, W. (near the Edgware Road Station). Admission at the Infants' School entrance in each case.

'The children are allowed to bring their mid-day meal with them, and are under care and supervision during the play hours. A brother or a sister may attend with the deaf-mute child, and receive instruction in the Schools. The hours of attendance are from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily, except Saturday.

'Children between the ages of 3 and 13 years admitted on application to the Rev. Wm. Stainer, at Bell Street, at 10 o'clock on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays; at Winchester Street at 11 o'clock on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays; at Victory Place, at 2 o'clock on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays; and at Wilmot Street, at 10 o'clock on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and at 2 o'clock on Fridays.'

The Management Committee reports that the classes were at first looked upon as an experiment, doubts being entertained whether a sufficient number of deaf and dumb children could be collected together in one spot: those doubts are now removed.

Near the Winchester Street Board School a temporary Home has been provided, at 74 Pentonville Road, independently of the Board, for those children who live at too great a distance, for board and lodging from Monday to Friday; at this twelve children are accommodated.

Although much has been done within the last two years, much more remains to be done before all the deaf and dumb children, who ought to be under instruction, have the means of education placed within their reach. 'There are in London many more of these children that have not been discovered, notwithstanding the efforts that have been made by the Board's visitors and by the instructor.' The visitors are reminded of the necessity of making continued inquiries, 'especially as the evasive answers frequently given by parents and others make it extremely difficult to find them out, except by frequent visits to the localities in which they happen to reside. Some have been intentionally kept out of the way by parents, partly because they are not totally deaf and dumb, and partly under the impression that they will some day acquire the use of speech. There are, in fact, a number amongst those considered deaf and dumb who are deaf only, or dumb only.'

The instructor reports that he considers 20 should be the maximum of any class as at present constituted.

Upon these returns it is worthy of remark that, although there are twice as many blind as deaf and dumb, the blind under education by the School Board are only 31 on the 16th March 1877, whilst the number of the deaf and dumb at the end of December last was 103. If the answer should be that the greater number of blind children are being educated by charitable institutions, it is useful to compare the very high cost at the latter with the nominal sum charged by the School Board, which is, in fact, only the ordinary school ratio. The School Board, no doubt, affords not only the most proper, but also the cheapest education, and has the duty, as well as the power, to educate every blind child who requires its aid. A new era in the history of education for the afflicted classes is now in operation, and is capable of the largest extension. The very best education can be given at the cheapest rate, and none need go to charity when they can get what they require from the School Board.

No doubt as larger numbers come forward for education the School Board will see the necessity of educating teachers; this is now one of the great wants for both the blind and deaf and dumb.

Although a conference was held, under the invitation of the School Board, on the vexed question of the type to be used by the blind, we do not know what was the decision arrived at by the Board respecting the type by which the blind children are taught.

As to the deaf and dumb, the return gives the opinion of Mr. Stainer, that lip-reading is only partially used, and, indeed, is only practicable to a small extent. This is a surprise to us, after reading how entirely it is approved in the deaf and dumb institutions, and how successful it has been declared to be both abroad and at home.

The question may, no doubt, be safely left to the wise experience and kindly consideration of the Board, whose only desire can be to utilise the large funds at their disposal, by giving the best education that science can provide.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S HOUSE AT WARRINGTON.

SIR,—It is so unlikely that our working class will give up the physical and social comforts of the ordinary public-house until a substitute has been provided for it, and so certain that nothing of this sort will endure and spread which is not founded on a solid commercial basis, that, with your permission, I will make known through our Reporter any information which reaches me tending to this important result. The Warrington house also has been a success, and, although I would by no means advise a servile imitation of any single model, it is instructive to see how this success has been attained. The following extract from a recent letter contains the explanation.

C. E. TREVELYAN.

March 21.

Warrington: March 12, 1877.

'We have several reasons to give for our success as a company. We do everything on a commercial system. Our capital consists of £530 in £1 shares paid up. Our house is very centrally situated. We issue monthly tickets to members at 6d. each, annual 4s. each. We charge everyone else who passes beyond the refreshment bar 1d. This brings us about £50 or £60 per annum. Our billiard table brings from £80 to £100; our beds £120 to £140. Altogether we have an income of about £280. This enables us to pay a rent of £105, and taxes &c. in proportion; and, after paying all our other expenses, we paid last year 10 per cent. to our shareholders, a debt of £7 to our capital account, put by £18 to a reserve, and brought forward a small balance. At the end of this year our rent will be increased to £140, so that we shall have to stir about a bit to make this up. We have a very nice reading-room, and shall have a club-room very shortly. Our refreshment-bar belongs to our manager, who, in return for the profits thereon, and house-room, coals, gas, &c., gives his services and those of his wife, and keeps our place in good order and clean.'

COFFEE HOUSES.

8 Lancaster Place, Strand: March 26, 1877.

SIR,—Miss Twining, in her letter of the 17th instant, writes of a want for London of a company similar to the British Workman Public House Company in Liverpool. May I refer to the Coffee Tavern Company, Limited, which was formed in London at the close of 1876, and which in time, I hope, may rival the Liverpool Company.

Sufficient funds are now in hand to start two houses, and in a few days we hope to secure a house in Marylebone and another in the City. A few weeks will then be required for repairs and alterations; but when the houses are opened they will be under the management of gentlemen intimately connected with the British Workman Company of Liverpool.

These two houses, it is very confidently hoped, are but the leaders of numbers of other houses which the Company will seek to acquire and open as funds are placed at our disposal, either by donations towards expenses or by the allotment of shares.

The nominal capital is now £10,000 in £1 shares. The President of the Company is the Right Hon. W. Cowper-Temple, M.P., and amongst the Directors are Mr. H. M. K. Pope, Mr. Hughes, Q.C., Mr. Ernest Hart, Dr. Norman Kerr, and Mr. Sargant. The Directors take no fees.

I shall be very glad to give further information to anyone who may apply to me.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. C. BARNARD.

Honorary Secretary,

Coffee Tavern Company, Limited.

MEDICAL CHARITIES.

HOW TO FORM A PROVIDENT DISPENSARY.—We take the following from the British Medical Journal of the 17th instant:—

'The first step towards the establishment of a provident dispensary in a new district is to procure a copy of rules, which may be obtained from the Secretary of the Charity Organisation Society, 15 Buckingham Street,

Adelphi, London. Next, a committee of gentlemen interested in the subject should be formed (three or four are quite enough), who, after adopting or altering the rules and appointing the medical officers (two at least), should give such publicity to the undertaking as may be sufficient to bring it to the notice of those classes of society from which it is desired to obtain paying members. This plan is easily carried out in towns, and in them it seems to us very undesirable that any one member of the profession should start what is ostensibly a public institution for his own private benefit. In country places, however, where such an institution could not well be formed, there seems no objection to a practitioner intimating to his poorer patients that he is willing to attend them in accordance with the provident plan, i.e., on condition of their paying a small fixed sum all the year round to secure medical attendance during illness; only he must take care not to advertise himself, or seek to attract any of his neighbours' patients by the scheme. The subject of professional remuneration in connection with these institutions will be found fully discussed in a leading article in the Journal for January 3rd, 1874. In some, a fixed salary is paid; in others, the cost of drugs only is deducted from the members' payments, the doctors taking the remainder; while in others, two-thirds of these payments are all tied to the medical officers. In no case, however, ought their remuneration to be considered or spoken of as a gratuity.'

LABOUR AND MENDICITY.—Snub the idle one, solace them of little heart, and be peaceful to all to the heart, for glorious is the fruit of good labours: for the Psalm saith, For thou shalt eat the labour of thy hands, thou art blessed, and well shall be to thee. . . . He that will not work stealth against the Lord's law this that he eateth. For God biddeth,—Utterly a needy man and beggar be not among you; that is to say, suffer not in your default any fall into so great need, that he be needed to beg. And by the same no man should blamefully by idleness, by wretchedness, neither by waste, neither by folly, bring himself to such need. And if he did, men should not give to him that asketh, as is before said. And for Solomon sayeth, the plowman would not in winter ear* for the cold; therefore he shall beg in the summer and there shall not be given him.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, April 5. There had been present:—

Mr. E. Peters, in the chair; Sir T. Graham Briggs, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Bevan, Hoare, Hill, Miner, Roberts, and Venning.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending March 31st the receipts had been £77. 14s. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £833. 5s. 11d. and £72. 10s. 2d. respectively, £49. 4s. 10d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 27th ult. there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Miss Howes, Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, Messrs. Barrington, Fletcher, Lewes, and Venning (visitor).

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 27th ult. had been present:—

Hon. H. R. Scott, in the chair; Miss Howes, Captain Gardner, Hon. Reginald Capel, Messrs. Aspinall and Bevan.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 28th ult. had been present:—

Mr. C. A. Miner, in the chair; Rev. H. I. Cummins and Mr. Burdett-Roberts.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 28th ult. had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the chair; Major FitzRoy, Major Prendergast, and Mr. A. H. Hill.

QUESTIONS.

Mr. Seton-Karr called attention to a letter from Mr. Brabrook, which appeared in the Times of April 4, commenting upon the action of the Lewisham Committee* in posting outside their office the names of persons receiving outdoor relief. He asked what was the practice of other District Committees.

The Rev. H. I. Cummins explained that the Lewisham Committee had taken the course referred to at the special request of the Board of Guardians. The notice displaying the list had, with the consent of the Committee, been erected by the Board in the garden in front of the Lewisham office.

The Organising Secretary stated that in the Times of April 9 a letter from the Hon. Sec. Lewisham Committee had appeared, in which he had explained the circumstances under which the weekly lists, posted by the Board of Guardians outside the Union and the relief stations, had been exposed at the office of the Committee. The letter stated that the Hon. Sec. had been informed by the Guardians that the exhibition of the lists had been attended with beneficial results.

The Organising Secretary mentioned that it was a common practice in the Faringdon and other Unions to exhibit such lists on the doors of churches throughout the district.

After some discussion it was agreed, on the motion of Mr. A. H. Hill, to refer the question to the Administrative Committee for further information.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS.

The list of additional members having been read, the following members were re-elected: Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., G. C. T. Bartley, Esq., J. W. Willis-Bund, Esq., George Blount, Esq., Stephen Fuller, Esq., T. Hawksley, Esq., M.D., G. Howell, Esq., C. A. Miner, Esq., Earl Stanhope, and Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B. And, on the motion of Mr. A. H. Hill, the Organising Secretary was instructed to write to Earl Stanhope and Mr. G. Howell expressing the hope of the Council that, during the present year, they would be able, from time to time, to attend the meetings of Council.

ELECTION OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

On the motion of Mr. J. Sapsford, the following members of Council were proposed as members of the Administrative Committee for the present year:—Sir Charles Trevelyan, Lieut.-General Cavenagh, Major FitzRoy, Major Prendergast, Major Nares, Captain Fortescue, Sir Graham Briggs, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. R. Barrington, W. Bevan, Douglas Brown, Q.C., H. N. Hoare, J. R. Hollond, A. H. Hill, W. F. Lawrence, C. A. Miner, E. Peters, F. B. Roberts, and W. M. Venning.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson moved, and the Rev. H. I. Cummins seconded, the following amendment:—

That the Administrative Committee for the present year consist of ten members, to be hereafter named.

After some discussion, in the course of which Dr. Daniel and other members expressed themselves in favour of a Committee consisting of a limited number of members,

The Chairman pointed out that, under Bye-law 14—the subject having been already discussed during the present session of Council—no motion of this character could be brought forward till after September; and he also reminded the Council that any of the members were at liberty to take part in and to vote at the meetings of the Administrative Committee.

* See Reporter, vol. v. No. 185, p. 120.

The amendment was then put and lost by 26 votes against 12, and the original motion was put and carried.

Letters from Miss O. Hill and Mr. G. B. Dickinson having been reported, and Mr. Dundas having stated that he hoped to be able to attend the meetings, those members of Council were also, on the motion of Mr. Miner, elected members of the Administrative Committee.

THE REPORT OF THE QUARTERLY FINANCE SUB-COMMITTEE AND ANNUAL BUDGET ESTIMATE.

The Report was read by the Organising Secretary. The estimated receipts for the year 1877 were £5,618, as against £5,568 estimated expenditure, the latter item including £1,500 which, it was thought, it would be necessary to transfer to the District Committee Aid Fund to meet the wants of the Committee in the poorer parts of London. The Report further stated that the total estimated expenditure for the year 1876 had been £3,565, while the total actual expenditure had been £5,162. This increase, it appeared, was to be accounted for by the transfer of about £1,150 to the District Committee Aid Fund, by the rent of additional rooms, and by an increase on printing, postage, advertising, stationery, and extra clerkage. The increase in expenditure had, however, been accompanied by a corresponding increase in receipts; the estimated amount under this head having been £3,500, while the total actual receipts were £5,540. The increased receipts had been principally due to an increase of £1,544 in the amount of donations.

The Chairman pointed out that the increased expenditure under the heads of printing and postage was partly attributable to the issue of circulars and appeals, which had, however, considerably augmented the receipts from the general public.

The Report of the Quarterly Finance Sub-Committee and the budget estimate were then approved and adopted on the motion of Mr. J. R. Hollond.

REPORT OF THE CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE, ON OUTDOOR RELIEF.

The Report on Outdoor Relief by the Co-operation Sub-Committee was then submitted for consideration.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. J. R. Hollond, Major Prendergast, the Rev. H. I. Cummins, Mr. Miner, and other speakers dwelt upon the important matters brought forward in the Report; and After some discussion the adjournment of the debate till Monday, April 23, was moved by Mr. Mocatta, seconded by Mr. Hollond, and carried; Mr. Hollond undertaking to move, on that day, the adoption of the Report.

The Council then adjourned till Tuesday, April 17, at 3 p.m.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of March 1877 was 38,901, and 46,831 received outdoor relief, making a total of 85,732. This was an increase of 46 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 237, 11,317, and 20,511 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 585. This was a decrease of 24 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 32 on the corresponding day of last year.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Council does not consider itself responsible for any of the opinions expressed by its Correspondents.]

WHY THE LEADERS OF ARTISAN ORGANISATIONS SHOULD SUPPORT THE CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

SIR,—The debate which took place a few months ago on Mr. Alsager Hill's motion, for better co-operation with the industrial classes, seems at present to have produced no results. It may be well, therefore, to consider in what way this co-operation could be most effectively brought about; and, as a preliminary step, I would submit the following arguments as the most likely to have weight with the artisan leaders in this matter:—

The Charity Organisation Society has been founded to promote common action between all those who desire to promote both the independence and the comfort of the poor. Ought not the leaders of the Artisan Organisations to co-operate with them? Those organisations, whether they take the form of Trade Unions, Benefit Societies, or Clubs for discussion and friendly intercourse, aim at securing in their different ways the means of self-help for artisans. This is also the object of the Charity Organisation Society; it attempts even to make use, for that object, of that desire on the part of the rich to assist the poor, which has often been used to undermine self-help. It desires to do this, partly by facilitating the finding of employment for those who are out of work, and encouraging them to seek that employment rather than alms, partly by preferring loans as a method of relief to direct gifts; partly by giving, wherever they do give, in such a way as would make it improbable that the applicant should apply again for relief; or, according to the favourite phrase of the Society, 'by giving such temporary relief as shall produce permanent benefit.'

Secondly, some of the Artisan Organisations desire to raise the wages of workmen. Nothing has more tended to keep down wages than that indiscriminate relief which it is the object of the Charity Organisation Society to check. Before the Poor Law Reform of 1834, when the magistrates gave outdoor relief as indiscriminately as many private people give it now, the state of idleness and dependence on the rich has been described by those who remember that time as most frightful; and masters did not care to give in wages that support to their men which those men could get from the rates.

The Poor Law Reform of 1834 no doubt told hardly in many places. One or two causes tended to make it very hard. The freedom of combination was then only partially settled; not only was the Corn Law unrepealed, but there was no prospect of its being repealed; and many workmen were irritated at finding that some of the chief promoters of the Poor Law were opposed to those restrictions on factory labour which have since been passed.

But, apart from these special objections, any change so considerable as that of the Poor Law of 1834 must necessarily have fallen hardly on some people; how then can we put a stop to the check which is placed on high wages and independence by the reckless giving of relief of private persons and charitable agencies, while avoiding such a sudden shock as that given by the Poor Law of 1834? Such a change can, I think, be brought about by the careful sifting and dealing with each case of persons asking for relief, by the Local Committees of the Charity Organisation Society, if only those Committees can be recruited from, or at any rate supported by, men who have personal experience of the real needs of the poor. And this brings me to the third point in which the Charity Organisation might promote the objects aimed at by the Artisan Organisations.

If the names and phrases used alike by Trades Unions and societies like the Odd Fellows mean anything, they point to a desire on the part of those bodies to promote brotherhood among the members. Now, this feeling of brotherhood might be extended still further, if the members of those organisations would co-operate with the Charity Organisation Society. Much complaint has been frequently made of the patronising airs of the charitable rich towards the poor. A complaint of a different kind, but due to something of the same feeling, has been made against the Charity Organisation Society—the charge, namely, of officialism, and submission to hard theories, in dealing with the poor. Both of these evils might be considerably diminished, if those who are nearer to the poor in circumstances, and who had in some cases, perhaps, been in earlier times in need of relief themselves, would co-operate with the often too comfortable members of the existing committees. There would be less fear of patronage from those who understood better the feelings of applicants; there would be less fear of officialism and stereotyped theory from those who could judge of the circumstances of each applicant, and could understand, in each case, those special points which ought to modify general rules.

But it is urged by some that all inquiry previous to giving relief, which is insisted on by the Charity Organisation Committees, is insulting and degrading to the applicants for relief. Now, in the first place, everyone who knows anything of the history of charitable relief, knows how often the givers are imposed upon, and how in many other cases relief is given, from ignorance, in an injurious manner. Independent workmen must know, too, how much they are dragged back in their efforts to improve their class by the thriftless poor, who are encouraged in their bad habits by this kind of relief; and whose conduct is one source, at any rate, of the ignorant prejudices entertained by the richer classes against the poorer. Independent artisans ought, therefore, to be willing to welcome this inquiry, even though it may occasionally fall hardly on deserving people. But nothing could tend more to the reduction of irrelevant and offensive inquiries than the co-operation with our committees of men who, from a knowledge of the probable circumstances of the applicants, could point out what were the questions that it would be most desirable to put.

There is another objection felt by many leading artisans towards the Charity Organisation Society, which it is necessary to touch upon. They consider that the support given by many Committees of that Society to the Labour News puts the Charity Organisation Society in direct antagonism to Trade Unions, because that organ, amongst other parts of its work, supplies information to employers as to where they will find workmen; and thus it is supposed that in case of a strike the Labour News would be practically the friend of the employer against the Trade Unions. Now, in the first place, no one can be better aware than the skilled artisan that there is a large field of labour which is not recognised by their Trade Unions, and to which, it must be owned, the Trades Unions in the Welsh strikes of 1875-76 showed themselves somewhat ungenerous. Now, it is with this kind of 'broken labour,' as it has been called, that the Labour News is principally concerned; and though it may be said that Mr. Kenny's 'Labourer's League' has attempted to supply the place of a Trade Union towards this kind of labour, yet, in the first place, that league is as yet in its infancy; and, in the second place, the Labour News, so far from taking up an attitude of hostility to the league, has more than once called attention to it, and spoken of it in terms of encouragement. And even if the information given by the Labour News were occasionally supplied to employers whose men were on strike, surely it is not for trade unionists to say that their cause can only be supported by the suppression of facts. If they will turn to 'Kingsley's Memoirs,' they will see that Kingsley, who disliked the cut and dried theories of political economists, and was bitterly prejudiced against manufacturers, yet looked forward to the establishment of a Labour News as one of the outcomes of the Christian Socialist Movement.

The question then remains, how this co-operation is to be brought about. I would say generally, first, by readiness on the part of workmen to act on the Committees of the Charity Organisation Society; secondly, by a readiness on the part of trade unionists to use any information that they may have gained for the benefit of that poorer class who come specially under the cognisance of the Charity Organisation Society. Thus they might afford information, where the investigations of our Committees and the Labour News alike fail to give it, of the general condition of the labour market in various parts of England. They might make suggestions both as to the possibilities and methods of saving in certain trades, and thereby help us to judge better what we ought to require of, and what we ought to do for, the applicants. Lastly, the Council of the Trades Unions, or some such body, might do for the Charity Organisation Society what they have already done for Sir Fitzjames Stephen—that is, they might invite some one to come and expound to them still more in detail the objects and methods of the Charity Organisation Society. If there are any other ways in which these bodies could co-operate for their common objects, we might discover them by a conference between the Charity Organisation Society and some of the leading artisans.—Yours obediently,

C. E. MAURICE.

BLIND CHILDREN UNDER THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.

The following paper, containing the conclusions arrived at by the School Board respecting the instruction of the Blind, has been forwarded to us:—*

'SCHOOL BOARD FOR LONDON.—SCHOOL MANAGEMENT DEPARTMENT.—INSTRUCTION OF THE BLIND.

The following were the conclusions arrived at by the School Management Committee of the Board, after a careful consideration of the opinions expressed at the Conference held at the Board Offices on July 21, 1876, for the purpose of inquiring into the various systems employed in the instruction of the Blind in reading. The Conference was attended by representatives of the various systems, and by several Members of the Board:—

(i) That one uniform system for reading books for the Blind is much to be desired.

1. The effect of the present diversity is to divide into various conflicting channels that charity by which alone books for the Blind are produced, and thus seriously to limit the practical benefits of that charity to the Blind themselves.

2. Because the small supply of literature for the Blind by this diversity is practically rendered still smaller. To individuals, that small supply consists of two great classes—a class on a system which they can read, and a class on systems which they cannot read.

(ii.) That the system in use for the Blind should be, with possibly very slight modifications, the same as that in use for the seeing—viz., the Roman. Whilst some advantages appear to belong to each of the other systems, and some disadvantages appear to belong to the Roman, yet, on the whole, the Roman character is most desirable.

1. Because it is the accepted character of the country, and therefore is most favourable to unity.

2. Because children appear to acquire and, with well-printed books, to retain in manhood their power to read it.

3. And especially because, with books in this character, ordinary School Teachers could everywhere teach a blind child, and ordinary persons could everywhere help a blind child. The unfortunate child would be, so far, in the natural course of things.

(iii.) The Committee are further of opinion that it is not in the power of the Board to do more than record these conclusions, and then accept the present state of things. They, therefore, recommend:—

* See Reporter, No. 211, p. 57.

1. That, as books in the Roman character are at present somewhat imperfectly produced, and as books in Dr. Moon's characters have been already partially adopted, the use of Dr. Moon's books in the Board Classes for the Blind be, for the present, continued.

2. That the Committee be authorised to procure books in Roman type for experimental use."

The Resolutions adopted by the Board were—

1. That for the present the use of books for the Blind, in Moon's characters, be continued.

2. That the School Management Committee be authorised to procure books for the Blind, in the Roman type, for experimental use.

G. H. CROAN, Clerk of the Board.

PROPOSED MEETING IN THE CITY.

A deputation attended the Lord Mayor on the 28th ult. There were present, Lord Dunsany, Lord Monteagle, Hon. C. W. Fremantle, Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., Rev. Harry Jones, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Mr. F. D. Mocatta, Mr. Dudley Smith, Mr. Hugh Smith, and the Secretary. The Lord Mayor received the deputation most courteously. The Secretary regretted the absence of Lord Lichfield, from whom he had received a telegram saying that he was unable to join the deputation, and submitted a requisition for a meeting to be held in the Mansion House. The requisition was signed by partners in the following important City firms: Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, & Co.; Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co.; Baring Brothers; Roberts, Lubbock, & Co.; Peek, Winch, & Co.; C. J. Hambro & Son; Prescott & Co. &c.; and also by the Revs. Harvey Brooks, H. I. Cummins, and others. After a few words from Mr. S. Morley, M.P., the Lord Mayor expressed his ready assent to the request of the deputation, and a meeting was then arranged for Friday, the 27th inst., at 2 P.M.

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 213.

THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 19, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.

By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.

By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.

By repressing mendicity.

Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loeh, 15 Buckingham Street, W., will be happy to furnish further information.

The Administrative Committee to submit to the Council the following for decision:—

Whether the Council consider it advisable to place outside the offices of the Committees lists of those in receipt of outdoor relief?

Mr. J. R. Hollond to move the adoption of the Report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on Charity and Out Relief.

Mr. H. I. Cummins informs us that he will move the following amendment to the motion for the adoption of the above:—

That the best thanks of the Council be given to the Sub-Committee in recognition of the care with which they have drawn up their able Report; and that be referred back to them with a request that they would so far modify the same as that it should not seem to commit the Council of the Society to the principle of the absolute abolition of Outdoor Relief.

Following is a further list of the names of the Representatives of the District Committees for the ensuing twelve months:—

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, April 12. There had been present:—

Mr. E. Peters—subsequently Lieut.-General Cavenagh—in the chair; Sir Graham Briggs, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Bevan, Brand, Hoare, Lawrence, Miner, Tidman, and Venning.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 10, there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Hon. R. Grosvenor, Hon. J. Lawrence, Messrs. Bousfield and Lewes, and Mr. W. M. Venning, visitor.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 10, had been present:—

Captain Gardner, in the chair; Major FitzRoy, and Mr. Bevan.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 11, had been present:—

Mr. C. A. Miner, in the chair; Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Corrie and Hill.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 11, had been present:—

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan and Major FitzRoy.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending April 7th the receipts had been £57. 5s. 9d. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £849. 4s. 5d. and £72. 10s. 2d. respectively, £49. 4s. 10d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—That grants had been made to the following Committees:—Newington, £30; Bethnal Green, £20, and Stepney, £48. Also that £40 had been advanced as a loan to the St. Pancras (South) Committee; the amounts granted since the 1st of October last, inclusive of the above sums, being—Newington, £100; Bethnal Green, £100; Stepney, £148, and South St. Pancras, £100.

MEDICAL RELIEF IN THE METROPOLIS.

The Special Meeting of Council was held at the Society of Arts, John Street, Adelphi, at 4 P.M. on the 17th inst. Dr. Acland, Regius Professor of Medicine in the University of Oxford, and President of the General Council of Medical Education and Registration, was in the chair. There were present: Earl Stanhope, Lord Dunsany, Sir Rutherford Alcock, Sir Francis Lycett, Hon. Reginald Capel, Hon. C. W. Fremantle, Rev. Harry Jones, Rev. J. F. Kitto, Messrs. G. C. T. Bartley, Courteney Boyle, Meysey Clive, Danby F. Fry, G. Gulliver, Henry Hansard, H. N. Hoare, J. W. Probyn, G. A. Spottiswoode, and several Members of Council.

The following gentlemen, amongst others connected with the Medical Profession, were also present:—Sir William Gull, Messrs. Ford Anderson, Robert Bridges, J. H. Bridges, R. Boyd, R. Brudenell Carter, Fairlie Clarke, Maurice Davies, W. Guy, H. B. Donkin, J. Langdon Down, J. G. Glover, A. Cooper Key, R. J. Lee, T. Lowas, P. H. M. Mackellar, H. W. Plant, B. W. Richardson, P. H. Pye Smith, A. P. Stewart, J. Watts, Charles West, Hugh Davies, J. Eric Erichsen, Ernest Hart, Charles Hawkins, G. Prescott Hewett, Jabez Hogg, Timothy Holmes, Edward Nettleship, and John James Powell.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, said that the subject which had brought that meeting together was one which, he need not say, was one of the most intricate social questions of the day, and was of increasing importance and interest. It was to be observed that the question had obtained its present magnitude in the memory of every one present; for the system of which complaint was made was only of a few years' duration, and it had only lately become of so great importance. Those present could not fail to derive both instruction and interest from the paper and from the discussion which would follow, for they well knew the great ability of the writer, and the distinguished character and attainments of the gentlemen who proposed to take part in the proceedings. The speaker expressed his great regret that Mr. Selater-Booth, the President of the Local Government Board, Mr. Stansfeld, the late President of the Local Government Board, and other Members of Parliament, who had on former occasions given proofs of the interest they had taken in the subject, had been detained by their duties in the House, but he trusted they would be present before the end of the proceedings. He then called upon Sir Charles Trevelyan to read his Paper.

Sir Charles Trevelyan said his object was to review seven years' progress, and to propose a fresh departure on generally agreed bases with respect to this often discussed question. Many unfortunate results flowed from the central fact that more than one-fourth of the population of London receive gratuitous medical treatment. Our people never had been, and never could be, effectively treated in this way; there was a great misdirection and waste of charitable funds; to hundreds of thousands this system had been the entrance-gate to those habits of dependence for which our London population were unhappily distinguished beyond the rest of their countrymen; and the medical profession was deprived of its just and necessary remuneration, which reacted to the detriment of the public in many ways. The first attempt to remedy this state of things was made by the late Sir William Fergusson and the Committee and Sub-committees which acted under him in 1870, whose work was taken up by the Charity Organisation Society, commencing with a conference at which Mr. W. H. Smith presided, and Mr. Stansfeld, Dr. Acland, and others assisted; and in 1875 a remarkable memorial was presented to the British Medical Association by 303 members of the profession, including Fergusson, Jenner, Gull, Prescott-Hewett, Erichsen, and other leading men, pointing out that hospitals and dispensaries should be brought into harmony with the improved social and political condition of the industrial classes and the increased length and expense of medical education. The real question was, how to provide for the ordinary medical treatment of the lower-middle and working class. The hospitals would always be open to serious and difficult cases, but these bore but a small proportion to the every-day class of trivial ailments (including those of women and children) which must be properly attended to, if our population was to be maintained at a high average of health. The slender resources of a working man were soon broken down by 'doctors' bills,' but there were few who could not afford a small payment made from month to month on the principle of mutual assurance. For this each family obtains, not as an act of charity, but as a right, medical attendance and medicines at their district dispensary, or, if need be, at their own homes; and they also have the privilege of selecting their own medical attendant from among the officers of the dispensary. The advantage to medical men was that there were no bad debts, and no small bills to collect, all the payments being made in advance, not to the doctor directly, but to the secretary. Provident dispensaries were impossible in the interior of London in the face of unlimited gratuitous relief, but the out-patient department of St. George's Hospital had been so regulated that three provident dispensaries were carried on in its neighbourhood, and others had been established in the suburbs. The special hospitals had to a great extent acted upon the recommendation of Sir William Fergusson's Committee, that patients should contribute according to their means; and the reform of the entire system of medical relief had been facilitated by the recent action of the poor-law authorities; for, as the upper and middle classes took care of themselves, while the lowest class was now satisfactorily cared for by the poor-law, the question had been narrowed to the working class, who could all contribute something towards a common purse for their medical treatment. By encouraging the practice of issuing 'subscribers' letters' and favouring the elementary as compared with the self-supporting principle, the influence of the Hospital Sunday Council had been adverse to reform, while the provident dispensaries suffered from the discontinuance of the annual sermons which used to bring their wants before the inhabitants of the district. The principle of the Hospital Saturday Fund—that those for whose benefit hospitals and dispensaries were established should contribute towards their maintenance, and have a share in their management—was unquestionably sound, but it would be more effectually promoted, if, instead of making a general collection and a general distribution, the working men took the matter into their own hands and established any requisite number of provident dispensaries. The practical proposals recommended as the basis of future action were:—

1. Out-patient letters should be abolished, and admission to the out-patient departments of hospitals should be confined to those cases which, on account of their urgency, difficulty, or other peculiarity, require hospital treatment, while ordinary trivial cases should be referred to provident or, if the applicants are paupers, to poor-law dispensaries. When patients suitable for hospital treatment appear to be unsuitable as objects of charity, they should be required to pay at prescribed rates or to have their circumstances inquired into.

2. The existing free dispensaries should be converted into provident dispensaries, and new provident dispensaries should be established in proportion to the wants of the population. For this purpose the upper and middle classes should come to the aid of the working class until the dispensaries become entirely self-supporting, and some portion of the abundant resources derivable from obsolete metropolitan charitable endowments might with advantage be applied to providing the requisite buildings; but, from the first, not less than half the managing committee of each dispensary should be elected by the members, the remainder being appointed by the honorary subscribers.

3. For the double purpose of securing the prompt admission of cases requiring the special resources of a hospital, and of increasing the supply of instructive cases for medical education, the medical officers of provident and poor-law dispensaries should be authorised to recommend for treatment in the neighbouring hospitals such cases as, from their peculiar or difficult character, or from their requiring prolonged clinical treatment, can best be dealt with in a hospital.

By drawing closer the connection between hospitals and dispensaries two desiderata of the present state of the medical profession would be supplied. Regular means of instruction would be provided in the domiciliary treatment of disease, including the everyday class of domestic complaints which form so large a part of the business of the medical practitioner; and the difficulty of surmounting with safety and credit the critical interval between the completion of professional education and the establishment of a satisfactory practice would be diminished. When students had finished their course at the hospitals, they could not have a more suitable field for acquiring varied experience and laying the foundation of a professional reputation, earning meanwhile an income, which, although moderate, would suffice for their support, than by obtaining an appointment at a provident dispensary, and engaging actively in visiting patients at their own homes, as well as attending them at the dispensary.

Sir Charles concluded by stating: 'In all this we ought to remember that we are an imperial people, and that the prevailing arrangements here are reproduced, by the mere force of habit, in our colonies and dependencies. The transplantation of our hospital system to Victoria is described as follows in a recent letter from Melbourne:—"The old colonist, always a tremendous boaster and immensely proud of anything colonial, will be sure to point with pride to the large hospitals, the benevolent asylums (in plain English, workhouses), refuges, and dispensaries; and with much self-glorying will point to them as evidences of the immense charity of his fellow-colonists. Were he less ignorant, he would be not proud but ashamed of them. In Melbourne, a young city of 230,000 people, surrounded by a large, fertile, and almost uninhabited district, where labour commands high wages, may be seen vice, poverty, misery, and squalor equal to that in any town of similar size at home. If the people would but leave the town for the country much misery would be obliterated. But the Victorians, ignorant of the true causes of poverty, and unmindful of what has occurred in other countries, foster and encourage the growth of all these evils by spending fabulous sums in ill-directed charity. In London the doctor is often disgusted by seeing well-dressed and well-to-do patients seeking gratuitous medical aid, but in Melbourne he would be still more shocked by seeing patients driving to the hospitals in broughams; female patients and their friends rustling in silks and gaudy costly jewellery; and shopkeepers, wealthier than the doctor, occupying his time and exhausting his energies—without paying a farthing."

The Chairman then spoke upon the several points dealt with by Sir Charles Trevelyan, and, as a first duty, thanked Sir Charles on behalf of the meeting. He then informed the meeting that Sir William Gull would move the following resolution: "That the improvement of the people of London in health and habits of thrift and independence demands that, while, on the one hand, out-patient departments should be regulated so as to secure the prompt treatment of cases requiring the special resources of a hospital, on the other, free dispensaries should be converted into provident dispensaries, and new provident dispensaries should be established in proportion to the wants of the population."

Sir William Gull, speaking as consulting physician to Guy's Hospital, said that they were all agreed that the conditions attendant upon gratuitous medical relief in this country were unsatisfactory. It had not always been unsatisfactory, but they were agreed that each year it was now becoming more and more so, in consequence of the conditions of the advance of society, as the chairman had stated. Going back 40 or 50 years, they would find that at that time the poor law department took little care of the sick poor, but they were now drafted into the Poor Law Infirmarys, where they met with the same skilful attendance as they would receive in the large hospitals. Above the very poor, were a class of persons who were not able to pay largely, but who considered that they ought to pay something for medical relief—a spirit which betokened independence, and which recognised the indisputable rights of medical men. The animus of the profession was, he was proud to say, to bestow relief at any moment upon any who were in need, but the excess of this virtue sometimes made it almost a fault. That generous spirit should be respected by the public, but, as a matter of fact, it was not yet sufficiently respected. There was a great idea that medical relief cost nothing to those who gave it, and it was therefore thought by many that it should be given for nothing. That was a mistaken notion. It was a mistake as regards the profession, and a mistake as regards society at large. It put the labour of the medical man in a false position, and it placed the profession at a disadvantage. Therefore it was that those who were present would feel that the medical need of the class above the pauper class would be met by the establishment of provident dispensaries. It was not that these were required by the members of the medical profession, who could bear the burden and the loss, as they had hitherto done; but because, as matters now stood, the poor thought little of medical advice, except in the sense of taking drugs and swallowing physic. If provident dispensaries were established, and the medical men attached thereto were in the habit of visiting patients at their own homes, the best influences would be brought to bear upon the domestic life of the poor. At present the poor had an idea that disease came from Providence, and that it must be cured by drugs. Now if there was a mischievous idea which ought to be got rid of, it was that. Children were often brought to a medical man to be drugged, when they really wanted and ought to be washed. The poor had an idea, when ill, that if they could only swallow so much medicine they must get well again. He believed that one of the effects resulting from that meeting would be to spread the knowledge that disease could be prevented by hygiene, by good food, by careful cooking of the food, and by wisely regulating its amount and insuring its quality. That we should find standing at one corner of a street a gin palace and at the other a medical dispensary was, in his opinion, a monstrosity. He was certain that many people were intemperate more from habit than design. They had an idea that it was necessary 'to take something' in order to 'fortify' themselves. When a medical man went to make a post-mortem, the brandy-bottle was invariably brought out, and he was asked, 'Won't you take something to fortify yourself, sir?' He felt sure that the establishment of provident dispensaries would create a feeling of independence among the people who received medical advice. Then with regard to the use, or the abuse, of the great hospital charities. It was well known that many people came to them who ought to pay. In one sense it was a sort of compliment to the hospitals. There was a feeling prevalent that the great hospitals were so well managed that in some cases people would put off their best clothes and don poor apparel in order to consult medical men at the hospitals. That was, however, a feeling to be discouraged; but people would, in some instances, be dishonest if they thought that by such means they would be able to obtain a better kind of advice. Sir Charles had suggested that there should be no out-patient letters issued, but he (Sir William Gull) considered that they were needful in those cases in which it was necessary to obtain treatment for special diseases, such as diseases of the skin, eyes, &c. He considered that by encouraging the lower classes to help themselves, it would in reality have the effect of increasing their intelligence, and at the same time it would be striking a blow at bad habits. They would all agree in general terms that the present organisation or want of organisation of medical charities required altering. The out-patient departments of most of the large hospitals were a comparatively novel innovation, and were often in many ways, by their operations, detrimental both to the hospital and to the patients, and they might, he felt sure, be curtailed to the advantage of both. They were told that in charity they ought not to let their right hand know what their left hand did; but with regard to hospitals, at any rate, the precept must be most carefully interpreted. Many people came to him claiming charity, and when he did not know them, he referred their cases to the Charity Organisation Society for inquiry. He was personally much indebted to the Society for the pains they took in such cases, and he felt bound to say that their inquiries were conducted so as not to hurt the feelings of anyone. He claimed that those present had met for an entirely unselfish purpose. They had come forward for the purpose of advancing the good of the community, and not with the idea of advancing the gains of their profession. Every class of society should rely upon itself as much as possible to obtain the means of life, and, when overtaken by sickness, to secure the best way of recovering health. The resolution which he had to propose to them was worded in general terms. It would not commit them to any specific action, and he had no doubt that it would meet with the unanimous acceptance of the meeting. In conclusion, he moved the resolution as follows, viz.:—"That the improvement of the people of London in health and habits of thrift and independence demands that, while, on the one hand, out-patient departments should be regulated so as to secure the prompt treatment of cases requiring the special resources of a hospital, on the other, free dispensaries, and new provident dispensaries should be established in proportion to the wants of the population."

Mr. Prescott Hewett, President of the Royal College of Surgeons, said that after the very able and exhaustive speech which they had heard from Sir William Gull, it would not be necessary for him to detain them with any remarks. He most cordially concurred in all that Sir William Gull had said.

Sir Rutherford Alcock said that he would not long delay the meeting. They had listened with great pleasure to the exhaustive and excellent paper which had been read to them by Sir Charles Trevelyan, and they were all agreed as to the extent and the nature of the evils which he had there dealt with, and which were attendant upon the gratuitous and indiscriminate bestowal of medical relief. Whether the individuals relieved at the out-patient departments really formed 1,000,000 out of the 4,000,000 of the population of London was a point which might be doubted—it might be asked whether some of the patients did not appear many times on the same lists. Everyone connected with these charities was aware that people earning good wages, and able to contribute something towards the expenses incurred in giving them relief, did not do so. The destitute poor had the poor-law infirmaries to go to, and between those people and the well-to-do working classes there was really only a very small area which ought to furnish the patients at hospitals and dispensaries. The working classes who were relieved at the latter institutions ought to contribute something in return; the lower middle classes ought not to have gratuitous medical advice: so that there was really only a very small margin between those who could not pay at all and those who could pay something; and he therefore considered that if they had a million, or even anything like half a million, of people receiving gratuitous advice, they had far too many, and among them many who ought not to be so relieved. Such charity neither blessed those who gave nor those who received it; in fact, such a state of affairs fostered a great evil among the classes who were the recipients of this relief. He believed that the working poor of our large towns were less provident, less thrifty, and were becoming more intemperate than persons of the same class in any other country with which he was acquainted. Such a result was a great evil to the whole nation; it limited the power of industrial production, led to distress in the homes of the poor, and largely recruited the ranks of pauperism. A great deal of that might be traced to the system now prevalent at hospitals and dispensaries, which led the poor to make no provision when they were in health and work for the relief of their families and themselves in sickness. But this condition of things did not lie with the poor alone. It was necessary that the governors of, and the subscribers to, these charities should be educated. He had personally made efforts in the case of some hospitals to ascertain whether those who obtained relief were deserving and proper cases, and he had met with difficulty in prosecuting his researches. Subscribers had said to him, 'Oh, there may be some abuse, but it would be a greater evil to subject the poor to inquisitorial inquiries.' They said, 'Your left hand should not know what your right hand does in such cases.' Assuming that all cases were really deserving, that would be a right motto to act upon, but inasmuch as they were well aware that that was not the case, it seemed to him that it was the bounden duty of governors and subscribers to make inquiries, either personally or through the Charity Organisation Society, or any other available channel. Some people liked to delude themselves with the idea that hospital letters were well bestowed, but in many cases they were handed over to the first applicant by the butler, or by anybody else who was deputed to give them away. In very few instances were inquiries made as to whether the applicants were not working people, who might be able to pay something to provident dispensaries. The first evil they had to correct was that of letters, which did not answer the purpose intended, and which encouraged people to beg. The whole tendency of the remarks which he had to offer was, that there was a great education to be effected on the whole subject of hospital and medical relief, beginning with the governors and subscribers. Sir Charles Trevelyan had suggested that they should begin by converting free dispensaries into provident dispensaries, but he (Sir Rutherford) thought that there would be great difficulties in the way of carrying out that idea, and in fact believed that they had better found provident dispensaries de novo. There was one matter which they ought to bear in mind. It was a principle of human nature to value a thing in proportion to what was paid for it. That which was got for nothing was generally considered to be of no value. If they could only instil into the minds of the poor that medical advice was the most valuable advice which they could obtain, he felt quite certain that that fact would more than balance all the other benefits which would exist and be fostered collaterally with it.

Mr. T. Holmes thought that, in the cases of persons who applied for medical relief at the hospitals, inquiry should be made as to the nature of the diseases which brought the patients there. Inquiry into the domestic circumstances of the people was, he thought, objectionable in most cases. Then, too, all cases were not alike, for a man who earned 60s. a week might have a disease which rendered more expensive appliances necessary, and he would be worse off than a man having 30s. a week whose case was an ordinary one. He thought that the cases in the out-patient departments of hospitals might be much cut down if there was a systematic intercommunication between the hospitals, the dispensaries, poor-law authorities, and the practitioners, and he considered, too, that the hospital out-patient departments should be merely consultative. As it was, the overcrowding of hospitals deprived them of much of their usefulness, for it was impossible that the teaching of medicine and surgery could be carried out in places where the medical men had to see 100 patients an hour.

Mr. R. Brudenell Carter, Surgeon to the Royal South London Ophthalmic Hospital, thought that the working classes had a right to be heard upon this subject, and that while the governing powers allowed the people to remain in an unsanitary condition, as regards the rivers, the water supply, drainage, dwellings, and the like, it was hardly fair to expect the working classes to take means to pay for restoring the health thus lost. The speaker expressed his dissent from the view, too often adopted, that the working classes were improvident and drunken, as he had seen in his own great experience that they had to struggle against many difficulties, not the least of which was the neglect of sanitary reform by Government, a neglect which engendered disease, to a great extent, among the people. He felt no difficulty, however, in supporting the motion.

Dr. West, late physician to the Hospital for Children, Great Ormond Street, explained the method adopted at that institution, and stated that good results had followed from it. The plan pursued by the Managing Committee, until March 1876, had been, that applicants should, on the first visit, be questioned as to their earnings, and as to whether they are in receipt of poor-law relief. They were then referred to the proper District Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, and their statements on these heads were verified. If it appeared, upon inquiry, that the earnings of the head of the family exceeded 30s. a week, or that poor-law relief was being received, the Committee refused to affix to the hospital letter the official stamp, without which the applicant could not visit the hospital a second time and receive medical relief. Provision was also made for exceptional cases.

The Hon. Reginald Capel, of the Society for the Relief of Distress, described the steps taken by the Great Northern Hospital to test the statements made by patients as to their earnings, and stated that in very few instances only were these statements proved to be false. He proceeded to give his own views as to the classes which ought to receive gratuitous relief at hospitals, saying that no married man who had 26s. a week, whatever number of children he had, should receive this relief, and no single man with 18s. a week should receive it. He suggested that, to be thoroughly successful, the provident dispensaries should be under the hospital roof, saying that many of the people came to hospitals because they thought they got the best advice; and, to show how much patients could give, he instanced the fact that in the Harrow Road Hospital the voluntary contributions of the patients were at the rate of £600 a year.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson, Rector of St. Clement Danes, supported the motion, saying that his experience showed him that the people valued what they paid for; thus, when they had free schools they neglected to send the children, but when they had to pay, the children were sent regularly.

Mr. C. J. Stevens, a member of the Fulham District Committee, explained the working of a medical club established in Hammersmith and Fulham, which, he said, was thoroughly successful.

Mr. Flewer, one of the secretaries of the Saturday Hospital Fund, spoke of the desire of the working classes to help the hospitals. He did not think that the provident dispensaries gave the doctors all the advantages which they ought to reap.

Dr. Watkins and other gentlemen having spoken, the motion was carried unanimously.

Sir Charles Trevelyan then expressed his gratification at the discussion which had been elicited. He pointed out that the provident dispensaries were becoming more and more self-supporting, to the advantage alike of the people and of the medical men, and warmly thanked his audience for the attention they had given to this important subject.

Hearty votes of thanks were given to Sir Charles and to the Chairman, and the proceedings terminated.

The meeting was well attended, and lasted upwards of three hours.

'SANITARY HINTS.'—A small pamphlet has lately been issued by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, entitled 'A few simple sanitary hints for working men.' The subjects treated of are ventilation, cleanliness of the room, cleanliness and dryness about the house, water, closets, food and cooking, drinks. The 'hints' are valuable not only for working men, but for all who have to deal with the homes of the poor; and the name of the author (the late Dr. Parkes, of Netley) will be a sufficient guarantee for their thoroughness and practicalness. The price of the pamphlet is one penny.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of April 1877 was 38,667, and 46,364 received outdoor relief, making a total of 85,031. This was a decrease of 711 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876, this was an increase of 1,008, but a decrease of 7,477 and 9,866 compared with 1875 and 1874 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 676. This was an increase of 87 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 137 on the corresponding day of last year.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 214.

THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 26, 1877.

EXTRA HALF-SHEET. PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

CALENDAR OF MEETINGS AT THE CENTRAL OFFICE.

Thursday, April 26	3 P.M., Administrative Committee.
Monday, " 30	3 P.M., Council.
Tuesday, May 1	2.30 P.M., Mendicity Sub-Committee.
	3.30 P.M., Districts Sub-Committee.
Wednesday, " 2	2.30 P.M., Co-operation Sub-Committee.
	3 P.M., Finance and Collection Sub-Committee.
Thursday, " 3	3 P.M., Administrative Committee.

The following business stands for Monday, the 30th inst.:

(1) That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants to the Mile End* and St. Olave's Committees to the amount of £95. 13s. and 69. 18s. respectively, the remainder of the estimated deficits of these committees for the current year.

(2) Mr. J. R. Holland to move the adoption of the Report of Co-operation Sub-Committee on Charity and Out-relief.

Rev. H. I. Cummins gives notice of the following amendment to the above motion:—

* That the best thanks of the Council be given to the Sub-Committee for a care with which they have drawn up their able Report; and that it be referred back to them with a request that they would so far modify its wording as that it should not seem to commit the Council of the Society to a principle of the absolute abolition of Outdoor Relief.

(3) Mr. A. H. Hill to move: 'That in future any matter submitted by the Administrative Committee for decision of Council, except under a ruling of urgency, shall not be considered until the second meeting of Council after the date of such submission by the Administrative Committee.'

At their meeting on Thursday, the 3rd of May, the Administrative Committee will elect the four standing Sub-Committees for the ensuing year.

The following is a further list of the names of the Representatives of the District Committees for the ensuing twelve months:—

E. JAMES AND SOHO (Westminster Union):—Mr. H. Peto and Mr. W. Bevan.
AMPTHEAD:—Mr. B. Bond and Mr. C. E. Maurice.

ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST:—The Lord Dunsany and Mr. A. G. Crowder.
STEPNEY:—Mr. Mitchell and Mr. W. N. Donovan.
MILE END:—Hon. H. R. Scott and Major R. Denne Nares.

* The grant of £25 set down as granted to this Committee, in Reporter, No. 210, could have been put down to the Stepney Committee.

The following meetings are about to be held:—

On Friday, the 27th inst., at 2 P.M., a public meeting of the Society will be held at the Mansion House; the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor in the chair. The Earl of Lichfield, Lord Richard Grosvenor, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, M.P., the Right Hon. G. J. Goschen, M.P., the Right Hon. J. G. Hubbard, M.P., Samuel Morley, Esq., M.P., Canon Milman, and others, will take part in the proceedings.

On May 2 a meeting of the Charity Agents and Inquiry Officers of the Society will be held at the offices of the Council, 15 Buckingham Street, W.C., at 8 P.M.; Mr. A. H. Hill in the chair. Mr. Rignall, Agent of the Stepney Committee, will read a paper on 'Loans.' Hon. Secretaries of District Committees are invited to attend.

On May 10, at 6.30 P.M., a meeting will be held at the St. James and Soho Club, Gerrard Street, at which Mr. H. N. Hoare will read a paper on 'Poor Law Relief and Charity.'

The President of the Local Government Board has appointed Thursday, May 17, at 2 P.M., for receiving a deputation on the education and care of idiots, imbeciles, and harmless lunatics. The Earl of Shaftesbury, Chairman of the Lunacy Commission, has kindly consented to be present.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, April 19. There had been present:—

Mr. E. Peters, in the chair; Lord Montagu, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Captain Fortescue, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Dundas, Bevan, Hoare, Mitchell, Miner, Lawrence, Tidman, Venning, and Mr. Wing, visitor.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending April 14, the receipts had been £150. 3s. 3d. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £709. 7s. 3d. and £134. 10s. 2d. respectively, £49. 4s. 10d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—That grants had been made to the following Committees: Lambeth, £25; St. George's East, £30; the total amounts granted since the 1st of October last, inclusive of the above sums, being £45 and £100 respectively.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 16 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Hon. R. Grosvenor, Messrs. Bousfield and Lewes; Mr. E. Bayley, visitor.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 16 had been present:—

Captain Gardner, in the chair; Major FitzRoy and Mr. Bevan.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 18 had been present:—

Mr. C. A. Miner, in the chair; and Mr. E. Corrie.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 18 had been present:—

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Rev. H. F. Mallet. Rev. P. Melia, Signor Luciano, and C. E. Maurice, visitors.

OUT-RELIEF LISTS.

The Chairman then submitted the following question to Council:—

Whether the Council consider it advisable to place outside the offices of District Committees lists of those in receipt of outdoor relief?

Sir Charles Trevelyan moved:—

That it is advisable to co-operate with the Poor Law authorities by placing outside the offices of District Committees lists of those in receipt of outdoor relief, when asked to do so by Boards of Guardians.

In evidence of the long continuance of the custom of making known and circulating the lists of those in receipt of parish relief, he quoted the following words from an Act of William and Mary:—

That yearly, in Easter week, or as often as it shall be thought convenient, the parishioners of every parish shall meet in their vestry or other usual place of meeting in the same parish, before whom the said book shall be produced, and all persons receiving collection to be called over and the reasons of their taking relief examined, and a new list made and entered of such persons as they shall think fit and allow to receive collection.

The custom subsequently grew up of placing such lists on church doors; but this was, in 1843, objected to by the clergy, and the subject was considered by Sir G. C., then Mr. Lewis, and Sir Edmund, then Mr. Head, who issued an order, which was virtually a return to the practice prescribed by the above-quoted statute—that is, that lists of those in receipt of parish relief were to be submitted to the vestries.

But the reasons for giving a wider circulation to the lists than that required by the statute were too strong for the legislation, and in some way or other the Guardians continued to make the lists public. In 1870 the question came up in another form. The Poor Law auditors continually found charges in the accounts of the Guardians for publishing and advertising these lists, which, on grounds of expediency, were not disallowed. Mr. Goschen, however, determined to put an end to the irregularity, and the following Order was issued:—

Whereas . . . it is, among other things, provided that the Clerk to the Board of Guardians shall, at the close of each half-year, prepare in duplicate form the accounts of the Union: 1. A statistical statement showing the number of paupers of all classes actually relieved in the course of the last half-year, and other particulars according to directions in the schedule to the said orders attached. . . . And whereas it is also made in the said orders for the preparation of a statement which is termed 'The Parochial List and Statement of Account,' and contains the several matters set forth in the said orders, a copy of which list and statement is thereby required to be made out and delivered to the overseers of the parish in the Union to which it relates, to be laid before the Vestry, and to be preserved with the parish papers. And whereas it is expedient that the Guardians should give greater publicity to these statements and lists: Now, therefore, we, the Poor Law Board . . . hereby order that the Guardians of any Union named in the schedules hereunto annexed may, as and when they see fit, cause such statements and lists, or any part thereof, to be printed and to be circulated among the ratepayers of the several parishes of the Union, or to be advertised in some newspaper or newspapers circulating within the Union, and charge reasonable costs incurred in the preparation, printing, and circulating, or advertising the same upon the Common Fund of the Union.

The schedule attached to this Order contains the names of all the Unions except those under special Acts of Parliament. But Birmingham and other Unions under special Acts complained that the same privilege was not granted to them; and consequently an order was made in 1871 extending the Order of 1870 to 29 other Unions.

It thus appeared that the question had been settled after long experience of different modes of action, and after full and deliberate consideration by the responsible authority representing the Government of the country. The Local Government Board was not only responsible, but had the best means of judging the merits of the case; and they had passed this order, which had the force of law, and was as much an essential part of the Poor Law system as the relief given under that system. The responsibility of the Society would be great if, in this matter, they ignored the obvious spirit and intention of the law, and acted disloyally to the Poor Law authorities, whose support they had received by its promises of co-operation.

The poor-rate was not charity; it was the proceeds of a compulsory tax, administered by persons not spending their own money, and under a strong temptation to be liberal at other people's expense. The majority of ratepayers were poor, and in justice to them, if on no other ground, every possible security against needless or profuse expenditure should be taken. Still more did public policy require that such security should be taken. The temptation to live at other people's expense, rather than by one's own labour, was so great, that every check was necessary to prevent a return to the deplorable state of things that existed before the new Poor Law. The Society had acquired public confidence by their readiness to give an honest opinion on such subjects as this, and they would incur a great responsibility if, on this occasion, they misled the public, from too great respect for the feelings of kind-hearted and imperfectly informed persons. Out-door relief was the pivot on which the progress of society, in all that concerned the improvement of the character and condition of our people, turned, and it was useless to talk about encouraging habits of thrift and providence while this system, which led to self-indulgence and waste, and mulcted and punished those who strove to be provident and self-denying, was not subjected to every possible check.

Mr. R. V. Tidman seconded Sir Charles Trevelyan's motion. He alluded to correspondence between the Lewisham Board of Guardians and the Committee, dating from May last, and bearing testimony to the good which the Guardians believed to have resulted from the practice condemned in Mr. Brabrook's letter to the Times. He referred also to the correspondence between Mr. Brabrook and the Lewisham Committee, and to the action taken by the Administrative Committee in August last in deputing one of their members to confer with the Lewisham Committee on the subject. The practice had, he thought, received a kind of tacit approval, and he urged that the Council should not hastily decide on the statements contained in letters, which were in part written in an inimical tone, in part entitled to consideration, but evidently written without a knowledge of the object for which such a practice was adopted. The Lewisham Committee had striven to co-operate with the Guardians, and they had succeeded in so doing. There were no less than eight Guardians on the Committee, and two of them were among the most regular attendants at its meetings. The advantage of this co-operation must be apparent. Referring to the remarks made by Mr. Balguy, the police magistrate, on the case of Charles Adams, tried at Greenwich in August, he said that, out of a Board of 28 Guardians, 17 were barristers or justices of the peace, and otherwise presumably well acquainted with the requirements of the Poor Law.

Of the objections made to this system of 'checking outdoor relief' he considered that the readiest one was the argument that the continuance of the practice would run counter to popular feeling, and thus affect the banker's balance. He hoped that the Council would not urge such an objection. Men, not money, was what the Society most wanted; and it was its duty to do what was to the best interests of the poor. It might be objected that this was cruel to the poor. He believed—and he had the word of the Lewisham Guardians for it—that it was quite the reverse; they had stated that it was productive of beneficial results. And 'every increase in the poor-rate bore more keenly on the poorest class than on any other; for the small tradesmen, from whom the poor purchase necessities, were, as a rule, men of small capital; and every shilling they had to pay in rates not only contracted their capital, but obliged them to increase the prices of their goods.' Doubtless hard cases did occur; such cases were cases for the Charity Organisation Committee to deal with; in making all reforms hard cases were sometimes unavoidable.

The Lewisham Committee sympathised with such cases, but they considered that they had a primary duty to the large mass of the poor, who were thrifty and deserving.

Mr. Edgcombe moved the following amendment:—

That the practice of exhibiting outside the office of a District Committee lists of those in receipt of outdoor relief is undesirable in itself, and likely to be injurious to the Society at large.

He thought that the Society should co-operate with the Guardians in every way that the Society considered right, not in one which it believed to be injurious. With a view to checking outdoor relief, it was certainly most useful to circulate lists of recipients among private persons in a small circle, but to display them in public was, he thought, to make use of an unfair weapon. Mr. Tidman had said that they should not act hastily on the appearance of a few letters in the papers; he considered those letters had, by their arguments, damaged rather than otherwise the amendment which he moved. He hoped the Committee would change their practice.

Dr. Daniel seconded the amendment. The practice would be justifiable if adopted by the Guardians, the dispensers of legal relief. The agents of charity should adopt a more lenient course, and the same care should be taken not to hurt the feelings of a pauper, as of any distressed lady who might be an applicant.

Mr. C. L. Corkran said he spent all his life among the poor. It appeared to him that by this practice the Committee was assisting the Poor Law to give effect to an almost penal law. The whole purport of the arguments in favour of it was that outdoor relief should be abolished, because it tended to induce improvidence, drunkenness, &c. In Whitechapel, a large part of the 'square mile' investigated by Mr. Bartley, there was about £15 spent in out-relief, but the income of the public-houses in that district was estimated at not less than £45,000. The connection between out-relief and drunkenness, &c., could hardly, he thought, be established. The practice appeared to him to be a system of slander. If the poor sought out-relief they did so with shame, and tried to conceal it.

Mr. G. C. T. Bartley hoped the Council would get rid of the idea whether it was popular or not. The question was—Is it good for the poor? If it was good for the poor, public opinion on the question would come round. He strongly approved of the publication of the lists in the manner adopted at Lewisham. In the Whitechapel Union out-relief, was practically abolished, and it would be manifestly useless there. It might be said the list was not read, and therefore useless. Blue-books and many other official documents were not read, but they, like these lists, were at hand for reference, and for the use of ratepayers and others.

Mr. A. H. Hill moved the following amendment:—

That in matters of co-operation with local Boards of Guardians the Council is of opinion that its District Committees should exercise their own discretion as to the precise form which, under the local circumstances, such co-operation should assume.

Rev. H. G. Henderson thought these lists most useful. When the Committees of the Society were established such lists were much wanted. In Bethnal Green, and, he believed, elsewhere, lists were drawn up every six months, and new names were added to them weekly. But so large a class of people came up for relief, and the publicity was so desirable, even as a check on the Guardians themselves, that he believed the public would ere now have almost put an end to outdoor relief, had this been done everywhere.

Mr. F. D. Mocatta thought that the Society should not act thus at the request of the Guardians. He would prefer at the District Committees that a registry of those in receipt of outdoor relief be kept available for all interested. The persons who prowled about the streets and were likely to read the names on the posted list were not the persons who should see it. The Guardians had places on which they might place their lists, and would, he thought, be able to adopt some plan less open to objection than that adopted at Lewisham.

Rev. H. I. Cummins, who resided at Lewisham, and had, in August last, visited the Lewisham Committee on the subject under discussion, described the good position in which the list was posted; but wishing neither to pass a vote of censure on the Committee, nor yet to approve of the action of the Committee, he moved the following resolution:—

That the Lewisham Committee were justified under the circumstances in assisting the Board of Guardians in that Union in the manner they did, but that it is desirable for the future that no notice not connected with the work of the Society itself should be posted outside the offices of the District Committees.

Dr. Hawksley said he feared the exposure of the lists at the offices of District Committees would lead the poor to believe that our system was harsh, and conducted on workhouse principles. The Guardians should publish their lists on their own premises.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson hoped that the question would be settled by the Council as friends of the poor; and after a few words from Mr. C. A. Miner and Mr. H. H. Hill, Mr. Edgcombe's amendment was put to the vote and lost.

Mr. Alsager H. Hill, in moving his amendment, hoped that the Council would steer, as far as possible, a statesmanlike course. He believed that this was a matter for the discretion of the District Committees—how they should make use of certain documents which were placed in their hands by the local Board of Guardians. Mr. Mocatta had suggested that the lists should be kept in the district offices; he would go a little further, and say that there should be a notice outside the offices that the lists could be seen within; that would be a course, he believed, which would meet the views of all concerned. He only quoted these as illustrations of how co-operation must be modified according to local circumstances.

The Secretary pointed out that the arguments in the letters that had appeared in the Times were based on the presumption that the lists of recipients of outdoor relief were posted up with a view to deterring applications. The object of it was, it appeared from the arguments of those who approved the system, to remove the burthen of the rates from the poorer ratepayers by inducing relations to undertake the care of certain cases. It was for this purpose necessary that the list should be within the reach of the poor themselves. It was unnecessary to post the lists at the door of a District Committee, but no registry or private circulation would be an adequate substitute for the posting of the lists in places where the people could, without difficulty, see them. The hardship of the plan arose partly from the fact that cases suitable for charity had now to be relieved from the compulsorily levied trust fund of the Poor Law.

Mr. A. H. Hill's amendment was put and lost; but the Rev. H. I. Cummins' amendment having been, on the ruling of the Chairman, modified, was carried, and put as a substantive motion as follows, viz.:—

That, in the light of recent experience, it is desirable, for the future that no notice not connected with the work of the Society itself should be posted outside the offices of the District Committees.

The Council then adjourned.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

ANNUAL REPORTS: Marylebone.—The following is an extract from a letter written to one of the Hon. Secretaries by the Vicar of St. Luke's, Nutford Place:—'It would indeed be impossible to overrate the value of the work done by the Society, as seen from a clergyman's point of view. Everyone knows that we are by our position, with or without will, obliged to act to a very large extent as the almoners of London. But few probably reflect upon the deep responsibility that is involved in that. I am afraid that till lately we ourselves were very little alive to its true nature. But it is a result, I think, that we owe as much to the C. O. S. as to anything else, that our clerical consciences are awakening on this point more and more. We are beginning to see that the power put into our hands by the funds entrusted to us for the relief of our poor parishioners will work ruinous harm if not used in the best way. It is pauperism now, and not merely poverty—the demoralised spirit in men, and not the mere hardships of their lot—with which we feel we have to grapple; and directly we look thus below the surface of things we feel what an immense advantage it is to have the help of a Society like this. The careful investigations made by its agents enable us to trace in almost every case the disorder to its source, and direct us by the shortest way to the remedy to be applied.

'I need scarcely say that the more thorough knowledge we get by these means of the various cases that come before us for help has caused a great change in the form of relief we give. For me the old system of doles is dead. We aim first at teaching independence of charity to everyone who applies for it. Whatever we give, we give with the view of removing the cause and not the effect. We try to put poor people in the way of getting a living for themselves. We study to draw out their power and energies before we attempt to relieve the burdens. In this way I feel that the relief of the poor becomes eminently part of a clergyman's work, and that with a C. O. S. "case" in my hand I am possessed of a most invaluable instrument for doing moral and spiritual good.

'Believe me, dear Mr. Wright, yours truly, 'A. S. W. Young.'

PROVINCIAL.

GLASGOW.*—A Case of Imposture.—We have received the following letter from the Secretary of the Association for Organising Charitable Relief at Glasgow:—'In the report of your annual meeting I noticed that one of the speakers alluded to the practice that has been adopted here of calling the attention of the public to the cases of impostors through the newspapers, and, as it may interest some, will you allow me to refer to a case of this kind which resulted lately in the apprehension and conviction of the offender? A respectable-looking female was sent with a ticket on Saturday forenoon to this office; she seemed most anxious to be forwarded to Aberdeen to see her son, a sailor-boy, who had got himself injured on board his vessel. She was directed to call on the Monday morning, but the inquiries made in the interval revealed the fact that she had committed a theft in the lodging-house where she had been staying, and that she had been in possession of an order for her passage to Aberdeen for more than a week. A description of her appearance, the names she had given, and her story were at once put in the papers in order to caution the public. This having been observed by the superintendent of the lodging-house to which she had gone, led him to apply here, and resulted, as I have stated, in her apprehension. It turned out that she was an old offender, and had only been released from one of the Northern jails in October last, after undergoing several months' imprisonment.'

THE CLERGY AND CHARITABLE RELIEF.

At the invitation of His Grace the Primate of All England, a large meeting of the Metropolitan Clergy was held in the Library of Lambeth Palace on Monday last, His Grace presiding. The only members of the laity present were the Archbishop's wife and family, Miss Octavia Hill, and Mrs. Selfe and daughters. Those present included the Right Rev. Bishop Cloughton, Canon Duckworth, Canon Farrar, Canon Cromwell, Canon Nisbet, the Rev. D. Wilson (Islington), the Hon. and Rev. W. H. Fremantle, the Rev. Dr. Hessey, the Rev. Styleman Herring, the Rev. Brook Lambert, the Rev. Harry Jones, the Rev. J. D. McGachen, the Rev. Dr. Williams, the Rev. Dr. Roberts, the Rev. Harvey Brooks, the Rev. R. J. Simpson, the Rev. Prebendary Kempe, the Rev. Dr. Townsend, the Rev. H. Geary, the Rev. Temple West, &c.

His Grace the Primate said he regarded the assemblage as a conference in order to elicit the opinion of the clergy upon a question of growing importance—that of the need of system in distribution of charitable relief. There was an increasing feeling in the country, of which the clergy could not but be aware, that some more definite arrangements for the distribution of charity than those which at present existed were desirable, and this not the least in the interests of the poor themselves. The natural impulse of everyone was to relieve, without any great amount of consideration, those objects of charity under his or her immediate cognisance, and to dismiss the uneasy feelings thus brought to mind by the presence of suffering. But it was most desirable that the relief given should be so administered that, with God's blessing, the evils which exist in the great mass of pauperism and misery should be in some measure, at all events, removed and not increased. It was certain that in a great place like this metropolis, where most of the inhabitants were engaged in pressing avocations, they had little time to attend to individual cases of distress; and yet his own experience at the time when he was Bishop of London convinced him that there was great desire on the part of the laity to have this matter more definitely arranged than it had been, and this need of a more definite arrangement perhaps existed at the present time. Those who had had a long connection with the metropolis knew of the organisation of the Society for the Relief of Distress by Bishop Blomfield, and this did an immense deal of good in its day, at a time when funds for the relief of distress were poured upon those who did not most need help—upon those, in fact, who were most clamorous. The society organised by Bishop Blomfield discouraged isolated appeals for public help, and was most useful in its time; but it was certain that the society, which he trusted would long flourish, was able only to take a limited range. Another society was then organised, principally by laymen, many of these being officers in the army and persons living for the most part in the West-end of London, all of whom undertook a laborious task in order to have this matter of charitable relief placed upon a satisfactory footing. This society, too, he hoped, was flourishing; but still the efforts which were made by the parochial clergy in co-operation with the laity in this second society were by no means sufficient to grapple with the evils found still to exist. At the time of the outbreak of the cholera the necessity of constant communication of the clergy with the Boards of Guardians and with the committee which had the distribution of relief in the mayoralty of Alderman Phillips, pointed, he thought, to the need of some more systematic arrangements for relief than had been made by the two societies he had alluded to, and then there came forward and extended its operations the society known as the Charity Organisation Society. No one could doubt that a great deal of good had resulted from the investigations which this society for organising charitable relief had made, and from the impostures it had exposed. Still more remained to be done. In a growing population like London, where the increase was some 400,000 persons a year, new efforts were constantly needed to meet the demands caused by a distress which must be chronic until circumstances were changed. To meet these demands no one could doubt that upon the clergy of the Church of England the responsibility rested. Those who were thus placed in the centres of districts in this great metropolis, should be surrounded by organisations of persons ready to visit the poor, and should therefore know the true condition of the people better than anyone else. The clergy should know, too, the process by which some families emerged from poverty and reached a position of independence, and that by which others sunk lower and lower until they became permanently dependent upon alms. What, therefore, he had to urge upon the meeting was to give their very serious attention to the way in which charities at the disposal of the clergy could be better organised than they were at present. There were in this metropolis immense funds left in ancient times for charitable purposes. Over many of these charities the clergy had no distinct control. As the time of that meeting was very limited, it would be unwise to enter into the consideration of this other subject—that affecting charities over which the clergy had no distinct control—but to point out, that as the clergy were in their own parishes the almoners of large amounts of alms voluntarily contributed and placed in the hands of the clergy to meet the wants of the poor, their attention should be directed as to the best means of distributing that money. He hoped that in the course of that discussion some plain practical hints would be thrown out by which the attention of the clergy would be directed to the best means of economising the funds placed at their disposal; of showing, indeed, that the clergy could wisely administer these funds and in such a form as not only to relieve temporary distress, but to ameliorate the whole social condition of those who were the recipients of the charity. His Grace again urged the clergy to consider well the necessity of carrying out some practical suggestions, and to give effect to the purpose of the meeting by carrying out, in their own distribution of charities, the objects in which the clergy were so deeply concerned, and not to allow the meeting to evaporate in an expression of liberal and enlightened sentiments. What was needed, he added, was a practical result, and this for the benefit of the poor and the well-being of the country.

The Rev. Temple West then moved the following resolution:—

'That in the opinion of this meeting it is for the best interests of the poor that, except in those cases of old age and infirmity where a pension is the most appropriate form of help, no relief should be given but such as is likely to produce permanent benefit, by restoring the recipient to a position in which relief will no longer be required.'

The speaker said he had no special claim to address his brethren upon this subject beyond that of having had the care of a large parish for many years. The parish was one which might not be considered a very poor one, but still the houses were 'let out;' and while seventeen persons lived in some cases in a house, many must, of course, live in a room. The difficulty in relieving the poor was between making a 'hard-and-fast line' and giving indiscriminately, and he felt that there was a great danger in giving small 'doles.' The rule in his parish was not to give except in a case of sickness, or when a man was out of work, and the gifts were generally in kind—stimulants being seldom given; and the fullest help was afforded in cases in which it appeared possible to do permanent good. He mentioned that in a clothing club among 8,000 persons the sum of £350 was given.

The Hon. and Rev. W. H. Fremantle said that the experience of his brother clergy would go with him when he said that whatever good was done with charity properly applied, great evil resulted from misapplied charity—evils both to the bodies and souls of the people. Charity, he urged, should be so applied by the clergy as to show the beneficence of Christ our Master; and though some people thought the administration of was an easy thing, it was, in reality, a very hard thing. The mistakes had arisen from the distribution of charity being considered an easy thing, and those who had studied the question best knew one of the most difficult of the social problems of the age. He thought it was absolutely necessary that the ministrations of religion be separated from the ministration of charity by the parochial clergy, and those connected with them—that the district visitors and ministers should deal with religion and with charity separately on different occasions, and that the relief should only be given after inquiry, and in co-operation with the laity.

Rev. S. Hansard, amid some laughter, here called out 'Tell us what it is all about.'

Rev. Harvey Brooks said that if Mr. Hansard would study his carditation he would see what it was 'all about'—namely, that it was not the best means of distributing those alms placed at the disposal of the clergy, and he trusted that if Mr. Hansard addressed the clergy he would throw some light upon this difficult subject. The rev. speaker then stated the difficulty of dealing with the subject, in the impossibility of getting out the true condition of people, by relating that a man in the street, respecting the sources of whose income District Visitors could get no information, confided to a friend that he lived by 'gout'—in being to write to all the noblemen and gentlemen he could find with this complaint, and asking for relief as a fellow-sufferer. (A laugh.) The speaker also urged that district visiting could be well and easily carried out without dole-giving.

Octavia Hill said she did not expect to be asked to speak, but she was very glad of the opportunity of speaking upon this subject, which was so deeply at heart. (Hear, hear.) She proceeded to point out that a body of the laity had already entered upon this subject in depth, as a subject interesting not only to the temporal welfare of the poor but to their moral and spiritual interests, and she expressed herself that the clergy had not come forward to help those who had started the work. She urged that the district visitors were ready to learn the principles of administering relief, and only wanted teachers—a position she urged, which it was the duty of the clergy to occupy, and which did not doubt from their enormous experience they were able to occupy.

Rev. Harry Jones stated that he was in the position of one who had nothing to give, and he got on very well without giving at all. He said the goodness of the work done by the Rev. Mr. West in giving relief to people who at the least earned £52,000, reckoning eight in the family, and £1 a week for each family.

Rev. Mr. Hansard then expressed his objection to seeing any new system started for the relief of the poor, and urged that this would only have the effect of encouraging guardians to lessen, as they cruelly had the system of out-relief. There was no need of any change now, as the system existed.

Rev. Canon Nisbet placed before the meeting the plan he had drawn in connection with the Charity Organisation Society, of having men to visit the district cases, and this, he said, had answered very well. The resolution was then put and carried.

Rev. Canon Duckworth then moved the following resolution:—That it is desirable that district visitors should not distribute alms at their own discretion, but should refer all cases requiring relief to a committee of experienced persons, who should decide whether and how relief is given; that the circumstances of the applicants for relief should be fully investigated, though in exceptional cases relief may be given pending investigation.

In reply to the remarks of the Rev. Mr. Hansard, he said that this was not a matter to make a reform, to be ready for a crisis if it should come; the arrangement was when things were quiet. The resolution would be carried by one who had earned good right to speak to it from long and successful service on the Marylebone Committee of the Charity Organisation Society. But, in accordance with invitation, the speaker said he had undertaken to move it, desiring to offer his testimony—whatever it be worth—in support of a reform with which no name was more honourably identified than Miss Hill's. (Hear, hear.) The resolution embodied a principle which he had practically adopted in the working of his own parish—a principle for which it was desirable to bespeak the widest possible recognition.

There was no feeling which grew more steadily in the mind of a man, brought daily face to face with all forms of embarrassment and confusion, than distrust of the old and hitherto approved method of dealing with them. He soon found out, if he had any powers of observation and any knowledge of human nature, that the rough-and-ready relief which the sight of distress moved the inexperienced was no true charity, but a blessed neither him that gave nor him that took, but, on the contrary, had a direct tendency to blind those who dispensed it, and to demoralise those who received it. The aim of all Christian charity, it seemed to him, was not simply to do good, but to do good in the best possible way; to take at those to whom we hold out the helping hand were lifted, if possible, to a higher moral level, not left, when the helping hand was let go, to sink to lower depths of dependence, or confirmed by our carelessness in habits of deception, intemperance, and idleness. There were two good reasons why the clergy in the direction of their district visitors should play into the hands of those who were urging upon them more systematic and enlightened forms of charity. In the first place, it was a difficult and rare thing to find district visitors who might safely be trusted to distribute alms at their own discretion. He did not suppose that he was less fortunate than his neighbours and brethren in the quality of lay-helpers. In his parish, as in the majority of parishes, they were ladies, working from high motives, and exercising in most cases an unmistakable influence for good. But those who came forward and offered themselves in this capacity, earnest and excellent as they often were, had seldom indeed the penetration, the knowledge of human nature, the knowledge of the world, or the practical experience which would qualify them for dealing on their own responsibility with the difficulties of those whom they visited. It required, indeed, no ordinary powers of discernment to do good without doing greater harm. The enthusiastic young worker was apt to think all the world as guileless as herself, and the more experienced worker who was getting rid of her illusions, and learning for herself how complicated the problem of charity was, would more and more distrust her own judgment. One of the acutest and most indefatigable of workers among the poor (Mr. Geo. Bartley) bore witness to the extreme difficulty which he had found in getting at the real circumstances of those who seek charitable relief. 'It is difficult,' he said, 'to get at any exact idea of the real earnings of persons who make their living by alms, parish money, and so forth. The recipients are close, as indeed they need be, for they know that a continuance of their earnings may depend on their keeping their affairs to themselves. I have often tried to ferret out information in complete detail in individual cases, but I have rarely been satisfied with my success.' The ordinary district visitor is not likely to be more successful than such an investigator in arriving at the true circumstances of those who lay their distress before her. In the fluctuating population of a London parish they are often new comers, of whose previous history and personal deserts she can know little or nothing. Moreover, the disastrous overlapping of charities caused by the activity of various Christian bodies in the same neighbourhood adds only to the chances of deception and mistake. The Presbyterian chapel, e.g., insists on finding an outlet for its benevolence within the same area in which the Church workers are distributing relief. The Chapel lady, with her tract and its concomitant dole, enters the house as the district visitor leaves, and the consequence of this superfluity of charity is, as we too well know, an equally plastic religion and morality.

On the ground, then, that district visitors, as a class, are not qualified to investigate fully the circumstances of those who demand pecuniary relief, I would withdraw from their hands, except in cases of the greatest emergency, the bestowal of such relief altogether. And the other ground to which I have referred is this: that it is most desirable to discourage as far as possible the association of mercenary hopes with the call of the district visitor. A wiser conception of pastoral duty has sprung up of late years among the parochial clergy, and many of us are daily protesting and fighting against the rooted notion in the minds of the poorer classes that though the church is not a place to go to, it is, at any rate, a very good outdoor relief office. I know that my brethren in charge of town parishes will make the same complaint as myself, that the view of us as mere almoners or relieving officers overbears every other in the minds of the poorer classes, and that long traditions of unwise benevolence have taught them to care comparatively little for what we have to say, but very much for what we have to give. One of the first things which a parish priest must set about, if he desires to do spiritual work among his people, is to dissociate his visit from the thought of coin. Silver and gold, in his hand at least, he must have none; he must train the poor man to look but for such as he has, the comfort in sickness and in sorrow, the counsel in perplexity, the rebuke of vice, the open ear to every tale of the burdened conscience or the aching heart.

And I maintain that the same rule applies, though with less force, to those who work under his auspices as the representatives of the Church. It should, indeed, be felt that they are most ready to hear every story of distress, and carry it before those who will patiently investigate it, and, if need be, relieve it. It should be felt that they will spare no pains to go to the very root of 'the trouble that is pressing.' But if this influence for higher ends is to be saved, if they are to be guarded, as they should be, from the peril of pauperising those committed to them, it ought to be clearly understood that they visit with empty pockets, and that money grants can never be looked for from their hands. These grants should only come from a central committee formed of experienced persons, who will periodically meet to look into the cases of distress; who will trace out the antecedents of all applicants, and bring their collective judgment to bear upon each separate application.

The Rev. M. Geary seconded the motion, which, after some words by the Rev. R. J. Simpson and Dr. Robins, was carried.

The Rev. Canon Farrar, in proposing a vote of thanks to the Archbishop, spoke earnestly in support of the work undertaken by the Charity Organisation Society.

The Rev. Brooke Lambert seconded the motion, which was carried and acknowledged, and the proceedings terminated.

INTEMPERANCE.—The North St. Pancras Committee report that: 'In reflecting upon the producing causes of distress, it is painful to find that the chief is drink. To this may be attributed, directly and indirectly, more than one-half of the cases we have considered during the past year. . . . The St. Olave's Committee add like testimony:—'Intemperance, as usual, shows itself as the cause of a large proportion of the suffering met with. The 32 and 106 applicants, dismissed respectively, as Undeserving, and as Cases for Poor Law or otherwise Ineligible, were for the most part drunkards. This failing has, since the institution of social clubs, become so infrequent among the richer classes, as to be held a vice. The same remedy would equally apply to the case of the poor. Such clubs for the poorer classes have been started, and have prospered in parishes both in London and in the country. An active inhabitant of the district could hardly make a better use of his time than by starting a social club for poor men—and women. There would be a small preliminary expense in securing an appropriate house, and a little trouble in securing the first members of the club. The management and expense must, as soon as practicable, be left to the members, as the proof of the success of the club would be, that it could support itself.'

BRIGHTON.—A Mendicant's Story.—A tall, barefooted old man, with a white beard, applied for assistance to a lady in Brighton, who at once recommended him to go to the local Organisation Society. But 'No,' he replied, 'I have been there already, and no one knows how poor people are treated. They are offered a piece of dry bread, and a pint of water; and if they do not drink the water, they are taken to the police station as impostors.' This absurd statement, evidently got up for the purpose of exciting the sympathy of the credulous, was forwarded by the lady to the Central Office, and the Central Office wrote to the Local Office in explanation. This was easily given. The Brighton Society gives a pound of bread to every wayfarer, but he must eat it on the premises, or as much of it as he likes; he is not allowed to carry any of it away with him. As to water, it is certainly provided, and anyone may drink it or not as he pleases. No one is compelled to eat or to drink against his inclination; and as to the police station the idea is ridiculous.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of April 1877 was 38,382, and 44,969 received outdoor relief, making a total of 83,351. This was a decrease of 1,670 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876, this was an increase of 310, but a decrease of 9,020 and 9,506 compared with 1875 and 1874 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 701. This was an increase of 31 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 45 on the corresponding day of last year.

Tuesday, " 8	2.30 P.M., Mendicity Sub-Committee. 3.30 P.M., Districts Sub-Committee.
Wednesday, " 9	2.30 P.M., Co-operation Sub-Committee. 3 P.M., Finance and Collection Sub-Committee.
Thursday, " 10	3 P.M., Administrative Committee.

The following business stands for Monday, May 7:—

I. To consider the following recommendations of the Administrative Committee:—

- (1) That a grant of £25 be made to the Bethnal Green Committee.
- (2) That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants to the Poplar Committee to the amount of £62. 11s., the remainder of the estimated deficit of that Committee for the current year.
- (3) That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants to the St. Saviour's Committee to the amount of £132. 11s., the remainder of the estimated deficit of that Committee for the current year.

II. Mr. F. D. Mocatta to continue the adjourned discussion on the motion Mr. J. R. Hollond, for the adoption of the Report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on 'Charity and Out-Relief'.

(1) Rev. H. I. Cummins has moved the following amendment to the motion, viz.:—

'That the best thanks of the Council be given to the Sub-Committee for the care with which they have drawn up their able Report; and that be referred back to them with a request that they would so far modify the wording as that it should not seem to commit the Council of the Society to the principle of the absolute abolition of Outdoor Relief.'

(2) Dr. Daniel gives notice of the following amendment:—

'That the co-operation of the Metropolitan Charities (p. 8 of the Report) not such as to warrant the Council in taking the responsibility of encouraging the total abolition of outdoor relief; that such encouragement would tend to increase the number of cases of hardship mentioned in the report (p. 8), while the Charity Organisation Society is not in a position to deal adequately with such cases; and that therefore it is expedient to adjourn the consideration of the Report to this day six months.'

(3) Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe gives notice of the following amendment:—
'That on page 7 the words "best place for" be omitted, and that the words "the most appropriate and most effective form in which Poor-Law relief can be given to," be substituted for them.'

* Members of Council can obtain copies of this Report on application to the Secretary.

III. Mr. W. F. Lawrence to move:—

'That, inasmuch as it is desirable that the public should be made aware of the claims of the deserving poor, as well as of the demerits of the undeserving, this Society should publish in the Times a monthly list of deserving cases, and the sums required for their need, or set on foot some other system for getting money to deserving cases of destitution.'

STEPNEY AND MILE END COMMITTEES.—Mr. H. N. Dowson has been elected one of the representatives of the Stepney Committee, and hon. secretary of the Mile End Committee.

ST. GILES'.—Mr. H. M. Keary and Mr. R. L. Kenyon have been elected representatives of this Committee.

HACKNEY.—Rev. T. H. Woodroffe and Mr. T. Copeman have been elected representatives of this Committee.

CITY.—Rev. Harvey Brooks and Rev. W. H. Lyall have been elected representatives of this Committee.

DEPTFORD.—Capt. Cassan has been elected a representative of this Committee.

LAMBETH.—Boundary Line.—The Committee have, after conference with the Brixton Committee, passed the following resolution:—

'That the Committee shall confine its operations to that part of the parish of Lambeth which is situated to the north of the section of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway connecting the Clapham and Denmark Hill Stations; with the exception of so much of the ecclesiastical district of St. Matthew's, Brixton, as lies on the north side of the said railway.'

On May 16, at 6.30 P.M., a Meeting will be held at the St. James' and Soho Club, Gerrard Street, at which Mr. H. N. Hoare will read a paper on 'Poor-Law Relief and Charity.'

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, April 26. There had been present:—

Mr. E. Peters, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major Fitz-Roy, Major Nares, Messrs. Barrington, Bevan, Brown, Hill, Hoare, Lawrence, Miner, Probyn.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending April 21, the receipts had been £69. 3s. 6d. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £678. 16s. 11d. and £79. 10s. 2d. respectively, £49. 4s. 10d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 24 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Miss O. Hill, Miss Howes, Messrs. Edgcombe, Allen, Graham, Lewes, and Mr. W. M. Venning, visitor.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 24 had been present:—

Mr. Aspinall, in the chair; Hon. H. R. Scott, Major FitzRoy, and Mr. Bevan.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 25 had been present:—

Rev. H. I. Cummins, in the chair, and Mr. C. A. Miner.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on April 25 had been present:—

Mr. A. H. Hill, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan and Rev. H. F. Mallet.

GRANTS TO DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

On the motion of Mr. Bousfield, seconded by Major FitzRoy, the following recommendation of the Administrative Committee was adopted, viz.:—

That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants to the Mile End and St. Olave's Committees to the amount of £95. 13s. and £59. 18s. respectively, the remainder of the estimated deficits of these Committees for the current year.

CHARITY AND OUT-RELIEF.

Mr. J. R. Hollond moved the adoption of the Report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on Charity and Out-relief. He said that before the Sub-Committee drafted the Report it was necessary to enter upon something like an inquiry as to the extent to which outdoor relief had been reduced in London, and also to ascertain what class of cases would, owing to the action of the Boards of Guardians, fall upon private charity in greater proportion than they had done hitherto.

The Report was a statement of facts that had been ascertained in inquiring into this subject. Page 2 of the Report contained a statement of the actual amount of outdoor relief. It would be seen that relief in London had been reduced £200,000 since Michaelmas 1870, while from a paper published by the Local Government Board, it appeared that in Whitechapel in 1870 (which was an exceptional year) the weekly out-relief amounted to £168; while in 1871 it was reduced to £120; and was now £12.

He next referred to an appeal by the London Cottage Mission, which he thought deserved the epithet used in the Report, of 'sensational.' The author of the appeal was induced to allow some cases for which he had appealed to be inquired into. Out of thirty or forty cases which were investigated, very few were found to be badly off, while several persons who had been referred to in the appeal were indignant at being described as starving and destitute.

As to starvation cases, eight cases in which it had been alleged that the reduction of out-relief had been the cause of death by starvation, had been investigated, but in no one case did it appear that the withdrawal of out-relief had been the cause of death. It had also been suggested that the increase of vagrancy was due to reduction of out-relief. Relieving officers were, however, it was well known, not allowed to admit resident cases into the casual ward; the increase of vagrants had therefore to be accounted for by the slackness of trade throughout the country, and not by the increase of destitution consequent on the withdrawal of out-relief from residents in such districts as Whitechapel, in which the reform of out-relief was in progress.

It had always been an object of the Society to keep people off the rates by suitable help in time of need. Three classes were especially affected by any changes in the out-relief system—able-bodied widows with dependent children, the sick, and the aged and infirm. The Guardians often treated the first class of cases by sending to a workhouse school as many of the dependent children as the mother could not, by her own efforts, support. The destitute sick were dealt with most charitably by being attended in the infirmary. And while the poor-law inspectors had repeatedly called attention to the abuse of medical out-relief, the reduction of such relief by the Guardians had, in some districts of the East End, enlarged the scope of private charity in dealing with suitable cases of this nature.

In providing for the aged and infirm, charity found a proper field of work, and cases which were unsuitable for 'the House' were now rightly left for the assistance of the charitable. A circular letter had been sent to numerous charities asking their co-operation in this work, but only a few replies had been received. Many charities were, of course, hampered by restrictions; but, considering the enormous charitable fund that there was in the metropolis, the onus of responsibility in obtaining charitable aid for those no longer eligible for out-relief, must rest with existing charitable institutions.

The Report did not express any opinion on out-relief, but was simply a record of facts—of the information which the Co-operation Sub-Committee had collected on the subject.

The Council would, he hoped, adopt the Report, and, as a duty, make public the information which it contained, and which had been collected with considerable labour and expense. Regarding the amendment of which the Rev. H. I. Cummins had given notice, he was sure the Sub-Committee would be glad to alter the wording of any part of the Report; but the facts which it contained should be left intact.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, in seconding the motion, said that the resolution of Council of the 30th October was explicit. It was as follows:—

That as it appears that many cases of individual hardship are occurring, especially amongst the respectable aged poor, in consequence of the laudable efforts of Boards of Guardians to do away with the much-abused system of outdoor relief, it is the duty of this Society, while cordially co-operating with the Guardians, to ascertain how private charity may best be directed to meet these isolated cases; and that with this view the Co-operation Sub-Committee be directed at once to ascertain, from metropolitan and other agencies for the relief of distress, whether some concerted plan of action cannot be devised.

The Sub-Committee had accordingly taken steps to 'bring about a concerted arrangement among the Metropolitan Charities with a view of meeting any special distress which might have been caused by the great reduction in outdoor relief.' The Report now submitted by them was in the strictest sense a Report, for in it only facts were stated, in order that from the facts Council might draw its own conclusions. Council should not be scared at the conclusions to which it was inevitably led by the investigations of the Sub-Committee. The Society would not secure the confidence of the public if it stopped just short of what it knew to be truth. This would please neither those who wished to go the whole length of reform, nor those who opposed all reform whatever.

He then, with the permission of Council, read the following statement, drawn up by Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, the chairman of the Sub-Committee:—

The Council passed a resolution on 30th October last, directing the Co-operation Sub-Committee to ascertain whether some concerted plan among Charities could not be devised 'to meet the many cases of hardship occurring through the laudable efforts of Guardians to do away with the much-abused system of outdoor relief.'

It was not in the province of the Committee to question the terms of the resolution, nor to express approval or disapproval of the decision of the Council, and there is not a word in their Report from which their opinion can be inferred. As a fact, they were nearly unanimously of the same opinion as the Council, although they did not say so.

The amendment to refer the Report back to the Sub-Committee is only on the ground that their opinion against outdoor relief is to be 'inferred' from the tenor of their Report. That from which the mover of the proposed amendment has been induced to infer the opinion of the Sub-Committee, is really not a matter of opinion at all, but a plain statement of the facts, which the Sub-Committee carefully ascertained and set out in the Report. These facts do seem to lead to an irresistible conclusion against outdoor relief, and the mover of the amendment mistakes these facts, and the conclusion which he cannot himself help drawing from them, for an expression of opinion by the Sub-Committee.

It would be curious if the Council, which itself expressed so positive an opinion, whilst the Sub-Committee expressed no opinion at all, should refer the Report back to the Sub-Committee with an order to review an opinion which they have never stated.

Nevertheless, it is quite open to the Council to pass a resolution in favour of out-relief. It would, in that case, however, have to explain how it came to such opposite conclusions in so short a time. And even then, there is no part Report which it could strike out. The facts would remain, from the mover of the amendment has very properly drawn his conclusion, outdoor relief is condemned.

Mr. H. I. Cummins moved the following amendment:—

That the best thanks of the Council be given to the Sub-Committee for the report with which they have drawn up their able Report; and that it be referred back to them, with a request that they would so far modify its conclusions as that it should not seem to commit the Council of the Society to the principle of the absolute abolition of outdoor relief.

Mr. Cummins said that the Report, without appearing to pledge the Council to the absolute abolition of outdoor relief, had a certain tone, which advocated, by implication, the absolute abolition of outdoor relief. He had reluctantly brought forward his amendment, but as the Report had been discussed in the presence at an adjourned meeting of the Administrative Committee, he had no alternative but to move that the Council, while pledging the care and time that had been spent in the preparation of it, should refer it back to the Sub-Committee.

Charles Trevelyan had laid stress on the words of the resolution of the Council, 'to do away with the much-abused system of outdoor relief.' These words did not, he thought, mean that the Council intended that out-relief should be done away with, but that the much-abused system under which it was administered should be abolished.

The founders of the present Poor Law were well aware of the necessity of outdoor relief, but while wishing to make it the exception rather than the rule, they shrank from the total withdrawal of it. It had subsequently become a much-abused system, and had been distributed to an extent never contemplated by them. For the abuse of outdoor relief, and the selfishness, which assumed the name and garb of philanthropy, were responsible.

The Guardians in Stepney, Whitechapel, and St. George's East were trying an experiment respecting the abolition of out-relief: it was to be a trial, the experiment should be tried, and that the Society should support the Guardians so far as might be possible, by enabling them to carry on the experiment under the most advantageous circumstances. Information respecting this experiment had rightly been sent to the Sub-Committee, and so far, no fault could be found in their report. The experiment, however, being still an experiment, it was not right for the Council to pronounce a verdict upon it; they should wait till the results could be estimated, and then they should calmly and dispassionately decide upon it. The Sub-Committee, like those who made a table 'turn' by their own wishes, while they gave no distinct opinion one way or the other, made all the arguments turn to one conclusion.

The Report drew the attention of Council to three districts, in which no new out-relief cases were put on the list, and in which no statements contained in 'sensational' appeals and newspaper reports of deaths by starvation, they put forward, as evidence, facts had been ascertained by the agents of the District Committees of the Society only, and by Poor Law officers, who were bound to state the policy adopted by the Guardians.

The evidence of the success of the experiment was said to be—out-relief did not produce starvation—a term difficult to define. When it was said that in so many cases of semi-starvation—of disease accelerated by want of proper food—of starvation proving fatal on an attack of cholera, were continually in the papers, the test, whether the poor could go longer, without accepting indoor relief, than they would have done had outdoor relief been offered them, was no test. It was admitted, however, that cases of hardship did occur. How were these dealt with? The Report stated that the cases of 'able-bodied paupers with dependent children,' were 'satisfactorily' dealt with, some of the children were removed from the mother to a workhouse school. The removal of the child from the mother was bad for the mother; the workhouse school, notwithstanding its perfect management, and numerous conveniences, was the means of giving the child a taint of pauperism, which was never got rid of. He agreed equally with what was said in the Report respecting the removal of cases of old age and sickness. The proposal of a penitentiary, terminating after a certain period, proved that the Committee were in search of some means of making the change, to the complete withdrawal of out-relief, as easy as possible. The workhouses, while they had to be taught the lesson of provident habits, should be taught kindly, and not harshly. And the clergy would not, he thought, adopt, at present, any further modification of the existing system than that 'out-relief should be made the exception, and not the rule.' The tone of the Report would be alike displeasing to these two classes; and by it the Council would be committed to an opinion it had never expressed.

Mr. Sapsford seconded the amendment. He said he would confine himself to disputing the facts contained in the Report. He could not conceive that out-relief could ever be done away with, though, indiscriminately distributed, it was as injurious as indiscriminate charity. A Report of the Charities in the Whitechapel District—compiled by the Whitechapel Committee—was referred to in the Report of the Sub-Committee; but the only charities to which their words respecting the application of charitable funds with a view to mitigating the hardship of the reform of out-relief could apply, were the Spitalfields charities, and these had been established but a few years ago, and no member of Council would, he believed, disapprove of their objects or method of application. At the same time, however, many charities in the East End were now being distributed in the spirit of charity organisation—as temporary aid given with a view to doing permanent good. As to starvation, the Sub-Committee appeared to have accepted the evidence of the charity agents and relieving officers, and to have ignored the parliamentary return of starvation cases. He quoted a letter from Mr. Lavers Smith entirely disputing the facts of the cases of alleged starvation as they were stated by the Sub-Committee. He disapproved of the Guardians offering the infirmary in cases in which the head of the family, being sick and destitute, would thus have to leave his home; and alluded to a case of small pox, in which a clerk to the Guardians in one of the districts in which out-relief was being abolished, confessed that out-relief should have been given.

Mr. A. H. Hill said that the members who opposed the adoption of the Report did not confine themselves to the charge that the Report implied an opinion that was not the opinion of Council respecting outdoor relief, but they challenged the facts themselves. And in support of this a parliamentary return of cases of starvation was quoted, which was in the hands of the Sub-Committee, but which had no bearing whatever on the policy of the Report, as among all the cases mentioned in it, there was hardly one in which 'the House' was offered and refused. The starvation cases enumerated in the return were those which no parish relief would ever prevent, and which could only be prevented by thoroughly organised charity. The letter of Mr. Lavers Smith was the other argument against the facts adduced by the Sub-Committee. That gentleman had been communicated with, and the Report had been printed in slip and somewhat prematurely circulated, with a view to obtaining evidence respecting the facts in question; but no evidence disproving the facts had been forthcoming. It appeared to him that to refer back to the Sub-Committee a Report, which was merely a statement of facts, would stultify the whole principles of the Society. Allusion had been made to the weight which the opinion of the working classes and the clergy had in this question. He believed that clear, straightforward principles should be submitted to the working classes, and they would be found as competent as any class to take the question on its merits, and deal wisely with it in the future. With regard to the clergy, he feared that until they understood more distinctly the principles in accordance with which these and other similar reforms were advocated, and no longer shifted with the circumstances of the time, their co-operation in carrying out such a really important change could not be expected.

Mr. G. C. T. Bartley said that nothing was more to be deprecated than timidity of action on the part of the Society in dealing with this most elementary question. The Report pointed to a duty which the Society appeared to exist only for the purpose of fulfilling. The only reason for out-relief was, that some poor persons were considered more deserving than others; it was only justifiable so long as charity was unable to deal with these deserving cases; and with the growth of charity organisation, charity would be able to do its proper work. He regretted that the Report, while rightly pledging the Council to no date for the abolition of out-relief, had not distinctly approved of its abolition. He had never known an instance in which out-relief had assisted anyone to get his own livelihood, and it was a disgrace that in so rich a city, charity hesitated to come forward and do what out-relief was supposed to do, but never did. About 40,000 persons in the metropolis received out-relief, at the cost of about £230,000—that is, each person in receipt of out-relief got, on an average, about 2s. a week, or what is equivalent to about a farthing a week, or a pot of beer every two months, from each one of our population—on the ground that they were more deserving than other recipients of State charity!

Rev. H. G. Henderson said that there was no connection between the question of the abolition of out-relief and the occurrence of cases of starvation. Out-relief made things worse rather than better. With regard to what had been said about children being sent to workhouse schools, he considered that there they were dissociated from pauperism, while the children of parents in receipt of outdoor relief very often grew up to be paupers themselves.

Mr. F. D. Mocatta then moved the adjournment of the debate on the motion. The adjournment was carried.

QUESTIONS FOR DECISION OF COUNCIL.

Mr. A. H. Hill moved from the chair the following resolution, which was seconded and carried, viz.:

That in future any matter submitted by the Administrative Committee for decision of Council, except under a ruling of urgency, shall not be considered until the second meeting of Council after the date of such submission by the Administrative Committee.

The Council then adjourned.

OUT-RELIEF LISTS.—Mr. C. L. Corkran writes, that at the meeting of Council on the 23rd instant, he said, 'In a square mile of East London, according to Mr. Bartley, £450,000 were estimated to be spent in the 320 public and beer-houses in that space. He (Mr. Corkran) believed that that estimate was below the mark, and that the amount reached half a million.'—See Reporter, No. 214, p. 69.

A CRITICISM ON DISTRICT VISITING.

The following is an extract from a letter on Visiting Societies and Lay Readers, written by the late Rev. William Harness, under the name of 'Presbyter Catholicus,' and published in 1844:—

Now, who are these visitors to be? The noblemen and gentlemen of the General Committee do not seem to have contemplated any difficulty on this score. Every obstacle is evaporated before the glowing heat of their enthusiasm, like clouds before the sun. Speak to them of visitors; and—it matters not where the parish or what the population—their active fancy instantly conjures up a group of perfect Christian ladies and self-denying Christian gentlemen, with knowledge equal to their zeal, and zeal proportioned to their knowledge; with plenty of time at their disposal and willingness, at a hint from their pastor, to spend it all in the service of the poor; with humility, which can meet every man on terms of equality as a brother; with gentleness, which never can offend; with temper, which can endure without impatience any amount of frowardness or contrariety; with charity, which can sympathise in every description of distress; with a quick insight into character, which intuitively distinguishes the true from the false, the sufferer from the impostor, and with a nice tact and judgment, which, apprehending at a glance the nature of the ill to be relieved, never allow them to be mistaken as to the best mode of administering the relief required. Such are the qualities necessary to form a good visitor of the poor, who is to go, a stranger among strangers, to deal with affliction in all its variety of forms, and with imposture in all its Protean transformations.

Can the General Committee really suppose that the characters fitted for such an office are readily to be met with? or that when met with they will require no discipline and education to prepare them for its duties? Talk of the imaginative powers 'of the lover, the lunatic, or the poet!' Why, such persons are not half so 'compact of imagination' as the staid members of this new Joint Stock Charity Association! A very few days since one of its zealous supporters told your Lordship's correspondent that 'nothing was easier to be met with than men and women calculated to act as district visitors, for the only qualities required were, "sincere religious principles, and sound common sense!'" Nothing more!—The two rarest qualities in the world to be found apart; and, of course, still more rare to be met with in union!

But supposing the parish of B. should be most highly blest, and be peculiarly rich in individuals of this happy religious and mental constitution; they are precisely the individuals whom the Rev. Mr. A. will, on establishing his Visiting Society, endeavour in vain to press into his service. The man of sincere religious principles and sound common sense is, of all others, the least ready to take such charges upon himself: he has his own business to attend to; he has his duty to fulfil in that state of life to which it has pleased God to call him; he is alive to all its weighty responsibilities, both immediate and remote; he feels that, with all his care to do his day well, he does not do all he ought, and heartily desires to do more; he knows that in taking upon himself the charge of families, with which he has no connexion but the very loose ties of the same parochial tenancy, he thrusts himself into the responsibilities of those relations or friends, neighbours or employers, who are morally and religiously bound to render them what assistance may be required; he is sure that such offices lie beyond the line of his clearly-ascertained obligations; and he conscientiously objects to undertake them, and thus to violate the Apostle's precept by 'stretching himself beyond his measure.' Besides, persons of this well-judging description are fully aware of the moral evil attending such avocations. They know that if there be any one thing which, next to presumptuous sin, is more demoralising than another, it is that official kind of intercourse with the distresses of our fellow-creatures which is drudgily kept up by the visitors of a Relief Society. 'It is better,' says Solomon, 'to go up to the house of mourning than the house of feasting, for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better.' But, I believe, that however true this maxim may be, when the 'house of mourning' is entered in the ordinary course of our affairs, on account of any of the various claims of social duty, the influences which dwell beneath its roof very soon fail of producing their beneficial effect on the hearts of the active agents of a public charity. With such persons, to go in and out among the haunts of misery gradually becomes an habitual occupation; and it soon proves to them no more than a mere mechanical service, in which the finer sympathies of the heart become rather exhausted by over-use than invigorated by exercise. Their minds are more sharpened by the practice of dealing with and detecting the many artifices of imposition, than their hearts are softened by the presence of such cases of real affliction as they may happen to encounter. Suspicion is cultivated in their breasts to, at least, an equal degree with charity. Neither, indeed, is the habit of dispensing alms from funds, which is supplied by others, but of which we receive all the little consequences, visitation and thanks attending the distribution, at all calculated to enoble or refine our nature. It cultivates a hard dictatorial, bustling kind of character, which is as opposite as possible to the kind, meek, and gentle spirit of the Gospel. The visitor very soon degrades, in fact, both in his own disposition towards the poor, and in their estimation of him, into a sort of deputy overseer, or supplemental relieving officer. These are consequences which persons of sincere religious principles and sound common sense foresee; and they conduce, with many other reasons, to prevent their enlisting themselves among the active agents of any such semi-distant benevolent institutions.

ERRATUM.—'Reporter,' No. 214, p. 70, second column, line 19, for '400,000' read '40,000.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of April 1877 was 38,200, and 45,189 received outdoor relief, making a total of 83,389. This was a decrease of 1,632 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876, this was an increase of 792, but a decrease of 8,408 and 17,441 compared with 1875 and 1874 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 711. This was an increase of 41 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 17 on the corresponding day of last year.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, May 3. There had been present:—

Mr. E. Peters, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Messrs. Barrington, Brown, Bevan, Hill, Lawrence, Probyn, and Venning.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending April 28 the receipts had been £12. 12s. for the General Fund, and £6. 5s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £604. 6s. 8d. and £44. 10s. 8d. respectively, £8. 0s. 4d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—That they had made grants of £47 and £30 to the Mile End and St. Olave's Committees; the total amount granted to these Committees since the 1st of October last had been £147 and £125 respectively.

ELECTION OF SUB-COMMITTEES.—The following members were elected to be members of the Sub-Committees:—

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—Sir R. M. Stephenson, Lieut.-General Cavenagh, Major Prendergast, Major Nares, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Mr. A. H. Hill, Mr. C. A. Miner, Mr. F. B. Roberts, Mr. E. Corrie, Mr. E. Peters, Mr. J. R. Holland, and Mr. H. N. Hoare.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—Sir Charles Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Major Prendergast, Rev. M. S. A. Walrond, Rev. H. F. Mallet, Mr. J. R. Holland, Mr. A. H. Hill, and Mr. W. M. Wilkinson.

DISTRICTS SUB-COMMITTEE.—Major FitzRoy, Hon. R. Grosvenor, Rev. S. A. Barnett, Mr. S. Fuller, Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, Miss Octavia Hill, Mr. R. Barrington, Miss E. Howes, Mr. Lewes, Mr. J. R. Holland, Mr. Meysey Clive, Mrs. Lathbury, Mr. A. Graham, Mr. A. P. Fletcher, Mr. Bousfield.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—Major FitzRoy, Capt. Gardiner, Mr. R. A. Aspinall, Hon. H. R. Scott, Hon. R. Capel, Miss E. Howes, and Mr. Bevan.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 1 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Hon. R. Grosvenor, Miss Howes, Messrs. Barrington, Edgcombe, Fuller, and Graham.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 1 had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Major FitzRoy, Capt. Gardiner, Miss E. Howes, Messrs. Barrington and Bevan.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 2 had been present:—

Mr. Alsager Hay Hill, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Rev. H. F. Mallet, and Mr. W. M. Wilkinson.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—There had been no meeting of this Sub-Committee on the 2nd of May.

GRANTS TO DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

The following recommendations of the Administrative Committee, having been duly moved and seconded, were adopted, viz.:—

(1) That a grant of £25 be made to the Bethnal Green Committee.

(2) That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants to the Poplar Committee to the amount of £62. 11s., the remainder of the estimated deficit of that Committee for the current year.

(3) That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants to the St. Saviour's Committee to the amount of £132. 11s., the remainder of the estimated deficit of that Committee for the current year.

ARRANGEMENTS BETWEEN THE SAMARITAN SOCIETY IN CONNECTION WITH THE HOSPITAL FOR DISEASES OF THE THROAT, 32 GOLDEN SQUARE, W., AND THE CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

The following letter, received from the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat, Golden Square, W., on the 15th January, 1877, was reported:—

'DEAR SIR,—I am desired by the Almoners of the Samaritan Society in connection with this hospital to ask whether your Society would undertake to make inquiries into cases which come before them for relief, and if so, whether you have or can suggest any simple form on which to set forth the various points upon which information is desired.

'The Samaritan Society was established to give relief to the poor out-patients of the hospital, by granting orders for food and coals, and assisting those who live at a distance to avail themselves of its benefits free of travelling expenses.

'The clergy have rendered valuable assistance in obtaining information, but in some cases it is difficult to ascertain in what parish or district a patient resides.

'I shall be happy to wait upon you, if it will save trouble.

'Yours faithfully,

'H. K. EVANS.

'To C. S. Loch, Esq.,

'Charity Organisation Society.'

The Administrative Committee, on the 25th January, had resolved that the particulars regarding which the hospital desires verification be investigated by the District Committees as requested; that the whole question be specially reported to Council; and that the form to be used and the special arrangements to be made be referred to the Districts Sub-Committee.

The following arrangements were subsequently agreed upon, and approved by the Administrative Committee on the 22nd March:—

1. That in every case a Lady Almoner of the Samaritan Society fill up the subjoined form, after interrogating the applicant.*

2. That the Samaritan Society then send the forms as soon as possible to the St. James's and Soho (Westminster Union) Committee, 37 Great Pulteney Street, W.

3. That the St. James's and Soho (Westminster Union) Committee forward the forms without delay to the proper District Committee.

4. That the District Committees to whom a form is forwarded send the statements entered upon it, and return it direct to the Lady Almoners of the Samaritan Society, Golden Square, W.

5. That, in token of the statements having been verified and found correct, the District Committee stamp the form in the place marked for that purpose. If the statements are incorrect, it will be necessary to report the particulars of the case to the Samaritan Society.

6. That the Lady Almoners of the Samaritan Society enclose a blank duplicate form with each application for inquiry. This may be filled in by the District Committee, and kept for the purpose of reference.

CHARITY AND OUT-RELIEF.

With the permission of the Council letters were read from Lord Lichfield, Sir Rutherford Alcock, Major Prendergast, and Mr. W. Day. Major Prendergast, referring to the words read at the last meeting of Council from a memorandum of Mr. W. M. Wilkinson's,* wrote that he had seconded the motion passed on the 30th of October last,† and was present throughout such discussion as took place, and could positively state that he would not have been found seconding the motion and pressing it to a division had it been the object of the motion to express an opinion—a 'positive opinion'—on the highly controverted point of the advisability of sweeping away outdoor relief, or had the motion been so taken by Council.

With the permission of Council, and at the suggestion of the Chairman, Rev. H. I. Cummins modified his amendment, so that, instead of being worded thus—

That the best thanks of the Council be given to the Sub-Committee for the care with which they have drawn up their able Report; and that it be referred back to them, with a request that they would so far modify its wording as that it should not seem to commit the Council of the Society to the principle of the absolute abolition of outdoor relief—

it should read as follows:—

That, without committing the Council of the Society to the principle of the absolute abolition of outdoor relief, the best thanks of the Council be given to the Sub-Committee for the care with which they have drawn up their able Report.

The Secretary read the resolutions moved by Mr. J. R. Hollond and passed, on the casting vote of the Chairman, by the Council on the 1st May, 1876, viz.:—

That this Council, considering that it is imperatively required, in the interests of the poor, that the Poor-law should be administered with a view to the ultimate abolition of outdoor relief, recommends its District Committees to co-operate with Boards of Guardians in the following way:—

(1) By recommending to them for relief only such cases as they consider suitable for indoor relief in its various forms.

(2) By taking off their hands, as far as possible, all such cases of temporary distress as are not suitable for indoor relief, e.g. cases of sickness where it is not advisable to compel the patient to enter the infirmary.

(3) By referring to them only those School Board cases in which, from the character and circumstances of the parents, it is advisable that the children should be taken into the District Schools; all other cases being considered within the jurisdiction of charity, to be dealt with on the ordinary principles of the Society.‡

He also read the following resolution of Council of the 15th May, 1876, viz.:—

That no action be taken in carrying out Mr. Hollond's resolutions, passed on May 1, 1876, on Outdoor Relief, until after the first meeting of Council in October.¶

It was reported that Mr. J. R. Hollond was unable to attend through illness.

Mr. F. D. Mocatta then continued the adjourned debate. He supported the modified amendment moved by the Rev. H. I. Cummins. He said that the whole question of outdoor relief was of too recent a growth, and the circumstances connected with it too complicated and too little understood, to justify the Council in pronouncing any opinion as to its abolition. While some Boards of Guardians had taken strong measures with a view to its discontinuance, others were by no means convinced of the evil consequences of the system. While believing that outdoor relief was most useful in certain cases, he disapproved of a large and wholesale distribution of it. At present there were not, he considered, charitable institutions such as would meet the requirements of the poor, were out-relief very largely reduced. He hoped the Society might be the means of creating such institutions. Meanwhile, he thought the Council should receive the report as a useful record of facts, but should not adopt it.

Mr. Russell Barrington argued that the Council had never committed itself to the principle of the abolition of outdoor relief, nor had it expressed any opinion in favour of its continuance. The Council, by the resolution on which the report was based, requested the Sub-Committee to make inquiries; evidence was wanted: the Council knew it was not their affair whether the Guardians were right or wrong in abolishing out-relief. But the report did not contain enough simple evidence, and Mr. Cummins ignored the evidence that the report did contain. It was shown that cases of starvation, said to have occurred in consequence of the withdrawal of out-relief, had not been caused by any such withdrawal; and it was stated that in three districts in the East End no poverty or suffering had ensued which charity was unable to meet. Those who did not wish to adopt the report should disprove these facts. The report did not give sufficient evidence; but such evidence as it did give was not taken into consideration by the supporters of the amendment.

Mr. Seton-Karr said that, while the Guardians were in some districts doing what was in their power to remove many of the abuses of the out-relief system, it was the opinion of those most competent to decide, that out-relief could not be abolished; in any case, it was not in the province of the Society to consider the question of its abolition or reduction. That rested entirely with the Guardians.

Mr. Bousfield regretted that the report did not contain more complete evidence and 'stronger' facts. He referred especially to those parts of the report which dealt with the admission of the sick to the infirmary, and the treatment of convalescent cases. He read an extract from a pamphlet on 'Depauperisation' by Sir Baldwin Leighton, and quoted from Mr. Longley's report on outdoor relief, to show that while it was most desirable to keep in sight the reduction of outdoor relief, in the hope of its ultimate abolition, there could be no prospect of its being immediately done away with.

Mr. C. L. Corkran feared that, in adopting the report, the Council would pass one abstract resolution more. It was quite evident that at present the charitable institutions of London would not co-operate with a view to the reduction of outdoor relief. He considered that none had a better right to speak than those who passed their lives among the poor, and he quoted instances to show that the reduction of out-relief in one of the East End Districts had placed on charity a burthen which it was almost impossible for it to bear. The price of bread had risen, and for many reasons this was an extremely inopportune time for advocating such a reform as that intimated in the report of the Sub-Committee.

Mr. A. G. Crowder supported the motion for the adoption of the report. In the three districts to which the report referred, charity had been forthcoming to meet all suitable cases in which out-relief was refused. While it might be said that the relieving officers were not unbiassed, the charity agents, on whose reports the evidence respecting starvation cases was based, held, so far as he knew, rather lenient views on the subject of outdoor relief. He had himself visited nearly all the cases—especially those of widows and children—in which out-relief had been refused, and he admitted that the applicants must, in some cases, lead harder lives. But this a change of fashion, throwing many hands out of work, or being written down 'ineligible' by one of the District Committees, might also cause; it was no proof that the system adopted by the East End Guardians was wrong. He showed that the method disapproved by Mr. Cummins, of sending to a district school so many of the children of a widow as she was not able to support, was a lesser evil than that of giving out-relief to her and her children. As to the sick, charity had always been forthcoming to meet cases in which it was undesirable to send the patient into the house, such as cases in which the applicant was unable to 'pass the doctor,' and thus become a member of a sick-club, &c. In other cases, it was undoubted that the out-relief, which was insufficient for the support of the whole family, often went, not to the sick man only, but to both him and his family, whereas indoor relief in cases of sickness was adequate. With the aged, charity had the greatest difficulties to overcome. But it was quite possible to establish pension societies to provide for suitable cases, and the difficulties would disappear as charity became better organised.

The reduction of out-relief had developed family affection in the most extraordinary way. He could give numerous instances of this; but this and other good results were not to be wondered at, for in their work the East End Guardians were only carrying out what numerous well-known writers who had seriously considered the question, had advocated. It was only necessary to adhere to just principles. He had not known one case in which, out-relief being withdrawn, the family could not get on. As to the starvation cases, he quoted that of Greenslade to show that they had nothing whatever to do with the reduction of out-relief. It was said that charity must first be organised; he believed on the contrary that, to a certain extent, the want of better organised charity would not be felt unless the Guardians first reduced out-relief.

Dr. Hawksley, whilst approving the report, which, rightly, did not pledge the Society to the immediate abolition of out-relief, could not support it, because it did not suggest any mode of co-operating with the Metropolitan Charities. Cases of distress now occurred, and neither Poor Law nor the Charities held themselves responsible. He would wish everything done to make the offices of their Society as attractive to the poor as possible, while the Council took steps to negotiate with all suitable charities, with a view to obtaining their co-operation; if they still held aloof, and would not make common cause with the Society, he thought the Council should make this known to the public, and let the responsibility of inaction rest with the Charities. Having done this, the Guardians might be asked to make more stringent regulations.

With the permission of Council, Sir Charles Trevelyan, who stated that the Co-operation Sub-Committee accepted the amendment of which Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe had given notice, read, on behalf of Mr. J. R. Hollond, the following paper:—

As far as I have heard the debate, the central position taken in the report has not been successfully impugned. That position is that this great reduction in outdoor relief has been carried out in Whitechapel, St. George's-in-the-East and Stepney, without causing great suffering or distress, and that the demands made upon charity in consequence have not been largely increased, indeed, have scarcely increased at all, except in one class of cases. Those who oppose the publication of the facts contained in the report are bound to show that they are incorrect—that the reduction of outdoor relief has caused a large amount of distress, and that charity is unable to meet it. Of this, however, no evidence at all was given last Monday.

The remark that the cases investigated for the London Cottage Mission were investigated by the Committees of our Society, and therefore by bodies who were inclined to assume that they were bad cases, seems to me not to be borne out by the case-papers furnished in each case, besides being an imputation on the impartiality of our Committees. If this is really the opinion in which our Committees are held by members of our own body, we cannot expect the public to have confidence in us.

My only answer to Dr. Daniels' amendment must be, that until a fixed policy is adopted with regard to out-relief, and recognised fully by the public, charity cannot and will not be organised. The very failure alluded to in the report is an additional reason for disseminating the information which has been collected together in it.

The amendment moved by the Rev. H. I. Cummins having been put to the vote was carried, 19 voting for it, 15 against it; Mr. Hollond's motion for the adoption of the Report being thus lost.

Dr. Daniels then moved the following amendment:—

That the co-operation of the Metropolitan Charities (p. 8 of the Report) is not such as to warrant the Council in taking the responsibility of encouraging the total abolition of outdoor relief; that such encouragement would tend to increase the number of cases of hardship mentioned in the Report (p. 8), while the Charity Organisation Society is not in a position to deal adequately with such cases; and that therefore it is expedient to adjourn the consideration of the Report to this day six months.

He said that the Sub-Committee had gone out of their way to take up the general question of out-relief, which had not been referred to them by the Council. He did not think that the evidence given respecting starvation cases was sufficient, nor, considering the unwillingness of charitable institutions to combine for the performance of a common duty, did he believe that the Council would be right to do anything at present that might lead to the abolition of out-relief.

Mr. Lavers Smith seconded the amendment. He did not think out-relief, as opposed to indoor or other relief, could be considered a means of assisting the more deserving poor. As in the diagnosis of disease, the nature of the illness, not the character of patient, had to be considered; so in the investigation of cases of distress the appropriate remedy—out-relief or indoor relief—should, irrespective of the character of the applicant, be available. No hard and fast line was possible. The report was most inconclusive. The District Committees had not been applied to. The Sub-Committee should have received facts from all sides. They should have inserted in their report the Parliamentary return for 1875, of which the following were the figures:—Deaths by starvation. Eastern Division. Bethnal Green, 13; Whitechapel, 5; St. George's, 4; Shoreditch, 1; Unknown, 9. Total, 32. Western Division, 1; Central Division, 7; City and Southwark, 5; Westminster, 1. Grand total, 46. It was no reply to the argument from the facts contained in this return that hardly a single case there mentioned had applied to the Guardians for out-relief and been refused it. The poor in the districts in which out-relief had been reduced did not apply for out-relief, because they knew it would be refused to them.

Sir Charles Trevelyan then moved the adjournment of the debate, which was carried.

The Council then adjourned.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES: ANNUAL REPORTS.

ST. OLAVE'S.—Public Day Nurseries.—These have lately become even more needful than formerly. The School Board very properly obliges the attendance at school of the little nurses with whom mothers were wont to leave their infants while themselves absent at work.

'A woman in the poorer classes cannot, at the same time, look after her children at home and earn enough to keep them alive; the calling which can be followed by her in her own home are the worst paid. It is very desirable that a public nursery should be attached to each school of the London Board, under whose control such nurseries should be. Mothers could then bring their infants and elder children to the nursery and school respectively, or could entrust the infants to the care of the other children to leave at the nursery. A small payment would be made in advance, for which food and attendance would be given. Women might then go where the best wages could be earned, and feel under no anxiety as to the safety of their children during their absence.

There can, however, be no doubt that the establishment of public nurseries would be as great a benefit to the infants as to their mothers. At present, less than 500 children are received daily in the 23 nurseries of London; the yearly increase in the population of the metropolis is nearly 45,000. No nursery has yet been quite self-supporting, but this end has been so nearly reached, that it would seem that, with a sufficient number of children, it might be achieved after the preliminary cost of establishment had been provided.

The Committee feel so strongly the need of a public nursery in their district, that they have authorised their Secretaries to apply for and receive subscriptions and donations for the purpose of establishing one. Money received for this purpose will be paid to a separate account, and when the nursery has been established, its management and funds will be handed over to such members of this Committee and such other persons as will undertake its control, and this Committee will cease to have further charge of it.

Inquiries for Private Persons.—Paddington and Kensington call attention to this branch of their work. At the former 'benevolent persons are, in an increasing number of cases, consulting the Society, and obtaining information from it, before they give their charity; a conclusion which is also confirmed by the numerous visits (numbering nearly 700) which have been made at the office in the course of the year by persons for the purpose of inquiring about cases or of getting information about charities.'

At Kensington, 'out of 353 cases in this class' ('reported in answer to inquiries') we were able to report favourably upon as many as 163. In most of these we know—in all we believe—that suitable relief was administered; a considerable sum of money being thus spent, we are glad to believe, in really beneficial charity at our instigation. . . . In looking back on the work of the past year, we think we may say we are steadily gaining ground. We say this not merely because we have been asked in so large a number of ses for advice or information only upon which others were prepared but because those who have come to us for money or active help very much more disposed to accept our statements of facts, and to our opinions and suggestions, than was formerly the case. Comparatively few charitable persons now ask us for money only; an increasing tendency to seek rather advice or personal assistance: there being several members of our body who give a large amount of time, thought, labour, the latter at times of a very uninviting description, in their attempt to devise the best means of helping a difficult case. Of course we venture to say that the view we have taken has been invariably confirmed by the applicant's friends to be correct; but there is an increasing tendency to acquiesce in our decisions.

THE ST. PANCRAZ: Ladies' Work.—A society of ladies has been formed in this parish for the purpose of finding situations for friendless girls, and of giving them some training and outfit, visiting and generally befriending them, and the Committee have found this Society very helpful in that most arduous work.

THE CITY COMMITTEE.—Whilst the City Committee report—'They are glad to be able to state that since the commencement of their operations they have only had to refuse loans as bad debts in three cases, while in the great majority of cases loans have been paid off with the most praiseworthy punctuality, many instances are now alone sought for, where, formerly, grants have been expected, and in all probability given; and the Greenwich Committee are able to state that they 'continue to aid the poor chiefly by loans, the total of only £35 having proved sufficient to enable them to lend £560 they commenced operations, and the loss has only averaged 1 per cent.' the Wandsworth Committee have to regret that they 'have had considerable difficulty in obtaining repayment of some of the loans granted, and are compelled to enforce their claims either against the debtors or their relatives. This is an imperative, though very unpleasant, duty, as if loans would be merely gifts in disguise, and the moral results would be bad. The Committee have learnt by experience that the greatest difficulty is necessary in making loans, and they regret to say that the difficulty is generally in inverse proportion to the amount lent, and that, while the very poor repay with fair punctuality, those in a superior class (a class which it might have been thought the Society could most easily assist) are much less mindful of their obligations.' The opinion of the Wandsworth Committee is, we believe, very much in accordance with the last clause, and they accordingly seldom issue loans for more than £10, but we should be glad to learn the experience of other District Committees.

PROVINCIAL.

THE TENBY COTTAGE HOSPITAL.—At the Annual Meeting of this Institution, on January last, a discussion was raised as to the eligibility, as out-patients, of 'indoor servants in place,' and it was resolved that the words 'in special cases to be decided by the House Committee' should be added to the clause which declared them ineligible. We should like to call attention to the Committee of the Hospital to the action taken at the meeting with regard to domestic servants. The provident dispensary there is now open to them, 'when considered eligible by the Committee of management,' on payment of 5s. per annum, in not less than half-yearly instalments. The Tenby report states that the receipts amounted to £14s. 11d., and the expenditure to £191. 10s. 6d. 25 patients were treated into the Cottage Hospital in 1876, being an excess of 11 over the number treated in 1875, and 64 outdoor patients were dealt with at the Dispensary.

THE CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—The Annual Report for 1876 attracts attention to the Crèche which was opened in July last, and to which, for the months ending December 31, 1876, there were 163 admissions. The Crèche, which is under the direct supervision of the Ladies' Committee, including furniture, £20. 13s. 8d., and received £18. 2s. 8d., including 8s. 2d. as children's pence. The report, an able and comprehensive one, shows that 255 cases were dealt with during the year, as compared with 258 in the previous year. The receipts amounted to £147. 6s. 8d., and the disbursements to £159. 14s. 9d. for loans repaid, whilst the sum of £153. 17s. 6d., being £77. 5s. for loans, was expended. From the report of the annual meeting it would seem that the Society has one of the most important means for success in a 'genial, assiduous, and self-sacrificing Hon. Sec.'

THE LONDON CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—The Committee, in their report for 1876, state that, 'at the request of the Committee of the Winter Charity, they revised the list of all applicants, numbering 520, for the benefits of that charity, and recommended those they found to be necessitous and deserving.' The number of cases dealt with, including vagrants, was 132, as compared with 234 in 1875 and 152 in 1874.

MEETING IN THE CITY.

A meeting in support of the Charity Organisation Society was held in the Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, on Friday, April 27, when there were present—the Right Hon. Lord Lichfield, Lord Dunsany, Lord Richard Grosvenor, M.P., the Right Hon. G. Goschen, M.P., Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, M.P., Sir Richard Wilbraham, the Right Hon. J. G. Hubbard, M.P., Canon Milman, Rev. R. J. Simpson, General Stanhope, Mr. Hamilton Hoare, Mr. F. D. Mocatta, the Rev. Harry Jones, Mr. C. S. Loch, Secretary, and others.

At the opening of the proceedings the chair was taken by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, who said that he desired to express the great pleasure which it afforded him as Lord Mayor to offer the hall for the use of the Society's meeting. It was always a satisfaction to the chief magistrate to be enabled to fall in with the views of his fellow-citizens and others, and by so doing to assist them in carrying out their objects. He excessively regretted that his various and numberless duties prevented his presiding throughout the meeting, but he had much pleasure in saying that Sir John Lubbock would take his place. (His Lordship then resigned his position as Chairman to Sir John Lubbock.)

Sir John Lubbock, in opening the proceedings, after thanking the Lord Mayor for the use of the hall and his countenance of the objects of the Society, called on the Rev. H. I. Cummins, the Hon. Secretary of the City Committee, to read a list of the gentlemen who had sent letters of apology for their absence.

Mr. Cummins read letters from the Duke of Bedford, the Duke of Westminster, the Bishop of London, Sir E. H. Currie, Mr. Pease, M.P., Mr. F. A. Bevan, and Mr. Lionel Cohen, expressing regret that they were unable to attend.

Mr. W. E. Gladstone wrote as follows:—‘Sir, I much regret that, excellent as I believe the design of your Society to be, I must ask to be excused from complying with your request. Except in cases of special connection, I am obliged to decline all such engagements.—Your faithful servant, W. E. GLADSTONE.’

Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., rose to move the first resolution. He said he was very glad to have the opportunity of offering his testimony in support of this interesting movement. The resolution he had been asked to move was—‘That this meeting approves the useful work undertaken by the Charity Organisation Society, and considers that, in view of the present extension of its operations, the Society is deserving of increased pecuniary and general support.’ He believed what was most wanted in the City of London was the understanding thoroughly what this Society was aiming to accomplish. He had no idea that its object was merely to devise charity, and therefore he might not unfairly take exception to its name. He believed as thoroughly in charity in the strict sense of that word as anyone in the City of London; but he believed we needed a great deal of care in the dispensing of our help to the poor (hear, hear), and pre-eminently in endeavouring to use the means which we were anxious to place at their disposal in such way as substantially to help them—in other words, to appeal to their spirit of independence, or to help them to help themselves. He felt there was nothing more wanted in the City of London than to expose imposture. There was an immense amount of charity the result of absolute fraud on the part of those who applied for it. (Hear, hear.) He had been a victim himself; but still he would rather make a mistake in that direction than draw the line at a certain point and do nothing. Say what they might, there was an enormous amount of suffering in London that needed to be sought out, with a view to its being helped. He attached exceeding value to this Society, because it was making itself acquainted with the condition of the poor in every district. He believed we had never known in our time so much of the homes of the poor of London as we had since the visits of the School Board visitors. We were obtaining systematic information of the greatest possible value; and the class of persons to whom he had referred, who went into their work with a feeling of hearty sympathy with the condition of the poor, were ready and willing to render help on good cause being shown by those competent to give information. It was of great importance that those who were accustomed to give a reply to applications should secure a searching investigation of the cases that were brought before them; and the Charity Organisation Society placed itself at the disposal of anyone, without charge, to make inquiry and to substantiate, if it could be substantiated, the claim that was being put before those who were willing to be contributors before they parted with their money. He attached great importance to that feature of the work—that they found out the rogues and vagabonds who were preying on benevolence, and so impeding benevolent action by the fraud they committed. The Society did this; but they did what was more important, they found out the suffering that was going on out of sight. There were thousands of people in London living in garrets, to whom it would be an absolute crucifixion to beg, and who were in the greatest possible difficulty as to how they were to get on from day to day—persons in reduced circumstances, people who had seen better days. He was officially acquainted with a Society the object of which was to help gentlemen, absolute ladies, who were seeking to extricate themselves from difficulties—which was putting in their way the means of obtaining work by which they would be able to live (and he was able to justify what he was saying), and enabling them to earn the number of shillings necessary for that purpose, without the degradation of having to apply for charity. He held it to be the duty of a Christian people to try to find out the extent of suffering which existed, and to place at the disposal of a Society like this the means at our command of rendering them help. It was not always money that was required; very frequently it was co-operation, which might be the means of making people earn an independent living, and so keeping up the spirit of self-respect and independence, which was our true interest, viewing the case nationally. The Society was also exercising a wholesome influence among working men by lending money where the utmost moral guarantee could be given for repayment to persons who were under temporary difficulties, by sickness in their families, or some other like cause. The cases were extremely rare (amounting to the smallest amount of money so lent) where the money was lost. So again, on the point of migration of working men from a district where there was a surplus of labour to districts where workmen were wanted—the Society had done great service in that direction by helping people to help themselves. He had been struck with the testimony of Lord Shaftesbury on this subject; and it appeared to him that if this Society was thoroughly supported, and enabled to establish and maintain in efficiency district committees all over London to the number of thirty-six, they would be realising a scheme which he had had before his mind for many years, which was in operation at the town of Elberfeld, in Germany, a town of large extent, but which was mapped out into districts, in each of which there was a committee of all classes, the working classes taking their full share of the obligation to find out and make known where work was to be had, and to transfer and to pay for the transference of men as work might be found for them. He heard a great deal all round about the evils of our Poor-law system, and often thought he saw great need of changes which would be beneficial to the ratepayers as well as to the poor themselves; but he could conceive of nothing more perfect than to induce people who were called upon to part with their money to co-operate with persons to bridge over the gulf which undoubtedly existed between the rich and the poor, by getting in contact with them, by letting them feel that we were not anxious to crowd our gifts of money upon them, but to make them regain their position in the world by industry. It was because he believed in the practical work that was being done by this institution that he had taken part in its work that day, and had assented to move the first resolution.

Lord Richard Grosvenor, M.P., in seconding the resolution, said he had not been connected with the Society very long, but during that time he had been very glad to do all he could to assist it in its practical work. There were leaders of the movement on the platform who would tell the meeting what it was in the beginning. He hoped that it would be shown by their work that they had not gone out of the groove which had been laid down so ably at the commencement. At the meeting lately held he attempted to prove (and, he thought, satisfactorily) that there would always be in this great city a large number of people who required assistance of one kind or another. It was a necessity that in every large city there should be for some people only casual employment; and when there was casual employment, it must have its attendant evils, and the evils of drunkenness, unthrift, and utter helplessness. It was those evils which this Society did the best in its power to meet and counteract. He had always thought that there were three objects which this Society had in view, and had ever kept in view. First of all, it had to deal with classes which required suppression, and suppression was a very mild word. He firmly believed that from its commencement the Charity Organisation Society had done a great deal towards the suppression of mendicancy, and of those who only lived by preying on the charitable instincts of their fellow-creatures—that it had put a great stop to that system—and, speaking in the middle of the City of London, he thought there were many present who could say how often they had been annoyed by mendicants of every sort and description. It must be allowed that at the present moment this evil had greatly diminished, and the Society had had something to do with that. That was a great work which was ever going on to the Society, and which they ever had done, by the aid of Mr. Turner and his associates. Now, they had to look for the present to those who required relief, to those who were to be shown the best way of doing without that relief from charitable agencies in the future. Mr. Morley had very ably put to the meeting that there were many who required to be sought out, many who shrank, for many reasons—their bringing up their habits of life—from soliciting aid in any shape. It was too true that in this great city hardly a week passed without some case occurring of death from starvation. There were those who were unwilling to go to the workhouse, and to have that veil torn down which had hitherto hung over them in the lowest depths of poverty, and they preferred to starve in their miserable lodgings rather than face (he would not say the degradation, because it was not in all cases a degradation) the publicity more or less which attached to their seeking for help. The Elberfeld system, which Mr. Morley had brought before their notice, was one which was very applicable to a town like Elberfeld, and the nearer we approached to that system the better; but when they saw that under that system every volunteer relieving officer—if he might term them so—had not more than four or five families under his notice, the meeting would see that it would be a very long time before, in this great City of London, they would be able to give each volunteer only four or five families to look to. He wished we could. That was one reason why the Society asked further aid in the shape of people coming forward with their personal assistance, as much as they could, to help in a street, in a district, in a parish, in any way, to get acquainted with those poorer brothers who were dwellers in neighbourhoods who so often needed as much a friendly word as timely help, who wanted to be shown the path in which they should go, but did not want money to a great extent, but a kindly word in season. In that way a great deal might be done, and a great deal had been done; he himself had very often had cases brought before a committee on which he had the pleasure to sit, to which they had been able to give not only advice but temporary assistance. He had seen the case in which if he could only have said to some one, ‘Will you go and call upon these persons, help them, give them a hand, show them how to get help?’—if he had had a man or a lady at his elbow who would do that at the time, he would have been doing more good than by giving £5 in money. Till they could get that thoroughly well carried out they would not be able to get to that point of perfection which hitherto the Elberfeld system had brought about. Then, again, with regard to the class who wanted present relief, money was undoubtedly necessary, both for the operations of this Society and as a doing good; and he would point out that this Society in no way with any other charitable institution of the same kind in London. It did not clash with them, but it attempted to work with them, to help them to work. It pointed out, so far as it was able, the means by which such charitable institutions could best do good, and if they could get more charitable institutions to work with them, to come to the help of the poor, for advice—they did not offer to give advice—all they offered to do was to give a simple report on the case, and leave the charitable institutions to deal with it—in that way he was quite sure that a great deal of work which was now done by charitable institutions for individuals who had got no earthly right to claim that it would be done away with. They had all seen the complaints of the out-system of patients at hospitals. This Society had inquired, and endeavoured to put a stop to that. The present system of out-patients at hospitals was not fair on the medical man, on the hospitals, or on the charitable individuals who endowed and kept up hospitals. Mr. Morley had said a great deal about the benefit of out-patients in that he (Lord Richard Grosvenor) entirely agreed with him. In a small society to which he belonged and took great interest in, the 'labdrivers'—who helped those who endeavoured to help themselves, had done more good by lending a man £1 or £2, to enable him to get that rainy day which was almost sure, sooner or later, to come to him, than by getting casual employment. In that institution they had never lost a penny that they had parted with in the way of loan; and the same was the case with the Charity Organisation Society. They often made loans; they made after careful inquiry both into the character of the individual applied for the loan, and also, what was fully as important, the character of his sureties. In this way they had seldom found a man who really deserved help that could not get two men to be sureties for him—that was one reason why sureties were so valuable. If a man for a loan, and it was found that his character and antecedents were what was wished, they asked him to produce two sureties, and if he was able to do so, it was pretty clear that his neighbours had another opinion of him to what he had of himself; and that was a very great help to the Society in granting loans. While on this point he would bear a word of testimony to what Mr. Morley had said about out-patients. In the committee to which he belonged they had a number of School Board cases, and they went into those cases as far as they could, and dealt with them as if they were dealing with individual moneys; and he did not believe that in the history of the metropolis there had ever been anything more nobly done for the people who were wishing to help themselves than Mr. Peek's gift. He was public to state that that was one of the most noble and handsome gifts that had ever been made; and it had done an immensity of good. If the Charity Organisation Society only did its duty—and it was doing its best duty—and if it thoroughly sifted the cases and gave to the deserving, that gift would do more good than could be contemplated or achieved. With regard to the future, this Society did not only deal with giving help at present; but it was always, to the utmost extent of its power, the disposal of its members, doing what it could to find out what were the institutions to encourage, and in what way the working classes might be helped. Committees were constantly sitting. He himself for the months had gone into the question of national penny banks, coffee into all those questions of provident societies in every way; and he viewed them as they had—he would not say taken evidence—but they had gentlemen who represented those societies to come forward and tell them what they could; and very willing they had all been to a single exception; and in that way he hoped they would be able to spread the knowledge of these facts amongst the working classes, means of subscriptions and assistance be enabled to do good to the poor, and ameliorate, as much as lay in their power, the misery and distress and always would exist in London. For these reasons, the ways done and always should be ready to do all he could to help the poor, and he would ask the meeting to do the same. His Lordship then seconded the resolution.

Mr. Harry Jones, who supported it, said he believed he had been so on account of his experience of the working of the Society at the end of London. He certainly had seen something of it there, but had not in other parts of London. He would bear his testimony, going to what the East of London was not always credited with. It sometimes looked down upon as a place in which humanity showed the least favourable aspect; but from what he had seen (and it was his own experience he had had) he was convinced that if sturdy independence of character were to be found anywhere, there was where it was to be found more strikingly developed than in the East of London. There must always be, especially in a large population, work, and with casual work there must be casual wages; and at all wages there must be a great amount of distress. The Charity Organisation Society had turned its eyes and its telescopes towards the East, and had been engaged for some years in investigating cases of poverty and distress in those parts. Of course, they found a certain amount of distress, and sometimes very grievous cases of distress; but there was one thing he did not think they had found very much of—they had not found much gross imposture. The distress which very often came before those investigating it in the East of London was very often of a truly genuine kind. The professed poachers on generosity betook themselves to the well stocked preserves of the West; they did not find much game to shoot in the East. Thus, when the Charity Organisation Society began to learn the condition of the poor in the East of London they found—and he believed he should be supported by those who had more intimate experience of its workings than he had—that although there was no such gross mendicancy as there was in some parts, yet there was a certain amount of distress caused by the parent of distress, improvidence; and the attention not only of the Charity Organisation Society, but of those who had in their hands the strings of the purse from which public relief came, had been drawn most forcibly to this; and probably it was in a great degree due to the Charity Organisation Society that so much attention had been paid to this fact. They heard a great deal in these days of compulsory education, and there had resulted another sort of compulsory education—education in the art of providence, and this was being applied by the Guardians of the Poor, who had, in very many instances, and in some places comprising wide districts, withdrawn outdoor relief almost entirely. It was believed—and he thought there was a great deal of truth in the belief—that much of the improvidence which was found to exist in the East of London arose from a lax system of outdoor relief. That was pointed out in a great measure by the Charity Organisation Society, for it desired always to work along with the legal Guardians of the Poor, and the Guardians had acted upon it with extreme (well, he must even use the word) severity, and in many districts withdrawn outdoor relief to a great extent. It was the case in his own parish, the total population of which was 50,000. It had been passing lately through a period of great depression, inasmuch as one great source of the employment of labour—the sugar manufactory—had been shut up. In spite of this, the poor-rates had fallen (he spoke of the parishes at large, not of his division only) from 11d. to 7d. in the last three years; and that was the case in several other parishes. This was a result of the compulsory education—the result of this taking away of outdoor relief, which to a great extent was a cause of the improvidence among the working classes. During the process there had been much occasional distress—there was no doubt about it. (Hear, hear.) He was not at all a believer in careless living, and he felt the greatest gratitude to the Charity Organisation Society for the aid it had given in investigating cases, and in encouraging the belief that not only should cases be investigated, but when relief was given it should be given, not by doles, but in a more generous measure. The result, therefore, came to this, that as far as regarded the East of London, the process it had been going through by the method of outdoor relief, which had been found to act prejudicially, was not likely to be put on again—at least not for a twelvemonth. The Charity Organisation Society was engaged in carefully watching this economic reformation, and in taking pains that none should be allowed to suffer bitterly and to the end, because of this severe drastic economy. Not only were the original causes, which had impelled this Society, still in existence, but there was this special mission of the Society—eminently in the East of London—not to check or disturb the operation of those forces by which the careless giving of outdoor relief was done away with; and whatever money was committed to their hands for relief was carefully and judiciously applied. That was the chief point which presented itself with reference to the work of the Charity Organisation Society in the East of London. They recognised the necessity for the compulsory education in providence to which he had alluded, and yet they were happy to apply judiciously any money that might be placed at their disposal.

The Chairman said he would venture upon one or two slight criticisms on the excellent remarks of Mr. Morley. He read differently the title of the Society. It was not a Charity Society, but a Charity Organisation Society; and while, of course, there were other important objects of the Society to which the meeting's attention had been very well drawn, they must not lose sight at all of the Organisation part of the title, because there were, before this Society was formed, very large sums given away in this city in the cause of charity; and in dealing with cases of distress they must always have felt that it was the opinion of those who started this Society—and it had been amply justified by the experience of the last few years—that while there were some cases not deserving of assistance, and yet which succeeded in obtaining it, there were others which did not apply for it, and did not obtain it. One of the first objects of the Society was to bring all the different machineries into harmonious operation, and thus make them more effective for their good objects. He supposed the ladies and gentlemen present had all had various applications for assistance based on good reasons, and also on others not so conclusive. He knew of one which was made to himself. There was a man who obtained an enormous number of goods in his (the Chairman's) name, and afterwards pawned them. He was arrested, tried, and sent to prison; and the first thing he did when he came out of prison was to come to him and ask him to give him a clerkship, for fear he should be driven back again to his evil ways. (Laughter.) There were some cases which justified, if true, the assistance which was requested. If they could, they were always anxious to relieve those cases. But it was a great comfort to feel that there was an organisation to which they could refer. He saw in an old book upon this subject that vagrants and mendicants were divided into classes, and there were some very curious names among them. There were a great many different classes; but there was one which had come into existence of late years not named in the list—the begging-letter writer—who had become a professor in one of the branches of modern science. In these cases the distress was put before the benevolent in the most heartrending manner, and naturally those who had the most practice in the art of writing begging-letters were the most likely to put their case in the best form to appeal to the sympathies of those who received these letters. There was another point on which the Society had been most useful. The gentlemen who had moved, seconded, and supported this resolution had brought very clearly before the meeting the main objects and aims of the Society. He took them to be (putting them shortly) as follows: To bring into harmonious co-operation with all the Poor-law authorities the various charitable institutions in the different districts, then to investigate the cases of application for assistance; to place at their disposal the charitable associations which this Society had organised; in the next place to obtain from proper charities or individuals suitable help in deserving cases. Where there were no funds from which those cases could be relieved, then the Society was anxious to relieve them from its own fund. Then, by means of these operations, to, as far as possible, repress mendicity, and to do so by the application of means which had been found very effective; and last, but not least, by all these means to promote the inculcation of habitual providence. These objects were stated as those of the Society; and he thought they would commend themselves to this important meeting. He ventured to hope, as far as the experience of this Society had gone, it had not unsuccessfully endeavoured to accomplish the objects for which it was established.

The motion was then put and carried unanimously.

The Right Hon. G. J. Goschen, M.P., moved the next resolution:—

'That this Meeting considers that the principle adopted by the Charity Organisation Society, of endeavouring to obtain for every suitable case adequate and appropriate assistance from charities and charitable individuals, entitles the Society to the cordial co-operation of the public.' He said he was sorry that he was (although quite unavoidably) prevented from being present to move the first resolution, as he had undertaken to do; but he was not sorry when he found it had been placed in such able hands as had taken it up. He was also relieved, to a certain extent, because the Chairman had just placed before the meeting precisely the same considerations which he had intended to offer, and this would shorten his own task. He took a particular interest in this movement, for two reasons. In the first place, he was the President of the City Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, and, in the next place, he happened to be occupying the post of President of the Poor Law Board in 1869, when this organisation was first called into life, and he then recognised in it a very useful and advantageous adjunct to our Poor Law agencies throughout the country. He at that time thought that this Society would be of the greatest possible use in filling up some of the gaps left by our Poor Law system, and also in bridging over the cases that belonged really scarcely to the Poor Law, but yet which would not be adequately dealt with by any existing charities. He thought also that the Charity Organisation Society would be the means of providing a free interchange of views and of local knowledge between the official and the unofficial distributors of relief; and a minute was issued by the Poor Law Board in that year, stating the official views upon the subject, and inviting, if he remembered rightly, the co-operation of the Boards of Guardians in the movement. To that invitation, he believed, the Boards of Guardians had responded to a very considerable extent. He was of opinion at that time that it might even be possible to go to the length of a constant system of interchange and registries between the Guardians of the Poor and the charities, in order that they might see that they were not giving double relief, and that there was not that great waste of the resources of the metropolis in charity which was alleged to exist at that time. There had been a great change since 1869. Mr. Harry Jones had pointed out that the decrease—he would not say of poverty, because he was not so sure upon that subject—but the decrease in actual pauperism had been very great since 1869 in the metropolis. There were about 100,000 outdoor poor in 1869, and that number had now been reduced to about 40,000 or 50,000. No doubt that had in a great measure been attributable to better agencies, both official and unofficial, for preventing the imposture of pauperism, while at the same time promoting the relief of true cases. And he thought one of the main objects of this Society was to be able to remove the impression that had got abroad at that time, that there was an immense amount of imposture, and an immense amount of double relief. All who knew anything about this subject were aware that the charities were endless in number; that their funds were enormous; but the public of the City of London were repeatedly startled by accounts of cases of starvation. It was scarcely intelligible how all those multitudinous organisations of charity, or rather disorganisations of charity, should exist, and at the same time it should happen that persons were most inadequately relieved. He thought it was stated by Lord Elcho at a late meeting of this Society, in a most able speech, that he had seen that the number of the charities which existed at present in the metropolis, and in 1869, was upwards of 1,000—that there were more than 1,000 different charities; or, excluding religious ones, 930. The total amount of money they received was £4,114,000; or, excluding the religious charities, £2,400,000. These sums, he believed, were exclusive of that immense sum which was so great a burden upon the ratepayers of London. Those sums were distributed, and still it did not appear as if a sufficient result came from them. The Society then originated with the desire of seeing whether through some agency these charities could be brought to work together, so as to economise both their means and their staff—the immense personnel which they dealt with—and while they administered relief, administer it in a more efficient and certain manner. He was informed that the difficulties in bringing the different charities to work together had certainly been overwhelming; and though the association had achieved a good deal, they themselves had been disappointed in one of their chief aims, viz., in inducing the charities to communicate with each other and work together. Though it was disappointing, he might say that one of his main objects and views in supporting the association was to induce this kind of result—to organise the charities of the metropolis; but the task was not too great; and though it had so far been too great—for he was sure the association would not be discouraged—it had been too great partly owing to a cause which they must take into account—that those energetic men who dealt with those charities had the power of dealing with their funds, and they liked the feeling of activity in their administration, because persons were not only satisfied to give money, but there were many who wished to work; and there was a fear among the charities that their work might be administered through a general organisation. Though they might regret this feeling, it had a motive they must have and respect. Now, when they said this both with regard to this organisation and many others, there was one point they had achieved to which he attached very great importance. He thought that not so many years ago the main work of actual relief distributing was confined to ladies and to the clergy; but during the last few years there had sprung up a great auxiliary force in the shape of a strong body of most hard-working and enthusiastic lay assistants who were of the opposite sex, and men had had taken up the actual work of relief than used to be engaged in it before. That excellent society, the Society for the Relief of Distress, was one of those that led the van in this way, and the Charity Organisation Society was endeavouring as far as it could to enlist as much as possible also actual workers—men who would take the trouble to go about amongst the poor to discover the deserving cases, and to see that the charities were administered judiciously—to assist the clergy in that work which was almost too heavy in a great metropolis like this for the clergy alone. The clergy themselves had welcomed the agency of this charity, and especially at the East-end. Where there were so few residents who had leisure or money, there had been a great advantage in securing the assistance of a number of energetic men who must be the agents and almoners of charity. That would commend itself to the approbation of the meeting. The objects of the Society having been explained, they would receive support in the City. The City Committee stood on rather a different footing to other local Committees in this respect—the other local Committees raised their own funds and spent their own funds; but the City of London Committee had made an arrangement with the Central Body by which they paid over all the funds which they received to the Central Body, which in its turn undertook to meet the estimated expenses of this City Committee. And the reason was, that the City being a rich community, and the cases of pauperism few, when compared with the rest of the metropolis, it thought that the funds collected in the City ought rather to be put to—as it were—a common fund of the metropolis than that it should be exclusively spent upon the City. Therefore when they called upon the City to contribute, they asked them to contribute to the general work of the Society throughout the metropolis which required the aid of a rich community like the City of London, in order that the efforts of the Society might be carried to the East and other parts of London, where they were working under the auspices of Mr. Harry Jones and other warm-hearted disciples of the cause. He would conclude by moving—

'That this meeting considers that the principle adopted by the Charity Organisation Society, of endeavouring to obtain for every suitable case adequate and appropriate assistance from charities and charitable individuals, entitles the Society to the cordial co-operation of the public.' He would call particular attention to the words 'adequate and appropriate private assistance.' Inadequate assistance was often most deplorable. It led to every kind of deplorable result; while adequate, and at the same time appropriate assistance, such as loans, to which attention had been drawn by previous speakers—that assistance was invaluable and helped to keep the deserving poor from positions of distress into which they would otherwise fall.

Mr. Mocatta seconded the resolution, and regretted that the gentleman who was to have done so (Mr. L. Cohen) should have been prevented through illness having broken out in his family. Mr. Cohen was the chairman of the Jewish Board of Guardians, which ranked very highly in the metropolis as the administrator of large funds entrusted to it. Mr. Morley had called attention to the system at Elberfeld. That had been copied by the Jewish Board of Guardians, which took 40,000 or 50,000 people under its control. If London were divided into thirty agencies, into rich, poor, and middle-class districts, they would obtain a full knowledge of almost every unit of the population, and be able to find out information for the migratory population. Of all the large work there was to do in this world there was not one which required a larger amount of intelligence than to help those persons who were less fortunate than ourselves. It was difficult, but he did not think it belonged to them as men and women to shrink from a thing because it was difficult to do. If they were to sit in their chairs and not to do things because they were difficult or required great study, they would be unworthy of those blessings with which Providence had endowed us. He was sorry there were persons—who might hear the remark in all classes of society, perhaps more in the rich than the poor and the middle classes—who said, 'What do I know about the poor?' Among the middle class it was said, 'It is all very well for those who have influence and time, and plenty of money, but we work for our daily bread; and beyond that we can do nothing; we have no means at our disposal.' He would say to all of them: Every man and woman who had been brought into the world had duties to perform towards their fellow-creatures; and those persons who had wealth had certainly the advantage of being in a position to assist large movements. But people belonging to the middle-class—the great bulk—had some education; and though they might not have hundreds or thousands of pounds to put down on subscription lists, they might, with the intelligence they had, and the leisure hours they had at their command, do an enormous amount of good, and a far greater than the more wealthy people. He maintained also that the lower class themselves might do it. Though they had neither money nor so cultivated an intelligence as the classes above them, still their intelligence was most lively, and he had often been struck with the untutored wisdom of working-men, who, with the education of the schools, had made remarks worthy of philosophers. If these people would wait on those requiring relief and assist this Society, and call on those below them, give them their comfort and advice, and also by their halfpence (for millions of halfpence made a great number of pounds), they would invest the whole of society with the strong and sacred desire to wipe away poverty—he would not say entirely, but all the vice and manifold unhappiness which were attendant upon poverty, for which there was really no reason whatever on the face of the earth. This resolution pointed to a very important feature—it invited persons, who might not have the time or the means personally in giving direct assistance to the poor, to come to the Society for reference and to come to it as the almoners of their bounty. He very often had had occasion to reproach the Committees of the Charity Organisation Society in a very strong manner; though it ultimately appeared that they had failed from no fault of their own. He had said to them, 'You have taken pains to investigate a case, and given yourselves an enormous amount of trouble—given the individual an enormous amount of trouble—given him reason to think, "If I have been sifted to the bottom like that, these people will do something to indemnify me after they have taken the trouble to prove me for themselves"—and then you have dismissed him without aiding him, because there are no means at your disposal.' He did not blame the Committees for this, because he had been told that they had tried their best to put these persons in a little business, to relieve them, or enable them to emigrate, or put them into some kind of industry from which they would become independent ever after; but they could not, because they did not know whom to apply to for means. Many ladies and gentlemen and many persons in the lower middle class, would be only too pleased to distribute money and other reliefs, which might very much help these people, through the medium of an accredited agent who was found to be worthy of their support; and he did believe and hope that the Charity Organisation Society would be empowered by a great number of gentlemen and ladies to apply to them whenever they found, after giving great investigation to cases, that they were such as might reasonably be deemed likely to succeed, and be free from want ever after, if they could receive such relief as would set them on their legs. He knew there were some gentlemen and ladies who had given such carte blanche in some districts; but their number was far too few for the want that arose. There was, unfortunately, a vast amount of money given without consideration, and this did an infinity of harm. Many persons received numerous appeals, and some, when touched by a begging-letter, would generally give. Many, like himself, were very great sufferers from begging-letter writing. The letters were couched in most sympathetic terms. A lady, the widow of a clergyman, was left destitute with six young children, in some remote place. It was almost an impossible thing for the major part of society to conduct an investigation unaided. If they had a body like this or another society with the same aims to investigate the case and bring out all the facts, they might find out whether the case was true. In the case mentioned all the statements of the lady might be true, but she might have an unfortunate passion for drink, or be fond of playing at cards, or a whole host of vices, and she might have written to all the members who are on the charity lists for funds. Only a thorough investigation, which required an official staff and agents throughout the length and breadth of the land, and in a number of countries with which to correspond, could effect this. It would be an enormous advantage to society at large to help it to do one of its most important duties in life, through an agency which, he might say, was undoubted. But if this agency carried on all its investigations, and had not got the means to relieve the cases, the whole affair was nugatory, and they had spent their trouble in vain. He therefore called upon the meeting to support this movement, and to join in the resolution. Whatever they were disposed to give would be given in a right cause. Let him warn them against this cardinal sin, that money was the soul of charity. They might as well say they would do nothing, because without money they would not distribute material help. There were persons in every grade of society who could help; there was hardly an individual who could not help. The poor themselves required instruction, for when they received large wages they were often quickly spent, and this prejudiced their habits, and did harm to their class. They thought they ought not to look beyond the pale of their families; and the rich ones, if they gave large sums to the clergyman of their parish and the minister who had the incumbency on their estates, often thought that they had done all their duty to their fellow-man when they had done this. He hoped they would all feel how high and holy a work this distribution of charity meant. He was not ashamed of this word charity. The Society would afford an education to men how to be charitable; and such an education, at first defective though it was, he hoped to see before many years greatly improved; and he trusted that the Charity Organisation Society would be the means of putting it on a sound, sensible, and useful basis.

The Right Hon. J. G. Hubbard, M.P., in speaking to the resolution, tendered his thanks to those gentlemen who had so clearly stated the objects of the Society. The display of its duty and character was one which entitled it to the approval of the citizens of London. They were apt to consider that the great things which tended towards the growing prosperity of the City were these—first, economy in the application of the means to the end; and secondly, efficiency in the results which they were to obtain. Now, he thought there was no one subject upon which the application of those two rules was more eminently necessary than in the application of means to charity, for there was certainly no one quality which had been in our own time, and he must say up to the present moment, so difficult as charity. It had been almost impossible for individuals to exercise the natural feelings of charity without being haunted with the idea that they had been victimised by impostors, and that they had probably done more harm by stimulating fraud than they had done good in the way of relieving mere distress. And again, if they employed any of the societies which were instituted for the purpose of their protection, they also felt that in this multitude of societies there was an enormous waste of money in the very machinery which they employed; so that, in fact, the work of charity had been beset with difficulties on every side. From what he had heard that day, he must say that this Society was throwing light upon a very difficult and obscure question. If the objects which were contained in the programme of the Society were ably and honestly carried out, they would be a great relief to all those charitably-minded persons who had really been withheld from the indulgence of their natural feelings by a doubt as to the efficacy of their contributions in producing the end for which they were intended. The work of charity had not been without its shortcomings and dangers, for there was something insidious in it both to the giver and to the receiver. Then the idea that the ministrations or comforts of religion were to be accompanied by the relief of physical difficulties—he would not certainly attempt to deprive the ministers of religion, and religious-minded persons who worked with them, of what was one of their chief comforts—the being able to relieve the physical and moral distresses of their fellow-creatures—but he would say this, that they ought, in the exercise of their grand functions, to be armed with all those precautions which this Society appeared ready to give. This Society took a most generous position. It did not say, 'Give us of your wealth, and we will apply it;' it said, 'Give us the means of organising with all those institutions—the charitable institutions already formed—such a system as shall conduce to carry that relief wherever it may be wanted in the most convenient and efficacious form, and in putting away from you the danger—painful to you and demoralising to those who are successful actors in the fraud—all those cases of imposture which have really been the great trial of the religious system of the metropolis hitherto.' After what had been said in the admirable addresses just delivered, he need not recapitulate, but he would say that now money might be given to the Society with a feeling of great relief. This was the eighth year of the Society's existence, and it was quite time its claims were brought before the City of London at such an influential meeting as this; and he trusted the operations of that day would tend greatly to the perfection of the system which had been so ably brought before their notice.

The resolution was then put and carried.

The Earl of Lichfield, in proposing a vote of thanks to the Lord Mayor for the use of the Egyptian Hall, and to Sir John Lubbock for presiding, said it was generally admitted that the work which the Charity Organisation Society from the outset undertook was one of a most important nature, and deserving of support. He did not know that the Lord Mayor could have given the Society greater assistance than by lending the hall where was publicly discussed the subject of permanently improving the condition of the poor.

Its objects had been explained at the Mansion House nearly five years ago, and at that time it was stated that what they desired to see was that the representatives of all the different charitable agencies at work throughout the metropolis should combine in their different districts to consider carefully the work that they were each of them in their respective spheres engaged in; and that they should form from among the different charitable agencies a Central Council for the discussion of their work. That plan had been carried out with as much success as could, under the circumstances, have been expected. He, for one, had most carefully and jealously watched the various criticisms that had from time to time been made upon the action of the Society, and there were one or two to which he would like to allude, because the Society was misunderstood. First and foremost, he believed that there was a very general impression abroad that this Society desired to see the administration of relief carried out by deputy, and through the means of agents, rather than by their personal administrators of relief, to which we had all hitherto been accustomed. That was by no means the intention of any of those who had worked in this Society from the beginning. What they had always desired to see was that this Society should confine its attention as much as possible to discriminating between deserving and undeserving cases; and when they had given the public the benefit of the information they had obtained, they desired that those who had been in the habit of administering relief should continue to do so, but under much more favourable circumstances than they ever did before. Any person who had administered relief in any shape or form to a poor person without having had the means of obtaining that thorough knowledge of the person's circumstances which would enable him to tell how best and most effectually to relieve him, would feel that any relief that he could give would be given with far greater satisfaction to himself, and with far greater benefit to the recipient, when all the circumstances were known which this Society took upon itself to place within the reach of those who inquired for it. There was another matter in which he thought the action of this Society had been misunderstood, and that was that there had been a sort of desire to create a new society, and in some way to interfere with the action of charitable societies and agencies already in existence. Nothing had been further than this from the intention of this Society, as could be proved by its original programme, which laid down that it was desirable that the Society should be formed from the representatives of existing charitable agencies. It never professed and never desired to establish an entirely new society in the metropolis, but what it did was to recommend the public to adopt a different system to that which was then in existence in administering charitable relief generally.

Canon Milman seconded the vote. The preceding speakers had not, like Boaz, left a sheaf here and there for the last comer to pick up, but had carried off every ear of corn, and left him nothing to say. (Laughter.) He thought the greater development that could be given to the Society's operations the greater would be the benefits conferred upon the community. From what had already been advanced, and from what they knew of the disastrous results of promiscuous almsgiving, the objects of the Society should be made generally known. There were persons who viewed with considerable suspicion everything that was new; they clung to the old forms of administering relief, sometimes from kindness, sometimes for reasons hardly so good. He hoped what had been said that afternoon would have a tendency to do away with the resistance the Society sometimes found in districts from the clergy, and that it would tend to dispel certain suspicions which still seemed to rankle in their minds. The Society was growing largely in favour with the clergy, and it was quite clear they only required to be more fully acquainted with the mode of its operation in order to be converted from opponents into upholders of it.

The motion having been carried unanimously,

The Chairman responded in a few words, and the meeting separated.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES.—PAUPERISM.—How many thousands of paupers have lived and died, and been buried at the public expense, whom a little friendly advice, a little search for friends or relations, some pains taken to find proper work, would have lifted out of the mire and set on the rock of honest industry.—Denison's Letters.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of April 1877 was 38,278, and 44,728 received outdoor relief, making a total of 83,006. This was a decrease of 383 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876, this was an increase of 1,283 but a decrease of 8,102 and 17,604 compared with 1875 and 1874 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 72. This was an increase of 18 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 98 on the corresponding day of last year.

THE Charity Organisation Reporter.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 217.

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 17, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

The next Number of the Reporter will be published on Thursday, the 31st inst.

The Central Office will be closed on Whit-Monday.

NOTICES TO DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

THE REPORTER.—District Committees are informed that contributors to their funds of £5 and upwards will in future, if they desire it, receive the Reporter free. Hon. Secretaries are requested to give due notice of this to the contributors to the funds of their District Committee, and to send to the Secretary the names and addresses of those persons who wish to have the Reporter sent to them.

THE MANUAL.—A new edition of the Manual is nearly ready.

KENSINGTON.—The offices of the Kensington Committee have been removed from 39 Holland Street, W., to 42 Church Street, Kensington, W.

BRIXTON.—The Rev. H. Robertson has been appointed representative of this Committee.

LAMBETH.—Mr. C. S. Harry has resigned the hon. secretaryship of this Committee. Mr. Heathcote Long and Mr. W. M. Venning are now the hon. secretaries of the Committee.

HOSPITAL LETTERS.—A letter for the 'Bournemouth National Sanatorium' is wanted for an urgent case.

Five letters for the 'North Eastern Hospital for Children' can also be obtained by the East End Committees.

PENSION FOR A BLIND PERSON.—A nomination for a pension of £5 from 'the Charities to the Aged Blind, distributed by the Clothworkers' Company,' may be had on application, by a District Committee dealing with a case suitable for such pension.

Qualifications.—Applicants must be fifty years of age, of sober life and good morals; have been totally blind for three years; not be entitled to any estate, annuity, salary, pension, or income for life, to the amount of £20 a year; nor be an inmate of a Workhouse or public institution; nor publicly solicit or receive alms.

The nomination must be sent in by the 30th inst.

The following business stands for Monday, May 28:—

I. Mr. W. F. Lawrence to move:—

'That, inasmuch as it is desirable that the public should be made aware of the claims of the deserving poor, as well as of the demerits of the undeserving, this Society should publish in the Times a monthly list of deserving cases, and the sums required for their need, or set on foot some other system for getting money to deserving cases of destitution.'

II. Major FitzRoy will ask:—

'What is the practice of District Committees with regard to giving up the names of people asking for investigation, to the persons whose cases are being investigated?'

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, May 10. There had been present:—

Sir Charles Trevelyan, in the chair; Lord Monteagle, Sir T. Graham Briggs, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Messrs. Holland, Barrington, and Lawrence.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending May 5 the receipts had been £52. 14s. for the General Fund, and £6. 6s. 6d. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £411. 18s. and £73. 17s. 2d. respectively, £8. 0s. 4d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—That they had made grants of £14, £37, and £25 to the Poplar, St. Saviour's, and Bethnal Green Committees; the total amount granted to these Committees since the 1st of October last had been £144, £137, and £125 respectively.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 8 there had been present:—

Mr. A. D. Graham, subsequently Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Miss O. Hill, Mrs. Lathbury, Hon. R. Grosvenor, Messrs. Bousfield, Barrington, Clive, Fuller, and Fletcher.

NEW MEMBER.—Mr. A. G. Crowder had been appointed a member of this Sub-Committee.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 8 had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Hon. H. R. Scott, and Major FitzRoy.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 9 had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the chair; Sir C. Trevelyan, Rev. H. F. Mallet, Messrs. Hill and Wilkinson. Mr. Hintzen (visitor).

PENSIONS.

Mr. A. H. Hill asked whether the plan adopted by the Wandsworth Committee of granting pensions from the funds of the Committee was in accordance with rules laid down in Section VI. of the Manual, on the 'Committees' mode of dealing with cases.

It was ruled that while District Committees were empowered to obtain pensions for suitable cases from charitable individuals or societies, and could, if necessary, in cases of sickness, grant sums from their own funds, week by week, till the applicant was restored to health, they were not, in accordance with the rules laid down in the Manual, entitled to give pensions from the funds of the Committee in such chronic cases as those referred to in the Report of the Wandsworth Committee.

CHARITY AND OUT-RELIEF.

The Secretary, with the permission of Council, read a letter from Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, of which the following is an extract:—

A very active parish clergyman, having written to ask the Committee to use their influence to extend out-relief, was invited to come and state his views; and several Guardians met him by appointment.

The clergyman urged that indiscriminate almsgiving could never be prevented, unless people were sure that those whom they rejected received quick, effectual, and suitable relief from some other quarter; that the Poor-law supplied the only agency able to give such relief; that the Workhouse was not suitable for cases of temporary distress, and was too severe when offered to those whose destitution was not the result of misconduct, but that such persons might fairly expect some more comfortable arrangement to be made for them.

That the present policy of the Board seemed to be to refuse out-relief in almost every case; such persons, consequently, who had no means of inquiring, felt obliged to relieve good and bad alike, being unable to wait for the tardy operation of the Charity Organisation Society.

The Guardians and others who were present replied: It was true out-relief had been greatly lessened during the last few years—some 90 per cent. No general distress had been the consequence. The Poor-law ought not to be expected to provide more than subsistence; persons whose character or life entitled them to more than this, might reasonably be left to charity, associated or private, the Poor-law never having been intended to relieve private persons from the duty of themselves sifting and helping fit cases; that provident habits would be out of the question if relief from the rates were as a rule given in any but a disagreeable form; that the present policy of the Board certainly was to make out-relief the exception, but that no rule against it had been laid down.

Sir Charles Trevelyan then continued the adjourned debate* on the following amendment moved by Dr. Daniel, viz.:—

That the co-operation of the Metropolitan Charities (p. 8 of the Report) is not such as to warrant the Council in taking the responsibility of encouraging the total abolition of outdoor relief; that such encouragement would tend to increase the number of cases of hardship mentioned in the Report (p. 8), while the Charity Organisation Society is not in a position to deal adequately with such cases; and that therefore it is expedient to adjourn the consideration of the Report to this day six months.

He urged that Dr. Daniel's position was—that organised charity was unable to deal adequately with cases of hardship arising out of the abolition of outdoor relief. And in support of this Dr. Daniel referred to the answers received by the Co-operation Sub-Committee from 130 'Trade' and 'Class' charities. These charities, however, were the last to be relied upon for any purpose of this kind. They might be had recourse to in individual cases to which they might happen to be applicable, but as a rule the Society must depend on the active living force of general charity, which was ever ready to adapt itself to each new exigency as it arose.

He then alluded to the general readiness of charitable persons to undertake investigated deserving cases in Marylebone, St. George's East, Wandsworth, and elsewhere; and he referred to a recently published report of the Chester Charity Organisation Society, and to the action of the Charity Commission in dealing with endowed charities which no longer fulfilled the objects for which they were founded.

The interim report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee had been published,* in order to 'elicit further information,' but, while general allegations of starvation and vagrancy had been made, no specific evidence of distress resulting from the abolition of out-relief in the three Metropolitan 'Atchams'—Whitechapel, Stepney, and St. George's East—had been adduced. There was, on the other hand, a new development of the best description of charity, ample evidence of which was found in a paper by Mr. J. Jones, one of the relieving officers of the Stepney District, and in the fact of the establishment of the Pension Society,† described in the report of the Sub-Committee. The elastic natural social forces so long compressed by the intervention of the outdoor relief system had, on its removal, sprung back to the place intended for them in the Divine economy.

'Let us consider, then, whether this movement is leading us. As regards these three metropolitan unions, we have actually arrived at the model standard position which has long been the object of our aspirations. We have realised before us a system of Organised Charity which, backed by a greatly improved English indoor system, is not unlike the Poor-law system at Elberfeldt. The deserving poor, who have done the best they could for themselves in life but have been broken down by misfortune, are relieved at their own homes by thoughtful, discriminating charity, and for the rest there are admirably efficient infirmaries and dispensaries for the sick, asylums for aged destitute persons who are too helpless to have a home of their own, and boarding-out or district work for destitute, orphan, and deserted children.

'And it is only by a safe, gradual process that this result is attained. In the absence of other available means, the Guardians are held to their responsibility, and they nowhere show any disposition to precipitate matters. The three unions of Whitechapel, Stepney, and St. George's-in-the-East are among the poorest in London, and if these are able to maintain their outdoor poor without assistance from the rates, how much more could other parts of London do so, where the proportion of rich to poor is so much larger.

'Mr. Cummins says that although cases of actual starvation are rare, there is plenty of semi-starvation. This is freely admitted, and the real question is, what is the cause of this semi-starvation, and how is it to be remedied?

'It has grown up under the outdoor relief system, and may therefore fairly be presumed to be connected with it. At any rate, the out-relief system has entirely failed to prevent it. This, however, is far short of the truth. Semi-starvation directly arises out of the system of which Poor-law outdoor relief is the most prominent feature, and is indissolubly associated with it.

'Outdoor relief is merely a vast system of doles, large enough to pauperise, but a great deal too small for adequate relief. According to law, the relief given by the Guardians ought in all cases to be "adequate," but it is so much pleasanter to live by alms than by labour, that if full subsistence were given without the application of the workhouse test, the poorer ratepayers would be ruined, and we should be rapidly brought back to the state of things before the passing of the New Poor-law, when society was turned inside out, and while landlords gave up their rents, farmers their tenancies, and clergymen their glebes and tithes, paupers refused to accept the whole land of the parish, avowing that they liked the present system better, and daily riot and nightly incendiarism prevailed in those parts of England in which the largest Poor-law expenditure had taken place. One of the earliest conclusions at which our Society arrived was to condemn doles when given by private persons; and Poor-law doles are far worse, because they are lavishly administered by persons who are not spending their own money, and are greedily scrambled for, without sense of shame, under the idea that they are a partial common assurance provided at the public expense.

* See Reporter, No. 216, p. 78.

* See Reporter No. 198, p. 178. † See Reporter No. 210, p. 48.

'The wages of all the common kinds of labour are supplemented in a wholesale manner by outdoor relief; the market is consequently overstocked, and a large population is habitually kept on the verge of starvation. In short, outdoor relief is synonymous with semi-starvation. It leads to semi-starvation, and is in itself semi-starvation.'

'Outdoor relief discourages industry, providence, and independence of character; encourages self-indulgence of every kind, especially that connected with our national vice of inebriety; and effectually checks the exercise of the family affections. We are only trifling with the subject, if with one hand we endeavour to give our people thrifty and provident habits by means of savings banks, friendly societies, and such like arrangements, and, with the other, uphold a system which mulcts those who save, gives to those who waste, and represses all the charities of life by making it the primary condition of assistance that the applicant must be entirely destitute.'

Rev. J. Johnson said that the irregular wages received by those who were employed in such trades as tanning, hat-making, mantle-making, &c., in which work could be obtained for only a part of the year, were the chief cause of the starvation and semi-starvation of which so much was heard. He thought that while 'the House' ought to be made almost a prison to receive the worthless, outdoor relief should be continued to the destitute poor of a better class, in order that their homes might not be broken up. The Society could not meet the deficiency of outdoor relief; out of the 449 cases dealt with by the St. Olave's Committee, 106 were considered ineligible: not because they were undeserving, but because they were such as the Committee could not deal with in accordance with the Society's rules. In reply to a question from Mr. A. H. Hill, he admitted that these cases had not as a rule been referred to the Guardians.

Mr. J. R. Hollond said that the fact that in certain trades a large number of the industrial class were always out of work during a portion of the year was one of those economic facts which no charity could meet. It was possible that in such trades higher wages were given during the part of the year in which work was obtainable; but the real question was, whether in the locality there was such a demand for those kinds of labour as would sustain the labourer. If the fact that there was not such a demand, was fully realised, there could not but be an alteration in the labour market in consequence. If out-relief, or even charity, intervened to prevent this fact becoming apparent, they only perpetuated an unhealthy state of things and delayed the application of the natural remedy. St. Olave's was one of the few unions in which out-relief had increased; and a comparative view of the position of the different unions of London as to the increase or decrease of out-relief would show, he believed, that where out-relief was largely given, labour was most congested.

With regard to what had been said by Mr. Lavers Smith and Mr. Sapsford respecting the Parliamentary returns of starvation cases, it was impossible to infer from these returns how many of these cases were really starvation cases, and for how many the reduction of out-relief could be made responsible. Thus, in the return for 1875, there were several cases in which the cause of death was entered as 'exposure to cold,' 'syncope,' 'death accelerated by privation.' Two cases of carpenters were mentioned in the Whitechapel District, in one of which it was stated that the deceased was in receipt of charity. Unless each case was investigated, as those to which the Sub-Committee referred in their report had been, no positive conclusions could be drawn from them. It was evident, too, on other grounds, that the returns could not bear any relation to the reduction of out-relief.

It was absolutely impossible to wait, as Dr. Daniel suggested, till charity was organised. Until the Guardians adopted a firm, simple policy, the public would not understand that charity ought not to be given on the mere whim, but on definite principles, and so long as there was out-relief to fall back upon, they would naturally be ready to assert that cases in which they were unwilling to help were cases for the Guardians. While it must be allowed that there were exceptional cases, it was wrong to suppose, as several speakers appeared to do, that charity could become a substitute for out-relief. Charity becoming a substitute for out-relief would probably do as much harm as out-relief had done. The only substitute for out-relief was thrift.

The Secretary pointed out that the argument used by Mr. Cummins and Dr. Daniel in their amendments, viz. that the report ought not to be adopted because it tacitly approved the abolition of out-relief, was irrelevant. The Sub-Committee had been instructed to ascertain how far they could, by extended co-operation with metropolitan charities, meet cases of hardship alleged to have occurred in consequence of the withdrawal of out-relief, and they had rightly, therefore, attempted to show, without alluding to the abolition of out-relief, that these cases of hardship, if they occurred at all, occurred very rarely. They had at the same time reported what progress they had made towards obtaining the co-operation of charities, and had specially referred to the Tower Hamlets Pension Society, which appeared to combine all the characteristics of a useful pension society, acting in thorough co-operation with the Charity Organisation Society. It was a pension society the plan of which was equally applicable to districts in which the Guardians were reducing, as to districts in which the Guardians had practically 'done away with' out-relief. The reduction of out-relief gave charity an opportunity for performing her proper function; and he quoted instances to show that there was at present very great necessity for every effort being made to organise charity, and thus obtain adequate relief for cases which, though suitable for charitable assistance, were now, in the absence or disorganisation of charity, left to the Poor-law. Everything pointed to the inadvisability of adjourning the consideration of the Report.

Dr. Daniel having, with the permission of the Council, said a few words in reply, the amendment was put and lost, 4 voting for it, and 18 against it.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson, in the absence of Mr. Russell Barrington, then moved the following amendment, which was seconded by Mr. H. Peto:—

That the Council, having read the Report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on 'Charity and Out-relief,' are of opinion that there is no evidence to show that there has been any suffering caused by the reduction of out-relief which the local and metropolitan charities are unable to meet; at the same time, the Council are not prepared at present to express an opinion as to the principles involved in such reduction.

He said that the opinion of the country on the question of out-relief was not yet fully formed. The Guardians were making a series of experiments, and so long as the subject was in a transitional state it was inadvisable for the Council to pass a definite resolution respecting it. The amendment would be a recognition of the course to be pursued, and would not involve the Council in any opinion as to the immediate or subsequent abolition of out-relief.

Mr. W. W. Wood referred at length to the previous resolutions of the Council on the subject of outdoor relief, and to the debate which had taken place on the question of placing lists of the recipients of out-relief in front of the offices of District Committees, and he showed that the Council, though they had previously expressed themselves in favour of the ultimate abolition of out-relief, were now, on a side issue and under retrogressive influences, tempted to falter in their opinion. The only consistent course for those who disapproved the report was to meet it with a direct negative. But there was every reason for the belief that out-relief had, next to drink, caused the greatest misery, and that, subject to any vested interests, it should be swept away as soon as possible. From Queen Elizabeth's time to 1795 there had been in England a good workable poor-law system. In 1795, a time of war abroad and, at home, a time of the greatest political excitement and of the most urgent distress among the lower classes, the Act authorising the distribution of State relief at the homes of the poor was passed, not on statesmanlike grounds, but from fear of the people, as a 'sop to Cerberus,' because the usage of giving relief in the Poorhouse only, was 'inconvenient and oppressive,' and interfered with the 'comfort and domestic situation and happiness' of the poor. This enactment gave rise to such serious social evils that the Poor-law Commissioners advocated the policy of absolutely abolishing out-relief, and, had not the Act for the amendment of the Poor-law been subsequently altered in passing through Parliament, out-relief would, in accordance with their intention, have been granted in cases of emergency only. With such evidence as this before them, it was not for the Council to temporise by accepting either of the amendments on the paper. He believed that the Boards of Guardians who continued the system did so rather from a false notion of its economy than, as Mr. Bartley had put it, because they wished to make a distinction between the deserving and the undeserving poor.

Mr. Russell Barrington's amendment having been put and lost, 6 voting for it, and 13 against it, and a motion for the adjournment of the debate having been lost, Mr. Cummins' amendment, which was as follows, viz.:

That, without committing the Council of the Society to the principle of the absolute abolition of outdoor relief, the best thanks of the Council be given to the Sub-Committee for the care with which they have drawn up their able Report, was put as a substantive motion, and lost, 7 voting for it, and 12 against it.

No resolution was therefore arrived at respecting the Report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on Out-relief and Charity.

The Council then adjourned.

INSTITUTIONS FOR IDIOTS, &c.

On Idiocy and Imbecility. By Dr. Ireland, Superintendent of the Scottish National Institution for the Education of Imbecile Children, author of the 'History of the Siege of Delhi,' 'Studies of a Wandering Observer,' &c. London: J. & A. Churchill, New Burlington Street.

The appearance of this book is extremely opportune. On Thursday a deputation will wait upon the President of the Local Government Board and the Chairman of the Commissioners in Lunacy, to present the Report of the Special Committee convened by this Society upon the Education and Care of Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics, and to urge upon them the importance of early legislation on the subject. From one end of England to the other our county administrators are at their wits' end owing to the pressure arising from the capitation grant of 4s. for every idiot and imbecile placed in an asylum. New buildings are indispensable, and the only question is one of classification and education. The leading principles recommended in the Report are that idiots and imbeciles should be treated separately from acute cases of lunacy, and that they should all be trained, in childhood and youth, in the special manner suited to their infirmity, previously to their being disposed of, according to the degree in which they are developed, either by being returned to their families as practically cured, or placed under trustworthy persons in industrial establishments, or employed in doing the rough work of large households or public institutions, those only being permanently transferred to custodial asylums who require constant medical attendance. Dr. Ireland's book is an admirable supplement to the Report, for it enters in detail into the causes, and classification, of idiocy, which the Committee were reluctantly compelled to pass over, as involving medical and moral considerations beyond the scope of the inquiry confided to them. The book is not only scientifically important, but also in a high degree entertaining to everyone who has capacity to interest himself in the philosophy of human nature. This might have been expected from the author of the 'History of the Siege of Delhi' and the 'Studies of a Wandering Observer.' The chapter on the strange, and still unsolved, problem of 'Wolf Boys' will be read with delight by persons who would turn with distaste from a dry treatise about idiots and the best mode of educating and providing for them. When a highly accomplished professional man, who has seen the world in various aspects, including an episode like the siege of Delhi, gives himself up to the elucidation of a physical and social question, he cannot fail to tell us something worth hearing.

DIFFICULT CASES.

No. 4. The St. George's (Hanover Square) Committee have forwarded to us the following difficult case:—J. S., aged 23, son of a soldier, parents both dead, has no relations or friends; left arm paralysed from a sunstroke when six years of age; is weak both in body and mind; had a situation as messenger, but was discharged because he could not carry parcels.

No. 5. The Chelsea Committee would be glad to hear of an institution which would take up the following case: 'A pensioner, now employed in the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, with the very highest testimonials, had a married son, who, with his wife, has recently died. The grandchildren, six in number, are, or will soon be, thrown on the grandfather's hands. His object is to get one or more of them into some institution where they can be educated. We are at present most concerned with the case of a boy aged 6. . . . The father was in the Post Office.'

ORPHANAGES AND CONVALESCENT HOMES.

District Committees may be glad to hear of the following:—

(1) Miss Poole, Winwick Rectory, Rugby (to whom all communications are to be addressed), has established an orphanage, and is ready to receive twelve boys, ages 7 to 10. A charge of 5s. per week is made, which includes everything except travelling and medical and funeral expenses in case of death. Sons of small tradesmen, clerks, or schoolmasters preferred, the object being, as far as possible, to train them for schoolmasters. Miss Poole has had great experience herself in educational work. The boys will live with the Master of the Village School, who has just passed through Peterborough College. The main object of limiting the number is to keep up the feeling of a family. Ample funds have been subscribed to start the undertaking, and the house is now ready for the reception of orphans.

(2) A lady has kindly consented to receive at a private home one orphan or deserted girl, of from 3 to 10 years of age. A trained nurse is the matron. For further particulars apply to the Secretary of the Council.

(3) Thomas Banting's Memorial.—Seaside Convalescent Home, Parade Lodge, Marine Parade, Worthing, Sussex.—The object of this trust is to help convalescent women needing the beneficial climate and other advantages of Worthing, to obtain the same, and to provide for or assist them during the period of their convalescence there. Parade Lodge will be ready to receive ladies on and after 1st March, 1877. Eight inmates at one time is the present limit. Every convalescent admitted to the establishment must be over the age of 18 years, and belong to (or be a wife or daughter of a person belonging to) one of the classes or descriptions following:—Clergymen, ministers of any religious denomination, solicitors, writers, signet, surgeons, apothecaries, persons engaged in literature, science, art, schoolmasters and mistresses, tutors, governesses, farmers, master tradesmen, private persons, and such other persons as the trustees shall deem socially fit to mess and associate in a common home with any of the classes before specifically named, to their mutual comfort and satisfaction.

Twenty-one days is the ordinary time a convalescent remains in the home (subject to extension). Admission is by medical certificate. The whole of the household expenses (including laundress) are provided by the trustees, so that the only expense falling upon a convalescent will be her travelling expenses. Applications for admission to the charity and for forms of admission, and all correspondence connected with the charity, are to be addressed to 'The Secretary, Thomas Banting's Memorial, Worthing, Sussex.'

(4) There is a 'Private Institution for Ladies of Limited Means,' at St. Laurence House, Langley Lane, Surbiton Hill. Terms: £1. 1s. and 17s. 6d. weekly, according to the kind of sleeping accommodation desired. Inmates paying £1. 1s. weekly are entitled to separate bedrooms. All payments must be made weekly, in advance. No bedridden or entirely helpless invalids can be received. Applications and inquiries are to be addressed to the Lady Secretary, St. Laurence House, Langley Lane, Surbiton Hill.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fifth week of April 1877 was 37,965, and 44,638 received outdoor relief, making a total of 82,603. This was a decrease of 403 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876, this was an increase of 1,301, but a decrease of 7,558 and 16,987 compared with 1875 and 1874 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 684. This was a decrease of 43 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 86 on the corresponding day of last year.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, May 17. There had been present:—

Mr. A. H. Hill, in the chair; Sir T. Graham Briggs, Lieut.-General Cavenagh, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Rev. C. Carruthers, Messrs. Barrington, Brand, Brown, Ellis, Holland, Hoare, Lawrence, Miner, Probyn, and Roberts.

At an adjourned meeting of the Administrative Committee on May 18 there had been present:—

Mr. A. H. Hill, in the chair; Hon. H. R. Scott, Major FitzRoy, and Mr. Roberts.

* Vide Rules of the Society, VII. and IX.

There were present at the meeting of the Administrative Committee on May 24:—

Mr. S. Fuller, in the chair; Sir T. Graham Briggs, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Capt. Gardner, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Bevan, Hill, Mitchell, Miner, Roberts, and Wood.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the two weeks ending May 19 the receipts had been £62. 3s. for the General Fund, and £6. 1s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £165. 12s. 11d. and £16. 14s. respectively, 16s. 2d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—That they had made grants of £15, £10, and £25 to the Fulham, Holborn, and Lambeth Committees; the total amount granted to these Committees since the 1st of October last had been £75, £90, and £70 respectively.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 15 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Rev. S. A. Barnett, Miss O. Hill, Miss Howes, Mrs. Lathbury, Hon. H. R. Grosvenor, Messrs. Clive, Crowder, Fuller, Fletcher, Graham, and Lewes; Mr. Mills (visitor).

At the meeting on May 22 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Miss Howes, Miss O. Hill, Messrs. Edcombe and Barrington.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 15 had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Miss Howes, Hon. H. R. Scott, Major FitzRoy, Capt. Gardner, and Mr. Bevan.

At the Special Meeting, May 18, were present:—

Hon. H. R. Scott and Major FitzRoy.

At the meeting on May 22 there had been present:—

Capt. Gardner, in the chair; Hon. H. R. Scott and Mr. Bevan.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 16 had been present:—

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, and subsequently Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the chair; Sir Charles Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, and the Rev. H. F. Mallet.

INVESTIGATION: NAMES OF INQUIRERS.

By the permission of Council, the following question was asked, in the absence of Major FitzRoy, viz.:—

‘What is the practice of District Committees with regard to giving up the names of people asking for investigation to the persons whose cases are being investigated?’

A letter from Mr. F. J. S. Edcombe, forwarded by Major FitzRoy, was read; and after a short discussion, in which Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, Mr. T. E. Hardy, Mr. Jones Loyd, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. C. E. Maurice, Mr. W. F. Lawrence, Dr. Daniel, Mr. Bousfield, and Mr. G. Charles took part, Mr. R. Barrington undertook to give notice of a motion on the subject.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE SOCIETY.

The Secretary pointed out that, while the contributions to the Council had increased, the expenses of the Committees in the poorer parts of London, which were mainly supported by grants from the funds of the Council, were, as the work extended, becoming larger; and, with the exception of £100 from the St. George's (Hanover Square) Committee, but little assistance had been received from the Committees in the richer districts.

After a discussion, in which Mr. Barrington, Mr. Bousfield, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. C. A. Reiss, Mr. C. A. Miner, and Mr. A. D. Graham joined, the following urgent recommendation of the Administrative Committee was carried:—

That a letter be transmitted to the District Committees of the Society calling their attention to the want of funds at the disposal of the Council for the use of the Society, and urging them to redouble their efforts with a view to obtaining further contributions.

DESERVING CASES.

Mr. W. F. Lawrence then moved:

That inasmuch as it is desirable that the public should be made aware of the claims of the deserving poor as well as of the demerits of the undeserving, the Society should publish in the Times a monthly list of deserving cases and the sums required for their need, or set on foot some other system for getting money to deserving cases of destitution.

He considered that such a plan would give due prominence to a part of the work of the Society, the importance of which, as one of its main objects, was not fully appreciated by the public. There were numerous cases to meet which no charity existed, or for which it was impossible to get relief, owing to the complicated methods by which suitable relief could alone be procured. Many people would be glad to give small sums in direct relief who could not afford to be subscribers. He suggested that cases in which the District Committees desired special help should be forwarded to the Central Office, and that it should be left to the Administrative Committee to advertise them or not, as they thought best. The appeal would be made, not on behalf of the District Committee, but on behalf of the Council.

Mr. W. F. Smith seconded the resolution.

Sir Charles Trevelyan thought the plan proposed was out of proportion to the end to be gained. The District Committees should be obliged to do their duty and, by establishing satisfactory relations with those in their district, be in a position to obtain adequate relief. Reference could, under existing rules, be made to the Administrative Committee in exceptional cases.

Dr. Hawksley said that, while all recognised the principle that adequate relief should be obtained, owing to the want of organisation in charity, it was doubtless difficult to obtain such relief in the poorer districts. When charities refused or professed themselves unable to assist suitable cases, the fact ought to be made public. He moved the following amendment, which was seconded by Mr. C. E. Maurice, viz.:—

That in view of the difficulty of obtaining that organisation and co-operation of the charities of London which is essential to the efficient relief of distress by voluntary agency, and to the abandonment of an inefficient outdoor Poor Law relief, it is resolved that the District Offices of the Society shall report weekly to the Central Council the various deserving cases they have found worthy of relief, but for which the suitable agencies were not available, with a view to the Central Office publishing the cases of failure.

Mr. W. W. Wood considered the question a financial one. If the District Committee could not obtain the necessary relief from charitable persons and institutions, they could fall back on their own funds; if their funds were insufficient, it was their duty to make special efforts to collect a larger income. Exceptional cases could be referred to the Administrative Committee.

Mr. C. A. Miner drew the attention of the Council to the resolutions passed in April 1876.*

Mr. Russell Barrington agreed with Mr. Wood that the question was one of finance. He always advocated that each case should be taken on its merits, and decided upon irrespective of the means apparently available for assisting it. What ought to be done having been agreed upon, the Committee was under an obligation to carry this out; and, from his experience of the work of several Committees, he could say that what was considered best in each case was, in spite of great difficulties, done. The course proposed by Mr. Lawrence was dangerous, and would lessen the responsibilities of the District Committees.

After a few words from Mr. H. N. Hoare, the Rev. C. Carruthers pointed out the great necessity for removing from the mind of the public the impression that the Society was solely engaged in the suppression of mendicity.

Mr. Bousfield supported Dr. Hawksley's amendment, and Mr. F. R. Montgomerie spoke in favour of advertising.

Mr. A. D. Graham gave notice of the following amendment:—

That inasmuch as it is desirable that the public should be made aware of the claims of the deserving poor, and that the Committees in the less wealthy districts should be better able, than they are at present, to secure ‘fitting action’ in such cases, ‘where other charities are unable to afford the required assistance,’ a Sub-Committee be appointed to consider the object here indicated, and to report to Council as to the best means of carrying them out.

At the suggestion of the Chairman the following resolution was agreed upon, viz.:—

That it be referred to the Districts Sub-Committee to inquire and report on the subject-matter of Mr. W. F. Lawrence's, Dr. Hawksley's, and Mr. A. D. Graham's amendments; and that their report be submitted to Council within a month.

The Council then adjourned.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of May 1877 was 37,555, and 43,932 received outdoor relief, making a total of 81,487. This was a decrease of 674 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876, this was an increase of 1,232, but a decrease of 6,587 and 15,701 compared with 1875 and 1874 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 719. This was an increase of 113 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 74 on the corresponding day of last year.

THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IDIOTS, IMBECILES, AND HARMLESS LUNATICS.

A very influential deputation, representing Ireland, Scotland, and various parts of England, waited upon the President of the Local Government Board on the 10th inst., to represent to him the views of the Special Committee of the Charity Organisation Society who have inquired and reported on the questions connected with the education and care of idiots, imbeciles, and harmless lunatics. Sir Charles Trevelyan, K.C.B., introduced the deputation, among whom were Lord Shaftesbury, K.G., Lord O'Hagan, Lord Wimmarleigh, Lord Wrottesley, Lord Waveney, Lord Clinton, Mr. Hutchinson, M.P., Dr. Cameron, M.P., Mr. Ripley, M.P., Mr. Hibbert, M.P., Mr. Whitworth, M.P., Dr. Brewer, Dr. Beach, Mr. T. Kemble, the Hon. Charles Strutt, Mr. J. H. Kimbell, Dr. Graham, Mr. E. Lawrence, the Rev. H. I. Cummins, Mr. J. Sapsford, Dr. Millard, Mr. F. T. Mappin, Dr. Tukey, Mr. Mocatta, Mr. H. G. Moysey, Mr. H. Burdett, Mr. Spaulding, &c.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, K.C.B., in introducing the deputation, said the object of that deputation was to present a report by a Special Committee convened by the Charity Organisation Society. The Committee had held sixteen meetings, and had sought for information not only at home, but from the very ends of the earth, and had been greatly aided by the different departments of Government. The report proceeded upon two principles—the first, that imbeciles and idiots should be treated separately from acute cases of insanity. Legislation had only been directed to the needs of dangerous lunatics, and not to those of the harmless idiotic class, so that the legal name of 'lunatics' applied to the most harmless case of idiocy. The result was that when benevolent persons established institutions for the most harmless class they were met by the most harassing formalities, the formalities which were presented in placing a person in a lunatic asylum. A far worse result was that the idiotic class had been placed to a great extent in lunatic asylums. Another result was that these asylums were crowded so much by imbeciles, sent in under the temptation of the Government grant, that lunatics could not be properly dealt with, and the mixture of the two classes was injurious to both. The second principle was that the imbecile class should be improved to the extent of their capacity. Much the largest proportion of this class could be made wholly or partly self-supporting by industrial training and education. It was recommended by the Committee that after being trained the patients should be disposed of according to the extent of their recovery. The best class could be returned to their families as practically recovered. Others might be, under supervision, rendered useful in the service of large families or public institutions. The working classes were in a bad position as regarded this subject. The majority of working-class families had a hard struggle. Such a family, having an imbecile member in it, might be broken down and pauperised in its struggles to keep an idiot. Two modes were proposed for providing for such a case: first, to establish public schools for juvenile idiots and asylums for adults out of the rates, the inmates to be paid for by their relatives according to their means; and where the families could not pay there should not be pauperisation. They had, fortunately, the arrangements made by the Metropolitan Asylums Board as a model, that board having met the case entirely as regarded the metropolitan population. They began by separating lunatics and idiots, and then the idiot children from the adults, giving the children a thorough special training. As regarded the children, the necessity of entire separation was absolute. The subject was now handed over to the Government to deal with as they thought proper, and Sir Charles read the resolutions of the Committee. He also read letters from Lord Lichfield, Lord Fortescue, and Sir John Ogilvy in excuse of absence.

The Earl of Shaftesbury considered there was absolute and unqualified necessity for all Sir Charles Trevelyan had asked. His lordship said he had been on the Lunacy Commission fifty years, and ever since 1845 they had regularly reported upon the absolute necessity of treating imbeciles and idiots as a class separate from lunatics, and it had been proved that the idiot was capable of a high degree of cultivation and of industrial training. It was clear that sufficient provision could not be made by the voluntary system merely, for that system at that moment did not provide for more than 1,100 idiots, while there were at least 15,000 such children in the country. It was difficult to get the public to undertake an original expense, even although a good object was promised. The matter was one of religious duty, as it was the Lord's command that we should gather up the fragments, that nothing might be lost. He knew objections were urged to what was called a paternal Government; but he thought that in this case it was the duty of the State to come in.

Dr. Denis de Vitre urged that according to the Census of 1871 there were about 30,000 idiot children in the country; and as Lord Shaftesbury had shown that only about 1,100 were cared for by voluntary effort, there must be at least some 28,000 or 29,000 who needed to be thus trained. There was no provision made in the county for imbecile and idiot children, except as persons of unsound mind; and a great number of these people were sent to the poor-houses, where there was neither special instruction or training for them. He urged that these poor people should be trained to industrial pursuits, otherwise their imitative faculties led them to acquire the actions of the insane. He spoke warmly of the work carried on at Earlswood and at Clapton, at the latter place under Miss Stephens and Dr. Beach, and said that under such training generally there would be a great decrease in idiocy, and a lessening in the expense of keeping such persons as incurables.

Sir Charles Reed urged that it was a national duty to provide for the separation and training of the imbecile and idiot class, and said that his experience as Chairman of the London School Board had shown him that many of these children were shut up in families and were kept from all training.

Lord O'Hagan said his attention had been directed to this subject by the Committee's inquiry, and the result of his investigations was that he warmly supported the report set forth by the Charity Organisation Society of London. He urged that it was the common duty of humanity to care for these poor creatures, and not to be treated as they were, as beasts of burden. The imbeciles in Ireland, he said, were shut out from the relief given to the blind and to the deaf mutes, and he urged that Ireland should not be excluded from all legislation upon the subject, as she had been hitherto.

Lord Wrottesley urged that to go on building new asylums for lunatics was certainly working in a wrong direction.

Mr. Kemble spoke with respect to the crowding of the county lunatic asylums with imbeciles, to the injury of both.

Dr. Langdon Down urged that if schools were established for the weak-minded, they should not be attached to lunatic asylums, as it was necessary, in order to get people to accept the training they would offer for the children, to remove the stigma of insanity from such cases.

Mr. Hibbert, M.P., speaking as one who had had experience in the management of asylums, held that it was impossible to provide for the imbeciles and idiots in the lunatic asylums and workhouses. The training schools asked for, he said, would not be inexpensive, but they were necessary, and in the end would be found economical. The counties, he thought, should have power to combine, so as to share the costs of these schools for idiots, there not being sufficient children in a county to justify the erection of a separate school for each county. He also urged that the imbecile asylums and training schools should be apart from county asylums, and not in the same grounds.

The President said he had listened with great interest and attention to the statements laid before him by gentlemen so eminently qualified, not only to state their own views upon those important subjects, but also to represent the views and opinions of others. The work of the Charity Organisation Society in instituting these inquiries had been well known to him, and he had kept himself well informed by one of the secretaries of this Department—Mr. Fry—who assisted in the inquiry. (Hear, hear.) The movement had his (the President's) entire sympathy and co-operation, and he was very glad that gentlemen of so much intelligence and patriotic and benevolent zeal should have summed up and brought into one focus much information and many practical suggestions, for the adoption of which public opinion now appeared to be almost ripe. In deprecation of the sentiments of more than one speaker he would say a few words—in the expression of opinion that the Department was behindhand, and had been neglectful of the interests of these lunatic patients. It was not above twenty years ago that the attention of Parliament and the public was directed to the subject of lunacy, and it was then first dealt with in a comprehensive way; and it was not long since that the members of the Department of which he was the head were placed under the obligation to provide for the different classes of lunatics, for the Commissioners saw the necessity for the separation and classification of the patients. They had reported on the necessity for additional asylums, and the main object was to provide places where the unfortunate objects under consideration could be at once humanely, separately, and safely treated. He was speaking then not only as the head of that Department, and from the knowledge which he ought thus to possess, but having been chairman of his county asylum, he was acquainted with what had been done generally. He knew that it was true that the numbers of applications for admission to the county asylums were greater than could be received. Public attention was directed to the most effective form of dealing with the difficulty; and having been educated by the experience of the last twenty-five years it was seen that the classification of these various classes of lunatics and the separation of class from class were necessary; but he could not agree that those patients had not been bettered in their condition by the treatment of late years. Then as to idiot children, their treatment in wards was an improvement over their previous condition, though he quite agreed that a great deal more was needful to be done. Though the Commissioners in Lunacy had long since thought that the lunatic asylums should be devoted to the care of curable patients, he did not think that the public mind had been ripe for the consideration of the subject until forced to consider it by the existing state of things. He need not say that he entirely endorsed the views of Sir Charles Trevelyan and Lord Shaftesbury—he entirely concurred with them that the various classes of patients ought not to be mixed up together and subjected to the same treatment. He also held with Sir Charles Trevelyan and Lord Shaftesbury that the children should be separately cared for, separately treated, and separately trained. (Cheers.) When Sir Charles Trevelyan, however, came forward, as at this meeting, and presented the views as if they were new views presented for the first time, it was his (the President's) duty to say, for the credit of the Department and for the credit of the local institutions which had grown up under its guidance, that example was better than precept, for in the metropolis it had been shown not only what might be done, but what had actually been done under the provisions of the existing law. It was quite true that the provisions of the law were more perfect and complete in the metropolis than they were in the country, but when it was considered that the metropolis was a province containing one-seventh of the population of this kingdom, and that these views were completely new, that was an answer to the suggestion that the Department and Parliament were indifferent to the subject. It had only been since he had had the honour of holding the position of President of this Department that the happy suggestion was made to separate from the adult imbeciles the children afflicted with idiocy, and to treat them as a separate class, at Clapton. He had been very happy to support the suggestion, and he was gratified beyond expression at knowing how successfully that practical suggestion of the Metropolitan Asylums Board had been carried on at the asylum at Clapton, which was only a temporary establishment, while the permanent building at Darenth was being completed. Then why was it that what had been done in the metropolis was not done in the country at large? Mr. Hibbert had said that what had been done in the metropolis could be done in the counties, and he thought that the counties might combine, and it would have been well if the counties had taken his view of the subject, and if, instead of multiplying asylums, like the usual county asylums, they had instituted such asylums as the metropolis possesses at Leavesden, in Hertfordshire, and Caterham, in Surrey, built by the Metropolitan Asylums Board. They would have found that whereas the lunatic in lunatic asylums cost eleven and twelve shillings a week, the imbecile may be maintained at a much less cost, for they can be maintained in imbecile asylums at a cost of seven shillings a week. Then as to the difficulty of the form of admission into these asylums. There was no such difficulty in regard to the admission of imbeciles to these asylums, as they were held to be the inmates of workhouses. With regard to the provision for idiots in the country, the case was very different from that of the imbeciles, and it was required to educate the public mind and to instruct the ratepayers, as represented in the House of Commons, that it was for the advantage of those who paid rates, as well as for the interests of humanity, that schools should be instituted for the education, the training, and the permanent improvement of idiot children; and though he could not endorse the suggestion that there were 30,000 of such idiot children in the kingdom, yet he could not but think that the number was large; and though the children idiots in the general asylums of the country were in a better condition than if left in their own homes, still he was free to admit that the time had arrived when it would be advantageous to have establishments, after the same kind as at Clapton, set up for the counties. In his own county the necessity had been felt for increased accommodation; and he hoped that a separate building which was being constructed for that county would be for a separate class, and that so far as the imbeciles were concerned they should show a better result in economical management. He was sorry to say that they were without any general separate management for imbeciles in counties, but he hoped it would not be long before such separate arrangement would be given. The subject of county government was interesting Parliament and the country at this time, and one of the most interesting subjects in which it could engage would be with regard to this class. There was nothing in the proposals of the Committee to which he could take exception, and he promised to do everything he could to advance the objects represented by the deputation.

Sir Charles Trevelyan having, on behalf of the deputation, thanked the Minister for the reception he had given them, the deputation retired.

DIFFICULT CASES.

No. 6. A home, at which he may be trained, is wanted for a boy of 15, who is blind and deaf and dumb. A Board of Guardians will contribute towards his maintenance. For further particulars apply to the Secretary.

No. 7. The St. James's and Soho Committee would be glad of help in the following case:—M. A. M., a domestic servant, of good character, has become quite deaf and almost blind. No relations able to assist.

We have received the following reply respecting Difficult Case No. 4:—'Why is this considered a difficult case? Surely it is a case for the Poor Law. J. S., being "weak both in body and mind," unable to do the work of a child, i.e. to "carry parcels," will be best provided for in the workhouse.—Y.'

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

LEWISHAM, BLACKHEATH, AND LEE.—The Lewisham Guardians have withdrawn the request which they made twelve months ago to this Committee to allow their board, on which are affixed lists of the outdoor paupers,* to be placed in the garden in front of the Committee's office. The Clerk of the Guardians, writing to this effect, adds: 'The Board are, however, about to take into their careful consideration the best course to pursue with a view of still co-operating with the Charity Organisation Society, and assisting them in systematising, as far as possible, relief operations in various parts of the metropolis.'

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Council does not consider itself responsible for any of the opinions expressed by its Correspondents.]

DEAR SIR.—It was erroneously stated in the report of the meeting at Lambeth on the 23rd ult., given in your issue of the 26th, that the Archbishop had spoken of 'the organisation of the Society for the Relief of Distress by Bishop Blomfield.'

The mistake would be at once apparent to anyone acquainted with the facts, but it may be well to state briefly that the Society alluded to by his Grace in connection with the name of Bishop Blomfield was the Metropolitan Visiting and Relief Association, which was founded, and its rules drawn up, at a meeting held at London House, under that Bishop's presidency, on Saturday, December 16, 1843. Its first title was 'Association for Promoting the Relief of Destitution in the Metropolis, and for Improving the Condition of the Poor, by means of Parochial and District Visiting, under the superintendence and direction of the Bishop and Clergy.' A large and influential Committee was formed, and the objects set forth in the prospectus point clearly to the organisation of charity through the existing parochial agencies, and the restraint of indiscriminate almsgiving. The Committee still meets periodically at its office at 21 Regent Street, and makes grants from its funds, which depend upon voluntary subscriptions, to the parochial clergy who apply to it, and satisfy the conditions required.

In 1860, seventeen years later, and after the decease of Bishop Blomfield, the Society for the Relief of Distress was founded with similar objects, but acting through its own almoners, although in communication with the parochial clergy.

This was followed in 1869 by the Charity Organisation Society, which first introduced the systematic investigation of cases from different centres throughout the Metropolitan District.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, as I understood him, mentioned the establishment of these three Societies as marking successive stages in the attempt to organise charity in London.—Yours,

C. S. LOCH, Esq.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 219.

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 7, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

OPEN SPACES.—A deputation will wait on the School Board, Victoria Embankment, at 2.50 P.M., June 13, to bring before the School Board the desirability of opening the Playgrounds attached to the Board Schools, on the Saturday holidays and on summer evenings. Mr. Shaw Lefevre, M.P., will read a Memorial on the subject.

METROPOLITAN POOR LAW CONFERENCES.—The Annual Conference of the Metropolitan Poor Law Guardians will be held at the offices of the School Board, Victoria Embankment (Temple Station), on Thursday June 14, at 11 A.M. Mr. Albert Pell, M.P., will preside. The following gentlemen will read papers:—

Mr. J. T. Hibbert, M.P., on 'The Mode of Election and Tenure of Office of Guardians of the Poor.' The Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies on 'The Duties of Metropolitan Boards of Guardians under the Education Act of 1876.' Rev. T. T. Tuffield, on 'The Duties of Guardians to Pauper Children.'

The following business stands for Monday, June 11:—

I. The adjourned discussion on the following motions of Sir Charles Trevelyan:—

1. That the Committees of the Society be recommended to prepare statements of the Charitable Endowments within their respective districts, and to consider, in concert with the Trustees, what improvements may be made in the application of the funds, so as to meet the real exigencies of the present day.

2. That the Co-operation Sub-Committee be instructed to place themselves in communication with the Charity Commissioners with especial reference to the Parochial Charities of the City of London, which form the subject of an important expression of opinion in their recent annual report.

3. To these motions the Rev. Harvey Brookes has given notice of the following amendment, viz.: 'That the words from "districts" to the end of the second motion be omitted.'

II. Mr. W. Wightman-Wood to move:—

1. That any District Committee whose chairman is not in the habit of attending the meetings of Council may, in the absence of such chairman, send its vice-chairman, or one of its vice-chairmen, to the Council, as an additional representative.

2. That any District Committee which has only one Hon. Secretary may send a third elected representative to Council.*

III. Mr. W. Wightman-Wood to move:—

That a return be made of the names of the twenty-five societies stated, in the Report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on 'Charity and Out-relief,' to have replied to the circular letter of the Sub-Committee respecting co-operation with this Society in relieving the deserving poor.

IV. Mr. Russell Barrington to move:—

That no resolution of Council affecting the practical work of the District Committees be considered as carried, unless voted by two-thirds of the Council present.†

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, May 31. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Holland in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Major FitzRoy, Messrs. Brown, Bevan, Barrington, Fuller, Hill, Charles, Ellis, Mitchell, Miner, Topley, and Lawrence.

THE REPORTER.—It had been resolved to publish monthly a double number of the Reporter, suitable for more general readers.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE SOCIETY.—A letter to District Committees on this subject had been approved, and an order had been given that it be sent to all the District Committees of the Society.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending May 23 the receipts had been £50. 1s. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £148. 0s. 10d. and £68. 19s. 7d. respectively, £53. 1s. 9d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

* Vide Rules of the Society, VII. and IX.
† Vide Rule of the Society, XVI.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 29 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Rev. S. A. Barnett, Miss Howes, Miss Hill, Mrs. Lathbury, Messrs. Barrington, Bousfield, Clive, Edecombe, Graham, and Lewes.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 29 had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Major FitzRoy, Capt. Gardner, Miss Howes, and Mr. Bevan.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 30 had been present:—

Mr. A. H. Hill in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Rev. H. F. Mallet, Mr. Hollond, Hon. C. W. Fremantle, and Mr. Lavers Smith, visitors.

FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on May 30 there had been present:—

Rev. H. I. Cummins in the chair; Messrs. Roberts, Corrie, and Hill.

CHANGES IN THE CENTRAL OFFICE.

The recommendation of the Administrative Committee under this head was, after some discussion, adopted.

INVESTIGATION: NAMES OF INQUIRERS.

Mr. Russell Barrington moved the following resolution, which was seconded by Major FitzRoy, viz.:—

That the District Committees be recommended to observe the same rule with regard to inquiry into cases as the one observed by the Inquiry Department of the Central Office, viz.:—

That no inquiry should be instituted into any case without the applicant being made aware that such inquiry is being made; also that this Society can never pledge itself not to give the name of any person who asks for an inquiry, though it is frequently unnecessary to do so.

He urged that there was the necessity for the adoption by District Committees of some such simple rule as this, by which, within certain limits, uniformity would be secured, while the machinery of the Society would be at the disposal of those only who were entitled to make use of it.

Dr. Daniel moved the following amendment, which was seconded by Mr. W. F. Smith, viz.:—

That the name of an inquirer seeking information through the Society of the merits of any alleged case of distress shall not be divulged unless authorised, but the Subject of inquiry shall be at once informed that any information given is entirely voluntary, and that any aid likely to be rendered would depend upon a full and satisfactory explanation of all its circumstances given to the Society.

He considered that no harm could accrue to the applicant for charity by the name of the person on whose behalf the inquiry was made not being mentioned. It was open to him, if he wished it, to withhold information, and thus forego any advantage he might obtain through the Society's instrumentality.

After some discussion, in which Dr. Hawksley, Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. J. R. Hollond, Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, Mr. W. Bevan, Rev. H. G. Henderson, Mr. Bousfield, and others joined, the amendment moved by Dr. Daniel was lost, together with an amendment moved by Mr. J. R. Hollond, 'That the whole question be referred to the District Sub-Committee,' on the ground that more detailed regulations are necessary.

Mr. Barrington's motion was then carried.

CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS.

Sir Charles Trevelyan then moved:—

1. That the Committees of the Society be recommended to prepare statements of the Charitable Endowments within their respective districts, and to consider, in concert with the Trustees, what improvements may be made in the application of the funds, so as to meet the real exigencies of the present day; and

2. That the Co-operation Sub-Committee be instructed to place themselves in communication with the Charity Commissioners with especial reference to the Parochial Charities of the City of London, which form the subject of an important expression of opinion in their recent annual report.

He said it was full time for the Charity Organisation Society to give serious and systematic attention to the munificent provision which had been made by former generations for the charity of the metropolis.

This provision might, for practical purposes, be divided under three heads:—

1. Parochial Charities other than those of the ancient city. These were, in general, in actual use, although that use was rarely of a kind suitable to the circumstances of the present time.

2. The parochial charities of the ancient city, which for the most part were either unused, or made use of for personal profit, or appropriated to objects which, although professedly public, had now no real public utility: and

3. Charitable endowments for metropolitan purposes, of which the Corporation of the City, or the City Livery Companies, were the Trustees.

According to the return moved for in 1865 by the Archbishop of Canterbury, then Bishop of London, the annual income of the City Parochial Charities was £64,500. According to the continuation of the same return just presented to Parliament, this income had since increased to £101,380. This, however, fell far short of the annual amount which might be obtained from the property if it were rescued from beneficial leases and other personal arrangements, and if the shares of houses, small pieces of land in central situations, and other miscellaneous parcels of which it chiefly consists, were sold under the superintendence of responsible persons, and invested in the funds, where it would not be subject to further waste, and the expenses of management would be reduced to a minimum. The charities of the City of Westminster, exclusive of the charities administered by the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, and of the charities belonging to the extensive metropolitan region, which had grown up outside the ancient Cities of London and Westminster, had in the same ten or eleven years increased from £22,463 to £28,358.

With regard to the charitable endowments under the Corporation and Livery Companies, Sir Charles Trevelyan said that he believed that these endowments were of vast extent, but that that portion of them which was under the Livery Companies could not be estimated, as the Companies had refused to render an account of them, and claimed, notwithstanding judicial opinions to the contrary, that the original appropriations of the donors having been complied with, all increase in the value of the charity estates was the private property of the Company.

It might safely be affirmed that, after setting aside what was intended for religious and educational purposes, the provision made by our ancestors for charitable uses in the metropolis would, if it was properly realised and applied, amply suffice to supplement the efforts of the present generation. For instance, there would be more than enough to give pensions to all poor aged or infirm persons, who ought to be assisted at their own homes instead of going into the workhouse.

In 1870, Mr. Andrew Johnston, supported by Viscount Seaton, Mr. W. H. Smith, and Mr. C. Dalrymple, brought in a Bill, providing that the charitable endowments of the lapsed City parishes should be taken charge of by a Royal Commission, with power to sell, and to invest the proceeds under one or other of two schedules, to be called respectively 'The City of London Charitable Trusts Fund,' and 'The City of London Churches Fund,' and, with the approval of Her Majesty in Council, to prepare and lay before Parliament schemes for the application of those funds, subject to the checks of delay, right of petitioning, and power of further inquiry. This had been opposed by the City Corporation; but several members of Parliament were alive to the importance of the subject. Mr. Cross, in his answer to a question on the 15th May last, appeared to imply that the Government intended to deal with it; and the Charity Commissioners had summed up the actual state of the case in the following extract from their last Report:

In our Thirteenth Report we drew attention to the large income available for charitable purposes possessed by many of the parishes in the City of London. Of many of these Charities no Deeds of Foundation are found to exist, but by such parish records and memoranda as are available, they appear to have been intended originally for the benefit of the poor, and for charitable purposes within the parish. But, from the altered circumstances of the city, many of these parishes have now no poor, and the revenues are administered by the churchwardens and overseers at their discretion for miscellaneous objects. The case of one parish has been brought to our notice, which is in possession of parochial charities of the value of upwards of £800 a year, the population of which is at the present moment 46 only, of which number it is believed that only four or five sleep within the parish, and not one of whom could properly come under signation of 'poor.' Nor can the administration of these large sums be considered satisfactory as regards the objects for which they are applied, for, while considerable sums are given to increase the stipends of clergies, or to defray the expenses of Ward Schools, large sums are given under the head of 'General Parochial Purposes' to increasing numbers of, or the presentation of testimonials to churchwardens, or parish officers, and to other objects, sometimes of a convivial nature, and are widely removed from the original objects of the foundation. The donors have in several instances, notwithstanding the opposition of parish authorities, who have claimed the right to expend the income from these charities as they think fit, enforced the production of the accounts relating thereto; and we, no doubt, have power, upon a proper application made to us, to frame schemes for the application of these funds to more beneficial than those to which they are at present devoted. If the necessary application could be obtained, which is highly probable, such a method of dealing with them would be neither easy nor costly. Each case would have to be dealt with separately, or if a scheme were established dealing with the revenues of more than one parish, the circumstances of each would probably be found to be so different that the allocation of the income in such a case to an object of common interest, would be found to present the greatest difficulty. It is possible, of course, that, out of Equity also, on the information of the Attorney-General, to whom in the case of each parish a new scheme or schemes for administering these large funds. But we have reason to believe that the Attorney-General is himself alive to the unsatisfactory result which would probably be produced by such proceedings, and there is no doubt that if these funds are to be dealt with in this manner, separately and independently of other, we have the means, through our powers of local inquiry and official communication with all parties concerned, of securing an advantageous result more readily and in a greater degree than a Court of Law. It is, in fact, this consideration which has led to the establishment of this Commission, with the very extensive powers which have been conferred on it.

In these circumstances we are compelled to recur to the suggestion made so long ago as the year 1866 in the Report quoted above, that these funds are in effect so far liberated by the altered circumstances of the country in which they are applicable, as to require reappropriation to new and noble uses, a work which can be carried out only by some special authority out of existing jurisdictions by the authority of Parliament.

A clause in the Endowed Schools Commission Act, authority given to apply charitable doles to purposes of education. The Corporation had founded a large day school out of what Mr. Johnston called 'thirty thousand pounds worth of useless and the City Middle Class Schools Corporation, and other educational establishments, had received assistance from the same source. Well that funds, which would only pauperise and corrupt if expended according to their original application, should be put to any useful purpose, but ought bequests made for charitable purposes to be diverted to education? The Charity Organisation Society, had undertaken to organise charity and direct it into proper channels, was under a special responsibility in this matter. The motion of Mr. R. Barrington, the Council then adjourned.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

LAVE'S.—'Sanitary Hints.'—This Committee has purchased copies of a little pamphlet recently published by the Society for Promoting Knowledge, called 'A Few Simple Sanitary Hints for Working Men' (5d. per 100), and is distributing them amongst the applicants. In the instance of a member of the Committee, the St. Olave's District of Works have ordered copies of the pamphlet for distribution by the inspectors of Nuisances.

ST. GEORGE'S, HANOVER SQUARE.—Co-operation with the Clergy.—Extract of letter from Rev. J. Walker, Vicar of St. Saviour's, St. George's Square, S.W.:—

'I had a letter asking me to give the Society an offertory. I will not only do so, but I shall have infinite pleasure in doing it, and shall not fail to tell my people the thousand and one kind acts you have done the poor through me. Perhaps this will serve for a formal answer to the letter. I will have the offertory for you when the season is at its height.'

Extract from the 'Twelfth Annual Address of the Vicar of Christ Church, Mayfair,' 1877:—

'I again acknowledge the courtesy and assistance received from the St. George's Committee of "The Charity Organisation Society." Regarding any of our poor who apply to them they are always disposed to act in concert with our parochial agency, and they are ever ready to assist in affording substantial relief to persons in times of real need.

'I take the opportunity of suggesting to my parishioners, to whom application is made for relief by persons from other parts of London, that if they wish to avoid encouraging impostors and other unworthy persons, they should first seek information respecting the applicants from the above-named Committee, whose office is 48 Buckingham Palace Road, and who will gratuitously and gladly investigate such cases and report upon them.

PROVINCIAL.

CROYDON.—We have received the following circular-letter from the Croydon Charitable Society:—

'THE WHITGIFT HOSPITAL AND CROYDON CHARITIES COMMITTEE, 1877.

'Sir,—The Committee appointed by the Public Meeting of the 28th March 1877, and re-appointed by the Vestry on Easter Tuesday last to inquire into the Croydon Charities, with confidence appeal to their fellow parishioners to aid their labours. The estates belonging to Archbishop Whitgift's, Elys Davy's, the Little Almshouses, and the other charities of Croydon have become very valuable, yet it is doubtful if a single person in the parish knows accurately either their extent or worth.

'To terminate this state of uncertainty respecting those various properties which from time to time have been left to Croydon, and to procure and publish such reliable statistics as will render the resources of the said endowments more available to the ratepayers for educational and other purposes, is the aim of your Committee.

'As there are no funds set apart for carrying out the orders of the Vestry and the instructions of the Public Meeting, the Committee rely upon the support of the inhabitants to carry out the work intrusted to them, and therefore respectfully solicit your kind assistance by subscribing to the fund.

'Subscriptions can be paid into the London and County Bank, Croydon, to the account of Geo. Day, sen., Treasurer of "The Whitgift Hospital and Croydon Charities Committee, 1877."

'Croydon, 10th May 1877.'

HULL CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—The number of cases dealt with by this Society during 1876 amounted to 531, of which 275 had assistance given or obtained. Lord Ripon, in his opening speech at the annual meeting, stated that when the London Charity Organisation Society was established he 'entertained a suspicion, which had happily turned out groundless, that there might be some attempt on the part of bodies of this kind to draw to themselves all the charitable efforts of the town in which they existed, and to enter into some course of opposition to their older, but in some respects more restricted, competitors in the great field of charitable labour.' 'No society,' he said, 'no common organisation, ought ever to attempt to interfere with or to diminish the labours of what he might call personal and individual charity—the charity which passes from man to man.' After stating the objects of the Society, he asked, 'Would it be possible for such a Society to content itself with making inquiries and reporting to its subscribers the facts it had ascertained, but take no steps—have no funds of its own with which to administer relief in deserving cases?' He thought not. It seemed to him that that course could not be successfully pursued. In the first place, he was sure that if that Society were to be continually making those inquiries without having any means in its hand to aid deserving cases, it would soon become very harsh and inquisitorial; it would lose the character of a charitable organisation, and become a sort of charitable police. That was not what they wanted. It was a very undesirable thing in itself, because of the hardening tendency it would have on all connected with it; and he was sure the Society would speedily prove to be unsuccessful, if those who were deserving, and came to it, found that they were sent away equally unaided with the most gross impostors. . . . Therefore a certain power of giving assistance itself, as well as of obtaining assistance in any particular cases for those who might be specially interested, was essential to the effectual working of that which he took to be the first object of the Society, namely, the conducting of inquiries, the sifting of cases, so that the unworthy person might be separated from those who deserved assistance.

LIVERPOOL CENTRAL RELIEF AND CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—The annual report for the year ended October 31, 1876, shows that 9,773 cases were visited; of these 1,650 were of applicants for the benefit of the Ladies' Charity and Lying-in Hospital. 'The charity was granted in 1,355 and withheld in 295 cases.' 'Butcher's meat to the value of £123 has been granted to persons recovering from sickness, in order to expedite their convalescence, and where a change of air has been necessary to complete their recovery, your Committee have always readily granted orders for the various Convalescent Institutions, a sum of £114 having been spent in this way, as follows, viz.: Woolton, 49 orders, Southport, 30, New Brighton, 14, Buxton, 3; total, 96 orders. This form of assistance is given principally through the agency of the District Nursing Society, between whom and this Society cordial relations exist.' During the year 174 persons were assisted to migrate, 'making 1,169 who have been assisted by the Society in this way. Of those sent this year 13 families were on the parish books, at a cost to the rates of £4. 12s. per week, or £240 a year.' Under Rule 4 the Committee is 'empowered to carry on such Workshops, or other modes of employment, as they may deem desirable, for giving temporary work to unemployed poor.' During the year 224,673 Firelighters and 268,944 Bundles were sold from the workshops where employment was given to 417 men. 'Work orders were given by the Society's own Visitors to 668 men, only 206 of whom applied for work.' The following is worth quoting:—'A decent labouring man, with a family of six children, from 13 to 4 years old, had been for some time at the Society's Workshops. An opening was found for him to go to Yorkshire, in April 1875, and he and his family now jointly earn £1. 16s. 9d. per week.' The Committee 'sends an officer three times a week to the Parish Relief Committee, with a view of rescuing from pauperism persons whose distress is only temporary, and who would otherwise come upon the Parish books.' We were under the impression that a member of the Committee attended also the meetings of the Guardians for the same purpose. We trust that in their next report the Committee will give the results of such attendances. We regret that we have been prevented from noticing earlier this excellent report.

THE NOTTINGHAM SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITY.—In their annual report for 1876—their first—the Committee state that they considered 655 cases. 'Many of the most deserving cases were not those of common mendicants, but of the unobtrusive poor, to which the Committee's attention was called by the Town Missionaries, the Visiting Sick Nurse, and by private individuals.' Periodical lists of persons relieved are received from eight parishes and three chapels, and a register of such persons kept at the office. Many of the cases helped from the Society's funds were placed under the care of ladies who act as visitors. 'Having charge of only a few cases, and these often for a considerable time, they have been able to give a personal attention to them which no Committee or paid officer could have done; and their advice and sympathy have often been of as much benefit as the food or clothing they have given. The Lady Visitors have often been able to interest their friends, and to obtain work or assistance for the poor people under their care; and have been the means of enabling not a few families to make a fresh start.' Two of the regulations as to Lady Visitors, who are elected by the Committee, are as follows:—'These Lady Visitors to undertake to report once a week on the cases confided to them, and not to vary from the suggestions of the Weekly Committees as to the nature and amount of relief given; or, when appointed to visit only, not to give any relief whatever.' 'The Hon. Secretary to prepare lists of cases referred to the Lady Visitors by the Weekly Committees, and to hand them to the lady acting as Hon. Sec. for the Lady Visitors.'

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

ACCIDENT RELIEF SOCIETY.—We are requested to warn the public against Mr. Edward Barker Gale, of 184 Westmoreland Road, Walworth, who, the Committee of the Accident Relief Society, 23 Great Winchester Street, E.C., have reason to believe is collecting ostensibly for the Society, and has been appropriating to his own purposes the sums received by him under such pretence.

DOVER CONVALESCENT HOME.—We regret to learn that the London and Dover Convalescent Home, of which Mrs. Rusher is Hon. Lady Superintendent, is likely to be closed for want of funds. The home has been found of great service to District Committees of the Society.

HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN AND CHILDREN, 3 and 4 Vincent Square, S.W.—The following letter has been received from this Hospital:—

'Sir,—Arrangements have been made whereby ladies and gentlemen in reduced circumstances, who are in want of proper care and nursing during illness, but are unable to pay the ordinary fees for medical attendance, can be received in private rooms, and have the benefit of medical attendance and regular nursing for a payment of £1. 1s. a week, or upwards, according to their means.

'Cases may probably be brought to your notice of persons who would be glad to avail themselves of these arrangements.

'The ordinary charge for in-patients having subscribers' letters is 2s. a week, but patients are admitted without letters, but not into private rooms, at a charge of 10s. or 15s. a week.'

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.—The Echo in an article on 'Cookery in Schools,' referring to a school of cookery in connection with the Church of St. Mary, Crown Street, Soho, says:—'Friends of the working man, and of the industrial classes generally, should hail and aid all efforts at assisting them, not only to habits of self-dependence in the getting of their daily bread, but in the art of making it go further, and of making it savoury and enjoyable. It is far better to train a person to walk than to carry him. . . . The practical instruction day is Saturday, from ten till four. Take one day as a sample. The refreshments provided are, say, of the following—sausages, sausage-rolls, jellies, blanc-manges, and pressed meat—made by the girls in the school, at a stove specially provided. The work begins with mending; some of the girls, accompanied by the teacher, go out to purchase in Newport Market, or, more frequently, from the costermongers, and partly from the shops, what is required for the intended meal. There is the usual bargaining and criticism, so important in the choice and purchase of food; and the cost of every article is entered in a book—a most important part of the exercise. It is the custom, on the marketing party's return, for the lady instructor to explain the manner of cooking to be followed, and each girl works from a written receipt. The teacher superintends the work, pointing out any defects or errors of manipulation, and speaking when opportunity offers on the importance of forethought, cleanliness, and orderly management. In the course of the twenty lessons given to the teachers, a vast variety of dishes and articles are brought before the class, including provisions for all meals, in great diversity of forms, hot or cold; food for invalids; food for children, &c. The question of cost, and how it is defrayed, is vital. This is met in the simplest manner. Each pupil pays 3d. per lesson for instruction, but gets a good dinner into the bargain; and, as the school is necessarily a loser, the balance is made up by voluntary contributions from without—a point about which, we believe, there has hitherto been no difficulty. The good done is so obvious, the method of charity employed is so healthy in its tendency, and the young people benefited are so conscious of the value of the privileges they enjoy, that the School of Cookery is supported with readiness—the poor themselves being often liberal contributors. We should add that a diary is carefully kept, in which the daily work of each girl is entered, with name opposite. Mr. Buckmaster informs us that the girls who passed the best examination in cookery also passed the best examination before Her Majesty's inspectors.'

On the 16th instant Mr. W. Stephen Mitchell read a paper at the Society of Arts, on the Practical Use of the Food Collection of the Science and Art Department. The paper will be found in No. 1,277 of the Journal of the Society.

An annual conference on this subject, the first meeting of which will be held at Birmingham in the first week of July, is being arranged by the Society of Arts.

CO-OPERATION WITH THE INDUSTRIAL CLASSES.—The summary of a paper read by Mr. H. N. Hoare at the St. James' and Soho Club on the 16th inst. together with an account of the discussion that followed the paper, is given in the Workmen's Club Journal of the 26th inst. The following is from an article on the subject in the same No. of the Journal:—'Our colleague, Mr. Thomas Paterson, in an admirable speech at the discussion, suggested that a Committee should be formed at the St. James' and Soho Club, to report what some steps could be taken to place themselves in correspondence with the Charity Committee of the district. We heartily hope that this wise thought may be carried out. It would be a great step in the direction of this co-operative charity which is so urgently needed. Our clubs will then indeed become a great power in this country, when they manifest a determination to be centres of social reform.'

OPEN SPACES.—Miss Octavia Hill's paper on 'Open Spaces,' which we read, on behalf of the National Health Society, at the Society of Arts on the 9th of May, will be found in the Sanitary Record of the 18th inst.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of May 1877 was 37,223, and 43,823 received outdoor relief, making a total of 81,046. This was a decrease of 441 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876, this was an increase of 996, but a decrease of 6,226 and 15,684 compared with 1875 and 1874 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 771. This was a decrease of 8 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 126 on the corresponding day of last year.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, June 7. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Holland, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Capt. Fortescue, Messrs. Barrington, Bevan, Brown, Copeman, Fuller, Hill, Miner, Peters, and Venning.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending June 2 the receipts had been £32. 9s. 10d. for the General Fund, and £250 for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £143. 0s. 8d. and £87. 9s. 1d. respectively, £21. 11s. 3d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on June 5 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Miss O. Hill, Mrs. Lathbury, Hon. H. R. Grosvenor, Messrs. Barrington, Bousfield, Clive, and Lewes.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on June 5 had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Hon. H. R. Scott, Major FitzRoy, Capt. Gardner, and Mr. Bevan.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on June 6 had been present:—

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, in the chair; and Mr. A. H. Hill.

CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS.

Mr. C. E. Maurice seconded the following resolutions, moved by Sir C. Trevelyan, on the 4th inst., viz.:—

1. That the Committees* of the Society be recommended to prepare statements of the Charitable Endowments within their respective districts, and to consider, in concert with the trustees, what improvements may be made in the application of the funds, so as to meet the real exigencies of the present day.
2. That the Co-operation Sub-Committee be instructed to place themselves in communication with the Charity Commissioners with especial reference to the Parochial Charities of the City of London, which form the subject of an important expression of opinion in their recent Annual Report.

Mr. Russell Barrington thought that, before entering upon a work of such magnitude as that referred to in the resolutions, the Council should seriously consider whether there were not other important duties, equally connected with the organisation of charity, which had a prior claim on the Society. In any case, he hoped that the part which would be assigned to District Committees would be more clearly defined.

* With the exception of the City Committee.—Vide p. 100.

Mr. F. D. Thornton drew attention to the lists of local charities published in the Reports of several District Committees—Fulham, Lewisham, and others.

Rev. Harvey Brookes said he would not move the previous question, as he considered the subject required settlement; and the Report of the Charity Commissioners had given it a new prominence. Nor would he be in favour of opposing the motion, for to negative the motion would be a tacit acknowledgment that the education of the public on the question was complete. There were, however, numerous complications in the trusts of parochial charities, and, for this reason, while he was most desirous of a wise and politic redistribution of these charities, he thought that such a proposal as that contained in the first paragraph of Sir Charles Trevelyan's motion was most inapplicable to the City Committee. The trustees were in most cases quite alive to their fiduciary character, and such a recommendation from the Council would have the effect of inducing the Committee to adopt a course which would give the trustees just grounds for resenting the action of the Society as needless interference. He would move:—

That the words from 'districts' to the end of the second paragraph be omitted.

Rev. H. I. Cummins seconded the amendment, giving notice of the following, as an amendment to Mr. Harvey Brookes' amendment, in the event of the latter being carried, viz.:—

That, in the place of the words omitted, the following be inserted: 'That as the Government has announced its intention to deal with the City Parochial Charities, it is not desirable at present that this Society should take any steps in the matter.'

Sir Charles Trevelyan explained that the first paragraph of his motion referred to the metropolis generally, and not to the City, and the second to the City only; to make this clearer he obtained permission to insert after the first word of the first paragraph the words 'with the exception of the City Committee.'

Mr. C. E. Maurice alluded to the great difficulty the District Committees experienced in obtaining the co-operation of local charities, but he quoted cases in which such co-operation had been secured or appeared practicable, and he urged that as the work of District Committees could not be considered complete while they ignored the Endowed Charities in their localities, the Committees should undertake the preliminary work of procuring correct statements of these charities, with a view to negotiating with the trustees in the manner suggested by the motion.

Mr. Galabin, speaking of Camberwell, said that information respecting the Endowed Charities there was not procurable, and the attempt to obtain it would injure the District Committee. The charities were administered by vestrymen, who would resent interference.

Mr. W. W. Wood supported the motion. He regretted that it was necessary to bring such a motion forward after so many years. It would no doubt entail considerable labour on the District Committees; but the organisation of charity was the most important work of the Society, and the Committees were bound not to leave this portion of it undone.

Rev. H. I. Cummins pointed out that the resolution did not appear to refer to Corporation Charities, and did not define precisely to what charities allusion was made. Many City Charities extended their benefits beyond the City; the trustees of many resided outside the City.

Sir Charles Trevelyan explained that the resolution referred to the local applicability of the trust, and not to the residence of the trustees.

Mr. Cummins then said that the Society was not at present in a position to undertake so large a work, and that the administration of such charities being vested in legally responsible trustees, it would only injure the prospect of a better distribution of the charities if the Society unadvisedly attempted to gain information from them, or, without any status for such action, undertook to negotiate with them. The Government, he considered, were about to take up the question, and the Society, by its interference, would only make it more difficult to obtain a just and ready settlement of it.

Miss O. Hill said that the course proposed in the first paragraph had already been adopted with good results in Hampstead, Beckenham, and elsewhere.

Mr. H. H. Hill said that the Society should not restrict its natural field of action. The Report of the Whitechapel Committee on the endowments in their district showed what might be done. The difficulty which District Committees experienced was to obtain co-operation.

Mr. Bousfield, Mr. Peto, and Mr. H. N. Hoare supported the amendment.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, in replying, said that the Government had not undertaken to deal with the question; they had only promised to consider it. If the Society neglected their duty, on whom would it devolve? Though not at first always apparently coincident, duty and interest, even if the lowest meaning was attached to the latter word, were in the long run compatible, and the Society ought not to forfeit its position by shirking a definite opinion on this question. There was no reference to the City Companies in the resolutions, which were of a most moderate character; and he was sure that those Companies were full of upright men, who would approve of any well-considered scheme for turning to better use the parochial charities of the City of London.

The amendment was then put and lost, 15 voting for it and 17 against it; and the resolution was carried as a substantive motion, 18 voting for it and 14 against it.

REPRESENTATION AT COUNCIL.

Mr. W. W. Wood then moved, and Rev. R. J. Simpson seconded, the following motion, the latter part of which was subsequently withdrawn, viz.:—

1. That any District Committee whose chairman is not in the habit of attending the meetings of Council may, in the absence of such chairman, send its vice-chairman, or one of its vice-chairmen, to the Council, ~~as an~~ additional representative.

2. That any District Committee which has only one hon. secretary ~~may~~ send a third elected representative to Council.

He said that, owing to some of the chairmen of the District Committees being noblemen and others, whose engagements made their frequent attendance at Council impossible, it was necessary to arrange that District Committees should, by the attendance of their vice-chairmen, be enabled to secure a just representation.

After a few words from Mr. S. S. Tayler and Rev. H. I. Cummins, Mr. R. Barrington, supported by Mr. W. F. Smith, moved the previous question, which was put and lost; while a suggestion that the first paragraph should be referred to the Administrative Committee was agreed to.

CO-OPERATION WITH CHARITIES.

The following motion of Mr. W. W. Wood was agreed to, and the returns laid on the table:—

That a return be made of the names of the twenty-five societies stated, in the Report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on 'Charity and Out-relief,' to have replied to the circular letter of the Sub-Committee respecting co-operation with this Society in relieving the deserving poor.

VOTING AT COUNCIL.

Mr. Russell Barrington withdrew the following motion of which he had given notice:—

That no resolution of Council affecting the practical work of the District Committees be considered as carried, unless voted by two-thirds of the Council present.

The Council then adjourned.

DIFFICULT CASES.

received the following answers to these difficult cases : *

f the parents are unable to pay, the Guardians have the power to bind and deaf and dumb child to any public or charitable institution, and to pay the full cost up to the age of 16, and without the charge of the paupers. After that the Guardians may also pay the full cost.

his is also clearly a case for the Poor Law.—W.

CHARITY.—The Saturday Review, in a recent article on acts of Charity, referring to the pensions granted by Her the sisters De Foo, says:—“But happily in this instance the error has been corrected by the Queen’s generous grant of pensions to the sisters De Foo. All this freakishness in charity springs from the fact that charity is too often a mere form of self-indulgence. First, a man is excited by some highly-coloured tale of sin or wrong, and then he feels the need to relieve the feeling of undue superiority and fortune. When once the attention of people is caught by a story, they are ready enough to see that it is more by luck than desert that the person is saved while others are disgraced or ruined. The charitable act is partly an effort to right the wrong, still more an attempt to atone for one’s own conscience; not least, it is a little gift to Nemesis, like that of the ring which has so often been quoted. A little more disinterestedness and a little more gratitude would improve the character of the rate charity which is mainly impulsive.”

AGENTS' MEETING.

At a well-attended meeting of Hon. Secretaries and Agents, held at the Offices of the Council, 15 Buckingham Street, W.C., Mr. Rignall, Agent of the Stepney Committee, read a Paper on 'Loans.' Mr. Rignall drew attention to the difficulty of enforcing payments of loans made by District Committees of the Society, and to the misunderstanding which prevailed respecting the charity of helping the industrious poor by this means. He suggested that members of individual Committees, or groups of Committees, might form Registered Loan Societies. The following is an extract from his Paper:—

In 1873 the Kensington Committee seemed to have arrived at the same conclusion as mine, as they in that year established the Holland Street Loan Society, registered under the Act 3rd and 4th Vic., cap. 110. The 39th rule of that Committee states that "no loan shall be granted from the funds of the Committee unless the applicant is in actual or impending distress; but any industrious person of good character may be recommended to the Holland Street Loan Society, who, in the opinion of the Committee, will be permanently benefited thereby." Upon referring to the Annual Report of the Kensington Committee for 1875 I find that loans amounting to £144. 4s. were granted from the Holland Street Loan Society, and nothing from the funds of the Committee.

'The powers granted by the Act under which this Society is registered, are very arbitrary; the whole of the money being recovered from their defaulters through the local Police Court (they never think of taking a case into the County Court), the Magistrate having the power to order payment within a certain time, and, in default, a distress is issued. If the distress warrant is returned "No effects," the Magistrate can imprison the defendant. The whole affair is settled quicker, and with less trouble and expense, than through a County Court.

'Loan Societies under this Act are generally formed by a number of persons establishing themselves as a society, each subscribing a certain sum towards the capital, and making a profit by granting loans on interest; and the Act makes provision for treasurer, trustees, &c. being appointed; but if one or all of the East End Committees were to decide upon establishing a Loan Society as I suggest, I have no doubt that a Sub-Committee could so modify the constitution of the Society in accordance with the Act that the existing loan funds of the Committee could be used to form the capital.'

Mr. Pimlett (Hackney), Mr. E. Brooks (Bethnal Green), Rev. H. I. Cummins, Mr. King (Greenwich), Mr. J. F. Sapsford, Mr. Harrison (Paddington), Rev. H. F. Mallet, Mr. Martin (Lambeth), Mr. E. Peters, and others took part in the discussion. The following, among others, were present,* viz.:—Rev. H. F. Mallet, John F. Sapsford, jun., Frederick Sapsford, John Pearson, Richard James Rignall, Eph. Brooks, Frederick Field, Arthur Fulcher, J. Posser, Thomas Hodge, Robert Frisby, Robert Bristow, Samuel Pinnett, Fred. PROVINCIAL.

BIRMINGHAM CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—In their seventh Annual Report the Committee call attention to 'the waste of charitable funds, not by private individuals, but by the great charitable corporations of a town like Birmingham, and it is in this direction that the question may arise. Could not such a society as ours be made largely useful? We publish, they proceed, 'this year a tabulated statement by which it will be seen that the annual expenditure of the medical charities alone, exclusive of that on building, repairs, furniture, &c., amounted in 1875 to the sum of £34,121. 14s. 1d., and the number of cases which received gratuitous treatment amounted to 7,098 in-patients, and 92,013 out-patients.' 'Any reform,' they conclude, 'of our hospital system seems to us to be hopeless, until provident dispensaries are provided.'

LEAMINGTON PROVIDENT DISPENSARY.—In their Annual Report for 1876—their eighth—the Committee call attention to a proposition to establish 'a Nursing Institute to provide better attendance than can at present be obtained for the provident members in their own homes;' and they express a hope 'that the expense will be met in part by the employment of the nurses in private families when their services are not required by provident members.' The medical report states that 3,990 cases were attended during the year; and the medical officers, in calling attention to the low mortality—63 cases—explain it 'by the fact that the members, feeling themselves undeterred by the fear of expense, apply for relief to the medical officers for the most trivial complaints, and in the earliest stages of more serious illnesses. Thus the medical officers have the opportunity of meeting serious disease in its very earliest stages, of preventing its increase, and of maintaining generally the health of that section of the community which is committed to their care.' £548. 18s. 1d. was paid by provident members, an increase of £48. 2s. 6d. on 1875; but the Committee, in calling attention to the falling off of subscriptions and to a notion that the dispensary is becoming self-supporting, say, 'It was never intended to be entirely so; its fundamental principle is that help should be given to those who help themselves.'

SHREWSBURY DISPENSARY.—Nearly three years ago the Charity Organisation Society at Shrewsbury suggested 'that the subscribers of the dispensary should substitute benefit members' payments for free recommendations.' The objections of harshness and unfairness towards the scanty earner that were thus raised are fully answered in the Report of the Dispensary for 1876. 'The number of benefit members entered on the books between the 30th September 1875, and the 31st December 1876, is 4,172, and the average weekly attendance has been 600.' The Committee call attention to statements that have been made that persons not properly eligible have been admitted as benefit members, and in answer state, 'First, that at each weekly meeting the names of those members who have entered since the previous meeting are carefully read over, and their eligibility considered. Second, that the Committee are always ready to receive and investigate any written complaint on this subject. And, third, that in the very few cases in which such a complaint has been made an investigation has invariably shown that it was based on insufficient grounds.' The payments of members are: 'Husband, wife, and children under fourteen years of age—Entrance fee, 1s.; subscription, 3d. per week. Wife and children under fourteen years of age—Entrance fee, 1s.; subscription, 2d. per week. Single entries, 6d.; subscriptions, 1d. per week. Persons entering when ill—Entrance fee, 5s., together with one month's subscription, as above. Assistants in the various business establishments in the town, and clerks, are eligible for membership.' Domestic servants pay 5s. a year, payable half yearly, and an entrance fee of 6d. Members residing beyond the limits of the town and suburbs pay extra for visits. From the 30th of August 1875, to December 31, 1876, £714. 15s. 2d. was received from benefit members for subscriptions &c., and for fees for attendance of medical officers and midwives at confinements.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of May 1877 was 37,208, and 43,629 received outdoor relief, making a total of 80,837. This was a decrease of 209 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876, this was an increase of 1,002, but a decrease of 5,693 and 15,234 compared with 1875 and 1874 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 729. This was a decrease of 18 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 41 on the corresponding day of last year.

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

221.

THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 21, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

by bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.

by securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
by granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
by repressing mendicity.

Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, will be happy to furnish further information.

That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants to the King's Hospital Committee, at their discretion, to the amount of £47, the amount of the estimated deficit of that Committee for the current year.

W. Wightman-Wood:

Draw attention to the circumstances under which a recommendation of the Administrative Committee affecting the Council's Staff was put and on June 4; to ask whether any other changes in the Central Office have been agreed to by the Administrative Committee for recommendation other than the recommendation with regard to the Assistant Secretary; and to move for a return of such other changes.

Charles Trevelyan to move the adoption of the following memorial from the Council:

THE MEMORIAL OF THE SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY

SHAW, ETHEL.

That Major-General Sir Thomas Biddulph, K.C.B., having conveyed to the Rev. C. F. Lowder, M.A., of St. Peter's Vicarage, London Docks, the message of Her Majesty the Queen to a large number of clergymen and others in the East of London, Her Majesty has called upon your Lordship to frame rules for the future administration of the Saint Katharine's Hospital.

That among the various charitable institutions and societies in the metropolis within whose province it falls to provide pensions to the sick and aged deserving poor, there are but few whose scope is not limited by numerous restrictions and conditions which prevent their being available for a large number of the poor, who are deserving of such charitable assistance, but are from many circumstances unable to fulfil the conditions under which applications for aid have to be made.

That there has been recently, in the districts of Whitechapel, Stepney, and Saint George-in-the-East, and also in Poplar, a large reduction in the outdoor relief granted by the Guardians; and that while the action of the Guardians has been instrumental in creating a spirit of self-reliance, and has in many instances strengthened the bonds of family affection and revived between members of the same household that natural charity which the lax administration of the Poor Law has a tendency to destroy, the funds of the charitable have had, by the withdrawal of outdoor relief, to afford assistance in those cases of deserving poverty caused by misfortune, old age, or sickness, in which an adequate pension was necessary.

That there is also, on other grounds, reason to believe that—distributed after careful and impartial inquiry, and in accordance with those just principles which a regard for the best interests of the poor, and a knowledge of the causes of their distress, would suggest—a Pension Fund would be at least one means of making less severe that hard lesson of provident habits which many of the clergy and ministers, the School Board, and, by a better administration, the Poor Law and charity, are each in their sphere inculcating.

Your Memorialists believe that such portion of the funds of the Saint Katharine's Hospital as may be considered available for eleemosynary purposes would be wisely and justly appropriated for affording, under due safeguards, small pensions for the deserving and provident poor in the East of London, so as to meet any exceptional distress that may be contingent on the laudable efforts of the Guardians to administer the Poor Law on sound and well-defined principles.

And your Memorialists will ever pray, &c.

4. Mr. A. H. Hill to move:

That the Districts Sub-Committee be requested to report upon the present degree of uniformity of organisation attained by the District Committees of this Society, and to make any recommendations they may think necessary for more effectually carrying out the work of the Society in all parts of the metropolis.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, June 14. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Sir G. Briggs, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Capt. Fortescue, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Baker, Barrington, Brown, Charles, Hill, Miner, Tidman, and Venning.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending June 9 the receipts had been £30. 13s. 6d. for the General Fund, and that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £151. 17s. 11d. and £37. 9s. 1d. respectively, £21. 11s. 3d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on June 12 there had been present:—

Mr. A. D. Graham, in the chair; Miss O. Hill, Mrs. Lathbury, Rev. S. A. Barnett, Messrs. Edgcombe, Barrington, Fletcher, and Lewes.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—There had been no meeting of this Sub-Committee.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Sub-Committee on June 13 had been present:—

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Rev. H. F. Mallet, and Mr. J. R. Hollond.

QUARTERLY REPORT OF THE FINANCE SUB-COMMITTEE.

It appeared from the report of the Sub-Committee that, in the first quarter of the present year, the donations had been on the General Fund £1,083, as against £533, in 1876, and the subscriptions £750, as against £543. The donations on the District Committee Aid Fund had been £93, as against £159, in the first quarter of 1877, and the subscriptions £34, as against £11. £495 had been transferred from the General Fund to the District Committee Aid Fund. The total receipts on the General Fund had been £1,971, as against £1,099.

METROPOLITAN MEDICAL RELIEF.

Sir Charles Trevelyan presented copies of his paper on Metropolitan Medical Relief,* with which were printed the speeches of Sir William Gull, Mr. Prescott Hewett, Sir Rutherford Alcock, Mr. Timothy Holmes, and others, at the Conference convened by the Society on the 16th April last. The pamphlet contains also the following appendices: a report of the Social Position of the Out-Patients of the Royal Free Hospital; a paper on 'The Limits of Unpaid Service'; the first report of the Medical Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, with rules for Provident Dispensaries; the report of a Conference on Out-Patient Relief, in December 1871; Correspondence relating to the Memorial to the British Medical Association; statement of Metropolitan Provident Dispensaries in March 1877; Metropolitan Poor Law Infirmaries and Dispensaries. There is also some interesting correspondence.

OFFICE ARRANGEMENTS.

A letter from Mr. W. Wightman Wood, regretting his enforced absence, was read.

The Chairman ruled that the second paragraph of his notice of motion was, in accordance with Bye-Law 14, out of order.

The Council then adjourned.

PROVINCIAL.

THE MANCHESTER AND SALFORD PROVIDENT DISPENSARIES' ASSOCIATION.—The last report of this Association contains information of great importance to those interested in the reform of Medical Charity; 'the system adopted in Manchester being much more comprehensive than any which has formerly been tried.'

'The Council of the Association has every reason to believe that, although there are now fewer members on the books than there were a year ago, the dispensaries are distinctly growing in favour with the class for whose benefit they were established. For some time after the dispensaries were opened a great many persons entered them from motives of curiosity, or because they were in immediate need of medical advice, and they withdrew as soon as their curiosity was satisfied, or when they were restored to health. Now, on the contrary, the great proportion of our members are healthy and enter because they have faith in the system; and it is no longer the rule, but the exception, for them to withdraw when they appears to be no likelihood of the services of the medical staff being required. The members generally are now willing to make greater sacrifices than they were before in order to retain their membership; their subscriptions are paid with more readiness and regularity, and at the same time their demands on the time of the staff and on the dispensaries for medicine have very sensibly diminished.'

'One of the strongest arguments in favour of the existence of provident dispensaries is this that without them it would be difficult to very greatly reduce the number of out and home patients at our medical charities. Many of these patients are now very properly refused assistance, because of their ability to procure it for themselves through the provident dispensaries; but only a small number could justly be turned away if the only alternative were the employment of private practitioners. The adoption of a system of investigation into the circumstances of the out and home patients at the charities in connexion with this Association considerably reduced their number in 1875, and during 1876 the reduction was still more marked. The Provident Society, acting as agent for the Council, continues to receive daily lists of the names and addresses of these patients. They are then visited at their own homes, and those who are found able to pay the provident dispensary charges are referred to the dispensary nearest to them. The greatest care is, however, taken that no hardship is inflicted by a too rigid adherence to rule, special and peculiar cases being treated as their circumstances may require.'

The number of members on the books on 1st January 1876 was 16,686; on the 31st December 1876, 13,759. The amount subscribed by the members during the year was £2,880. 16s. 3d.; £1,491. 11s. was paid to the medical men; and the Council of the Association have enabled the dispensaries to meet their liabilities by granting them the sum of £1,468. 1s. 4d. The loss for the year was £1,235; the balance of the amount being for expenses incurred in 1875, including the costs of establishment.

Out of 13,310 applicants at the Infirmary, Children's Hospital, Clinical Hospital, Chorlton Dispensary, and the Hospital for Incurables, 892 were 'living in other towns'; 1,977 were 'living outside dispensary districts'; the residences of 1,210 were 'incorrectly or insufficiently described'; 6,934 were hospital cases, and 2,297 were provident dispensary cases. It follows that, excluding non-resident cases, and those whose addresses could not be identified, out of 9,231 applicants 2,297, or 25 per cent., were ascertained to be able to become members of a provident dispensary. They were consequently refused further medical relief. There is a decrease of 9,601 in the number of applicants at the above hospitals—i.e., 36,003 in 1875, as against 26,407 in 1876.

'This large decrease is a remarkable one, as only 4,714 were refused relief and referred to the provident dispensaries in 1875 and 1876. It would seem, therefore, that a great many persons abstained altogether from applying for charitable relief, either because they were unwilling to have their right to charity investigated, or because the sentiment is gaining ground amongst them that it is better to rely upon their own exertions than upon the help of the rich.'

At the Hulme and Ancoats Dispensary, the system of the Association is adopted, and at these institutions also there has been a marked decrease in the number of applicants.

There is, at the same time, an increase of 3,394 in 1876 (16,188 as against 12,794) in the applications at the Salford and Pendleton Hospital and Dispensary; the number of patients at the St. Mary's Hospital remains nearly the same; and that at the Southern Hospital has risen from 2,555 in 1875 to 2,818 in 1877.

It would appear from this that about one-fourth of the ordinary applicants for medical charity are in a position to subscribe to a provident dispensary; that the establishment of provident dispensaries in connexion with hospitals largely reduces the attendance at the hospitals, and enables them to receive special 'hospital' cases, while those requiring ordinary treatment are dealt with at the local provident dispensary; and that, just as on the introduction of the anti-mendicity system, tramps and left those places where they were watched for less guarded as, so applicants for medical relief gravitate to those institutions (or but slight) restrictions are placed on their admission.

number of patients at the medical charities does not seem to so much upon the real needs of the poor as upon the facilities for relief. The establishment of a charity, medical or other, always a crowd of applicants, and it has to be shown on quite other than the size of the crowd whether such charity is doing good or

WINCHESTER CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—Penny Bank.—In their annual report the Committee call attention to the success that has attended their founding and working a Penny Bank and a Provident Coal Dispensary. The former can now show 471 depositors, whilst the latter numbers 131 members. They have also assisted at the formation of a Provident Dispensary, which already, though little more than a year old, has 131 members. They report that 'they have, during the past year, endeavoured to improve the custom, so long established in this town, of giving relief by means of petitions. They have inquired thoroughly into those that have been presented to them, and sanctioned those they have deemed deserving.' In noticing (vide Reporter, No. 200, p. 4) a similar case in the part of the Scarborough Society, we asked what safeguards were taken by the Society to prevent any abuse of endorsed petitions? What was the result of the petition? If the petition was for £10, were any steps taken to prevent more than that sum being collected? And would be glad to know the nature of the precautionary measures taken by the Winchester Society.

LAMPTON CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—Co-operation with the clergy.—At the quarterly meeting of this Society, held in April, the Committee reported upon the late conference with the clergy and ministers of various denominations and the heads of some of the local charities. 'The Committee were glad to state that this conference was attended by many influential representatives of charity, and that nearly the whole of the rural deanery, as well as the ministers of the various denominations, had decided to join the Society. The Committee, since the conference, had obtained a fortnightly list of all those relieved by the Society, and had every fortnight sent to each of the clergy and ministers the persons relieved in their respective districts; but they regretted that only three of the clergy had reciprocated that information, and that two months had since elapsed. The Committee feared there was some misunderstanding on the point, and would remind them that they only asked for the names and addresses of such cases as it seemed desirable for them to send in.' We trust the Committee will be encouraged. Their experience is far from being singular, and though the information were not reciprocated, a periodical list kept up, and sent monthly to the clergy and ministers of the persons in their respective districts whose cases had been before them during the month, would not only furnish them with such information as they ought to be made acquainted with, but would also bring under their notice the nature and the method of the work of the NOTTON CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—At the first annual meeting of this Society, in February last, the Mayor, in opening the proceedings, said: 'This system of the organisation of charity has been in vogue among the Jews for many years. Among the Jewish society there is always cared for by their own people, and for the purpose of giving an organisation in every town there is an organisation of this kind, in which the charity of the Jewish people themselves is disseminated among poorer brethren, by means of the secretary to their synagogue. Instead of that—and it had been very successfully carried out—is to provide one individual receiving from each charitable person a sufficient sum to meet their necessities, and thus making a larger sum in the aggregate than any one individual is entitled to receive.' The report states that 575 applications had been received and dealt with. We do not quite understand the meaning of the last sentence: 'Renewed applications and cases recommended, but who failed to be relieved, 181.'

DORSET MENDICITY SOCIETY.

from the Dorset County Chronicle and Somersetshire Gazette, April 5, 1877.]

The Committee of this Society—which has hitherto worked so beneficially for the suppression of vagrancy, and which owes its establishment to the Chief Magistrate of the county, Captain Amyatt Brown—had its annual meeting on Wednesday afternoon, Sessions day, at the Shirehall, Dorchester, under the presidency of the Right Hon. the Earl of Eldon. There were also present Mr. Floyer, M.P. (deputy-chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions), Mr. E. W. Williams, Mr. W. M. Calcraft, and others. The proceedings commenced by Captain Amyatt Brown reading the annual report:—

to lay before you the seventh annual report of the Dorset Mendiccity Society, and, for the first time since its establishment, I have to state that during the past twelvemonths there has been an increase in the number of vagrants relieved in our unions as compared with the preceding year. Hitherto in each year since the adoption of this system there has been a large and continuous decrease in the number of persons relieved in our casual wards, but during 1876 the number amounted to 3,971, against 2,490 in 1875. For some time past there has been a marked and general increase in vagrancy throughout the country, and there can be no doubt that owing to the continued depression in trade many persons belonging to the manufacturing and mining districts, and those not the best hands, have been thrown out of employment, and are now wandering about in search of work. Notwithstanding, however, these circumstances, the number of casuals relieved in this county has been reduced by 64 per cent. as compared with the year previous to the formation of this society, whilst the commitments under the Vagrant Act have in like manner decreased by 69 per cent., and at the annual census taken on the 28th March last it was found that there were only 28 tramps and vagrants in Dorset on that night. As a proof that a large amount of food had been supplied to persons passing through this county, it appears that during the past year 4,411 tickets have been exchanged for bread at the relief stations. The receipts and expenditure have been as follows:—

Receipts.		£	s.	d.
Balance in hand, 1st January 1876	.	46	13	6
Subscriptions and sale of tickets	.	48	11	6
		£95	5	0
Expenditure.		£	s.	d.
Paid for bread	.	37	0	2
Printing and stationery	.	7	19	9
Postage	.	1	4	3
Collector's commission	.	3	0	0
Posting bills	.	0	7	3
Gratuities to clerk and superintendents of police	.	15	0	0
Total cost	.	£64	11	5
Balance in hand 31st December 1876	.	30	13	7
		£95	5	5

Taking into consideration that owing to circumstances over which no mendicancy society can have any control, an unusual number of persons are passing through the county, it seems more than ever necessary to impress upon the charitable public the necessity for carrying out the principle of this society—"That relief to wayfarers be confined to necessary food only." To give money to such persons is no real kindness. If begging does not pay, those who are temporarily out of employ will not be tempted to become professional vagrants, but will return to work at the first opportunity that offers.

Mr. Floyer, in moving the adoption of the report, remarked that there was an increase in the number of vagrants of over 50 per cent., but under the circumstances mentioned in the report he did not see how that could be avoided.

Mr. Calcraft asked whether there was any reason to think the good relations which had hitherto existed between the public and the society had failed.

Captain Amyatt Brown replied there was none, and said formerly the complaint was that there were no vagrants to whom to give the tickets. But this cause for complaint no longer existed. He begged to point out that the subscriptions received from the 1st January this year amounted to only £13, while in the same period there had been paid for bread distribution about £20, so the society had really been carrying on its operations partly with the balance in hand on the date specified. The hon. secretary also explained, in answer to a further question, that the subscriptions received last year amounted to £46. Alluding to the extent of the existing vagrancy, he said the accounts for the past month showed a bread bill to the amount of £6, which indicated that a great number of persons were passing through the county. The average expenditure for bread was about £2, but, of course, the amount greatly depended upon the number of persons passing through the county in the capacity of mendicants.

Captain Williams: Have more tickets been exchanged for bread this year than last?

Captain Amyatt Brown: Yes, considerably. There had been a great many vagrants not only from South Wales but from various parts of England. Unfortunately, however, when enquiries were made as to the places from which they came, their answers could not be depended upon. But no doubt many who applied for tickets were bonâ fide out of employ. Inquiries which he had made elicited the fact that in Kent and other counties there had latterly, as in Dorset, been an increase in the number of vagrants.

The hon. secretary was warmly thanked for his services, and thus the proceedings terminated.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES.—No. V.

POVERTY AND PAUPERISM.—It is of the utmost importance accurately to distinguish between poverty and pauperism; for by confounding them, poverty is dishonoured and pauperism countenanced. Supply poverty with means and it vanishes, but pauperism is the more confirmed. Poverty is a sound vessel empty, but pauperism is not only empty but cracked. Poverty is a natural appetite, merely wanting food; pauperism a ravenous atrophy, which no food can satisfy. Poverty strives to cure itself; pauperism to contaminate others. Poverty often stimulates to exertion; pauperism always paralyses. Poverty is sincere; pauperism is an arch-hypocrite. Poverty has naturally a proud spirit; pauperism clamorous and imposing—the one grateful, the other the reverse. There is much that is alluring in poverty, but pauperism is altogether hateful. It is delightful to succour the one, and irksome to be taxed for the other. Poverty has the blessing of Heaven, as well as those who relieve it; pauperism, on the contrary, has nothing in common with the Christian virtues.

St. Paul has described the spirit of pauperism, and given his decided opinion upon it: 'Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought with labour and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you, to make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat. For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread.'

Indeed the injunctions of Christianity are wholly in opposition to the spirit of pauperism; and the merit of those institutions which serve to encourage, and of those individuals who thoughtlessly succour it, may be estimated accordingly.—Walker's Original, pp. 192, 193.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

WOOLWICH.—Annual Meeting.—The annual meeting of the Woolwich Committee was presided over the other day by Mr. J. Macgregor, who said 'they wanted feeling hearts and sensible heads to deal with the poor, and this Society was most useful in bringing together men who possessed these qualifications.' Mr. Talbot, M.P., subsequently moved, 'That this Society is one of the best existing agencies for securing the permanent and substantial benefit of the poor.' The resolution was seconded by the Rev. J. Bond, who mentioned that 'they had in hand the case of a decrepit schoolmaster, and were trying to obtain £200 to secure him a permanent pension for his few remaining years. Such a case as that could scarcely have been dealt with effectually except by their Society.' The work of the Committee has lately been very ably and prominently brought before its readers by the Kentish Independent. We trust that the public notice thus called to it may prove of benefit, and induce men of business and tradesmen in the town to join those fellow-townsmen who are already so earnestly and zealously working, and proving in their own persons that there is time not only for business, but also for duty.

BRIXTON.—Annual Meeting.—On Tuesday, April 28, the first annual meeting of the Brixton Committee was held. Mr. Alexander McArthur, M.P., was in the chair. The Rev. A. Robertson, Mr. J. T. Hart, Rev. David Jones, Mr. A. H. Hill, Rev. M. C. Osborn, Rev. T. L. Marshall, and others, addressed the meeting. The Chairman, referring to the attacks which are made upon the Society, said, 'It was in some cases urged upon the Society—inferentially, at any rate—that it ought to take upon itself the duty of indiscriminate charity. Those who advocated these views were either ignorant, or absolutely depraved and wicked. He then spoke of the Christian character of England, and its wealth, and remarked that the waste of money in charity was scarcely conceivable. He related the manner in which he had himself been imposed upon, and then spoke of the operations of this Society in checking imposition. In proportion as the objects of the Society and its results became known, he felt it would be better supported. He trusted the Society would receive liberal support, because it was not only important that cases should be inquired into, but also that there should be the means to give temporary assistance.'

CONVALESCENT HOMES.*—Hon. Mrs. Bonham-Carter receives women of respectable character recovering from illness, or needing country air, at Mrs. Child's, the Reading Room, Sheet, Petersfield (two hours by L. & S.W. Railway from London). No infectious cases or people requiring nursing will be eligible. Payment, 4s. a week. Applications to be made to Miss Bonham-Carter, 25 Ashley Place, S.W.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of June 1877 was 37,010, and 43,418 received outdoor relief, making a total of 80,428. This was a decrease of 409 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876, this was an increase of 1,235, but a decrease of 5,421 and 15,090 compared with 1875 and 1874 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 742. This was an increase of 13 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 166 on the corresponding day of last year.

To call attention to the circumstances under which a recommendation of the Administrative Committee affecting the Council's Staff was put and carried on June 4; to ask whether any other changes in the Central Office have been agreed to by the Administrative Committee for recommendation to Council other than the recommendation with regard to the Assistant Secretary; and to move for a return of such other changes.

He referred in detail to the minutes of the Administrative Committee bearing on the subject, pointed out the difficulties of the work of 'organising' and aiding District Committees, and urged that, before any changes were made, the Council should have complete information respecting them.

The Chairman pointed out that the Administrative Committee expressly stated that the subject was under consideration, and that, apart from the recommendation adopted by the Council on the 4th June, no rearrangement had been definitely agreed upon. None but a negative answer could therefore be given to the request for a return of these changes. The subject would in due course be submitted to the Council.

After a few words from Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. Copeman, Mr. S. Fuller, Mr. H. H. Hill, and Mr. Bousfield, Mr. W. W. Wood gave notice that he would bring forward the motions that stood in his name at an early meeting of the Council in the next Session.

The Council then adjourned.

DIFFICULT CASES.—No. 8.

69 East India Dock Road, London, E.

DEAR MR. LOCH,—I should be very grateful if any of those who read the Reporter would be kind enough to advise as to what it would be best to do for a poor boy of 15 who has had to undergo amputation of both hands. His education has been neglected, and he ought, for one thing, to be taught to read. His parents belong to the poorest class. It is possible to attach appliances to his arms, by means of which he may feed himself, but it might be well for him to be placed somewhere for two or three years where careful attention might develop to the uttermost such capacities for a life of interest and usefulness as he may still possess. I shall be thankful for suggestions made either to the Reporter or directly to myself.

Yours very truly,

ALLEN D. GRAHAM.

HOSPITAL SATURDAY FUND.

On the 19th June Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided at a well-attended Conference, convened at the Charing Cross Hospital, by the kind permission of the authorities of the hospital.

The meeting was summoned to discuss the question, 'Whether Provident Dispensaries were entitled to benefit by the Hospital Saturday collection.' The discussion was opened by Mr. Hamilton Hoare, who was followed by Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., Dr. Brudenell Carter, of St. George's Hospital, Dr. Ford Anderson, Dr. Jabez Hogg, of Charing Cross Hospital, Mr. Hughes, Chairman of the Temperance Hospital, Dr. Edmunds, and Mr. Hardy. Mr. Guild, Mr. Halpin, and Mr. Mackenzie, of the Hospital Saturday Council, also took part in the discussion. Mr. Samuel Morley concluded, and expressed his satisfaction with the result of the discussion. The question was thoroughly sifted, and the Hospital Saturday Council are glad to have suggested such a conference, where at least various aspects of the question were presented, and views differing to some extent from one another were interchanged. The feeling of the conference was entirely in favour of the Provident system, though opinions differed as to whether Provident Dispensaries ought to be supported by the Hospital Saturday collection.

THE STRICT ADMINISTRATION OF THE POOR LAW.

The following is a paper read in March last by Mr. A. G. Crowder, one of the Guardians of St. George's-in-the-East, at a meeting of the Liberal Social Union:—

The generality of well-to-do people wipe off their debt towards the poor by paying their rates, subscribing to certain prominent charities, and dropping an occasional shilling to gratify a passing emotion. There are others, however, who really do care for the poor. They go among them, and give to them both time and money, but for the most part unwisely, and without keeping sufficiently in view the causes of their misery. They aim at obtaining all the outdoor parish relief they can for every poor person they come across, unless living a manifestly immoral life, and from whatever source the distress may have arisen, supplementing it by private alms. They plead for their cases with guardians and relieving officers, causing want of uniformity and firmness in their administration, and a consequent gambling spirit among the poor.

The want of system produces confusion in the minds of both givers and receivers, between the functions of compulsory public relief and voluntary private charity, and a slipshod and uneducating administration of both. Such laxity and irregularity tempt the working classes to recklessness both in regard to saving and obtaining and retaining good and regular work; bring about congestion of labour and consequent intermittent and underpaid work; offer a premium on intemperance and systematic deception; cause much loss of energy and self-respect; and, worst of all, are, in a gradual measure, to blame for that loosening of family ties which we all deplore so much.

I propose to base my remarks on my experience on the one hand as guardian of one of the poorest districts of East London (St. George's-in-the-East); on the other, as almoner for the Society for Relief of Distress, and member of the Charity Organisation Committee in the same locality.

In dealing with the question of relief it is obvious that in towns at least, system is necessary. The functions of poor law and charity ought to be clearly defined.

First. As to sound principles of Poor Law administration, there is not much room for argument. The main question with thoughtful people is, I suppose, how best a sound practice may be carried out, now that the working class have been for so long trained up under a false one, and whether it can be rapidly applied without causing much suffering. I will attempt to show how this may be done by briefly describing the main rules at work in my own Union, and their results. We have substituted the indoor for the outdoor system; and the principle on which we work it is, to take part of a family into the workhouse instead of the whole.

Widows with children are offered maintenance in the district pauper schools for such of their children as they appear to be unable to support instead of outdoor relief. The object is, first, to induce husbands to subscribe to the Widow and Orphan Fund of benefit clubs, or to insure their lives; and, secondly, to draw out the affection and efforts of friends and relatives, who frequently take some of the distressed families into their own homes, when this load of pressure is brought to bear.

In not more than about one in three cases is this offer of the schools accepted, and yet from personally visiting nearly all the cases of refusal, I am fully prepared to endorse the written statement of the able and experienced senior relieving officer of the Stepney Union (where the same system is pursued). He writes that he is not aware of a single case of hardship entailed upon the families by insisting on this form of relief. Private charity can always be found through the Charity Organisation Committee to enable a widow to start in some employment, or tide over times of sickness, or even slackness of work; or to supplement provision by the husband.

Secondly. Cases of sickness or accident, where the patient is in a fit state to be removed, are dealt with by an offer of the infirmary, combined with an offer of the schools for some of the children, if necessary, when the sick person is father of a family. This offer provides for proper attention to the patient, and efficient assistance for the rest of the family. It diminishes the encouragement to improvidence, but does not 'break up' the home. Most of us are aware how easily sickness may be provided against by means of clubs, and where this provision runs short, or where other elements of thrift exist, private charity steps in through the Charity Organisation Committee.

Thirdly. The aged. At St. George's-in-the-East we have for some time offered the workhouse to all new cases where no evidence of providence can be traced. Private charity in the form of regular weekly pensions has always been found through the Charity Organisation Committee for the exceptional provident cases. I may mention that married couples over sixty years are never separated in our workhouse, the law being strictly adhered to in this respect; and all the inmates have occasional holidays, and those over sixty years every Sunday out as well.

The development of family affection and neighbourly help has been most strikingly evoked by our action, and in numerous instances old employers, and those upon whom there existed some legitimate claim, have come forward; so that neither our relieving officers nor myself have had a single case brought to our notice of the 'breaking-up' of a respectable home, where the people could have lived decently upon the parish outdoor pittance had it been obtainable; so insignificant was the dole, yet in no union I believe has a strict practice been so suddenly applied. In the neighbouring division of Whitechapel, where the same system has been pursued for a much longer period, the experience is precisely similar. Out of one hundred and sixty-seven families (six hundred individuals) whose out-relief was discontinued in 1873 and 1875, only eight were found not to be doing well; two out of these were drunken, and four were cases of obstinate refusal to send children to the district schools. Seventeen had left the union, and only eleven entered the workhouse. The same was the case at Shrewsbury, where in six months pauperism was reduced seventy per cent. Mr. Baker, the relieving officer, stated that no suffering was occasioned.

The chief reason why no appreciable suffering has resulted from the sudden application of a strict system in St. George's-in-the-East, is, in my judgment, that we have uniformly applied our rules, and not permitted interest or importance to influence our action. We have never had any difficulty about what are called obstinate cases, and the really destitute, feeling that we mean what we say, accept the relief we offer. Moreover, it is plain that adherence to fixed rules and abiding by decisions once given is the secret in making a reform produce its effect on the habits of the poor.

Now, I am particularly anxious to make it understood that I have not formed my opinion upon the experience of a board-room, but upon personal visitation of the cases; e.g. I have notes of nearly every case in which outdoor relief has been discontinued since I joined St. George's-in-the-East. A great number of these I have visited; and I now keep a 'hard case' book, in which I enter all apparently respectable new cases, who would have had outdoor relief on the old system, for subsequent watching. At the present moment I have not a single case remaining on my book as one of suffering. No change, of course—not even a change of fashion nor the introduction of a single new machine—can be effected without necessitating some rather harder lives. The point to be decided must be, 'What is best to be done on the whole?'

In opposition to the frequently expressed opinion that out-door relief should not be discontinued but simply made adequate, and reserved for those exceptional cases which we, at St. George's, throw upon charity, I would submit:—

First. That really exhaustive inquiry by relieving officers and impartial discrimination by guardians is practically unattainable.

Secondly. That as long as public relief is given outside the workhouse, in any new cases, there will be so strong a tendency among the poor to rely on drawing a prize in the lottery that very much of the educating effect of a strict system will be lost.

And, if adequate State pensions for the respectable aged were to be given, and thus the present stigma removed, the incentive to pauperism would be so irresistible that numbers above the present pauper class would become candidates for them, and the rates in many districts could not bear the burden.

Again, in the present state of the law, it is a breach of trust to administer rates, as charity, for making poor people comfortable, destitution alone constituting a claim upon them. The tax is compulsorily levied, and the bulk of it is drawn from struggling ratepayers, many of whom have had no better opportunities in life than the paupers themselves.

All giving must do some harm, and the chief good arising from it is the personal feeling excited. But State relief can evoke no real gratitude on the part of the poor, who know that they have a right to it in some form, and that it costs the actual dispensers of it comparatively nothing; while it creates no sympathy or kindly intercourse on the part of the rich, who are by its existence, in the out-door form, simply helped to slip out of their responsibilities.

There is one very common error which I will allude to here. It is often said that a person is more likely to be pauperised by indoor than by out-door relief; but, so far from this being the case, I submit that it must be exactly the reverse. As Mr. John Hollond, Guardian of Paddington, wrote the other day:—'The thing that really pauperises (and it must be remembered that the spirit of pauperism is a moral evil) is what tends to make the poor think that others will provide for them, and that they need not provide for themselves. The less agreeable, therefore, the form of relief is, the less temptation is there to rely upon it, the stronger are the motives to forethought and self-help.'

In the matter of a widespread system like that of public relief we must bear in mind how very widely demoralising every single mistake must be. Relief out of the workhouse cannot be given to a single immoral or improvident individual, or to an individual widow or aged person, however well conducted, who ought to have been provided for by the husband, or who ought to be supported by the children, without holding out a direct premium to other husbands and other children to neglect their duties in the same way.

It is generally admitted that much of the distress among the working classes is caused by their own extravagance and recklessness. It seems to make no difference as to a man's provident powers, whether he earns £1, £2, or £3 a week, or whether he has a large family or none; he pleads the same inability to save. Moreover, we see the foreigners thrive where Englishmen starve, and that public-houses drive the best trade in the poorest districts. Only the other day I heard of a man, not a drunkard, I believe, who could earn £5 a week; on being remonstrated with for not having saved, his only excuse was, 'Well, you see, we never do save!' Now I most fully admit that the battle of life is hard to almost every working man, and it is for that very reason that I am so anxious that he shall be braced up and nerved for the encounter, instead of being weakened and unnerved by mistaken efforts for his help.

Having endeavoured to show that a strict Poor Law administration is essential to the improvement of the condition of the working class, I would strongly urge those who have the time to study the subject to become candidates for election as guardians; and especially to qualify themselves in the poorer districts. Such as are unable to serve themselves may do good work in promoting the election of fit persons, and in the formation of a sound public opinion on the subject.

Secondly. As the handmaid of a strict and machine-like Poor Law there should be a gentle and personal charity. I want the real care of the poor to be thrown more upon the rich. I want the rich man to be forced into more direct contact with the poor man, and thus to become more awakened to the duties of stewardship. Strict Poor-Law gives a great impetus to all this.

Charity should be wise and systematised as well as personal and gentle, so as to commend itself to the administrators of the Poor Law; close co-operation between the two being necessary to the effective working of both. As to the statement not unfrequently put forward, that if outdoor relief were abolished, charity could not bear the burden, I may say, that in St. George's-in-the-East, where it is virtually abolished for new cases, and where a saving of upwards of £3,000 a-year has been effected in that department alone, not more, I estimate, than about £200 a-year has been given in additional charity, through the Charity Organisation Committee, among our 60,000 very poor population. Yet, either the relieving officers or the guardians themselves send every exceptional case to the Charity Organisation Committee, and that Committee has never allowed, to my knowledge, a single approved case to go unrelieved or inefficiently relieved, whatever the cost. Its office is situated in the main thoroughfare of the district, and must be known to everybody.

I am strongly of opinion that poor law reformers should not wait until charity is organised before they discontinue out-relief in new cases. In Whitechapel and St. George's-in-the-East, charity, I am persuaded, would never have become organised if it had not been for the prior pressure of the guardians. One broad direction I would here lay down, 'Leave to the sterner action of the Poor Law, the undeserving, improvident, and those whose relations ought to have provided for them, reserving the exceptional cases only for charity, e.g., in the case of a sick or aged applicant, the question should be, "Has he made reasonable provision, according to his circumstances?"' If he has done his best he is entitled to charity, if not, he should be referred to the Poor Law.

A word about personal intercourse between rich and poor, as an essential part of true charity. The old-fashioned mixing up of religion and relief in district visiting must produce a great deal of hypocrisy and cupidity; and intercourse, to be really useful, ought to be natural. What can one expect from knocking at a poor person's door, and introducing oneself by saying, 'I am come to make your acquaintance,' and on subsequent visits, 'I am come to see how you are getting on.' There are many ways in which a district visitor may become acquainted with her people in a natural manner. She may collect for provident clubs, lend books, distribute parish notices, inspect sanitary arrangements. (It is not difficult to find some vestryman or guardian whose name may be used as a quasi-authority, and by reading the Public Health Acts the points to which her attention should be directed, are easily ascertained.) She may obtain lists of the children in her district attending the day and Sunday Schools in the locality, and call upon their parents about them. Co-operation of clergy, School Board managers, and School Board visitors, could be secured, and introductions to them obtained through the Charity Organisation Committee for this purpose. Further, I urge the entire dissociation from district visiting of the responsibility of dealing with relief. Relief should, in my opinion, be in the hands of an impartial experienced body. Failing the establishment of such a body by the clergyman (who should make use of the Charity Organisation Society's machinery), I would constitute the local Charity Organisation Committee the judge of all applications for relief. None but the most thoughtful and experienced people are really capable of performing this very difficult function efficiently, and enormous harm has been done by the relegation of it to dilettantes and paid inferiors.

I cannot think that any real and valuable influence need be impaired by the dissociation of almsgiving from a district visitor's work, provided that she is absolutely pledged to give nothing except to the relief agency of the district, whatever it may be. If a visitor prefers dealing with an individual instead of a committee, she may co-operate with the almoner for the Society for Relief of Distress (his name could be obtained through the Charity Organisation Committee whose machinery he generally employs). Both visiting and relief work require some leisure, but the size of a district can be reduced to almost any limits, and half a day a-week would enable valuable relief business to be effected. Persons wishing to give any portion of time, however small, to such work would, I think, do well to communicate with the Secretary of the Charity Organisation Society, 15 Buckingham Street, Strand, and I should myself be glad to have an interview on the subject with anyone willing to take up East London work in any form.

MENDICITY AND THE LABOUR TEST IN FLORENCE.

A Florentine journal, La Nazione, has, in its issue of May 14, an article informing the public that the Laboratorio maintained for the repression of mendicancy by the local Società per la repressione dell' accattonaggio, is still open for the reception of mendicants, referred to it by the public for employment and assistance. It appears that this notice has been rendered necessary by the persistent circulation on the part of professional beggars, of statements to the effect that the workshop is closed, and that it is useless for them to apply. These statements, says the notice, are the usual reply of mendicants, to whom the Society's tickets are offered, and are supported by every sort of trick and invention.

The article goes on to state that during the last five months for which it has been established, 66 individuals have been admitted to the workshop, and have stayed for periods varying from two or three weeks to as many months, while some have remained since the opening of the establishment. The daily attendances now amount to 30 or 40. The popularity of the workshop among the class who frequent it, is attributed by the writer to the fact that the work is found to be comparatively light, fatiguing neither the body nor the mind, 'that considerable leisure, which can be advantageously filled up with other casual occupations, is allowed, and that by these means, persons are put in the way of obtaining employment in ordinary branches of industry.' It is stated that the Society is doing good work, and is supported by most of the leading residents in Florence.

Had such a society as this been in existence in former times in Florence, the 'Beggars Bridge,' alluded to by the Rev. R. Maguire, at a meeting of the Holborn Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, held in 1873, would possibly never have been built.* According to the legend told on the spot to Mr. Maguire, an offer was made by one of the Dukes of Tuscany, to give to every beggar, who attended at a certain place, on a certain day, a new suit of clothes. Guards having formed a cordon around the assembled mendicants, they were compelled there and then to put on the suits provided, and from the pockets of the old suits, money enough was obtained to build the 'Beggars Bridge.'

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES. No. VI.

EAST LONDON.—The Distress of the Poor and Provident Habits.—Now about this East of London. What is so bad in it is, not what 'jumps at the eyes,' as the French say. No; this summer there is not so very much actual suffering for want of food, nor from sickness. What is so bad is the habitual condition of this mass of humanity—its uniform mean level, the absence of anything more civilised than a grinding organ to raise the ideas beyond the daily bread and beer, the utter want of education, the complete indifference of religion, with the fruits of all this, viz. improvidence, dirt, and their secondaries, crime and disease. The people create their destitution and their disease. Probably there are hardly any of the most needy who, if they had been only moderately frugal and provident, could not have placed themselves in a position to tide over the occasional months of want of work or of sickness, which there always must be. And this occasional pressure is what works the ruin. The breadwinner falls sick, or is out of work, for a few months; the home is broken up; the hospital or the workhouse swallows up the family; the thread of life is broken—perhaps they have been removed to a distance from former employers—at any rate, life has to be begun again right from the bottom. Is it wonderful that drink and crime levy a large conscription on these wretches, while the remnant subsides into dirt and despondency?

* Vide Reporter, Vol. III., p. 106.

I do not underrate the difficulty of laying by out of weekly earnings, but I say it can be done. A dock-labourer, while a young, strong, unmarried man, could lay by half his weekly wages, and such men are almost sure of constant employment. I am sure I am not drawing the least upon my imagination when I say that a young man of twenty could, in five years, even as a dock-labourer (which is much the lowest employment, and least well-paid there is), save about £20. Is it unreasonable to suppose, that, from twenty to five-and-twenty, an average man might get through without any sickness? Then he would certainly do what I say. He earns 15s. a-week: we shall be giving him plenty if we make him live on 11s. 6d., putting by 3s. 6d. a-week. We will allow him to be out of work at one time and another for two months in the year, so there will be only forty-four times 3s. 6d. saved, and out of this must be deducted his living for the eight weeks of enforced idleness. The forty-four times 3s. 6d. is 154s.; allow him 10s. a-week out of this when idle, and he is still £3. 14s. to the good at the end of the year. This is not exactly Utopia; it is within the reach of nearly every man if quite at the bottom of the tree; but if it were of anything like common occurrence, the destitution and disease of this city would be within quite manageable limits.

And this will take place. I may not live to see it, but it will be within two generations. For, unfortunately, this amount of change may be effected without the least improvement in the spiritual condition of the people. Good laws, energetically enforced, with compulsory education, supplemented by gratuitous individual exertion (which will then have a much reduced field and much fairer prospects), will certainly succeed in giving the mass of the people so much light as will generally guide them into so much of industry and morality as is clearly conducive to their bodily ease and advancement in life. There are hardly any residents in the East rich enough to give much money, or with enough leisure to give much time. This is the evil. Even the best disposed in the West don't like coming so far off, and indeed, few have the time to spare, and when they do there is great waste of time and energy on the journey. My plan [that of living at the East End] is the only really practicable one, and as I have both means, time, and inclination, I should be a thief and a murderer if I withheld what I so evidently owe.—Denison's Letters, page 61-3.

ST. PANCRAS, NORTH.—Conference of Charitable Workers at Highgate.—On Monday, 18th inst., by invitation of Colonel Wilkinson, President of the North St. Pancras and Highgate Committee, a considerable number of the Clergy, District Visitors, and others interested in charitable work in the district assembled in the grounds of Southampton Lodge, Fitzroy Park, to hear a paper read by Miss Octavia Hill, on 'Effectual Charity,' and to confer with a view to promoting more effectual co-operation.

Colonel Wilkinson, before inviting Miss Hill to read her paper, spoke of the necessity for and value of the work which the Society was carrying on.

Miss Octavia Hill, in her paper, dwelt especially on the fearful want of the most ordinary forethought which the present system of doles encouraged, and pointed out the necessity for some representative body in order to secure protection from imposture and overlapping of relief on the one hand, and adequate relief for suitable cases on the other. Such a body was the Local Committee of the Charity Organisation Society. It had no desire to interfere, as was sometimes supposed, with charitable workers, but wished them all to send representatives.

After a few words from the Rev. H. F. Mallet and Mr. C. E. Maurice, Mr. Arthur N. Butt (Hon. Sec.) dwelt at some length on the unreasonableness of the numerous objections which had been raised to their modus operandi, and illustrated, by cases which had come under his own notice, the necessity there was for such a body and the mode in which they dealt with cases of unusual difficulty. As far as he had been able to ascertain they had never failed to obtain assistance, and that assistance as far as possible adequate, so as to avoid any necessity for further applications for every case they had decided as suitable for relief. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. W. H. Busk and Mr. T. J. Maude having spoken of the work of the Committee,

The Rev. C. B. Dalton, Vicar of Highgate, said, although this was not a formal meeting, he thought it due to Colonel Wilkinson that there should be some practical expression of the opinion of those present, and he therefore wished to propose a resolution. He was glad to see no account of the relief given, as he had perfect confidence in the Committee. Relief, where needed, was given—as it should be—unostentatiously. He concluded by moving:—

'That the Highgate and North St. Pancras Committee of the Charity Organisation Society deserves the hearty support of all interested in the welfare of the poor, and affords a valuable medium for co-operation and mutual assistance, of which all interested in the charitable work of the district should avail themselves.'

The Rev. G. S. Ram, Vicar of St. Ann's, Highgate Rise, wished to be allowed to second this. The work of the Committee was most valuable. Any cases sent by him or his District Visitors were most carefully investigated. He would give them all the help in his power and expect help in return. The Society was doing an admirable work.

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously, after which

Colonel Wilkinson thanked Miss Hill on behalf of those present for her valuable paper; and

The Rev. G. D. Bartlet (Baptist), in supporting this, said those who wished to understand the work that was going on should attend the Committee meetings. If the objections had not been mentioned he thought they would have known nothing about them.

Mr. C. L. Lewes and Mr. T. J. Maude thanked Colonel Wilkinson for the agreeable opportunity of meeting which he had afforded them; and the company then, at the suggestion of their host, dispersed over the grounds, meeting again in the house for refreshment, where the subject of the gathering was actively discussed.

Besides those mentioned, there were present, Rev. C. H. Andrews, St. Luke's, New Kentish Town; Rev. E. B. Penfold, St. Michael's, Camden Road; Revs. T. C. Shepherd and F. W. Reade, Holy Trinity; Rev. S. Smith, Rev. James Morgan, Messrs. J. Pickett (Stranger's Friend Society), W. Ash, W. Legg (Hon. Sec.), and others.

WHITECHAPEL.—Two Cases of Medical Relief.—This Committee has recently dealt with the case of a boy aged 9 years, referred for assistance to their office by the School Board authorities. The parents were very poor, as the father was prevented by serious and painful disease from working regularly. The child was in bad health, and it was strongly recommended by the doctor that he should be sent to the sea-side. The Committee provided him with clothing, of which he was in great want, and sent him to the Margate Sea-Bathing Infirmary. The total expense, to be repaid from Mr. Peek's fund, was £4. 12s. 5d., £2. 6s. 6d. of which was expended on admission and expenses to the Infirmary, and the remainder on clothes. This Committee has also recently had before them a glaring case of abuse of a medical charity. The attention of the medical officer of one of the largest endowed hospitals having been drawn to an out-patient, he caused inquiry to be made through the Society. It was found that the woman in question was the wife of the proprietor of a tavern in a most favourable situation, who was doing a good business, and appeared to be 'very well off.' A local medical man, who had at various times visited the out-patient in question stated that, in his opinion, the people were perfectly able to pay for the services even of a physician if they chose to employ one.

ADMINISTRATION OF POOR LAW RELIEF.

The following is taken from a Paper by Mr. T. Barwick Lloyd Baker, in a recent number of The Local Government Chronicle:—

'What we do require is, as I maintain, a system which shall openly and fairly punish those who could have made provision for their old age, but have—not with intention, but from carelessness—neglected to do so, and who have thus thrown the burden of their support on to those who have been more careful; just as I ought to be punished if, by my carelessness, without evil intention, I set fire to my neighbour's house. I assume, of course, that punishment should be considered with a view to its prospect, not to its retrospect; that its object should be, not retaliation for the past offence, but the prevention, by deterrence, of future wrong.'

'All are agreed that our out-relief should be lowered; nearly all agree that this should not be done suddenly.'

'The truth is that we feel that we ourselves, the guardians of the last fifty years, have been in fault for teaching the poor that they might hope for a comfortable support in old age from the rates, and that they need not lay by for themselves. We have now to teach them the very opposite, yet to teach it with some consideration, remembering our own error.'

'The great difficulty appears to be in the cases of old men who have been all their lives in steady fair work, and have brought up moderate families, who may yet be able to do little to help them. These could no doubt, by the help of a little more energy, have laid by enough to support them for at least some part of their old age. They have failed in this duty, and so far deserve punishment; but, on the other hand, we must remember that we have also failed in our duty of teaching them.'

'Yet surely we might lessen the relief in such cases without hardship. Anyone applying for relief this year might be told that he could not have relief unless he could show cause why he had not laid by something. He should have out-relief for a month, and during that time he must tell the relieving officer for what masters he had generally worked during the last twenty years; and what were his wages, including drink, piecework, and harvest. At the end of the month, he might, perhaps, be told, "You have worked well and borne a good character; but you have only brought up two children, while your neighbour has brought up six on the same wages. You could, therefore, have lived as well as he did, and have laid by four shillings a week. However, we will consider your case for another fortnight." At the end of that time, during which he would have probably let all his neighbours know of his fears, he might be told, "You have not deserved out-relief; but you have never been taught the necessity of laying by money. We will give it you now, but if anyone applies in like manner twelve months hence, he will not have it unless he has laid by something to support him for a time after his wages have ceased; and the year after we shall expect any who then apply to have saved a larger sum." Such a plan would enable both the poor and the public to understand that it is both a possibility and a duty to habitually lay by something for old age, and would both assist and incline both poor and public to work with us. It is evident that nothing is more important for the spread and well-working of a system than the goodwill and co-operation of the public.'

'With regard to the sick (and here we come especially to the observations of the writer in the Lancet), I should say that it was desirable in nearly all cases to take them into the house. Our object is to accustom men to a habit of saving; but, as I have before said, the poor, from our ready relief, have lost very much of the habit of looking for it. A young man thinks age so far off that it hardly affects him, but as or accident are felt to be nearer at hand; and the fact of a young being taken into the house, even though it be, as it ought to be, to a highly good hospital, where he will probably be sooner cured than at while it is carefully explained that his discomfort, for such it must be the consequence of his having failed in the duty of laying by, will, I e, make the strongest impression upon the young; and if they can be taught to lay by for sickness, they will go on to do it for old age. seems to me that we want to make more evident to the public some of careful discrimination between those who could have easily laid maintenance for their old age, and those to whom, by reason of a sickly family, it would have been difficult, or, by reason of long illness or ill health, it would have been impossible to do so.

the present state of the law a higher degree of comfort can only be by voluntary charity; but I fear that few people are qualified to do charity wisely without consultation with others; and that we ought to and I trust may in time have, a charity organisation attached to and ag with the guardians at each union, which will enable us to direct arity as not merely to gratify our own feelings, but to do as much and as little harm to our neighbours as possible.

t me conclude with an observation of a friend of mine, who some ago was the poor clergyman of a poor district. I asked him how ople had got through a very severe winter, and he told me that is had applied to the union for help. I said, "That is very extra-ry, but highly creditable." He replied, "But in two respects my t is exceptionally fortunate. We have no charities to help the y gifts of bread, money, &c.; and, what is more, we have no rich and his lady to help them at need. I am too poor to do it, so they o help themselves, and they do it better than others could do it for alt very guilty, and I turned away; but I thought him more right liked to allow.'

PAROCHIAL CHARITIES IN LONDON AND WESTMINSTER.*

Parliamentary return moved for by Mr. Morley on June 14, 1875, of present income of the parochial charities of the Cities of London and Westminster has just been printed. The total present gross income of charities in 110 parishes in the city of London is £101,380. 12s., and of £16,172. 7s. compared with a return made in 1870. The of the foundation of these charities, or the purposes to which the is applicable are as follows:—Education, £20,076. 12s. 10d.; tituting and advancement, £2,198. 6s. 7d.; endowments of clergy, s, and sermons, £6,501. 17s. 9d.; church purposes, £34,424. 9s. 5d.; parochial uses, £9,611. 12s. 6d.; support of almshouses, their s, and pensioners, £10,949. 18s. 9d.; distribution of articles in £3,900. 13s. 3d.; distribution of money, £8,871. 18s. 1d.; general the poor, £3,840. 15s. 9d.; medical, £340. The total gross income parochial charities in the city of Westminster is £28,356. 9s. 7d., of £4,746. 2s. 10d. is classed under the head of 'general charities,' and mainder belongs to eleven parishes. The charities under the ad-ration of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster are not included in turn, and will be found, it is stated, in the digest of 'general es.' The objects of the foundation of the charities, or the purposes ch the income is applicable, are described as follows:—Education, £2,11s. 8d.; apprenticing and advancement, £332. 16s.; endowment rgy, lecturers, and for sermons, £843. 6s. 10d.; church purposes, 5s. 6d.; public parochial uses, £247. 13s. 6d.; support of almshouses, nmates, and pensioners, £8,539. 18s. 3d.; distribution of articles in £480. 7s. 3d.; distribution of money, £1,578. 1s. 1d.; medical, 1. 2s. 6d.; loans, £921. 8s. The total gross income of all the ial charities in London and Westminster is £129,737. 1s. 7d.—Pall Gazette, March 15, 1877.

USE OF HOSPITALS.—In the British Medical Journal for Saturday, will be found, under this head, the following report of the Joint ittee of the Liverpool Medical Institution:— he Committee are of opinion that the relief at present afforded to -patients of the various hospitals and infirmaries of the town is ted by the severity and urgency of the cases admitted, and does not : further comment. Their remarks apply to gratuitous advice and ance afforded to out-patients, either at hospitals and dispensaries, or r own homes.

ay consider that, in this latter respect, public charity is greatly l by persons receiving it who are quite in a position to contribute ing towards obtaining medical attendance; that the multiplying of ble institutions, by producing separate interests and requiring repe-ildings and staffs, involves a waste of public money which might be better applied to maintaining the great leading charities in a highly effective condition; that, with the present diffuse mode of administering medical charity, no systematic inquiry into the circumstances of persons applying for it is made; that its indiscriminate distribution tends to destroy the self-reliance of the working classes, and to encourage improvidence and pauperism; that, in consequence of the number of unsuitable cases applying for treatment, the medical officers are unable to devote sufficient time to really serious cases, while it greatly hinders the scientific study and treat-ment of disease.

'The number of paupers relieved by the "parish authorities" during the same period, either by admission into hospital or otherwise, is estimated thus:—

Admitted into workhouse	10,737
Relieved outside	5,145

'The population of the town is estimated at 521,544.

'The Committee feel that as the present unsatisfactory condition of matters has been one of gradual and slow development, it will be impossible at once to effect any serious or sweeping changes in the present constitution of the charities administering outdoor relief, but they would desire to bring prominently before the medical profession and the public two means by which they think some improvement might be effected, and which are already in successful operation in other towns. (a) They strongly recommend that more general support be given to the Charity Organisation Society, one of whose main objects is to inquire into the necessities of persons requiring medical or other relief, and they think that the existing medical charities ought to bring themselves into more direct connection with it; they do so in view of the fact that the present system of admission by governors' or subscribers' recommendation is undoubtedly much abused, as it by no means ensures that the applicants' means, or the urgency of their cases, have been properly inquired into. (b) They desire to advocate the introduction of the provident dispensary system, or some modification of it, by which the patients contribute something, however small, for their medical attendance. By this means they cease to receive relief in forma pauperis, while by the aggregation of the small sums paid by them some remuneration is made to the medical officers.'

JOHN S. MILL ON CHARITABLE RELIEF.

Apart from any metaphysical considerations respecting the foundation of morals or of the social union, it will be admitted to be right that human beings should help one another; and the more so in proportion to the urgency of the need: and none needs help so urgently as one who is starv-ing. The claim to help, therefore, created by destitution is one of the strongest which can exist; and there is prima facie the amplest reason for making the relief of so extreme an exigency as certain to those who require it, as by any arrangements of society it can be made.

On the other hand, in all cases of helping there are two sets of conse-quences to be considered—the consequences of the assistance itself, and the consequences of relying on the assistance. The former are generally beneficial, but the latter, for the most part, injurious; so much so, in many cases as to really outweigh the value of the benefit. And this is never more likely to happen than in the very cases where the need of help is the most intense. There are few things for which it is more mischievous that people should rely on the habitual aid of others than for the means of subsistence, and, unhappily, there is no lesson which they more easily learn. The problem to be solved is, therefore, one of peculiar nicety, as well as importance: how to give the greatest amount of needful help with the smallest encouragement to undue reliance on it.

Energy and self-dependence are, however, liable to be impaired by the absence of help, as well as by its excess. It is even more fatal to exertion to have no hope of succeeding by it, than to be assured of succeeding without it. When the condition of anyone is so disastrous that his energies are paralysed by discouragement, assistance is a tonic, not a sedative; it braces instead of relaxing the active faculties; always provided that the assistance is not such as to dispense with self-help, by substituting itself for the person's own skill, labour, and prudence, but is limited to affording him a better hope of succeeding by those legitimate means. This, accordingly, is a test to which all plans of philanthropy and benevolence should be brought, whether intended for the benefit of individuals or of classes, and whether conducted on the voluntary or on the government principle.

In so far as the subject admits of any general doctrine or maxim, it would appear to be this: that if assistance is given in such a manner that the condition of the person helped is as desirable as that of the person who succeeds in doing the same thing without help, the assistance, if systematic, and capable of being previously calculated on, is mischievous; but if, while available to everybody, it leaves to everyone a strong motive to do without it if he can, it is then for the most part beneficial.—J. S. MILL, Political Economy.

DISORGANISED CHARITY.

A correspondent recently sent us the following:—

'A few days since one of the Vicarage Houses in Bethnal Green was undergoing some repairs, when the following piece of gossip was given as a fact to one of the servants by one of the labourers.

'There was an elderly woman of his acquaintance who attended regularly at a chapel. "Of course," added the narrator, "she was paid regularly every week." This person, having continued for many years in receipt of this donation, suddenly confided to her landlady that she was removing, having obtained a permanent situation at the chapel, where she should be in a position to receive many gratuities, and so be much better off. Her landlady, aware of her industry in securing the favours of all with whom she could scrape an acquaintance, saw at once that there was a ready way opened to her for pleading her poverty (?) and getting at the "feast of fat things" which her attention to her religious duties so well deserved; "but," said the narrator, "what do you think? The old lady has lately died, and they found £200! which she had hoarded together during all her pleas of poverty and distress."

"But," it was added, "she was very devout, you know," and did not make a bad thing of it."

LABOUR AND MENDICITY.*—Amongst these may be numbered all slothful persons which will not travail for their livings; they do the will of the devil. God biddeth us to get our living with labour; they will not labour, but go rather about a-begging, and spoil the very poor and needy. Therefore such valiant beggars are thieves before God. Some of these valiant lubbers, when they came to my house, I communed with them, burthening them with the transgression of God's laws. 'Is this not a great labour,' say they, 'to run from one town to another to get our meat? I think we labour as hard as other men do.' In such wise they go about to excuse their unlawful beggary and thievery. But such idle lubbers are much deceived, for they consider not that such labour is not allowed of God. We must labour so as may stand with godliness, according to His appointment; else thieves which rob in the night-time, do they not labour? Yea, sometimes they labour with great care, peril, and danger of their lives. Is it therefore godly because it is a labour? No, no; we must labour as God hath appointed us, every man in his estate.—Lutimer's Sermons.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES. No. VII.

The Organisation of Personal Charity.—I am just now busy with the preliminaries of putting up a new ragged school. Don't think I want you to give me anything, for I should send it back if you sent it me; your money is much better employed under your own eye. I am all for people concentrating their efforts each in some small field peculiarly accessible to himself or herself. In the first place, much more work is done with less waste, and the benefit to the doer is greater, owing to the personal exertion required. Still there will always be people whose duties forbid them to do this, and who must make others their agents.—Denison's Letters, p. 88.

Charity, like everything else, is a responsibility. One is just as bounden in his charity as in his justice. There is law in both cases.—The Church Journal, New York.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of June 1877 was 36,304, and 42,434 received outdoor relief, making a total of 78,738. This was a decrease of 858 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 258, 6,495, and 15,674 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 639. This was a decrease of 48 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 80 on the corresponding day of last year.

DIFFICULT CASES.—No. 8.*

To Mr. A. D. Graham's letter on this case we have received the following answer:—'This is a case of probably more legal than practical difficulty. The boy's age being under 16, he could not be sent by the Guardians to a district school without the parents becoming paupers; but as they are said "to belong to the poorest class," this would be no injury. The Guardians would, no doubt, take the boy, and keep him as long as they can in the school, where, if taught sufficiently, he might become useful as a junior teacher. But first the Guardians will have to make use of their powers to supply the boy with the best mechanical appliance suitable to the case. After 16 the boy will be what the Poor Law calls able-bodied.' The 'CHARITY ORGANISATION REPORTER' is published weekly during the Sittings of Council; on the second Thursday in each month throughout the year a Double Number is published.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. LOCH, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

ITALIAN CHILDREN: Report of the Special Committee of the Charity Organisation Society appointed to inquire into the Employment of Italian Children for Mendicant and Immoral Purposes. Central Office of the Society, 15 Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.

Government had, on their part, passed laws forbidding, under heavy penalties, the exportation of children of tender age to foreign countries, but it was exceedingly difficult to enforce these laws. For such laws, however, there would be no necessity if, in the real interests of the children themselves, the English would abstain from giving money, which, passing into the hands of taskmasters, served only to keep the children in a life of degradation and shame.

Mr. Probyn, in seconding the motion, referred to an able article on the subject that had recently appeared in the Standard.

Mr. Bevan considered that if, as was stated in the Report, the present law duly enforced was sufficient to suppress the trade, there must have been great negligence on the part of our Government in not dealing with so great an evil more severely and radically.

Mr. C. E. Maurice pointed out that want of precise information, the removal of the children from one place to another, and sometimes the shipment of the children to other countries, had been found very great difficulties hitherto. There had not yet been any concerted plan of operations throughout the country. This was what the Committee suggested.

After a few words from the Organising Secretary, the Chairman, Mr. R. A. Aspinall, Rev. R. J. Simpson, and Sir Charles Trevelyan, the motion was put and carried unanimously.

THE ST. KATHARINE'S HOSPITAL.

Sir Charles Trevelyan then moved, on behalf of the Co-operation Sub-Committee, the adoption of the following memorial to the Lord Chancellor:—

THE MEMORIAL OF THE SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY

SHREWETH,

That Major-General Sir Thomas Biddulph, K.C.B., has conveyed to the Rev. C. F. Lowder, M.A., of St. Peter's Vicarage, London Docks, the gracious intimation of Her Majesty the Queen to a large number of clergymen and others in the East of London, that Her Majesty has called upon your Lordship to frame rules for the future administration of the Saint Katharine's Hospital.

That among the various charitable institutions and societies in the metropolis within whose province it falls to provide pensions to the sick and aged deserving poor, there are but few whose scope is not limited by numerous restrictions and conditions which prevent their being available for a large number of the poor, who are deserving of such charitable assistance, but are from many circumstances unable to fulfil the conditions under which applications for aid have to be made.

That there has been recently, in the districts of Whitechapel, Stepney, and Saint George-in-the-East, and also in Poplar, a large reduction in the outdoor relief granted by the Guardians; and that while the action of the Guardians has been instrumental in creating a spirit of self-reliance, and has in many instances strengthened the bonds of family affection and revived between members of the same household that natural charity which the lax administration of the Poor Law has a tendency to destroy, the funds of the charitable have had, by the withdrawal of outdoor relief, to afford assistance in those cases of deserving poverty caused by misfortune, old age, or sickness, in which an adequate pension was necessary.

That there is also, on other grounds, reason to believe that—distributed after careful and impartial inquiry, and in accordance with those just principles which a regard for the best interests of the poor, and a knowledge of the causes of their distress, would suggest—a Pension Fund would be at least one means of making less severe that hard lesson of provident habits which many of the clergy and ministers, the School Board, and, by a better administration, the Poor Law and charity, are each in their sphere inculcating.

Your Memorialists believe that such portion of the funds of the Saint Katharine's Hospital as may be considered available for eleemosynary purposes would be wisely and justly appropriated for affording, under due safeguards, small pensions for the deserving and provident poor in the East of London, so as to meet any exceptional distress that may be contingent on the laudable efforts of the Guardians to administer the Poor Law on sound and well-defined principles.

And your Memorialists will ever pray, &c.

He stated briefly the history and nature of the endowments of the St. Katharine's Hospital,* and pointed out that, though the

* The following may be of interest to our readers:—

ST. KATHARINE'S HOSPITAL.—A FEW WORDS ABOUT ITS HISTORY AND PROSPECTS.

Few who pass by St. Katharine's Hospital in the Regent's Park are aware that it represents a foundation older, with one or two exceptions, buildings had been removed in George IV.'s time to the Regent's Park, it was evidently an East End charity, and was calculated to be used most beneficially in a neighbourhood which was the industrial suburb of London, and where there were no rich residents, and hardly any middle class. The Hospital had three separate functions—religious, educational, and charitable. The proposal contained in the memorial referred only to the latter; and it was the opinion of the Co-operation Sub-Committee that, while possibly some of the charitable funds of the Hospital should be utilised for the provision of nurses for the sick poor, or for other objects, a than any College in Oxford or Cambridge, and a religious society founded by English Queens for the glory of God, and the edification of the poor inhabitants living round the Tower of London.

And yet the first Royal Hospital of St. Katharine was founded by Queen Matilda, the wife of King Stephen, in 1148. Queen Eleanor, wife of King Henry III., founded the Hospital anew in 1273. Queen Philippa, in 1351, gave it a fresh Charter setting forth the religious and charitable objects of the foundation.

The Hospital consisted of a Master and three Brethren, all in Priests' Orders, who were daily to perform divine service; three Sisters, who were to be present at the service and visit the sick and infirm living around; and ten poor women. Six poor scholars were to assist the Chaplains in the Church; and by Queen Eleanor's Charter considerable alms were to be given to the poor.

In succeeding reigns fresh benefactions were bestowed upon the Hospital, its franchises were enlarged, until in the time of Henry VIII. it reached its climax of prosperity, and though deprived of much of its property during his reign it survived, and Katharine Parr made her husband, Thomas Seymour, Master. This was the first instance of a lay Master, an irregularity which was acknowledged by the granting of dispensations in this and similar appointments.

The Sisters and poor women seem to have continued during these changes, and the clerical Brethren are mentioned in the time of Charles II. In 1698 Lord Somers, the Lord Chancellor, visited the Hospital, suspended the Master, made provision, in case of the revenues being increased, for additional members of the Community, and a school; directing the application of the remainder 'to such other good and charitable purposes as are suitable to the intentions of the Royal Founders.'

The Hospital in after years maintained its parochial character, the Brethren ministered to the people of the neighbourhood, a lecturer was supported partly by the parish and partly by the Hospital, and marriages, funerals, and other religious rites were performed in the Church belonging to it.

With many irregularities certainly, and shortcomings, yet for 700 years this Hospital did a good work among the seafaring and poor people around the Tower, until in 1828, to their great regret and in spite of their serious opposition, it was removed from the neighbourhood to make way for St. Katharine's Docks. The religious charitable assistance afforded by the Hospital was thus entirely lost to them.

£160,000 was paid by the Dock Company. £44,000 was spent in building a Church in Regent's Park, a Master's house, residences for three Brethren and three Sisters, a Schoolmaster, a Mistress, and dependants. The offices of the Master, Brothers and Sisters are, in the situation in which the Hospital stands, necessarily almost sinecures, the only gain to the public being the Church, the education of 50 to 60 boys and girls, and 40 pensioners of £10 a year each.

This is the present representative of the ancient 'Royal Hospital of St. Katharine's near the Tower;' this is the result of an income valued in 1865 at more than £7,000, and supposed capable of reaching the yearly sum of £15,000. Yet here is the nucleus of a religious society which might do incalculable good if restored to its original situation; here are revenues for educational purposes which, in the East of London, might find ample scope; here are charitable funds and ladies to superintend their application, whether for nursing, missionary, or kindred objects, which have been removed from the very districts which need them.

Yet the Report of the Royal Commission in 1869 entirely ignored these strong local claims, and merely suggested some trifling addition to the present machinery. The House of Lords, however, in 1871, took a different view and referred the Report back for reconsideration on the very question of these claims.

The post of Master of the Hospital, of which the Queen is Patron, having lately become vacant, the clergy and churchwardens of parishes in the East of London, to the number of 192, have memorialised Her Majesty, praying that these claims may be duly recognised. Her Majesty has graciously replied that, following the precedents of 1698 and 1829, she has called on the Lord Chancellor to frame rules for the future administration of the Hospital, and we hope that a scheme may now be prepared more portion of the income might be devoted, with good results, to affording pensions, under stringent and salutary safeguards, to the sick and aged deserving and provident poor, to whom, wisely, outdoor relief was not given, but who might reasonably be considered suitable objects for charitable assistance.

Rev. H. G. Henderson seconded the resolution. The mismanagement of the St. Katharine's Hospital had for a long time been considered a grievance; but an opportunity for a reconsideration of the method of distributing its funds had now occurred. He was glad that the Council should make the suggestions contained in the memorial.

Mr. Russell Barrington moved the previous question. The whole subject of Charity pensions was essentially a vexed and disputed one, and he thought that the Council should not adopt any memorial respecting it. For a time it would perhaps be necessary to provide pensions to the old and infirm, but it was unadvisable to establish an endowment for the purpose; private charity alone should supply such assistance. Sir Charles Trevelyan had referred to the Tower Hamlets Pension Society; * a characteristic of that Society was, that it was to continue for a fixed period only.

Rev. R. J. Simpson said he believed the object of the Society was to raise the deserving poor. There were, in his experience, many aged people, men and women, whom misfortune had deprived of the means of providing for their old age, who were ashamed to beg or to take advantage of Poor Law relief. To assist them, endowments such as these were available. Personal charity was fluctuating; and though the benefits of almshouses were often abused, public opinion, which he believed was gradually becoming more and more favourable to wise and systematic almsgiving, would furnish a sufficient safeguard.

Mr. C. E. Maurice supported Mr. Russell Barrington's motion. He did not think that there was any reason for giving a preference to this use of charitable endowments. At a previous debate he had supported a proposal that District Committees should confer with the administrators of endowed charities, in order that, after due consultation between those most conversant with the wants of the locality, they might be better applied; but he was opposed to the Council giving preference to any one system.

After a few words from the Secretary, Mr. S. Fuller suggested that the opinion of the East End Committees in the memorial be specially invited; and he gave notice of the following amendment, viz.—

That the East End District Committees be requested to give their opinion as soon as possible on the memorial.

Dr. Daniel gave notice of the following amendment:—

That all expression of opinion on the much-disputed question of outdoor relief be withdrawn from the memorial, and that the words in the third paragraph, from 'guardians' to the 'funds of the charitable,' be omitted; also that the words in the fifth paragraph, after the word 'London,' be omitted.

The motion for the previous question having been put and lost, Mr. Fuller's amendment was seconded, and after a few words from the Rev. R. J. Simpson, put and lost, 4 voting for it and 10 against it.

Dr. Daniel then moved the amendment of which he had given comprehensive of the great objects for which it was designed, and more considerate of the claims of that portion of the Metropolis in which it was originally situated.

notice, and which was seconded by Mr. W. M. Venning. He hoped the Council would consent to the omission of the words relating to outdoor relief. That question had already been discussed, and the Report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on Charity and Out-relief, which had not been adopted by the Council, contained expressions almost precisely similar to those used in the parts of the memorial to which he objected. He did not believe that the withdrawal of such small sums as had been given to the poor in outdoor relief could tend to produce such good results as the memorial stated. Replying to a paper by Mr. A. G. Crowder, a guardian of St. George's in the East, published in Reporter No. 222, he said that it was there stated that private charity to the amount of about £200 a-year had in that district met the wants of the cases which were unsuitable for indoor relief and could not obtain, under a strict administration of the Poor Law, outdoor relief; and in the Report on Charity and Out-relief it was affirmed that there had been no destitution consequent on the reduction of outdoor relief. While approving therefore of the system of pensions which was proposed, he could not approve the reasons on which the proposal was made, or understand on what ground those who supported the motion supported also the recent report to which he had alluded.

A letter from Major Prendergast having been read, Sir Charles Trevelyan said that the proposed appropriation would be especially beneficial at the present time; and in reference to what Mr. Barrington had said, he was of opinion that the specific appropriation now suggested was in itself a protest against an endowment, unless proved really serviceable, being used in perpetuity for this or any other purpose. An opportunity for increasing the usefulness of the charity had occurred, and this proposal was entirely in accordance with the original aims of the endowment. The memorial was a simple statement of facts.

The amendment was then put and lost, 5 voting for it, 8 against it; and the motion for the adoption of the memorial was then carried, 12 voting for it, and 2 against it.

The Council then adjourned.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of June 1877 was 35,903, and 42,300 received outdoor relief, making a total of 78,203. This was a decrease of 535 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 266, 6,378, and 15,483 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 600. This was a decrease of 39 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 29 on the corresponding day of last year.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.*—Major FitzRoy writes that he had said, at the debate at Council on this subject on the 20th instant, that he had understood from one of the guardians of St. George's, Hanover Square, that applications for boots and shoes to enable children to attend school would be treated precisely in the same way as applications for any other description of outdoor relief. He did not say that the practice of the guardians in that district was the same as that in force at Camberwell.

'THE AMPLE FIELD OF PRIVATE CHARITY.'

The Right Hon. George Rose, M.P., in a pamphlet entitled 'Observations on the Poor Laws and on the Management of the Poor,' published by him in 1805, after comparing the compulsory contributions in aid of the State charity of the Poor Law with a compulsory assessment towards the national defence, writes: 'But is there not reason to apprehend that the utmost exertions of the charitable would be insufficient, and that there is in truth an ample field for the exercise of private charity in relieving respectable poverty which shrinks from the eye of the public? It should also be remembered that, in the donations of private charity, there is frequently a great misapplication of its bounty, and not always a good selection of its objects, arising from frauds and impositions which many individuals have neither leisure nor opportunity for detecting; but which well-regulated public charity can easily guard against.'

It is questionable whether State or public charity can claim the immunity from fraud which is here stated to be one of its advantages; but without doubt there is a well-defined division between the State charity and private charity; and those who have thoroughly inquired into cases of serious distress will be aware that the disregard of this division, while it lessens the 'usefulness of private charity,' enhances the difficulties of those who are labourers in that ample field, and sometimes, by the unjust measure meted out in consequence, makes charity appear to be synonymous with luck, and deprives the industrious poor of the assistance which is no less practically valuable to them because they are entitled to the proverbial reward of virtue.

It is almost an axiom of State charity that, excepting the afflicted classes, it is for the relief of the destitute. The Poor Law is not in itself preventive, remedial, or palliative. It has to provide to the destitute actual necessities; its relief is a pis aller, an alternative. The first condition of State relief is that 'the situation of the recipient should not on the whole be made really or apparently so eligible as the situation of the independent labourer of the lowest class.*' The Poor Law is bound to withdraw its aid if sufficient charitable relief is forthcoming. And as, against this simple strictness of the Poor Law, charity has ample scope, and can quickly turn to meet the most various wants in the most various ways, should she not keep the boundary line, and not, as at present, leave undone much that lies in her province, while she spends a large portion of her funds on those who, owing to her refusal to co-operate with the Poor Law, she chooses to consider her clients?

Many of the best-intentioned charities have a tendency to diminish the just responsibilities of State charity; and the unconscious attempt to do the work of the Poor Law entails an expensive and most difficult administration on those who have at heart the real interests of the poor.

There are many other charities, dealing with large numbers of children and in receipt of large funds from the public, which we may hereafter refer to, but the circumstances of a large and well-conducted charity such as the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum, the useful character of which is thoroughly well established, may be taken as illustrative of our remarks.

The Royal Albert Orphan Asylum is a large asylum situated near Bagshot. It was instituted in 1804 'to perpetuate the memory of the late Prince Consort,' and last year it accommodated 197 children. The management is certified by the 'Lancet Sanitary Commission' to be entirely satisfactory. There are two marked features in the constitution of the charity: that it makes provision for 'thoroughly destitute children,' and that it 'provides a means of rescuing from destitution some of those orphans whose friends and relatives are unable to support the canvass necessary to ensure election at the London Orphan Asylum, or similar institutions.' No canvassing is allowed, but subscribers have one vote for each half-guinea.

Before considering the former of these two points, it may be worth while to state what legal provisions have been made for the children of the poor—more especially since 1864. The Poor Law Amendment Act (7 & 8 Vic. c. 101), as amended by subsequent Acts, provides, amongst other things, for 'the combination of unions or parishes in school districts for the management of any class or classes of infant poor, not above the age of sixteen years, being chargeable to any such parish or union, who are orphans, or are deserted by their parents, or whose parents or surviving parent or guardians are consenting to the placing of such children in the school of the district.' In parishes or unions not combined in any school district, the guardians may send such children to a district school elsewhere, and pay the cost of their 'maintenance, employment, and instruction.'

Guardians may also (25 and 26 Vic. c. 43) send any poor child (as defined above) to any 'certified' school, supported wholly or partially by voluntary subscriptions, and may, out of the funds in their possession, pay the expenses incurred in the maintenance, clothing, and education of such child therein.

By the Poor Law Order of the 25th November 1870, guardians have power to 'board out' children who are orphans, or, being illegitimate, deserted by the mother or deserted by one parent, the other parent being dead, or under sentence of penal servitude, or suffering permanently from mental disease, or out of England. No child may be boarded out at an earlier age than two, or at a later age than ten years.

By the Elementary Education Acts of 1870 and 1876 further provision is made for the children of the poor. By the 17th section the school fees of any child whose parent is, in the opinion of the School Board, unable from poverty to pay the same, may be paid by the Board; and this payment is not deemed to be parochial relief. The 26th section further provides for the establishment of free schools, if such be considered necessary in any poor district, by the Education Department. The Elementary Education Act of 1870, by clause 10, provides that Boards of Guardians may, on application, pay threepence a week, or less, for the attendance at a public elementary school of any child whose parent, not being a pauper, is unable by reason of poverty to pay the ordinary fee, or part of the ordinary fee; and by clause 40 it amends the Elementary Education Act of 1873 as follows:—'When relief out of the workhouse is given by the Guardians or their order, by way of weekly or other continuing allowance to the parent of any child above the age of five years who has not reached the standard in reading &c., or who is prohibited by this Act from being taken into full-time employment, or is required under any bye-law under section 74 of the Elementary Education Act of 1870, as amended by this Act, to attend school, or to any such child, it shall be a condition for the continuance of such relief, that elementary education in reading, writing, and arithmetic shall be provided for such child, and the guardians shall give such further relief (if any) as may be necessary for that purpose.' The guardians may also, by the Metropolitan Poor Act of 1867, furnish ships for training boys for the sea service.

All the institutions provided by the State are under careful supervision and inspection.

It will be seen, therefore, without referring to the provisions for sending children to Industrial Schools under the Industrial School Act of 1866 and the Elementary Education Act of 1876, that Parliament has made ample provision for the education and maintenance of children whose parents are in receipt of parish relief, and has also done much to provide education for the children of those who are not in receipt of parish relief, in such a way as will, if possible, assist them to educate their children without being considered paupers. The Legislature therefore appears to have recognised the distinction which we urge, and to draw a line between cases suitable for Poor Law assistance and others; and it has thus recently placed, side by side with the provisions for the afflicted classes, provisions for the education of poor children, the assistance given in these cases not being considered pauper relief, though all other assistance from the rates continues to have that taint, which the deserving poor are always glad to have avoided.

At the election at the Royal Albert Asylum, Nov. 30, 1876, seven boys and seven girls were elected from a list sent to the subscribers containing the description of 92 boys and 40 girls, the cases of all of whom were, after investigation, found to be destitute. These are some of the cases:—

No. 1. A. W. A., aged 7 years. Father was an iron-welder; income £60 a year; five children unprovided for, aged 14, 12, 9, 7, 4, supported by mother, a needlewoman, assisted by the earnings of elder children, and receiving 5s. and 3 loaves weekly from the parish.

No. 3. C. J. H., aged 8 years. Father was a stoker in the Royal Navy; earned £4. 4s. a month. 4 children, aged 13, 8, 6, 3, supported by mother, who earns 7s. a week at a jute factory.

No. 10. R. J. E., aged 10 years. Father was a mechanic; earned 35s. a week. 2 children, aged 10, 8, supported by mother, a dress-maker in delicate health, receiving 2s. and 2 loaves a week from the parish.

No. 97. E. C., aged 8 years. Father was a tailor; earned about £50 a year. 4 children, aged 12, 8, 5, 3, supported by mother, a village schoolmistress, earning 5s. per week, and receiving 4s. 6d. parochial relief.

No. 106. E. M., aged 10 years. Father was a clicker; earned about 24s. a week. 5 children, aged 14, 12, 10, 8, 6. 3 unprovided for, supported by mother, a charwoman, earning about 5s. a week.

It is certainly well that these children, taken, some from the metropolis, some from the country, should, by a healthy industrial training, be placed in such a position as will enable them to begin the world with every prospect of remaining independent of State charity. But taking each case as a family, the question immediately suggests itself, whether some other principle of discrimination could not be introduced; whether those families, which from their circumstances appear likely to prove themselves 'above' applying to the parish, should not be assisted to preserve their status as 'poor,' and not 'pauper,' rather than that one more fortunate child should be elected to enjoy the advantages of a good institution while his parent still remains in receipt of parish relief. A careful consideration of the circumstances of one case will lead to the belief that in that case charitable help will only 'aid' the rates; a similar scrutiny of the facts of the history of another family will lead to a quite opposite conclusion.

There is no doubt that the bulk of charitable work on behalf of the deserving and industrious poor must always be done personally and privately, and those who have a large experience cannot but be aware of the difficulty of assisting wisely those families of which the principal breadwinner is dead, especially while woman's labour is so unremunerative. But yet a large number of these cases, which have been effectually dealt with, could not have been suitably aided without the help of orphanages and other similar institutions. It is obvious, therefore, if the charitable aim at 'raising the family,' that it is of very great importance that such assistance as charity can give should be carefully husbanded.

Close co-operation—the distribution of charitable labour—between such an institution as the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum and the charitable people in the locality from which the orphan received into the asylum, might happen to come would ensure that cases which there was no prospect of taking off the rates should, if assisted at all, be assisted last, and that, while one or more children were received by the asylum, efforts should be made to obtain for another child better work, to get, if possible, a better situation for the mother, and, by every means that investigation and kindly consideration could devise, to make the earnings of the family as large as possible, so that they may be made self-reliant and 'above applying to the rates.'

The following statement of the finances of the asylum will show how desirable it is that everything should be done to lessen the expenses of the management of these institutions and of the machinery of admission.

In twelve years the donations and subscriptions amount to £71,333. The cost of the building was £20,000; maintenance of the children, £41,238; rent of London office, secretary, clerks, and collectors' poundage, £7,372; and printing, advertising, and postage, £11,554. These last two items of 'establishment charges' amount together to £18,926, which is more than 25 per cent. on the total receipts. This expense is described as being 'always unfortunately unavoidable in a charity which, so to speak, gets its own living. Undue economy in these items would be sure to result in a serious falling-off in an income which is already insufficient.'

The present annual income is about £5,500, and the average cost per head of each child for 1876 was £27. 17s. 8d., inclusive of rent & interest on the outlay for building.

The Charity Organisation Society is by its very raison d'être obliged to spend the bulk of its income in organisation. Many of its well-wishers are desirous that all the money received by it should be so spent, a gradually more and more comprehensive co-operation with the very numerous charitable institutions and individuals making its District Committees really serviceable centres of reference, through which such assistance as has been described may be procured. Would not the Society, if its members worked with a more genial liberality of spirit, be able to secure this vital co-operation, and thus supply to charitable institutions some of that machinery at least for which they have now to incur considerable expense? The relief and assistance which it is the duty of such useful institutions as the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum to afford would then be given to the recipients with as small a deduction as possible.

INDISCRIMINATE ALMSGIVING.

A FALLACY AND AN ARGUMENT.

'It is better to relieve 10 persons, without inquiry and at once, with what you have at your disposal, than to let one deserving person be passed by unheeded.'

This, which may be called the 10 to 1 fallacy, is frequently in the mouths of the opponents of Charity Organisation, the supporters of the prevalent system of almsgiving. But how is it a fallacy?

1. You have no opportunity for giving adequate and suitable help, unless you know the circumstances of each case; therefore, excepting the one case, which you hope may be deserving, you do not take any steps to do permanent good—that is to say, you prefer not to take steps to do permanent good, since possibly one case out of the 10 is deserving. If you do take steps to do permanent good in all cases, your one case comes in for a certain chance of help.

2. But do you give the right sort of help? You give a shilling, or half-a-crown, or whatever you find convenient, to each—that is, you give the thing most convenient to yourself, and not what you have reason to believe is best for the applicant. Or, to put it differently, you do a certain harm, or at least commit what may be a useless, and therefore wasteful act (as a sort of charity) in 9 cases, in order that you may do a possible good in one case. In 9 cases are you sure you are doing good; you allow that there is the probability that in 9 cases you are doing harm.

3. You do not know, you say, of any means of doing permanent good; but your shilling may be the means of giving the applicant another chance. True, it may be so. But you have no knowledge—you do not attempt to ensure—that it will be so. On the contrary, you allow that it may be 10 to 1 that it is not so.

4. But, you say, the money—good money—must get the wherewithal to fill the fellow's belly; it must do that amount of good. Not at all; it may do that amount of harm. The fellow cannot, as things are, get his own livelihood, and you give him a meal that he may feed to-day—and starve to-morrow. Unless, perhaps, trusting to his luck, he may get help to-morrow from another who shares your opinions. And do you approve of his living on luck charity instead of on his own earnings, that you fill his belly to his own destruction, making your charity a reason for his thinking, 'to-morrow shall be as to-day; by hook or by crook I shall get enough?' The man wants the means of getting his livelihood, and you—give him a shilling that he may become an habitual mendicant. Could charity be more selfishly cruel?

5. But you say—'Shall he starve?' No, not if you can help it. But your shilling gives him a meal to-day that he may starve, possibly, to-morrow. If you think it best, give your shilling, friend, by all means. But does your shilling represent your charity to a man in distress? Go, learn all about him, and treat him like a man, and take trouble on his behalf; strengthen him in his weakness; aid him when he is tempted; give to him and his fifty things, if they will benefit him; and if you have any influence over him, and have friends who can help you, make him, from a beggar, a man; and make yourself from a charitable spendthrift a good physician. If you think it better to give money than to send the man to a lodging, or a refuge, or the workhouse, give money; to your 10 men give your 10 shillings—one apiece; but then, whatever you do, inquire what their circumstances are; learn what is the best way to help them, and, if you cannot help them, at least do not injure them by a thriftless—not charity—but fatal semblance of charity.

The Charity Organisation Society, if properly supported, will afford means of inquiring without injury or publicity; and, if the case is deserving, of helping it to the best advantage, suitably and adequately.

'RECKLESS GIVING MAKES RECKLESS LIVING.'

The following is an abstract read by Mr. E. Bond at a meeting convened by the Lambeth Committee in March last:—

If the Charity Organisation Society had been casting about for a motto at the time of its foundation, it could, perhaps, hardly have found a better than this—'Reckless giving makes reckless living.' Organised charity aimed at restoring the person relieved to a state of independence; unorganised charity aimed at palliation rather than cure, and deepened the weakness it professed to aid. Much of ordinary charity was reckless. To give to able-bodied people in the ordinary emergencies of existence was to adopt a despairing view of the possibilities of a labourer's life, and to encourage him to rely on the fitful help of the rich to tide him over ordinary difficulties. In this way the independence of the class was destroyed. Thought and knowledge were needed for really beneficial help, and such knowledge was of three kinds—of the facts of any given case, of the principles which should guide us in dealing with that case, and, finally, of a multitude of matters which might suggest ways and means of assistance. Very few people had either kind of knowledge in perfection. We were too apt to suppose we knew all about a case, because the face or name of the applicant was familiar. Very few had a steady grip of principles, or any sure sight of the remote consequences of ill-advised almsgiving. Very few, again, had that knowledge of local endowments, of the terms on which emigrants could be assisted, or poor London families transplanted to quiet manufacturing villages, which would often be useful in determining the best form of relief. He did not wish to be understood as condemning indiscriminately all forms of almsgiving. There were many cases in which all would agree that it would be beneficial to go on providing pensions for deserving poor who were past work; making loans or grants to provide outfits for service, or to assist emigration, or to provide expensive surgical instruments. But in all cases the main point to consider was whether the relief was likely to be of permanent use, and to lift the recipient out of a state of chronic mendicancy. Combination between all charitable agencies was required—between the guardians, the clergy, the district visitors, and the Charity Organisation Society. Relief had better not be given by district visitors at their own discretion, but all cases should be considered by a relief committee of experienced persons. It would be well to appoint a kind of captain of district visitors, whose business it should be to amass information, train the less experienced visitors, and attend the meetings of the Relief Committee, the Charity Organisation Society, and, if possible, the Board of Guardians. Such a scheme had been found to work well in other parts of London. Mr. Bond concluded by expressing a belief that if those who think and feel and work for the poor in each particular district could be brought into active and hearty co-operation, much might be done towards thinning the ranks of that ignoble army of paupers which crowd the workhouse wards and throng about the workhouse gates.

NON-PAUPER HOSPITALS.—Dr. Rygate, in a recent report to the Sanitary Committee of the St. George's Vestry, said that, in dealing with infectious diseases, the accommodation for the non-pauper class was both unsuitable and insufficient. Nine-tenths of those who had lately been sent to the Poor-law Asylums were truly non-paupers, and had been pauperised by receiving such relief.

DISTRICT COMMITTEE CASES.

[We propose publishing, in the monthly numbers of the REPORTER, short statements of some of the cases dealt with by the District Committees of the Society, which may be of interest as examples of the method of the Society's work, and of the practical application of its principles.]

The following cases have been forwarded by the St. George's, Hanover Square, Committee:—

(1) J. D., No. 3311, a carman, aged 33, wife aged 33. Three children, aged 6, 4, and 2. J. D. earns 24s. a week. Applies for means to buy a spinal support for the child aged 6. J. D. belongs to the Foresters' Club, he is a steady, hard-working man, and good character. Ticket given to the Provident Surgical Appliance Society, with a letter asking what would be the whole cost of the instrument required. Answer received that it would be £4. 10s. A lady who was interested in the case gave one-half of this, and the Committee voted the remainder.

(2) John Donohue applied to the St. George's, Hanover Square, Committee, on November 3, 1876. He stated that he was 43 years of age, had been born in India, his father had risen from the ranks and died as a Captain in the Royal Engineers in 1864. He had served in the Commissariat in India and in the Abyssinian Campaign, up to 1875, when he was struck with paralysis; from this he partially recovered and was employed on one of the Indian railways, but becoming worse was advised to come to England for treatment. His passage was paid by the Government, but he was not entitled to any retiring allowance. He arrived in England in July, destitute and without a relation. He had one friend in humble circumstances, but he was able to do but little for him. He produced letters and certificates in proof of the truth of his statements. Temporary assistance was granted him, and inquiries were made at the India Office. From these it appeared that his story was correct, and that he had applied for a pension, but that there was very little hope of his getting it. A little temporary work was obtained for him, but he was unable to do it, and on November 15 he went into King's College Hospital, the Committee paying the usual 2s. a week for washing, &c. He was discharged from King's College Hospital on December 1, and on the 2nd the Committee gave him a letter for the Hospital for Paralysis, Queen's Square, and he was admitted on the 5th December, the Committee as before paying the necessary 2s. a week. At first there appeared good hope of his recovery, but in May he had a relapse, and died on July 4, when the Committee made a final grant of £3. 16s. to pay for his funeral.

(3) E. B., No. 3313. A woman called at the office, producing a telegram from Brighton telling her that if she wished to see her daughter alive she must come at once. Her account of herself was that she had been a servant, but was now out of place, and had not the means to pay the railway fare. Her ticket was taken for her, and on subsequent inquiry at Brighton it was found that her story was perfectly true.

AN EXTRACT FROM MACAULAY'S LETTERS.

CHARITY AND GENTLE EMPLOYMENT.—My father is at me again to provide for P. What on earth have I to do with P.? The relationship is one which none but Scotchmen would recognise. The lad is such a fool that he would utterly disgrace my recommendation. And, as if to make the thing more provoking, his sisters say that he must be provided for in England, for that they cannot think of parting with him. This, to be sure, matters little, for there is at present just as little chance of getting anything in India as in England.

But what strange folly this is that meets me in every quarter, people wanting posts in the army, the navy, the public offices, and saying that if they cannot find such posts they must starve! How do all the rest of mankind live? If I had not happened to be engaged in politics, and if my father had not been connected, by very extraordinary circumstances, with public men, we should never have dreamed of having places. Why cannot P. be apprenticed to some hatter or tailor? He may do well in such a business; he will do detestably ill as a clerk in any office. He may come to make good coats; he will never, I am sure, write good despatches. There is nothing truer than Poor Richard's saw: 'We are taxed twice as heavily by our pride as by the State.' The curse of England is the obstinate determination of the middle classes to make their sons what they call gentlemen. So we are overrun by clergymen without livings; lawyers without briefs; physicians without patients; authors without readers; clerks soliciting employment who might have thriven and been above the world as bakers, watchmakers, or innkeepers. The next time my father speaks to me about P. I will offer to subscribe twenty guineas towards making a pastrycook of him. He had a sweet tooth when he was a child.—Macaulay's Life and Letters, vol. i., pp. 330, 331.

FOREIGN.

NEW YORK.—Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor.—In their annual report for 1876—their thirty-third—the Committee state that during the thirty-four years of its existence the Association has expended $1,728,475, and relieved 274,623 families. It has now a staff of 572 workers. The city 'is first divided by wards, which are subdivided into 371 sections, with a visitor for each; and each ward has, moreover, a select committee of five persons, 110 in all, men of ability and integrity, specially fitted for the service, whose duties are supervisory and executive.' With just pride the Association reviews the labours of the past. 'In 1845 it drew attention to the wretched sanitary state of the houses of working people, and laboured to bring about reform in this direction. In 1848 it elaborated plans for tenement houses, which were lithographed, and extensively distributed amongst capitalists and builders.' 'In 1857 it instituted further investigations in respect to defective dwellings, cellar-residences, sewerage, drainage, and filthy streets.' 'In 1855, the "Working-Men's Home" was erected under its auspices by a few of its philanthropic members, at an expense of $90,000.' 'In 1849 it investigated the condition of the neglected children of the metropolis, and by co-operating in the foundation of the Juvenile Asylum in 1851, and the passage of the "Truant Act" in 1853, it helped greatly to benefit this suffering class.' 'Thus it will be seen that the labours of the Association have kept pace with the growth of the city and the demands upon its resources. Were it simply an eleemosynary organisation, conducted merely to distribute alms, neither this record nor the prospect of increased labour in the future, within its chosen field, would be cheering. But the work of the Association is preventive rather than palliative. It acts on the principle of good farming, which produces harvests out of poor soil by proper stimulants, without which the best seed would be wasted.'

TORONTO.—Employment.—The following is taken from a letter recently received: 'I herewith send you a copy of the report of our "Shelter for the Homeless" for the past winter. A Poor Law has become a great necessity in this country. There is still a great want of employment here, and it will really be a great mercy to poor people who follow the lighter employments, if you will do all you can to dissuade them from coming out. Farmers with some means is the only class of immigrants needed here at present.'

HOLLAND.—Free Medical Relief and Provident Dispensaries.—According to my promise, I write to give you some particulars about medical relief in Rotterdam. I have not been able to do so earlier, because I had to gather some information which I thought rather important to illustrate the relief in general.

Of course, medical relief is also connected with the chief Dutch charitable institutions, the Diaconies. Among these the largest are the Reformed Protestant and the Roman Catholic; the former with three physicians and two surgeons, the latter with three and three. The Diaconies give gratuitous medical assistance to the poor who are in receipt of outdoor relief (denominational), and I believe there is no danger of their giving it indiscriminately.

Besides the Diaconies, the Poor-law administration has a free dispensary. Anyone may apply at the offices in the morning; his case is attended to; the applicant gets the necessary relief, either for four days or for eight days, according to circumstances. In the meantime the case is inquired into, and if the patient belongs to a class who can afford to pay for medical treatment, the case is dismissed, and the patient has to join some provident dispensary. In order not to run the risk of neglecting a patient, it is thought important to assist any applicant during the first four days. The system of investigation being known, we seldom get applicants able to contribute to a provident society. As a rule, a weekly income under £1 for a married couple with children is considered such as to justify gratuitous relief. I subjoin a list of the last 30 cases.

As soon as the pecuniary means of the applicant appear to allow of a contribution to a provident society, the Poor-law administration urges him to enter it. I must remark that these provident societies are badly organised, with few exceptions. They are not co-operative; the persons constituting the board collect the weekly contributions, pay the doctors, and try to make a profit for themselves. So they want to get many members, and do not care for the social position of the contributors, the doctor being the sufferer. As a natural consequence, the doctor very often neglects his patients, and it is sometimes difficult to enlist good practitioners, the ablest generally refusing to accept such an appointment. In the rules of a large number of these institutions I met but once with a clause by which the better classes are excluded. The society where this stipulation is made is the best specimen, with a board of medical men, assisted by ten doctors and seven surgeons.

The highest weekly contribution is 10 cents (2d.), and for children under 16 years of age 4 cents.

I read in your paper that in London medical men are seriously affected by the free use of free dispensaries; here, they often have to be satisfied with the stipendium of the society, instead of receiving from certain members the professional fees they are entitled to.

If patients suffer from severe illnesses, or have to undergo operations, they can enter the City Hospital (with about 200 beds for gratuitous treatment). In this instance, again, every case is investigated, this mode having been adopted about six months ago. If the patient can pay for the relief, the hospital administration recovers the money afterwards. I find that improper applications are very rare.

I think I may infer from these statements that there is little to alter in the working of gratuitous medical relief; on the other hand, I must confess that provident societies are greatly in need of reorganisation. It seems difficult to prevent people from entering societies with low contributions and bad treatment. A minute investigation, and the publication of the abuses, might be useful.

I hope that these particulars will give you some idea of our medical relief. Should anything be wanting, I shall be very happy indeed to complete them, or to make further inquiries.

MEDICAL CHARITIES.

PROVIDENT DISPENSARIES.—Fulham.—The Fifth Annual Report of the Fulham Sick Club—not the best title, we should have thought—shows a large increase of benefit members. 583 persons 'have joined the club during the year's course, making with their families an addition of nearly two thousand individuals admitted in the past year to the benefits of the Institution. This raises the total number of those who have been beneficially interested in the club since its commencement to nearly 6,000 persons.' £436. 9s. was paid by members, and £27. 8s. 6d. received from subscribers. Every member above 14 pays one penny, and under that age one halfpenny per week. Twopence per week is considered sufficient for a man and his wife and all their children under 14 years of age. Eligible servants pay five shillings a year, and arrangements are made for the attendance of a medical officer at confinements.

THE NIGHTINGALE FUND.—Report for 1876.—The Report is a simple record of facts connected with the certified and probationer-nurses at St. Thomas's Hospital. 65 probationers attended during the year, making up to the end of 1876 a total of 431 who have been admitted into the school at the hospital, and of these 256 have been registered as certified nurses. During the year 12 probationer-nurses were admitted to be trained for the Metropolitan and National Nursing Association, with a view to their being employed in the work of nursing the poor at their own homes.

CONVALESCENT HOME.—Hope Cottage, Hampton Court.—Lady Bouchie receives four invalids. 'The inmates are to be women, from London, of good character—(or sometimes a child)—of the class of servants, needlewomen, or tradespeople. They defray their own journey, and pay (in advance) five shillings a week. A lady sending an invalid pays seven shillings and sixpence a week for her, but no entrance money.' No infectious cases and no cases of serious illness received.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 225.

THURSDAY EVENING, JULY 19, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on July 10 there had been present :—

Mr. Bousfield, in the chair; Miss Howes, Messrs. Barrington, Crowder, and Edgcombe.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on July 10 there had been present :—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Capt. Gardner, and Miss Howes.

PERSONAL WORK AMONG THE POOR.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, in the absence of members of the Sub-Committee, moved the adoption of the Report of the Sub-Committee, appointed by the Council on March 5, to re-consider the Report on House-to-House Visitation, adopted by the Council in July 1870. He said that the Committee, which reported in 1870, had made an excellent statement of the objects to be aimed at in visiting the poor. But their suggestions had not been sufficiently practical. The recommendations of the Sub-Committee were as follows :—

1. That, with a view to the greater efficiency and permanency of their work, the District Committees be recommended to enlist the services of volunteer visitors, who shall visit and, where desirable, keep up friendly intercourse with those persons whose cases may have been investigated at the District Office.

2. That in order to dissociate as far as possible the idea of almsgiving from this visiting, and to make it plain that they go amongst the poor 'simply as friends,' the visitors shall not, except under very special circumstances, act as almoners for the Committees.

3. That, for the reason indicated in the preceding recommendation, it shall not be considered necessary for the visitors to be members of the District Committee, but that they shall be cordially invited to attend its meetings.

4. That the visitors keep constantly before them the importance of establishing friendly relations between themselves and all those who may be working amongst the poor in connection with other agencies.

One important principle touched upon in the previous report was made prominent in this, viz. that poor persons should not be visited unless on some definite errand, or unless acquaintance had been previously made with them, or unless there was some special reason for believing that the visit would be acceptable. It was most necessary that friendly visits should take the place of visitation combined with almsgiving. The Society's work had shown that the help of visitors in looking after cases that had been assisted, so that when desirable further aid might be given them, was indispensable. It was most desirable to connect the visitors of a district with the District Committee.

Mr. J. Sapsford seconded the motion.

Mr. J. R. Hollond considered that the principle alluded to by Sir Charles Trevelyan was of the highest importance; but he disapproved the second recommendation of the Sub-Committee, and would prefer the following :—

That while it is very desirable that the responsibility of giving relief should be fully understood not to rest with the visitors, it may, in many cases, be expedient that the visitor should be the agency to convey the assistance which has been decided upon by the Committee.

One difficulty of linking a district visiting system to the Committees of the Society was the difficulty of arranging that the visitors should report to, and act under the supervision of, the Committee. He did not think this a fatal objection, but something would have to be done to secure supervision. In Paddington visitors dealt with specially difficult cases, cases in which loans were given, or in which personal aid was necessary. He objected to one or two expressions in the report, and would be glad to have it modified in the sense he suggested.

Mr. Bevan considered the report admirable, but feared lest the recommendations it contained would prove inoperative.

Mr. F. D. Mocatta said that the report appeared to be of a most useful and practical nature. The intercourse between the poor and the rich—the great mass of poor in the East End, and those who could not but appear rich by comparison—was most difficult; and yet such intercourse was often the only means of doing good.

Rev. R. J. Simpson hoped that the District Committees would, after the recess, spare no effort to carry out the suggestions contained in the report.

Mr. T. Copeman said that in visiting in Upper Clapton during the last four years, he had made it a rule never to give money, and his visits were, he believed, acceptable to the poor—at least the reception he received was encouraging.

Mr. Russell Barrington feared lest the recommendations of the Committee would tend to the formation of district visiting societies in places in which such societies were already at work. It would be more in accordance with the Society's principle of gaining the co-operation of existing charitable institutions, and not establishing new agencies, to make use of these in the first instance.

Mr. A. D. Graham agreed generally with what Mr. Hollond had said. The difficulty of the intercourse between rich and poor would be almost insuperable if there were not 'an agency in reserve to which recourse might be had when the exceptional circumstances occurred in which it was right that the rich should come to the succour of the poor.' With regard to what Mr. Barrington had said, it would be a special instruction to the visitors acting in connection with the District Committees of the Society to co-operate with the visitors working among the poor. He believed that thus they would be the means of utilising existing agencies, as Mr. Barrington suggested.

Mr. Galabin said the Camberwell Committee was largely composed of members of district visiting societies. They were of great service in visiting and assisting cases, and though they would be inclined to give more than the report would recommend, they would, he thought, generally agree with it.

After a few words from the Secretary and a short reply from Sir Charles Trevelyan, it was decided to request the Sub-Committee to re-consider the report, with a view to modifying it in the manner suggested by Mr. Hollond; and to submit it to the Council for final settlement on the 23rd instant, Mr. S. Fuller giving notice that he would, on that day, move that the recommendation of the Sub-Committee be not sent to the District Committees till the beginning of the next session.

THE DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

The Secretary having read letters from the Kensington, Chelsea, Holborn, Hackney, Woolwich, St. Olave's, Stepney, and the St. James' Soho Committees on the Annual Report of the Districts Sub-Committee,* Mr. A. H. Hill moved:

That the Districts Sub-Committee be requested to report upon the present degree of uniformity of organisation attained by the District Committees of this Society, and to make any recommendations they may think necessary for the more effectually carrying out the work of the Society in all parts of the metropolis.

He alluded to the small number of replies from District Committees on the important issues raised by the report of the Districts Sub-Committee, and remarked that the defects dwelt upon in the report were not defects to which prominence was given by doctrinaire critics, but by a Sub-Committee composed of active members of District Committees. The Society had undertaken a great responsibility in attempting to institute a Charity organisation parallel to the Poor Law organisation, and the Council must be prepared to put such pressure on the Committees as would make that responsibility felt. This Charity organisation was the first work; and the Council should give its attention to it rather than to reports on various useful but somewhat miscellaneous subjects. More unity and uniformity were necessary—both in detail and in principle.

Mr. Bousfield seconded the motion. He agreed with much that Mr. Hill had said, and considered the Society, in attempting to deal with those cases for which no existing charitable agency appeared to be suitable, held a most responsible position. He feared, however, it would be impossible for the Sub-Committee to report till November.

Mr. J. R. Hollond said that the Districts Sub-Committee were doing all in their power to promote greater unity and efficiency in the District Committees, and he regretted that, their time being already fully occupied, they should be asked to draw up another report. He would move the previous question.

Mr. R. Barrington pointed out some of the leading difficulties of Charity organisation work; and Rev. R. J. Simpson, the Secretary, and Mr. H. H. Hill having spoken briefly, it was determined that the Secretary should draw the attention of the Districts Sub-Committee, at their next meeting, to Mr. A. H. Hill's motion, and to the discussion upon it.

The Council then adjourned.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of July 1877 was 35,789, and 41,780 received outdoor relief, making a total of 77,569. This was a decrease of 634 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876 this was an increase of 41, but a decrease of 5,903 and of 15,885 as compared with the years 1875 and 1874. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 451. This was a decrease of 149 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 15 on the corresponding day of last year.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

MARYLEBONE.—The Clergy and Charity Organisation.—The Rev. Henry Geary, in his Annual Address to the Parishioners and Congregation of St. Thomas's, Portman Square, speaking of his 'Poor Relief Fund,' writes:—

'I spoke so fully last year upon the administration of this fund, that it will only be necessary now to say that its rules continue to be in all respects the same. The Relief Committee still meets every Monday at 5.30 p.m., in the Vestry of the Church, and with the exception of urgent cases arising during the week, no money or tickets are given away until voted by the Committee—after a thorough consideration of all the bearings of each case—thus removing from the shoulders of the District Visitors a most onerous responsibility, and enabling them to act more as the visiting friends of the poor than merely distributors of alms. Each fresh case is thoroughly investigated by the agency of the Charity Organisation Society.

'I cannot speak too strongly of the immense assistance received by us from this admirable Society; and it seems almost a duty to lose no opportunity of clearing away some of the misconceptions which so many have of its work. The Society, I am persuaded, could have no enemies if it were really understood. It does not attempt to interfere in any way whatever with the management of any charity or fund. It simply offers itself as an inquiring machinery and medium of communication. As such it gratuitously investigates every single case brought to its notice, whether by societies, private individuals, or the applicants themselves. If such investigation prove the case to be eligible for help, the Society endeavours to bring it under the notice of any persons or institutions able to give such aid, or in the last resort, and only if there is no one else able or willing to relieve, it relieves the case by gifts or loan. Its great object is to become a medium of communication between the many persons and bodies engaged in relief, thus helping them to avoid 'overlapping' in their work, and above all things to direct charity into such channels that it shall be the means of effecting permanent good for those relieved, instead of offering a premium to idleness and undermining the independence of the honest and industrious poor.

Hence it is not primarily a relieving society at all. When complaints are made of its large outlay on expenses compared with the small sum given in relief, such complaints arise from an entire misconception of its aim. If its ideal were realised it would not be spending one penny in actual relief. Its object is to inquire for those whose business it is to relieve, and to hand over deserving objects to their care. It is only because of the imperfect communication hitherto established between it and these other relieving bodies that it is so often compelled itself to give the relief when none others can be found to bestow it.

If you saw half as much as we clergy are compelled to see of the characters of a large proportion of those who apply for relief (especially the most plausible), and the immense good that may sometimes be done by help judiciously given with a full knowledge of the cases relieved, I should not have again and again to entreat that you will in no case relieve those not thoroughly known to you, but will, in every case that seems deserving, send either to us or to the Charity Organisation Society, 115 Marylebone Road, for inquiry before giving relief. I may mention that our Marylebone branch of this Society, which is thus so helpful to our work, stands in need of a considerable accession to its subscription list, and any money sent to its Secretaries will be well and wisely bestowed.

PROVIDENT DISPENSARIES IN BIRMINGHAM.—An influential meeting was held in Birmingham on the 11th inst., at which it was resolved to establish Provident Dispensaries on a large scale, as has been done in Manchester. It was in contemplation to include West Bromwich in the scheme, and a committee of thirty was appointed to carry out the project.

TEMPERANCE AND MEDICAL RELIEF.

SIR,—Something is being done to mitigate the violent contrast between the Gin Palace and Free Dispensary alluded to by Sir William Gull, in his statesmanlike speech at the Society of Arts. Never was a subject more fully set forth at a single meeting than at the Conference in the Garden at Grosvenor House. All agreed that the offer of a better alternative for the refreshment and social enjoyment of the public-house was an indispensable condition of progress in temperance, and that this alternative could only be provided to the necessary extent by its being worked out by active influential persons, each in his own locality, on the self-supporting remunerative, commercial principle. Several papers were read illustrative of the causes of success or failure, and a committee was appointed to gather up the various experiences on the subject, so that all who assist in this great enterprise may enter upon it with a confidence which cannot belong to isolated efforts.

The Reform of Medical Relief has reached a more advanced stage. The result of seven years' work was summed up at a second Conference at the Society of Arts, at which we were assisted by some of the most eminent members of the medical profession; and the fresh impulse now given is not likely to subside until the object has been attained. The discussion is being actively prosecuted at Manchester, Birmingham, and Liverpool, as well as in London; and owing to the increase of population in many towns of the second class in various parts of England, the local 'Infirmary and Dispensary' is quite unequal to the demands upon it. Both in the metropolis and the provinces the remedy proposed under various forms is, medically, that the out-patient departments should be decentralised, and, financially, that the burden should be extended over a much wider surface. In other words, that a subsidiary system of provident dispensaries should be established on the mutual assurance principle, whereby the hospitals and infirmaries would be relieved of all which are not properly hospital cases.

Meanwhile a movement has commenced for self-supporting hospitals for the upper and middle classes. This principle has long been established in every other civilised community. When the present Registrar to the Admiralty was a young man, he was sent on a public mission to French Guiana, and falling sick of the prevailing fever, he was told that he 'ought at once to go into hospital.' There he found a clean, cheerful, airy apartment, and a skilled Sister of Charity to nurse him; and he got well much sooner than he could have done in his lodgings. When the General Hospital at Madras was rebuilt, a wing overlooking the river was appropriated to civil and military officers, and other persons of the upper or middle class who require medical treatment and nursing. There is an obvious economy in connecting such arrangements with existing hospitals, instead of providing separate buildings, with their ancillary establishments, expressly for the purpose. In practical New England this principle is consistently carried out; for, except a few endowed 'free beds' for delicate cases, everybody pays according to his means, from the lady or gentleman who has a separate room to the artisan in the common ward.

This is evidently a case for revising our insular institutions by the light of the larger experience of the civilised world. The proposition enunciated at the meeting at the Mansion House was that there ought to be hospitals for the upper and middle classes. This is true, but it is comprehended in a wider truth—that all hospitals should be adapted to the wants of all classes of the community. This is demanded by the most obvious motive of the economy of money and time, including the precious time of medical men in high repute, and it is also recommended by ulterior considerations of a moral and social kind which will occur to every person who reflects upon the subject.

PERSONAL WORK AMONG THE POOR.

Rev. H. I. Cummins, in moving the adoption of the revised Report* of the Sub-Committee appointed to reconsider the Report, adopted by the Council in July 1870, on House-to-House Visitation, regretted that, although Chairman of the Sub-Committee, he had been unable to attend the last meeting of Council. The Sub-Committee had discussed at length the reference from Council, but were so fully convinced of the importance of dissociating almsgiving from the visitation of the poor by the Visitors of District Committees of the Society, that they had ventured to withdraw from their second recommendation the words 'except under very exceptional circumstances.' It might be argued that the permission to give relief would be an inducement to lazy visitors to join the District Committees; and he could conceive of persons preferring in all cases their own personal judgment to the decision arrived at by a Committee, even though the Committee might have adequate means of assisting, in accordance with their decision; but he could not understand why persons anxious to have the decision of a Committee prior to giving relief, should insist on the privilege of handing the relief to the applicant. On the other hand, the right to give relief occasioned many difficulties. In one case relief might appear desirable, but was not really so: but practical advice would prove most useful. In another case money was required. Two persons acting on behalf of the same District Committee, one visiting the former, the other the latter case, would gain the reputation, the one of being a needlessly close handed visitor, the other of being considerate or at least agreeably indulgent. In fact, the concession that relief should be administered or transmitted by the visitor let in all the defects of the ordinary District Visiting system.

The Sub-Committee had not, therefore, been able to adopt, instead of their second recommendation, which was as follows:—

That the Visitors shall not act as almoners for the Committees.

Mr. Hollond's suggested amendment, viz.—

That while it is very desirable that the responsibility of giving relief should be fully understood not to rest with the Visitors, it may, in many cases, be expedient that the Visitor should be the agency to convey the assistance which has been decided upon by the Committee.

The remaining recommendations of the Sub-Committee were—

1. That the District Committees be recommended to enlist the services of volunteer Visitors, who shall visit and, where desirable, keep up friendly intercourse with those persons whose cases may have been investigated at the District Office.

2. That it be not considered necessary for the Visitors to be members of the District Committee, but that they be cordially invited to attend its meetings.

3. That the Visitors be instructed to keep constantly before them the importance of establishing friendly relations between themselves and all those who may be working amongst the poor in connection with other agencies.

The Report was divided into two parts; the first relating to District Visiting generally, the second, in connection with which these recommendations should be taken, relating to the position occupied by the Charity Organisation Society in reference to District Visiting and the system of visiting to be adopted in conjunction with it. It was evident therefore that the Report did not propose to place any restraints on members of existing relief and visiting societies, in their co-operation with this Society; but it laid down as a principle that, it being advisable in all district visiting to dissociate as far as possible relief from visitation, none of the visitors employed as the recognised Visitors to the District Committees should themselves give relief. Visitation in connection with the District Committees was not desired for the purpose of relieving only, or transmitting relief, but in order that those who had been assisted, with good prospect of beneficial results, should not relapse into distress and helpless poverty, owing to their subsequent career being no longer under the notice of the Committee.

* Vide Reporter, No. 225, p. 124.

Sir Charles Trevelyan seconded the motion. The object of the Society was to substitute wise charity for almsgiving. He did not think the proposed restrictions on the action of persons visiting on behalf of the Committees would create difficulty; they certainly pointed to the introduction of a much sounder principle in the personal relations of the charitable and the poor.

Rev. Harvey Brookes referred to his experience in Dorsetshire. His vicar there made an arrangement by which visiting was entirely dissociated from relief; and it had been his duty to visit without relieving. The arrangement had proved most satisfactory to him and to the poor. He thought, however, there were 'exceptional circumstances,' in which the Visitor on behalf of a District Committee should give relief.

Mr. Bousfield thought the Sub-Committee were right—theoretically. Several Committees, however, made use of local visiting societies, and would naturally appoint members of these societies as their recognised visitors.

It was suggested that the words 'in their capacity of Visitors for the District Committees of the Society,' should be inserted in the second recommendation; so that it should run as follows, viz. :—

That the visitors, in their capacity of Visitors for the District Committees of the Society, shall not act as almoners for the Committees.

The suggestion was agreed to.

Mr. H. N. Hoare considered the report a most important and serviceable one. Mr. Hollond's suggestion, however, required special attention. He contended that it was sufficient to dissociate the decision as to giving or not giving relief, from the work of visiting. And unless this modification were introduced, it would be difficult to alter the practice of some Committees, and obtain the services of visitors of local experience, who would agree to becoming the Visitors for the Committee on these terms; it was also a question whether it was at present expedient to dissociate visitation and relief-giving entirely.

After a few words from Mr. Bevan, the Chairman, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Dr. Daniel, and the Rev. H. I. Cummins, the Report was adopted, nine voting for it, and one against it.

A rider, moved by Mr. S. Fuller, proposing that the recommendations be sent to the District Committees at the beginning of the next session, was then considered; but after a short debate, in which Dr. Daniel, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. Hoare, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. R. V. Tidman, Mr. A. D. Graham, Rev. H. I. Cummins, and Mr. A. H. Hill took part, it was decided that the Report should be forwarded to District Committees as usual, and that a circular letter should be transmitted to them after the recess, calling their special attention to its recommendations, and asking them to report in due course what steps they had taken to give practical effect to them.

The Council then adjourned.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of July 1877 was 35,538, and 41,405 received outdoor relief, making a total of 76,943. This was a decrease of 626 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876 this was a decrease of 41, and a decrease of 6,351 and of 15,648 as compared with the years 1875 and 1874. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 636. This was an increase of 115 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 53 on the corresponding day of last year.

THE IMPORTATION OF ITALIAN CHILDREN.

A large deputation waited upon the Home Secretary on Thursday, the 19th, to present him with the report of an inquiry which has been held by the Charity Organisation Society into the importation into England of Italian children, and their employment for mendicant and immoral purposes. Among those present were Sir Charles Trevelyan, K.C.B., who introduced the deputation, Mr. Julian Goldsmid, M.P., Mr. W. H. James, M.P., Mr. S. Holland, M.P. Cavalier Buzzelgoli (representing the Italian Consul-General), Signor Ortell, Signor Luciano, Father Pius Melia (of the Italian Church, Hatton Garden), Dr. Guy, Mr. Ernest Hart, Mr. Hamilton Hoare, the Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. Thomas Hughes, Q.C., and numerous others.

Sir Charles Trevelyan said the deputation had come to lay before the Home Secretary what was really a case of slave trade and slavery in the midst of our English Christian civilisation. That this was the case was owing to two causes, one being the youthful, almost infantile age of the children, the other their total ignorance of our language—their own language, too, being unfortunately little known in England. The system of their importation had all the characteristics of slavery. They were obtained from their parents under a two years' lease by a class of professional persons who went by the name of 'padroni,' or 'patrons,'—a term not at all clear in its application in this case—and when the children were obtained they were sold from person to person in the same class for gain. Occasionally they were stolen by persons in the same class, the attractions of the children—their childish accomplishments—causing them to be thus stolen. Sometimes, too, the despairing children ran away. In both cases, when they ran away and when they were stolen, the children were advertised for as lost and stolen cattle were advertised for. In fact, as the report would show, the children were advertised just as was usual when the domestic slaves of West Indian proprietors in Liverpool and Bristol used to be lost in the olden time, before Lord Mansfield's famous judgment—such was now the shamelessness shown in regard to this traffic, and the security felt by the padroni that our laws would not be enforced against their infamous trade. The poor children earned large sums of money, but they did not get any wages—they merely had a bare subsistence of the poorest character. Then, too, they were coerced by harsh treatment and sharp punishment if they did not take to their owners as much money as they expected.

The Home Secretary asked if any estimate had been formed of the amount the children took to the padroni.

Mr. Ribton-Turner said it was estimated that each child took on the average about 4s. a day.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, in continuation, said that use was also made of the girls for immoral purposes. Occasionally the padroni were brought before the magistrates and fined, or had a month's imprisonment; but this was ineffectual to stop the traffic, as was to be seen from facts stated by Signor Luciano, of the Italian Benevolent Society, and one of the secretaries of the Italian Consulate. He stated that upon certain Italian children being brought before the magistrate, and ordered to be sent to Industrial Schools, he found the London School Board 'had decided not to keep foreign children in the school.' With regard to the recommendation of the Society, that the English public should not give money to these children, Signor Luciano mentioned the following case:—On the 8th of May 1873, a padrone, named Giuseppe Ventre, 33 years of age, a native of Picinisco, appeared before the magistrate at Great Marlborough Street Police Court to claim two of his children and two of his relatives, charged with begging, stating that he was ready to take them back with him to Italy. It was eventually arranged that he should be allowed to have them on depositing £20 at the Italian Consulate, which he did, and which sum was to be returned to him if in one month's time he was able to prove that the children had arrived at their destination; otherwise the money would be forfeited. The names of the children as given were Anselmo Ventre, aged 11, Maria Ventre, aged 10, his sons; Carolina Rossi, aged 13, his niece; Gaetano Bona, aged 16, his nephew. Directly Giuseppe Ventre had again got the children into his clutches, instead of returning to Italy, he left for the provinces, and when he was informed that he would lose his £20 he smilingly answered, 'What is that to me? I shall more than make it in a couple of weeks.' Another case is that of a man who came to England some years ago with a dog trained to perform several tricks. He amassed a few pounds and then embarked in trade as an importer of Italian children and organ-grinders, and in a few years after when he died it was found he was worth more than £12,000. Sir Charles proceeded to urge that the system had flourished because it had hitherto only been dealt with before the magistrates in an ordinary way, by a month's imprisonment, a fine, or, worse than all, by the 'padroni' and children being sent on to the next town. The traffic had thus hardened into a deep-rooted comprehensive system, which could only be overcome by repressive measures equally as comprehensive as the system, and equal in organisation. The magistrates and police throughout the country ought to be directed to act against it in an uniform and simultaneous manner, so that the field of the 'padroni' would be entirely pre-occupied, and all the holes stopped. The cumulative penalties of the Vagrant Act, whipping and all, could be brought against the 'padroni,' and the Italian Government had done all it could to stop the traffic. The Italian Benevolent Society would send the children home if they were got out of the power of the 'padroni.' The British public, by giving money to the children, were acting as it were in confederacy with the 'padroni,' for the destruction of the children; but the Government could step in, and by its authority stop the trade at once.

Mr. Ribton-Turner read a letter from Sir James Ingham, the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, who expressed himself as most desirous of aiding in every way in the protection of these children. He then went on to speak of the enormous difficulties in getting at the truth regarding these children and urged that the existing law could be enforced with great effect, both as regarded the punishment of the padroni as vagrants, and the bringing of the compulsory clauses of the Education Act to bear, especially the law of 1876. When out of the London area there was a difficulty about this, for there were not School Boards everywhere.

The Home Secretary said that the law could be everywhere enforced.

Mr. Ribton-Turner proceeded to say that the system of Italian girls being brought to this country for the purposes of prostitution was a great blot upon our civilization. It was a system carried on even under the shadow of that building, and it would be a mercy to have the children taken to the workhouses. He urged that representations might be made to the Swiss and French Governments to stop the passage of the children from Italy through those countries.

Cavalier Buzzelgoli, representing the Italian Consulate-General, referred to cases which had occurred at Glasgow, in which the children who were taken said that the padroni would kill them or kill their mothers, if the children told anything to the English police. It was thus that this condition of things was maintained; the children, it was calculated, collected about 7s. a day in many cases, and in others from 4s. to 5s. a day. The padroni said they had agreements with the parents of the children that the children were to serve for three years, the padroni to pay about 80 ducats in three instalments to the parents. The result was that each padrone cleared about £200 on each child in the term. The Italian Benevolent Society had in about 120 cases paid the expenses of the recovered children home, and was doing, in conjunction with the Italian Government, all that could be done to bring the power of the Continental Governments to bear in stopping this infamous traffic; but it did not seem to the Italians interested in the work that they had the support they looked for from the English Government. If the existing English law was strictly enforced—the Education Act and the London School Board regulation in regard to Italian children—if these children were only kept in school and out of the streets—no matter whether they understood or did not understand the English language—the padroni would not care to keep them long, and would send them back, for their trade would be gone. He knew that the padroni compelled the children to say that their masters were fathers and uncles, and these difficulties would all be got over by simply applying the Education Act to the case of Italian children.

The Home Secretary, in reply, said,—I have had great pleasure in receiving this deputation, and I have listened with interest to what you have had to say; but I have already been in communication with the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, with the Education Department, and also with the police, about the question of how far the English law may be strong enough, or may be made stronger, to prevent what I agree with you is a most objectionable and abominable traffic; and all I can say is that anything the English law can do to put it down, so far as I have any power in the matter, shall be enforced. Further than that I cannot go. My impression is, a great deal may be done by the law as it stands at present, and if we come to put the law in force, and find it is not strong enough, we can try and obtain additional powers to enable us to do so. I heartily agree with everything that has been said about the abomination of the system of importing the children, and I am quite sure it cannot be too strongly condemned. I promise that everything that the English law can do to terminate such a scandal to the country shall be done without delay.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, in thanking the Minister, said his words gave them all the utmost satisfaction.

DIFFICULT CASES. No. IX.

The Kensington Committee write:—'We have been asked to see if anything can be done for a woman of the age of 36, now in the Kensington Workhouse Infirmary. The Guardians might, it seems, be able to pay for her at a Home, as she has no other prospect before her at present than a lifetime in the Infirmary. She is able to do most things for herself. We have applied without avail at the Cripples' Home in the Marylebone Road.'

The Committee would be glad to ascertain if there is any Cripples' Home for Women elsewhere, that would receive this case.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUT-RELIEF—PAUPERISM AND CHARITY.

SIR.—I should not venture to occupy space in your valuable journal unless I demurred to certain principles enunciated in the able letter of your correspondent, Mr. J. R. Hollond, and the paper contributed by Mr. A. G. Crowder, 'On the strict administration of the Poor Law.'

That it is not without some experience that I presume to differ from the opinions expressed by those gentlemen, or from the principles which actuate the Charity Organisation Society, I quote from a report of the Chelsea Relief Society of 1862, words which I wrote: 'Likewise it is always to be borne in mind that a great responsibility is attached to the administration of the contributions of the charitable. It is not charity to encourage the mendicant, the idle or the improvident pauper, but it is charity to lend a hand to failing spirits, to hasten the convalescence of the working man overtaken by sickness or unavoidable calamity, particularly such as have hitherto, by independent labour, supported themselves.' I continue to hold the same official position in the society at the present time, and can vouch for the action of the society on these principles.

There may be two modes of treatment adapted to the social disease of pauperism, as there are in bodily diseases—the one palliative, the other curative, and the special treatment to be adopted must be discovered by the careful investigation of each individual case. A general wholesale abolition of out-relief as advocated by the gentlemen whose views have been enunciated in your paper, does not seem to me likely either to palliate or to cure the evils of pauperism. Mr. A. G. Crowder says 'he is strongly of opinion that Poor Law reformers should not wait until charity is organised before they discontinue out-relief in new cases.' In other words, we are advised to cut off abruptly the pittance hitherto granted in aid of the destitute, and make the workhouse their only refuge. Whatever immediate consequences might follow such decisive action, we are invited to hope that the duty of poor relations to the poor themselves will be encouraged and stimulated by the bonds of natural affection, to supply means necessary to keep their relatives out of the workhouse.

In St. George's-in-the-East, Mr. Crowder tells us there has been an annual saving of £3,000, which has been compensated for by the Charity Organisation Society at a cost of £200, distributed among 50,000 poor, and that the society 'has never allowed a single case to go unrelieved or inefficiently relieved, whatever the cost.' After this testimony of Mr. Crowder, the miracle of the 'five loaves of the five thousand, and the seven loaves of the four thousand,' presents fewer difficulties to the sceptical mind.

It is possible to abolish out-relief without a fatal result, for at most it is a pittance in aid of voluntary assistance given by clerical or lay societies, or by relatives who partly assist the out-door pauper, frequently themselves almost as poor. The 2s. 6d. for an adult, or the 6d. a week for a child, granted temporarily in most cases, if withdrawn altogether, may in time be got over, particularly so if a pension fund be raised in each Poor Law district; the only drawback being the fear that those domestic and other virtues which we are told have followed the abolition of out-door relief, might be checked in their development by the substitution of pensions instead of pauper allowance. Mr. Crowder thus quotes with approbation from the letter written by Mr. J. Hollond: 'The thing that really pauperises (and it must be remembered that the spirit of pauperism is a moral evil), is what tends to make the poor think that others will provide for them, and that they need not provide for themselves. The less agreeable therefore, the form of relief is, the less temptation there is to rely upon it, the stronger are the motives to forethought and self-help.' What is meant by pauperism being a moral evil, unless poverty is to be considered a crime, is not very clear, nor am I inclined to believe that it is by any means the comfortable prospect of ending their days in a workhouse, or the hope of half-a-crown a week out-relief, which form so great a premium as to encourage the evils which Mr. Hollond is so anxious to see removed. The recipients of poor relief are not of the working classes solely, as many superior people are apt to suppose, but are in many cases recruited from all classes of society, who, for want of certain prudential motives, or from sickness, or unavoidable calamity, have been worsted in the battle of life. Mr. Crowder states 'that really exhaustive inquiry by relieving officers, and impartial discrimination by guardians, is practically unattainable.' To this I agree so far as to admit that the existing administration of the Poor Law is faulty to an extreme, but I cannot agree that a better administration is practically unattainable if better men could be had to act as guardians, and more extensive inquiries made by relieving officers. The evils of pauperism are not produced by the system of out-door relief so much as by the partial unsatisfactory, indiscriminate, and frequently capricious manner in which it is granted. This points to the only practical way of solving the question of poor relief without cruelty to the deserving poor, and without injustice to the ratepayers, viz.: a thorough and trustworthy investigation into the circumstances of each application for relief, and a just consideration of its claim. Unless gentlemen of character and independence sufficiently disinterested to seek a reward only in a conscientious discharge of a duty which all owe to the poor, can be induced to take upon themselves the office of guardian, then it is to be feared that a proper administration of the Poor Law is practically unattainable. Now that the evils resulting from what I believe the maladministration of the Poor Law are becoming so evident, I am more inclined to trust that gentlemen of influence and leisure will take upon themselves the duties which are at present frequently performed by men actuated by other motives than either a just application of out-relief, or a disinterested application of rates, ostensibly collected on behalf of the poor, but frequently applied to very different purposes.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES. No. VIII.

CHRISTIANITY AND PAUPERISM.—What does Christianity say? St. Paul, speaking not of the rich but of the poor, declares, 'If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.' Immediately after, he states to whom the voluntary contributions of the charitable ought to be distributed. 'Let not a widow be taken into the number under threescore years old, well reputed of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work.' Then follow these good words: 'But the younger widows refuse; they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not.' Whoever is conversant with pauperism will recognise in this last passage a very faithful description of it.—'Christianity and the Poor Laws,' Walker's Original.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, July 26. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Holland, in the chair; Sir C. Trevelyan, Capt. Fortescue, Messrs. Barrington, Bevan, Peters, and Hill.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending July 21 the receipts had been £200. 19s. 0d. for the General Fund, and £4. 7s. 6d. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances of the two funds on that day had been £513. 2s. 6d. and £29. 6s. 9d. respectively, £7. 19s. 5d. of the latter sum being reserved to repay expenditure on School Board cases only.

GRANTS.—That, in accordance with a resolution of Council at their last meeting, a grant of £31 had been made to the St. George-in-the-East Committee; and that a grant of £23 had been made to the Poplar Committee.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on July 24 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; and Mr. Crowder.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on July 24 there had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Capt. Gardner, Major FitzRoy, and Mr. W. Bevan.

CO-OPERATION SUB-COMMITTEE.—At the meeting of this Committee on July 25 there had been present:—

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Messrs. A. H. Hill, G. Charles, and J. R. Holland.

CONVALESCENT CASES.

The Secretary announced an anonymous donation of £25 for convalescent cases.

CO-OPERATION WITH GUARDIANS.

The following letter from the Clerk of the Whitechapel Board of Guardians to the Committee of that District was read:—

I am directed by the Board of Guardians to acknowledge the receipt of a list of cases which, during the year 1876, was referred to your District Committee of the Charity Organisation Society by officers of, or otherwise from, this Union, and which were accordingly dealt with by means of charitable relief or successful references to special charities or benevolent individuals.

I am directed to express the cordial appreciation of the Guardians of the efficient service rendered by your Committee in these and other cases in depauperising, or saving from pauperism, the deserving poor.

GRANTS.

The following recommendation of the Administrative Committee was moved by Mr. A. D. Graham, seconded by Captain Boyce, and adopted, viz. :—

That the Administrative Committee be authorised to make grants, at their discretion, to the Bethnal Green, Lambeth, Holborn, Whitechapel, and Fulham Committees to the amount of £47, £47, £49, £38, and £47 respectively, the remainder of the estimated deficit of those Committees for the current year.

WORK OF THE CENTRAL OFFICE.

A series of resolutions of a Sub-Committee on the arrangements of the Central Office having been sent up to the Council by the Administrative Committee as recommendations, were taken as urgent, and, after some discussion, in which Captain Fortescue, Rev. H. G. Henderson, Mr. W. F. Lawrence, Mr. R. Barrington, and others took part, were adopted, on the motion of Mr. A. H. Hill, seconded by Dr. Daniel.

ADEQUATE RELIEF.

Mr. A. H. Hill, seconded by Mr. A. D. Graham, moved the following resolution, viz. :—

That the Report of the Districts Sub-Committee on Adequate Relief be received, but that the consideration of it be deferred to an early meeting next session, the attention of the Administrative Committee being called, in the interim, to the concluding paragraph of the Report.*

A discussion followed, in which Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. H. M. Keary, and others took part, and the resolution was subsequently adopted.

The Council then adjourned, on the motion of the Rev. H. G. Henderson, to the 8th of October.

CONTRIBUTIONS.

The following contributions were received by the Council during the week ending Saturday, July 28, 1877:—

DIFFICULT CASES.—No. IX.

We have received the following reply respecting the above difficult case †

There does not seem to be any other Cripples' Home mentioned in the classified list than that in Marylebone Road.

By the 'Metropolitan Poor Act, 1857,' sec. 5, the Metropolitan Asylum Board may, when directed by the Local Government Board, provide Asylums 'for reception and relief of the sick, insane, infirm, or other class or classes of the poor,' and charge the cost to the common fund.

No steps have yet been taken under the Act to provide specially for cripples, but the Board might be asked if any such are contemplated. Their answer might be brought to the notice of the Local Government Board, with the statistics of such unfortunate cases in the Metropolitan district.

MEDICAL CHARITIES.

BIRMINGHAM.—The British Medical Journal, in an article on the address recently delivered by Mr. Sampson Gamgee at the annual meeting of the Birmingham and Midland Counties Branch of the British Medical Association, says :—

'All who are interested in this movement should read Mr. Gamgee's address carefully, and weigh the statistics which he has brought forward; they are very telling, for they show not only the extent of the present abuse of hospitals and dispensaries, but also the extraordinary rapidity with which this abuse is growing, even in a wealthy town like Birmingham, and during a period of unexampled prosperity.

* Your Sub-Committee would therefore recommend that steps be taken to give practical effect to the principle involved in the first recommendation of the Visit to Offices Sub-Committee, which was adopted by the Council on the 19th of January, 1876, by the appointment, at an early date, of competent paid secretaries in those Committees which appear most urgently to require support, and in which adequate volunteer assistance is not forthcoming.

† Vide Reporter, No. 226, p. 129.

'Mr. Gamgee bases his argument upon the experience of ten years.

"The number of persons attending the Birmingham medical charities was, in 1867, 66,671; in 1876, 104,048; showing an increase of 37,377, equal to 56 per cent. Reckoning the population of the borough of Birmingham for 1867 at 325,895, one person in every five in that year obtained relief from our medical charities; whereas the proportion rose to one in 3.5 in 1876, when the population was 371,839. In the ten years the borough population increased 13.8 per cent, and the number of persons relieved at the medical charities increased 56 per cent. In other words, in the past ten years the recipients of medical charity in Birmingham have increased more than four times as fast as the general population of the borough."

'But during this same period the wealth of the town has increased enormously. This is demonstrated not only by the palatial buildings which are rising on all sides, but by exact information derived from the rateable value of property, the income tax, the savings' bank returns, and the building societies. Are we then to conclude that this immense augmentation of wealth increases the number of those who are entitled to gratuitous medical relief? Does prosperity make beggars? In answer to this question Mr. Gamgee adduces the parochial returns for the same ten years, and shows that during the past decade pauperism has rather decreased in Birmingham. We are, therefore, shut up to the conclusion that those who make use of the hospitals and dispensaries in such rapidly increasing numbers are not poor people in needy circumstances, but well-to-do artisans, who have no claim upon medical charity.

'What is the remedy for this state of things? Some of Mr. Gamgee's neighbours, laying the whole blame upon the misuse of Governors' letters of recommendation, say: "Let the hospitals be free, and let a registration fee be required from all applicants alike." But this is obviously unfair, and is likely, in the long run, to lead to greater evils than the Governors' letters. We must look in some other direction for the true remedy, and it is interesting to observe that the Birmingham Charity Organisation Society has had its attention turned to this subject, and has arrived at precisely the same conclusion as its London prototype. The executive of the local organisation remark :—

"A very large proportion of this enormous number of out-patients could afford to pay the cost of their own doctoring, if that payment could be made in the form of a small weekly payment during times of health as well as of illness; while they would generally be unable, especially when ill, to meet the lump sum of a doctor's bill. The need here is the machinery for bringing the payment for doctoring within the reach of the poorer class, and this can be done by the establishment of Provident Dispensaries, as is shown by their success in many other towns. By small weekly contributions to these institutions, the working classes are enabled to pay the cost of their own medical attendance and medicine, and are thus able to avoid the humiliating position of becoming recipients of public charity whenever they are out of health. Any change in this direction seems to us to be hopeless until Provident Dispensaries are provided."

'That the development of the provident system is the proper mode of meeting the difficulty is a conviction which is gaining ground all over the country. A check must be put upon the abuse of charity, and as (to quote the words of a Quarterly Reviewer) "there is a limit to the liberality of the most liberal profession in the world," means must be found that will bring a great part of the present gratuitous service into a system that will offer a reasonable remuneration. Mr. Gamgee seems to think that we are rapidly tending towards rate-supported hospitals. Here we venture to differ from him. We believe that the medical profession would be as unwilling as the ratepayers to see such institutions established. What we desire is, that such inquiries should be made, with regard to both the social position and the maladies of the applicants, that those only shall receive our gratuitous assistance who have a claim to charity, and who, having such a claim, will be benefited and not degraded by the charitable relief they receive. For the rest, as Mr. Gamgee says: "On the principle of mutual assurance it is possible to make efficient provision for the health of the working classes, including the wives and children; and the object is one which deserves very thoughtful and earnest co-operation in the broadest and truest sense of the term."

BOARD OF GUARDIANS FOR THE RELIEF OF THE JEWISH POOR.

Annual Report for 1876.—It is not easy to do any justice to this Report in the short space that we can give. The very titles of the Sub-Committees will partly indicate the large work that is done :—the Executive Committee, the Medical Committee, the Investigating Committee (for the revision of the list of fixed and periodical allowances), the Loan Committee, the Committee for Legislative and Parochial Affairs, the Visiting Committee (presided over by one of our Vice-Presidents), the Industrial Committee, including a Committee for conducting the workrooms, and the Canvassing Committee. The Report commences by stating that 'the impression made by a long Society I am always willing to receive for 3s. 6d. a week. The return ticket (available for eight weeks) is 6s. I have reason to believe that the Great Eastern Railway Company will make a considerable reduction in tickets for the ladies, and am making an application. I can receive only four ladies, and shall be glad to hear of any who would be benefited by the little Home. Burston is our station.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Council does not consider itself responsible for any of the opinions expressed by its Correspondents.]

PROGRESSIVE CHARITY ORGANISATION.

MY DEAR SIR.—I regret that through an accident I was not aware until too late of Mr. Hill's intention to ask a question* relative to a paragraph in the last Wandsworth Committee's Report on the subject of Pensions; but as I learn that the Chairman ruled that no discussion was admissible, it was, perhaps, of not much consequence. I cannot but regret the decision which he has given, because I feel it involves a much larger question than that immediately in dispute. It is this: Within what limits latitude is to be given to individual committees to work out the questions which come under their cognisance, unfettered by hard and fast rules?

I venture to think that this is a matter fraught with grave danger to the future of the Charity Organisation Society. That some common basis is requisite for united action I freely admit; but I submit it should be as broad and inclusive as possible. If I were asked to name what I consider the leading principles of our organisation, I should say they were—

1st. Investigation as precedent to relief.

2nd. Relief, where given, to be efficient; in other words, to be 'curative,' and not merely 'palliative.'

Within these main lines there is room for a vast difference in the method of the treatment of the individual cases which are brought before each Committee, and inasmuch as a great deal of the work that is being done is, it must be admitted, of a tentative nature, it is only by allowing free scope for individual treatment that the result of varied experience can be attained.

There is another point which, perhaps, lies at the root of the question, and on which, I apprehend, very different views are held by different members of the Charity Organisation Society, and that is: What do you propose as the ultimate aim of the Society?

Are you simply to influence public opinion so as to gradually bring about a better administration of charitable funds, and a more intelligent appreciation of the difficulties of dealing with pauperism, and the right principles that should guide your efforts in so doing?

Or, Are you to endeavour to make your Committee the focus into which you shall gradually absorb all the agencies which now occupy themselves directly with the administration of relief, and which, from its influence and intelligent action, shall be an educating force, first, on the charitable, and gradually on the public at large?

If the former, the Council is right in supplying a set of regulations in accordance with their varying experience for the guidance of Committees; but it appears to me that the Society will not long exist as a living entity, attracting to itself all the best workers and thinkers of the day in this particular field.

If the latter, then an almost boundless field of exertion offers, but large discretion must be given to individual committees to compass this end by the means which seem to them necessary to attain to it, and questionable experiments must, in some cases be allowed, as otherwise I fear the desired result may be indefinitely postponed.

Perhaps you will kindly bring this letter before the Administrative Committee. I have purposely foreborne to enter into the immediate question under discussion, but the larger one I have dealt with seems to me of such importance that I should be glad to know that it had been considered.

Yours truly,

ALAN LAMBERT.

METROPOLITAN PATTERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of July 1877 was 35,608, and 43,434 received outdoor relief, making a total of 79,042. This was a decrease of 11 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding week of the year 1876 this was an increase of 15, and a decrease of 6,338 and of 15,327 as compared with the years 1875 and 1874. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 565. This was a decrease of 1 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 144 on the corresponding day of last year.

WINCHESTER CHARITY ORGANISATION ASSOCIATION.—Petitions.—We have received the following letter from Mr. H. J. Wickham, the Hon. Sec. of the Association:—

'In the Reporter published June 21, on page 105, under "Winchester Charity Organisation Association," you say you would be glad to know the nature of the precautions taken by the Committee.

'1st. They sanction none but very well-authenticated cases.

'2nd. The petitions must issue from the Committee.

'3rd. The sum required is stated in the petition.

'4th. Each person who gives to it is particularly asked in the petition to put his full name and the sum given.

'5th. The Association does not pay the sum promised until the petition is brought back to them with the money and signatures.

'6th. The sum promised is paid then, and the petition retained by the Association.

'Though the scheme is not perfect, yet it is a considerable improvement on what used to go on in that way, and the Committee would be very glad to hear the criticisms of more experienced persons and to receive any suggestions.'

PENNY BANKS.—It was stated, at the meeting of the London School Board on June 6, that penny banks had been established in connection with 17 Board Schools, mostly in the Tower Hamlets, under a resolution of the Board of October 27, 1873. Last year there were 3,836 depositors, whose deposits amounted to £1,190. 19s., and at Christmas last there were deposits still remaining amounting to £174. 6s. 1d. The teachers were left perfectly free to collect this money how and when they pleased. The money was paid into the Government Savings' Bank; and no interest being paid to the children, the interest received from the Government was used to meet the cost of management, books, &c.

WORK OF THE PAST SESSION.

At the meeting of Council of the 23rd ult. Sir Charles Trevelyan, in giving a short résumé of the work which the Society had undertaken during the session of the Council which would terminate on the 31st inst., said:—Last year we were almost entirely occupied in considering the merits of centralisation—working from one centre—as against local administration, or working from many different centres; and the question had been decided in favour of both principles—viz. that our system of government should be based on local administration with a strong central supervision. Since that we had done a great deal of real work, of which the following were some of the principal heads. The machinery at head-quarters had been greatly strengthened, first by placing each distinct branch of the Society's operations under a responsible Sub-Committee composed of Members of the Council, the suggestion of which was due to Mr. Alsager Hay Hill; and, secondly, by making a clearer apportionment of the work of the two Secretaries. The Secretary to the Council (Mr. C. S. Loch) was to be the General Secretary, and everything that was not expressly assigned to others was to belong to him. The other Secretary (Mr. C. J. Ribton-Turner) was to be the Secretary for the Repression of Mendicity; but he was also to be available for any special service for which his extensive acquaintance with the Society's work and his many valuable attainments might qualify him. Two meetings of the Charity Agents, and other Officers acting under the District Committees, had been held, at which Papers, followed by useful discussions, had been read. The Sub-Committee for District Committees had worked hard to strengthen the District Committees, which were the basis of our whole system; and they had succeeded to a considerable extent, although much remained to be done. Their first annual report* might be consulted with advantage, and their report upon 'Adequate Relief,' to be considered to-day, threw further light upon the subject. The Committee charged with the vital duty of devising suitable arrangements for collecting funds had finished their task, and all that remained to be done was to put the measures resolved upon into full and effective operation. The Co-operation Sub-Committee had reported upon soup kitchens, showing the progress which had been made since this subject was reported upon in February 1871,† and suggesting the substitution of coffee taverns for soup kitchens, the one tending to the elevation of the character of our people as much as the other educates them to dependence and pauperism.

Six years ago we had a conference on medical relief, and this year the threads had been gathered up at another conference presided over by Dr. Acland, supported by Sir William Gull, Mr. Prescott Hewett, Mr. Timothy Holmes, and other eminent men,‡ and there was every reason for believing that this fresh impulse would not subside until the work had been accomplished. A still longer period had elapsed since we reported upon personal work among the poor, or District Visiting. A conference was held in March last§ on this important branch of the subject, after which a Committee was appointed which carefully reconsidered it, with the advantage of the experience acquired during the intermediate seven years, and a second report had now been presented in which the question had been reproduced in a revised practical form suited to the circumstances of the present time. A Special Committee, composed of experienced county administrators and medical men, as well as of members of this Society, was appointed in June 1875, to consider the best means of making a comprehensive provision for idiots, imbeciles, and harmless lunatics throughout England and Wales; and their Report|| was presented to the President of the Local Government Board in May last, and obtained his warm support, as well as the general approval of all who are interested in the subject, so that the whole subject is now in progress of satisfactory and lasting arrangement throughout the country. The report on Italian children had been so lately before the Council that it is needless to speak further of it. The Report of the Co-operation Sub-Committee on Charity and Out-Relief had led to an animated debate, and although no final resolution was come to by the Council, the question was cropping up in all directions, and the tendency of the whole movement was towards the result recommended in that Report. The debate on charitable endowments* had satisfactorily opened that important subject, and a memorial was to be presented to the Lord Chancellor as to the application of the funds of the royal endowment of St. Katharine's Hospital. The interesting meeting held at the Working Men's St. James's and Soho Club in May last, on Charity and Poor Law, had helped to explain the objects and plans of the Society to the industrial classes, and the candour and goodwill exhibited on that occasion was eminently satisfactory. Considerable progress had been made in improving the Charity Organisation Reporter, and it might be hoped that in the ensuing year, with the experience already acquired, it would become of more general value as a means of diffusing correct information on this class of subjects. The work of repressing mendicity had steadily proceeded. A society, the great abuses of which had been proved, had been suppressed, and an investigation of unusual importance into the management of another was now in progress. Whether the old fallacy that the end justified the means still lurked under cover of the name of charity, or there was an actual perversion of the text that 'charity covereth a multitude of sins,' there could be no doubt that a lower standard was perceptible in many sensational appeals, and other transactions connected with charity, than would be tolerated in the ordinary affairs of life. Whatever the cause might be, there was no doubt of the fact, and one great end to be attained under the head of the repression of mendicity was to correct this state of feeling, and to get people to be as candid and exact in charitable matters as they are in all others. In conclusion, one word about the advance made in general public opinion. We were sometimes disappointed at seeing that we were subjected to unjust imputations. Notwithstanding this, we should work on through good report and evil report, with the conviction that while we did our duty to the best of our ability we should be supported by all well-informed and right-minded people. There were in fact clear indications that the best organs of public opinion recognised the useful position of the Society to which we have the honour to belong.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

HOLBORN.—Co-operation with the Clergy.—The Rev. Edward Canney, Vicar of St. Peter's, Saffron Hill, Holborn, in his annual report of Church work for 1876-7, in writing of the 'Poor Relief Fund' of his parish, says:—'This fund is very carefully administered, otherwise it would do more harm than good. The Vicar or Scripture reader attends at the vestry every Monday and Thursday morning from 10 to 11 to receive applications for relief. Each application is entered in a book, with particulars of the applicant's circumstances. If the case appears urgent, the applicant is at once visited and relief given; otherwise it stands over until Thursday evening, when the Relief Committee meets to consider cases, and determine how best to deal with them. If applicants are not known, inquiries are made in the interval, and should the result not be satisfactory, they are told to go to the Charity Organisation Society, that their cases may be thoroughly investigated. After investigation, if they prove not Poor Law cases and are deserving, the Charity Organisation Society send them back to St. Peter's Relief Committee, to be dealt with as it shall deem best. Most of the relief is given in pensions varying from 1s. to 3s. a week to poor, old, or infirm people, the design being to enable these to live a shade more comfortably than they would otherwise do. A little is given to aid people who have been unfortunate, and who are struggling to recover themselves; and the rest is expended on nourishment for the sick. Some coal is given in severe winter weather to widows with children and poor old people. Parishioners knowing or hearing of people in distress will oblige the Relief Committee by putting such in the way of obtaining assistance from them.'

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

In reply to circular sent by the Co-operation Sub-Committee, the following charities have kindly consented to co-operate with the Society in obtaining adequate relief for suitable cases. (I.) The Artists' General Benevolent Institution for the Relief of Decayed Artists of the United Kingdom, and for affording Assistance to their Widows and Orphans. The Treasurer is P. C. Hardwick, Esq. The offices are at 24 Old Bond Street, W. (II.) The London General Porters' Benevolent Institution, the Secretary of which is Mr. T. Rickwood. The offices are at 33 Cheapside, E.C. (III.) St. Martin's-in-the-Fields Almshouses, 26 Craven Street, Charing Cross, W.C. Applications should be made to J. Dangerfield, Esq. It is a condition under which the charity is dispensed, that the recipients should be persons who have been householders, or who are the widows of householders in the parish of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields. (IV.) Huggen's College, Northfleet; Rev. M. M. Finch, Chaplain. The conditions for election to the benefits of this College, as inmates or as out-pensioners, are—(1) Candidates must be sixty years old at least; (2) candidates must be ladies and gentlemen in reduced circumstances; (3) they must not have an income of more than £20 a year; (4) they must be members of the Church of England. They are elected after very strict inquiry by the trustees, and are appointed for life, subject to good conduct.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE RELIEF OF DISTRESS.—The following is taken from the last Report of this Society.

The almoners of the Society continue to co-operate satisfactorily with the Local Committees of the Charity Organisation Society, in most cases being members of these Local Committees, and using their machinery for investigation when necessary, at the same time relieving deserving cases in their district as far as their grants permit.

In districts where the Society for the Relief of Distress has no almoner, this Committee willingly receives direct applications for relief from the Local Committees of the Charity Organisation Society, in cases that have proved, after careful inquiry, to be deserving, and where timely help may furnish the means of earning a maintenance. . . . The receipts for the Society for the Relief of Distress for the past year have amounted to £1,837. 7s. 8d., and the grants made to £1,814. 19s. 3d.

NATIONAL HEALTH SOCIETY.—The fourth annual report indicates the many ways in which this Society is acting up to its motto, 'Prevention is better than cure.' Its one great object is to 'diffuse a sound knowledge of the laws of health, and of the measures likely to prevent the spread of disease, throughout all classes of the community.' Amongst the poorest and most ignorant the need of information and instruction appears most evident, and the want has been in a measure met by the delivery of familiar addresses, illustrated by good diagrams and simple experiments. At Whitechapel, e.g., four lectures or addresses were delivered by Miss F. Miller, on 'Food,' 'Air,' 'Clothing,' 'How to manage a Baby.' 'In many cases practical results have ensued from the teaching given: windows have been opened, stuffing taken from the chimneys, and on one occasion Miss Pearson was pleased to find fifty women had made cheap filters according to her receipt.' Lectures have also been delivered at the rooms of the Social Science Association and Society of Arts, and the Secretary appeals for assistance to 'those who, being competent, are willing to give gratuitous or paid lectures on subjects embraced by the Society to audiences of various kinds.' Early in the year the Society inaugurated a deputation to the Home Secretary on the water supply of London, and subsequently drew up a document setting forth facts and municipal precedents in favour of the course urged upon the Government. Reports of this paper may be obtained of the Society. During the summer a special fund, amounting to £15. 9s., was subscribed, and expended in taking parties of children 'into the parks and open places several times in the week.' A hope is expressed that the authorities may see fit to throw open Lincoln's Inn Square garden. Since the appearance of the report the London School Board has approved of the playgrounds being open to children during the weekdays.

'BRITISH WORKMAN' PUBLIC-HOUSES.—The 'Report of the Central London Committee of the "British Workman" Public-houses without the drink' states that 'experience has shown that a good manager, and a local Committee, or Secretaries, who will throw their whole energies into the work, are essential . . . ' and extracts are given of the success of the houses in different places. 'At Ealing,' the Hon. Secretary writes, 'we have from fifty to sixty men using the house; we have a good library, coal club, cricket club, and a "B. W." choir. We have succeeded in getting hold of a goodly number of dangerous lads of the village, and have got them into good order, so that now many of them are really respectable members of society.' Since the commencement of the movement at Leeds, about nine years ago, 'great good has resulted in the reformation of many men who were slaves to drink, and the Leeds example has been followed in many other towns, there being now perhaps about two hundred throughout England.' It would be interesting to know whether any of these are open on Sundays, and, if so, what have been the results. We have now before us the report of an East-end clergyman, who, referring to one of the Café Company's houses, says, 'It would, I think, be an improvement if it were opened on Sundays.'

MEDICAL CHARITIES.

Mr. Lawson Tait, in his recently published work on 'Hospital Mortality,' says—'To provide gratuitous attendance for married women seems to me a mere improvidence, and a method of charity which ought to be at once discontinued. Those who really want help most are those who, by our present plan, have least chance of getting it. The women amongst whom puerperal mortality is always found to be highest are those we often send to be confined in our Workhouse wards. I think there is reason to believe that it would be better for all concerned if we had these cases treated by themselves, in buildings set apart for the purpose, at least in our large towns. I think it is a question worth considering whether the existence of institutions where unfortunate girls could be readily and at once admitted in the hour of their trial would not greatly diminish the number of those terrible child murders which occupy so much of the time of our coroners' juries. The objection that such institutions might have a tendency to encourage vice is no answer, unless it can be shown that our present neglect diminishes it—a supposition which is highly improbable.'

ARTISANS' DWELLINGS.

A report to the House of Commons, just issued, enables us to supplement the information we lately gave concerning the operation of the 'Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Act.' Twenty improvement schemes are stated in detail by the Metropolitan Board of Works, some of which are still under consideration. Those for Holborn, Strand, and St. George's, Hanover Square, have not been sanctioned. In the country nine provisional orders have been issued for Birmingham, Liverpool, Nottingham, Swansea, Norwich, and Walsall. No less than ninety-three acres are affected at Birmingham. Nottingham also and Wolverhampton have made application for provisional orders. At fifteen other towns the Act is under consideration, and the return closes with a list of fifty-nine towns, including Bradford, Bristol, Kingston-on-Hull, Leeds, Manchester, Portsmouth, each of which has a population exceeding 100,000, where no steps have been taken. Of the eight towns in Scotland affected by the Act no official action appears to have been taken at Edinburgh, Dundee, Aberdeen, and Perth. At Greenock an improvement scheme has been prepared, and there is one under consideration at Leith. Of the remaining two towns, Glasgow has a private Improvement Act and Paisley is promoting one. The return gives no information as to the cost of these schemes. The number of people displaced is likewise not stated.

PROVINCIAL.

DORKING MENDICITY SOCIETY.—At a Committee Meeting of the Dorking Mendicity Society, held on January 16, 1877, it was resolved that the following statement, accompanied by a financial statement, signed by the Hon. Secretary, Mr. W. W. Clark, be printed and circulated:—

'After a careful consideration of the working of the Dorking Mendicity Society during the past six years, the Committee are of opinion that the results hardly justify them in continuing to press its claims for public support.

'It is true that indiscriminate almsgiving is rendered unnecessary, and probably to a great extent prevented. It is also true that many a destitute traveller is provided with a meal of bread on his passage through Dorking; but a careful inspection of the persons who take advantage of this relief leads the Committee to believe that a very large percentage belong to a class who have no settled home, who do not care to work, and will never do so, so long as they can subsist without. The chief difficulty lies in discriminating between really needy and deserving travellers and habitual tramps, who throng our lodging-houses night by night, living on the credulity of the benevolent, and imposing upon charities such as this. The question has thus forced itself upon the Committee, whether the good done by this Society in preventing indiscriminate almsgiving and in providing relief for the destitute traveller is not more than counterbalanced by the evils it encourages, in perpetuating a system of imposture, and in fostering a taste for an idle and dissolute life. Balancing the pros and cons of this question, the Committee are of opinion that the net results of the society are more harmful than good, and they reluctantly relinquish an undertaking from which they had hoped better things. In presenting the appended financial statement, the Committee desire to express their thanks to those of their fellow-townsmen who have assisted them in their endeavours to deal with a question beset with difficulties which at present seem to be insurmountable.'

FOREIGN.

Boston.—Medical Relief.—Extract from a Letter from Dr. Putnam, June 1, 1877.—We have in Boston three general hospitals—the City Hospital, supported entirely by the Government, and having for officers a Board of Trustees, a Resident Superintendent (also Admitting Physician), and the usual staff of Visiting and Out-patient Physicians; the Massachusetts General Hospital, supported entirely by endowments and by the money derived from the patients, and officered in a similar manner to the City Hospital; and the Carney Hospital, entirely of Roman Catholic foundation and management.

The City Hospital has about 400 beds, all for patients who are the wards of the city, and are supposed to be unable to pay anything towards their support; and, in addition, a few rooms for private patients. I cannot say just how much the latter are charged, but probably at the same rate as at the Massachusetts General Hospital. The Visiting and Out-patient Physicians receive no salary at any of our hospitals in Boston. They have a large Out-patient Department, divided into Surgical, Male and Female Medical, Eye, Ear, and Skin Special Departments. No medicine is given, or only exceptionally. The Massachusetts General Hospital has between 200 and 300 beds. The cost of each patient is about $11 a week, and all that can afford to do so pay from $4 to $7 towards their support. They are required to deposit, if possible, in advance, a good sum of money, and when they are discharged any part of it that may remain is paid back to them. There are pleasant rooms for about a dozen private patients, who pay from $15 to $35 or $40 a week. Our Out-patient Department is not extremely large, but is constantly increasing in size. Perhaps the average attendance may be 150, divided among departments for surgical cases, male and female medical, diseases of the eye, skin, throat, and nervous system. No medicine is given, unless exceptionally at the request of the physicians, and the cost of that is certainly covered by the fees which the patients give from time to time, either voluntarily or at the suggestion of the physician, or in compliance with a notice which is posted up. As I told you, the Trustees of the hospital have felt that the Out-patient Department was growing too fast, and last winter (a year ago) called a meeting of the physicians to discuss the matter. It was almost the unanimous opinion of the latter, however, that the abuses were certainly not so great as to make the system a public evil of any magnitude, and that the opportunities for study and teaching would be much impaired if anything should be done to diminish the number of the patients. It should be said, at the same time, that these opinions were given with the facts in view that no plan of concerted action between the hospitals, and indeed no plan that seemed to promise any better results, had been proposed. Provident Dispensaries have been talked of with us, but I think nowhere tried, and I am not aware that the idea has been suggested that they should be numerous, and in the midst of communities forming as it were separate villages, within which the inhabitants and their means would be pretty well known to all concerned, as I believe is thought here should be the case. Besides the hospital relief, the whole city of Boston is districted up into wards, each of which has a physician attached to it who is paid $200 a year by the so-called Boston Dispensary, also an entirely private and very useful institution. Advice and medicine are to be sure given gratuitously, but as the patients are visited in their own homes the physicians have a chance to judge of their means, and may refuse to treat them. The same dispensary has a central office where at least 200 patients must attend daily. The Carney Hospital has, I think, no Out-patient Department, and the only feature of interest in its management is that any respectable physician may send his private patients there, and treat them himself, payment being of course made both for the lodging and attendance.

ROTTERDAM.—Soup Kitchens.—A correspondent from Rotterdam writes:—‘I mentioned that the maximum contribution to provident dispensaries is 10 cents; I am told that in some of them the contribution was raised to 12½ a month ago.

‘I certainly hope I shall be able to arrive at true practical inductions, and for my own part I can but say that the correspondence is already beginning to have its effect. The report on soup kitchens you kindly sent me in March is found very interesting here. I sent it to the directors of the chief institution, and a change is seriously thought of now. One of them is quite convinced of the bad tendency of the whole system, and assures me that your arguments are all confirmed by his experience as regards Rotterdam.

‘One of the questions in charity which has much occupied me of late, but which I consider nearly incapable of a satisfactory solution for immediate application, is how to relieve widows. I don’t know if the attention of your Council has been actively directed to the matter. Here widows can get outdoor relief very easily. Most institutions may think relief to able-bodied men a thing not to begin with, but able-bodied women are in a more favourable position. One of the diaconies, with a capital of about 700,000 florins (£60,000), uses the interest chiefly in this way. Scarcely any harm is seen in the husband leaving a widow with children without a farthing to live upon. This relief must aggravate the evil by its consequences (improvidence and low wages). Wages of women are so low and work is so scarce, that they actually cannot get a decent living by their own exertions.

‘The only solution I see for the present is to get working men to establish a fund supported by their weekly contributions and administered by themselves, out of which their widows are provided for after their death. But how to find a definite plan by which working men may be gradually obliged or induced to use this foresight!’

PAUPERISM AND CHARITY ORGANISATION IN ROME.

It appears from a recent number of a Roman newspaper, Il Dovere, that the Municipality has proposed to the Town Council the appointment of a Special Commission, who should be directed to draw up a descriptive return of the number of cases of true and of spurious poverty which have occurred in the capital. The preface to this proposal of the Municipality draws attention to the proportions which the ‘pernicious plant’ of pauperism has attained, and how firmly its roots are fixed in the soil of Rome. It dwells on the importance of full and accurate statistics on the subject of pauperism, and points out that the Congregazione di Carità, a kind of union of charitable agencies, raises an annual amount of £155,166, of which £154,583 are administered by the Municipality. After quoting the passages to the above effect, the writer of the article states that other charitable institutions, having a further total income of above £11,875, distribute one-half of this amount in annual grants, so that the total annual amount expended in official charity in Rome must be £161,103. A large portion of this sum is, it appears, expended in fixed monthly allowances of indefinite number, but only amounting as a rule to 750 lire per month, a sum which cannot, says the writer, form any important part of the income of a family. The article concludes by approving, in the warmest terms, the proposed step, by expressing the hope that, in spite of the obstacles that must retard it, it may soon have practical results, and by alluding to a contemplated plan for amalgamating, under another Congregazione, the administration of the whole of the charitable institutions (Opere Pie) of Rome. An article in another issue of the same paper deals at greater length with this plan, and lays stress upon the importance of some concentration and organisation of the numerous charitable institutions of the town, having either the same or similar objects, acting, as they do, on no recognised principle, and guided by no acknowledged standard. It is shown, for instance, that by the concentration and organisation of certain institutions for the care and maintenance of the aged and of orphans, sixteen establishments could be dispensed with, and that, by properly utilising their sites, an income of £8,312 could be obtained, which, together with the present income of the institutions it is proposed to unite, would make a total revenue of £36,290.

PAUPERISM AND POOR RELIEF AT BRUSSELS.—Our Brussels correspondent writes:—The burgomaster of Brussels has made an important statement in the Communal Council with regard to the administration of the poor asylums and hospitals of Brussels. He pointed out that this administration is continually becoming richer, and that the properties which it accumulates never come again into circulation; that the application of the revenue from these properties encourages pauperism instead of preventing it; and that the hospitals do not render the services which might be expected from them. Since 1872 the property of the administration has increased at the rate of 500,000f. annually, and amounts now to 50,000,000f.; nevertheless the administration demands a subsidy of 311,000f. from the town. Twenty thousand paupers receive relief, but the administration neglects to pay for the schooling of the children of the poor, so as to render them able at once to earn a living. Permanent relief, as it is given now, keeps up misery, and prevents those receiving it from seeking healthy homes in the suburbs (which are independent communes, and where they would lose the right to relief from the Brussels administration), and perpetuates the insalubrity of many quarters of the town. In Brussels one of eight inhabitants receives relief, at Bruges one of three, and at Tournai even one of two. In these towns the patrimony of the poor is, of course, the most considerable, while there are localities where, owing to the insignificance of this patrimony, only one of 184 inhabitants is in the receipt of relief. The burgomaster expressed the hope that the Communal Council will be able to put an end to the evils of such a system of poor relief. In conclusion, the burgomaster criticised the present hospital administration, and said that the hospitals should be placed outside the inner town.—Pall Mall Gazette.

POOR LAW CONFERENCE.

OUT-RELIEF.—At the Conference for the North Wales District, held at Rhyl, on March 23, the Rev. Bulkeley O. Jones, speaking of the Ruthin Union, said:—‘The expenditure of 1874-75 was £3,826 upon out-relief, and the out-paupers were 830. The expenditure in 76-77 was £2,963, showing a decrease of £863, and the out-paupers were 428. But, gentlemen, that does not represent the whole of the decrease, because we called upon the relatives of paupers to contribute in a much greater degree in 76-77 than we did in 74-75. The amount of contribution by relations in 74-75 only amounted to £80. The amount contributed by relations in 76-77 amounted to £196. And taking these figures into account, the decrease, as compared with 74-75, is £979, which is very nearly, as you see, at the rate of £1,000 per annum. . . . Then, gentlemen, considering that the reduction is something about £1,000 per annum, if we take the capitalised value, we at once see that the property in the union is more valuable in 76-77 by £30,000, than it was before in 1874.’

The Rev. Venables Williams stated in a paper read by him:—'It cannot, I fear, be denied that there is a vast amount of deceit and imposition among the applicants for relief; there is some, no doubt, but cannot be very much, among the old—they tell their own tale. It must be borne in mind that there is a large class in every union who think, and openly say, that the union funds are "common funds"—common property—and that they have a perfect right to them.'

Mr. W. Layton Lowndes said:—'It is obvious to those who have studied the history and progress of Poor Law Administration from its commencement, that the original principle of the Poor Law was the workhouse test. In proportion as that test has been applied, pauperism has diminished; in proportion as that test has been neglected, pauperism has flourished. That was the case all through the last century. It has been shown over and over again in this century, both before and since the passing of the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834. The main point is to make Boards of Guardians understand and see the advantage of the regulation that indoor relief should be the rule generally, and outdoor relief the exception; and that destitution, not poverty, gives the only claim to relief of any kind. Guardians have no right to carry out their own ideas as to poverty giving a claim to relief. Poverty appeals most strongly to private charity, but gives no claim to relief from rates compulsorily levied from a class—in many cases but little better off than the applicant for relief—and in no way partaking of the nature of a charitable fund. Relief, therefore, being only given to real cases of destitution, is most efficiently given in the workhouse, where those in need of relief are properly clothed, fed, and housed.'

AN ECONOMIC EXPERIMENT IN GHENT.—A recent number of Macmillan contains the following information on this subject:—

'The Public Schools of the city fall into four classes. Those most numerously attended are the Free Primary Schools, maintained in great part at the expense of the communal Council. In these there are 4,315 boys and 3,674 girls, or 7,989 in all. Then there are the Écoles payantes, primary schools of the same educational character, but not gratuitous, designed for children of a higher social rank. In these there are 1,079 scholars. In the Écoles Gardiennes, or Free Infant Schools, there are 3,039 children; and in the Adult Schools, which are held in the evening or on the Sunday, there are 3,285 men and women under regular instruction. Out of this total of 15,392 pupils, no less than 13,032 are this year in possession of accounts in the savings bank. The uniformity and steadiness with which the system has taken root in the schools may be estimated from these figures:—

I. Number of Depositors.

'Thus, the average sum now standing to the credit of each depositor is about 35 francs. It will be seen that, relatively to the numbers, the largest success has been attained in the schools of the first class, the scholars in the ordinary juvenile schools being necessarily more amenable to influences of this kind than those of the second class, older and more thoughtful than those of the third, and with habits of extravagance which, if acquired at all, are less confirmed than those of the fourth. The work has been done without Government authority or pressure of any kind, but simply through the energetic initiative of one earnest man, aided by the sympathy of the teachers and local managers. The reports show that there is also a steady growth in the interest with which the parents regard the experiment. At first, the act of economy was mainly that of the child, who was induced to put by the halfpence he would otherwise have spent in fruit or sweetmeats. But besides this, children are often entrusted by their parents with small sums expressly for the purpose of being added to the store. And the general result, that in a simple town of moderate size, upwards of 10,000 children have opened separate accounts in the savings bank, and that nearly £15,000 are deposited in their names, is one which is full of encouragement to the thoughtful philanthropists who devised the plan, and which has already produced a very marked effect on the social and moral life of the working classes in Ghent. The experiment has created great interest throughout Belgium. In Antwerp, in Bruges, and in the rural districts, successful efforts have been made to secure the adoption of the same plan; and last year a new association for the special encouragement of saving has been formed, under distinguished auspices, with its head-quarters at Brussels, and designed to operate on all the communal and state schools of the country, in a systematic manner.'

INCIDENCE OF THE POOR LAW.

A correspondent writes:—'An aged woman, once a servant, whom I visit, who has by thrift provided for her old age by investing her savings in two cottages, lately had occasion to have two rooms repapered. The men employed neglecting the work, to the loss of her letting the rooms, she complained to their employer, who told her his inability to coerce them, adding that one of them, who appears to be a drinking man, could earn fifteen shillings a day. This poor woman, who has hardly more per week to live upon, pays poor rates, and is therefore compelled to contribute to the fund which the law gives the right to this drinking fellow to come upon for the subsistence of himself and family when his drinking and holiday-making career has run its course. Reform is assuredly needed.'

PROVIDENT DISPENSARIES.

On Saturday last a Conference, called by the Medical Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, was held at the Medical Society, Chandos Street, Cavendish Square, under the presidency of Mr. Timothy Holmes. The Committee, in issuing their circular to the Provident Dispensaries of the Metropolis, said that they were of opinion that it was at present very desirable that efforts should be made to strengthen and consolidate the Provident Dispensary movement throughout London; and that they believed that at such a conference the most important points in connection with the present position of the question might be fully discussed by specially experienced persons, and suggestions made which might subsequently be considered by the committees and members of the Provident Dispensaries.

There were present Sir Charles Trevelyan, K.C.B., Mr. A. H. Hill, Mr. Jabez Hogg, Captain Fortescue, of the Nursing Association, Dr. Joseph Rogers, Dr. Nankivell, Mr. George Brown, of the Islington and North London Provident Dispensaries, and others.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, said it would be as well to commence with mentioning the points for discussion. These were '1. What steps should be taken to increase the number of efficient Provident Dispensaries in London? 2. What should be the relations of the Provident Dispensaries to the Hospitals? 3. Is it possible to secure a correspondence between the different Provident Dispensaries in London, so that a member of a Provident Dispensary, when he removes to another district, can, without delay and without entrance fee, immediately obtain medical relief in the Provident Dispensary nearest his new residence?' Opinion upon the general subject, he said, was tolerably settled, and the attention of the meeting would be directed mainly to what had been done, and what could be done in regard to the establishment of Provident Dispensaries. These were questions of importance to our hospital system, and had been long under consideration. The discussion, in which Sir William Fergusson had taken a leading part, commenced some seven or eight years ago, and it commenced with the medical staffs of the hospitals. They then felt that, though the general administration of hospitals was satisfactory, the unsatisfactory features of the out-relief had been growing instead of diminishing. The faults in that system were not to be attributed to the staffs of the hospitals. The Out-patients Department had been thrown open to every person who might choose to apply, and the only limitation which had been placed upon the relief was the inconvenience of obtaining it owing to the overwhelming numbers who applied for it; for as the numbers applying were very great, it became necessary to keep the applicants a very long time, and this became the only check upon hospital out-relief. It was unnecessary to speak about the vices of the system, because they had been spoken of before, and so indubitably proved by Sir Charles Trevelyan, that no one doubted that the present system was bad, both medically and socially. The only thing remaining was to know how to limit the out-relief without injury to the poor, who were the legitimate objects of medical charity, and without hardship to the sick and diseased. As to the question of the social condition of the applicants for medical relief, it was easy to make inquiry into that matter, through the Charity Organisation Society, and to ascertain what were the earnings of the applicants, and by this means to limit the relief given to the really poor. But then there came the question of the medical reason for the relief of patients at hospitals; and the point which needed attention was that the case to be treated at the hospital should be one of a somewhat serious character. That point had been kept in the background. He thought that those who applied to the out-departments of hospitals—always excepting such cases as accidents and cases arising from circumstances of emergency—should be persons who had been previously to the Poor Law Dispensary, or a Provident Dispensary, or to a private practitioner; but these were points of detail which could be otherwise dealt with. Those who desired to see hospital authorities adopt principles which would give hope of life to the provident institutions would have to convince the governors of hospitals like those of St. Bartholomew's, Guy's, and St. Thomas's, of the necessity of limiting the out-relief, for no provident institutions could be set up while the present system remained. The free hospitals would stifle the provident dispensaries. Before, therefore, anything could be done, the governors of those free hospitals must be got to act in co-operation with the promoters of the Provident Dispensaries, and this would not be unless those governors were convinced that the work was necessary. He was there as a hospital surgeon. A large part of his life had been given to hospitals. Hence, naturally, he should be sorry to join in any movement which would limit the benefits derived from the great hospitals in London, or should appear to reflect upon them. They had done their duty, and had been pressed to do what they had done by the public; and in the steps to be taken the means must be found, while limiting the numbers which unnecessarily filled up the rooms of the hospital, to give the physicians and surgeons the cases from which were derived the materials for teaching. At present the physician and the surgeon could not attend to cases properly when he had to see rooms filled with patients. He warned the promoters of this movement that they would have to encounter many difficulties in their endeavour to change the present system; but he hoped that they would be able to persuade hospital governors that a change was necessary.

Mr. C. S. Loch read several letters.

The Hon. Secretary of the Manchester and Salford Provident Dispensaries Association wrote:—

'With reference to the first point on your Agenda, I am unable to say more than that, when it was decided here that a number of provident dispensaries should be established, the sum of £1,000 a year for three years was guaranteed by a few gentlemen, in order to defray the cost of establishing them and the loss on their working during that period. Seven dispensaries were then commenced. The above-named sum was found to be insufficient, and donations amounting to £1,000 were given, and a second guarantee fund of £200 a year for three years formed.

'With regard to your second point, you will find our mode of operation described in page 9 of the Report for 1875. This plan has worked exceedingly well.

'I do not think that the permanent success of a provident dispensary depends in any very great degree on the adoption of a system of rigid investigation by the neighbouring free hospitals or dispensaries. Those who may require immediate medical attendance may be driven in for a time, but unless the dispensary is conducted as I shall indicate, they will withdraw as soon as restored to health. This opinion is based upon the experience of all our dispensaries.

'It does not appear to us that provident dispensaries can become successful—that is, self-supporting—unless a large proportion of the members are healthy ones; unless the members continue to pay during health as well as during sickness. Our experience has taught us this very clearly, that the members will not do this unless they feel that it is to their interest to remain; and this feeling will not exist unless they know by experience that in their times of sickness they will be treated as well and as willingly as if they were private patients. The first condition of success, therefore, is not the co-operation of the medical charities, but the hearty co-operation of the medical staff.

'Given a dispensary in a suitable district (very poor people—hawkers, and people of uncertain employment—will not remain as members in time of health), the support of a medical staff whose numbers bear a strict proportion to the number of members; an efficient committee, with a zealous hon. secretary (who will devote at least one evening a week to the affairs of the dispensary); rigid economy as regards drugs; and a good collector, and it is only a work of time for the dispensary to become self-supporting. But without all these conditions success will be difficult, if not impossible.'

Dr. Shapcott, writing from Devonport, said:—

'The establishment of the Provident Dispensary in connection with the Royal Albert Hospital was caused by the fact of the resources of the hospital being gradually crippled from the large sum in proportion to the income which was spent in affording gratuitous out-patient relief.

'The fact that by the connection of the Provident Dispensary with this hospital, and the consequent inability of persons of the class who would apply for out-patient relief to obtain it without payment of the small subscription to the dispensary, having resulted not only in the removal of the burden on our funds, but enabled a payment, however small in proportion to the work done, to be made to the medical officers who have the care of the Provident Dispensary patients, I think shows that, at any rate in a town of this description (population, including East Stonehouse, about 65,000), the better plan is to affiliate the Provident Dispensary with any existing hospital, making it take the place of all other out-patient relief; as, should it be established independently, and the hospital still continue to afford such relief gratuitously, it could not possibly flourish, as persons would undoubtedly resort to the hospital for advice and medicine, instead of becoming members of the dispensary.

'How far these remarks will apply to Provident Dispensaries in London residents there will be able to form a much better opinion than I should.'

Dr. Lawson Tait wrote from Birmingham:—

'As to the relations which Provident Dispensaries ought to have to hospitals, I have no hesitation whatever in saying that they ought to take the place entirely of the present out-patient departments. As a rule the out-patient departments of our large hospitals are mere shams, the amount of investigation and care given in the average to each case being wholly inadequate; and under existing circumstances I do not see how this can be remedied. It is the natural outcome of the keen competition which exists between the various hospitals and the equally keen competition for hospital appointments when vacant. Let this work be distributed over a larger number of men in a fashion which will be remunerative, and the evils will at once cease. The provident dispensary will supply the machinery for this in all cases, save those which are fit subjects for State aid.

'The hospitals would then be confined to their legitimate work as the consulting institutions for the poor, and their officers would be able to give a scientific attention to a limited number of cases, which would serve materially to advance scientific medicine. At present, members of a hospital staff are obliged, during that part of their lives in which their enthusiasm and their powers are best fitted for original work, to exhaust themselves with the profitless routine of the out-patient room—a kind of drudgery which differs only in name from the labour of a parish practice, whilst it has the additional disadvantages that it is more irksome and is entirely gratuitous.

'Hospitals should therefore, in my opinion, be limited entirely to in-patient work; and if they are dependent on voluntary contributions, or in other ways charitable, they should admit all cases requiring special skill and appliances when the patients are unable to maintain themselves and pay for what is needed. This should be extended even to paupers; for though at present the rule which excludes persons in receipt of State relief from so many of our hospitals is a good one, if hospitals were conducted as they should be, it would be a hardship to exclude a pauper having a cataract or an ovarian tumour from the benefits of the highest obtainable skill.

Further, the members of the hospital staffs should be chosen exclusively from members of the profession who have taken some of the highest degrees, and who are not on the staff of the Provident Dispensaries. This I mention as offering a distinct remedy for a state of matters which exists in the provinces to a large extent, and forms a marked hindrance to the advance of the profession of medicine. We constantly find men holding hospital appointments in large towns who have only the most ordinary titles to practice, and who may be found called in to give a second opinion in one street, and attending club patients in the next. Hospital appointments under such circumstances are a bar to legitimate competition, and their holders stand in the way of that division of labour without which progress has never yet been made.'

Letters from Dr. Maunsell, Liverpool; Mr. J. Watts, Manchester; Dr. Russell and Dr. Black, Glasgow; Sir Rutherford Alcock, Mr. W. H. Alger, Mr. T. J. Fisher, and others, were reported or read in part.

Dr. Morton, of the Kilburn Provident Dispensary, wrote: 'I don't think there would be much practical difficulty in carrying out the plan suggested for discussion as No. 3. We have no entrance fee, but a member does not become free until the second monthly payment is made. I do not think the Committee would object to allow persons bringing evidence of having cleared the books of some sister institution to become free of ours at the first payment. Such persons we find make capital steady members, having already learned to appreciate the advantages of the system.'

Dr. Ford Anderson thought that the meeting should start with these two propositions as a basis: '1. That the out-patient departments of our large hospitals and free dispensaries, as they are at present constituted, are demoralising to the patients, and are unprofitable both to the patients and to the medical officers. 2. That in order to remedy these abuses there should be, on the one hand, a further development of the Poor Law Dispensary system in London, and, on the other, a large increase in the number of Provident Dispensaries.' The last, he said, was the chief remedy for the out-patient abuses which the meeting had met to consider. The two propositions he had mentioned had been laid down by every Association which had approached the question of Metropolitan medical relief since 1870, notably by the professional committees under the presidency of the late Sir Wm. Fergusson, and by the two conferences called by the Charity Organisation Society, one in 1871 and the other in April last, when Sir Charles Trevelyan read his complete paper on the subject of Metropolitan Medical Relief. Dr. Anderson reviewed the action taken last April, and stated that collaterally with these meetings and conferences active practical work had been going on in London and in the country, and so far as it had gone proved the wisdom of Sir William Gull's resolution. He then showed the progress of the Provident Dispensary system in Manchester, and the decrease of applicants at hospitals which investigated the circumstances of the applicants, and the vast increase at the same time at the Southern Hospital, where no investigation was made. He urged that to make inquiry respecting the condition of patients operative there must be Provident Dispensaries to which the patients unsuitable for gratuitous medical treatment could be referred, and on many other points he invited the practical suggestions of the delegates, in the hope that the conferences might inaugurate practical work.

Sir Charles Trevelyan said, the way to establish provident dispensaries as a national institution was to weed out abuses from the system. The great danger attending anything beneficial was, that the moment it became popular, a host of imitations followed. In this way sham dispensaries had been established in London to a considerable extent, and had placarded themselves as 'Provident Dispensaries,' and obtained the benefit of that name. These places, however, had no basis of mutual assurance; and Sir Charles read an account of an inquest upon a child who had been attended from one of these 'provident dispensaries,' the result of the inquest showing that the so-called 'provident dispensary' was a private speculation by unqualified persons, and that the child, if properly attended, would most probably have lived. The Coroner in the case said that the Provident Dispensary, when properly conducted, was a great boon to the poor, but in the hands of unqualified persons was a source of great danger. The fact that these mushroom dispensaries had sprung up in different parts of London was in itself evidence of the want—a real want—on the part of the population, and it was a remarkable fact that some of them were to be found in the midst of the populations surrounding the great free hospitals and free dispensaries. He took the pains to test this class of mushroom provident dispensaries by visiting them, and he asked them how they got their custom in the midst of so many free hospitals and institutions. The one answer was that the people could not bear the long waiting required at the free places, and that they would rather pay for immediate attendance than waste their time and aggravate their maladies by waiting in the out-patient departments of hospitals. Another sham 'provident' institution was that which existed merely as bait to attract the subscriptions of the charitable—another of the large class of eleemosynary institutions—and he mentioned one in the City whose programme, he said, was drawn up on the approved sensational plan, in order to tout for subscriptions, having, too, the most objectionable feature of 'governors' cards' in place of 'governors' letters.' The real provident system and the mendicant system could not go hand in hand, for where people had the choice of paying or of not paying, of course they would choose not to pay, and would go touting for governors' letters. The remedy for this state of things was to have a real Provident Dispensary system, each dispensary established under a strong committee, including medical officers—a committee representing the people themselves. A conference on the subject had been convened by the Hospital Saturday Fund, and one of the charges that had been made against the provident dispensary system was that the dispensaries established were not really 'provident,' as they were supported by charitable subscriptions. Considerable success had attended the establishment of the Provident Dispensaries in the great towns, and to carry on a successful propaganda of the principle in London, those who knew the necessity of this work must have the courage of their opinions. The work was now supported by the highest authorities, lay and medical, and would, he hoped, be carried to a successful issue.

Dr. Rogers spoke of the demoralising and pauperising effects of the present system of hospital out-relief, and narrated an instance in which, he said, a tradesman, with two houses at the West-end of London, and keeping a 'trap,' compelled his wife to take their sick child to the hospital, and to seek hospital assistance for herself in her confinements.

Mr. George Brown, of the Islington and North London Provident Dispensary, said he was sure that many persons got hospital relief who were able to pay. He raised the question whether provident dispensaries could pay their way on the subscriptions alone.

Mr. Pitman, of the Provident Surgical Appliance Society, Mr. A. H. Hill, Captain Fortescue, of the Nursing Association, Bloomsbury Square, Dr. Nankivell, Mr. Jabez Hogg, Dr. A. P. Stewart, and Mr. S. M. Caffyn, addressed the meeting; Dr. Nankivell describing the work done in different towns in successfully establishing provident dispensaries; Dr. A. P. Stewart urging that the evils of the present indiscriminate system should be brought before every hospital board at every quarterly court; and Mr. Caffyn pressing that to make the dispensary system a really 'provident' one, and acceptable to the working classes, it must be shorn of the honorary subscription system, and urging that the members of the large friendly and benefit societies should be invited to give their co-operation. Finally, the following resolution, moved by Dr. Nankivell, and seconded by Mr. Jabez Hogg, was adopted:—

'That a Committee be appointed to report upon the best means of giving effect to the views expressed at this meeting. That the Committee be composed as follows—

'1. Representatives of free hospitals and dispensaries, and other cognate institutions in the metropolis.

'2. Representatives of the Metropolitan Provident Dispensaries.

'3. The members of the Medical Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, and that Mr. Timothy Holmes be asked to act as Chairman of the Committee.'

A cordial vote of thanks to the Chairman concluded the proceedings.

The ‘CHARITY ORGANISATION REPORTER’ is published weekly during the Sittings of Council; on the second Thursday in each month throughout the year a Double Number is published.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. LOCH, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

NOTICES.

The next meeting of Council will be held on Monday, the 8th of October.

District Committees are informed that a man, respectable in appearance and giving the names of Chapman and Thompson, has been calling upon the Clergy in Paddington, and has obtained money in more than one instance. To excite sympathy he tells a story of distress and privation, and makes use of religious expressions and quotations.

BETHNAL GREEN.—Mr. J. F. Sapsford having resigned the Hon. Secretaryship, Mr. J. Barber has been elected in his place.

STEPNEY.—The Rev. S. A. Thompson Yates has been elected Chairman of this Committee, in the place of the Rev. H. F. H. Burchell-Herne, who has resigned.

CONVALESCENT CASES.—A letter for the admission of a suitable case into the Limpsfield Convalescent Home can probably be obtained for one of the Committees, on application to the Secretary, at the Central Office.*

Committees who, for want of funds available for suitable cases, are unable to secure their admission into convalescent homes are informed that a small balance of the grant of £25, sent for this purpose to the Council in July, can be had on application to the Secretary.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Council does not consider itself responsible for any of the opinions expressed by its Correspondents.]

THE STRICT ADMINISTRATION OF THE POOR LAW.

To the Editor of the 'Charity Organisation Reporter.'

SIR,—One point only in Dr. Daniel's letter, which appeared in your issue of the 28th July, seems to require some explanation from me. Dr. Daniel is not quite clear what is meant by pauperism being a moral evil, unless poverty is to be considered a crime. As I should be sorry to be supposed to have confounded pauperism with poverty, I shall be glad if you will allow me space to make my meaning clear.

A moral evil is one affecting character or arising from a defect in character, and when I applied the term to the pauper spirit (not to pauperism) I simply meant to say that it was something wrong in the character—e.g., a want of thrift and power of self-help—which had most to do with swelling our pauper roll. I do not, of course, mean to say that all who have to come upon the parish are in that position by their own fault—the case of orphans alone, without mentioning others, would be sufficient to negative such a proposition—but that the systematic dependence upon the rates of whole categories of our population does arise from causes the consequences of which they can in a great measure control. Sickness, slackness of work, and old age, which are generally the immediate causes of distress, are all sure to come at some time or another, and it is possible, by means of the principle of association and mutual help—through the agency of benefit clubs, provident dispensaries, Post Office Savings Banks, &c.—for all classes to make some preparation to meet these the inevitable contingencies of life. Those, therefore, who have been too much engrossed with the immediate wants of the present to make any effort of the kind, but have been content to allow themselves in times of adversity to become a burden to their neighbours, have surely done their duty neither to themselves nor to others, and it is no misnomer to call the temper which such carelessness indicates a moral evil. But if this be so, the remedy must also be a moral one. All that tends to raise the character, that helps people to a true idea of life, and trains them to the forethought necessary to meet its difficulties—all the agencies which are summed up in the word education—tend to reduce pauperism. Is the Poor Law, and more particularly the out-relief part of it, one of these agencies? Does it tend to raise the individual and stimulate his power of self-help? In answering this question we must look not only to those who are actually in receipt of the supposed benefits of out-relief, but to the whole class of those who hope some day to receive them. The question therefore is, What is the educational influence of this system on the ordinary man in full activity and strength? Is he to provide for sickness by joining a club or provident dispensary? There is no apparent reason for doing so; for if he is ill he will get relief from the parish at his own home, and how is his neighbour, who belongs to a club, better off? Is he to provide for old age? He asks why he should, for when past work he will get his half-crown from the parish at his own home. Is he to insure his life, so that his wife and family may not be left totally unprovided for? Well, that too is of doubtful utility, for the all-paternal parish will step in and look after all them at their own home. And so it goes on. So far from teaching the man forethought, the out-relief system is an elaborately devised arrangement for teaching him that he can do without it, and be apparently not much the worse off. Its educational influence is, therefore, unmitigatedly bad. It makes easy the path of the unthrift, and taxes the provident for the improvident.

One word in conclusion on the question, Who is to blame? for those who denounce the system of out-relief are often charged with what is termed 'being hard on the poor,' and setting up a standard of virtue too high for the mass of the people to attain to. Even if it is a utopian idea to imagine a state of things in which thrift was general, a system of relief which positively discourages it, and so fosters the distress it was meant to relieve, would stand condemned. It is certainly true that it is impossible to discuss this question at all without saying strongly to the working classes (and for that matter to all classes), that they are not thrifty enough, and that they cannot be better off until they form the habit of providing for the future; but when the educational influence of out-relief, as well as that of the mass of unreflecting charity, is taken into account, it cannot be said that the fault lies wholly at their door. The system, and those who support it, are doing the mischief and must share the blame. When a change in the right direction is made, we may still indeed see poverty, but the poverty which has been unprovided for, and which is a burden to others, the poverty, in fact, which we call pauperism, we shall see very much less of.

Yours, &c.,

JOHN R. HOLLOND.

August 28.

To the Editor of the 'Charity Organisation Reporter.'

SIR,—It is impossible to refute a sneer, and in answer to Dr. Daniels' remarks on my paper (read at the Liberal Social Union, and afterwards printed in the Charity Organisation Reporter) I have simply to repeat what I previously said, on mature reflection, in my paper, viz. 'That, in St. George's-in-the-East, where out-relief is virtually abolished for new cases, and where a saving of upwards of £3,000 a year has been effected in that department alone, not more, I estimate, than about £200 a year has been given in additional charity, through the Charity Organisation Committee, among our 50,000 very poor population. Yet either the relieving officers or the Guardians themselves send every exceptional case to the Charity Organisation Committee, and that Committee has never allowed, to my knowledge, a single approved case to go unrelieved or inefficiently relieved, whatever the cost. Its office is situated in the main thoroughfare of the district, and must be known to everybody.' My point, of course, is that a thorough sifting of applications for relief outside the Workhouse results in the discovery, which to the inexperienced may appear marvellous, that very few ought to be granted.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A. G. CROWDER.

HELPING BOTH SIDES IN WAR.

To the Editor of the 'Charity Organisation Reporter.'

SIR,—The plan of assisting the sick and wounded of still contending armies is just now undergoing a curious but interesting discussion, which may furnish the means of considering anew, by its light, how far the original idea of this assistance is, from any point of view, a right one.

Of course the motives which prompt such action are of the purest Christian benevolence, and are prompted by the kindest feelings of the human heart. They were extended towards all the sufferers without distinction in the late Franco-German war, and they succeeded in relieving some of its necessary horrors. Large sums of money were sent, and many of our most kind and skilful nurses and surgeons were freely helping both sides equally. Those whom we so assisted were our good friends the French and the Germans.

The next case of war was between different combatants, not equally our friends, nor perhaps equally deserving to be so, though, if the original feeling of humanity only were to govern us, they were equally entitled as sufferers to our sympathy and assistance.

They did not, however, get it, for England did not like the Turks, and would assist only the Servians. The important element was introduced of helping only those we liked.

The inconsistency of this was seen by some and was attempted to be rectified by the Duke of Sutherland and the Stafford House Committee, who sent clothes and blankets and medical aid to the suffering Turks. So the grand principle of charity or love became separated by the prism through which it saw its objects.

The present discussion as to whether or not it is right to help the Turks is a very curious outcome of this divergence. Some are saying, 'Do you think I would have subscribed money to help the Turks?' Others say, 'In suffering I know no sides.' Under these circumstances a national society would be impossible. The benevolent givers should consider this question afresh for themselves.

There is, however, besides this, another view which requires consideration, and that is, whether it is better to help both sides in war or only one side, or to keep out of it and help neither.

The new area of charitable action was invented during the late war between France and Germany, and so-called neutral nations then showed their pity by taking on themselves to assist largely in the duty of relieving the combatants of their sick and wounded. In the extent to which it was found impossible for us to carry it out, its immediate effect was to prevent the lessening of the number of effective fighting men, and to leave them free at once for continuing the fight and for killing and wounding another crop at the earliest possible moment. The greater advantage in this rapidity of movement would probably be on the side of the victorious army, and, if it could be carried out on a scale large enough for any occasion, it would enable the victorious general to push on with the greatest quickness, taking no care of sick or wounded, or of the hospital comforts or food. It has not been found possible as yet to act to this extent. But, even with our smaller operations, there were many occasions when it was found impossible to adjust the assistance with anything like fairness on both sides, and the intervention was really, in its effect, far from being neutral: the French had considerably the best of it. The work, however, was done by apprentices to the new trade; but, if it be decided that it is right in principle, it will be possible to organise it in future so as to cover a much larger portion of the whole ground equally on both sides, and in the most effective way.

Are we prepared for this, and to say that the original conception of the idea is right in principle? This may well be doubted, and even denied, with much show of argument. A true neutrality would leave the combatants alone to fight out their own battle, without helping either of them with anything, or in any way assisting them to continue the strife.

It will be seen at once that to help one army with its sick and wounded and not the other would not be proper in a neutral; how then is it right to help both sides? For neutrality means helping neither, and clearly not helping both. It becomes, on the contrary, rather a decided abetting of both, and anyone assisting in the same way at a prize fight in England would make himself an abettor in the eye of the law. It would be difficult to show why, if assistance be proper for the sick and wounded, it might not be extended to help the commissariat of an army, or to supply clothing to the ragged soldiers.

It was said that, by the improved hospital methods and comforts to which we largely contributed, about 60 per cent. of the earlier wounded in the late Franco-German war were enabled to return to their regiments. Is this what we subscribed our money for? And has it come to be the business of the neutral red cross knights to be bottle-holders to this extent to the savage combatants, helping them to their mutual slaughter, and to leave us to pay the butcher's bill? Add to this the very opposite principles of the combatants themselves, and on which they act during their bloody fight. They understand instinctively and quite truly how desirable it is to prevent any aid or comfort coming to the other. When Bazaine sent a flag of truce out of Metz to the Germans to ask for lint and medicines and a few doctors, the answer was a distinct refusal, on the ground that the want of these would help to make the fortress surrender the sooner. At Rouen the French would not allow the passage of medical stores and comforts to the Germans, but themselves took possession of the whole cargo, and applied it to their own purposes.

When Colonel Loyd-Lindsay had given his £20,000 to the Germans at Versailles, and wanted a pass to enable him to take a similar sum to the French, there was very considerable demur before he could get it through. Colonel Lindsay told us, in extolling the usefulness of the fund, that, had it not been for English charity, the sick in hospital would in some cases have actually starved, as no provision of food had been made for them. Our interference and well-meant help, therefore, were soon found to be bearing their own fruit by encouraging the combatants to leave all to us, while they went on to make another crop of miseries for us to feed and cure. And all this was done by charitable neutrals, and was called neutrality.

I hope our British givers will ponder these things, and consider whether they are not doing more harm than good by meddling between fighting men, especially when there is such a division of the principle of charity as that separate societies have to be got up by Philo-Turks and Philo-Russians to help the particular friends of each.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

SERMON AT ST. PAUL'S, HAMMERSMITH.

On Sunday evening, August 12, a sermon, from the text 'Cain said unto the Lord, Am I my brother's keeper?' was preached by the Rev. H. Wilson at the above church, in aid of the funds of the Fulham and Hammersmith Committee. In commencing his discourse Mr. Wilson said he did not intend to dwell on the circumstances under which those words were first spoken, as they were probably familiar to all; but rather to take them as a natural utterance of man's mind, which expressed a feeling which had been influential in the world's history, and one which was present, perhaps, in the hearts of those he was addressing. In the course of the sermon, the great selfishness of such a line of thought was dwelt upon, and the congregation were asked, What were the facts with which they had to deal? They were living in a country the richest in the world, and yet in which there was more pauperism than in any other. In the City of London alone, no statistics could show the misery and want there was at the present moment, the relief of which was no simple thing. It was not enough for those who were not themselves in want to be anxious to help their fellows who were, but they must find out how to do it wisely. The problem was a very difficult one, and those who were most earnest in their efforts to solve it best knew its difficulty. A mere desire to do right was not enough, nor generosity in giving wherever there seemed to be misery, as this would not unfrequently do more harm than good. Those who had earnestly taken up the problem how to help and raise those who have gone down in life's struggle must be aware how much harm is done by unwise efforts, by seeing the complicity of social life—the difficulties on all sides—so clearly, that—almost in despair—they were tempted to stand aside from the whole matter—to say, not so much in selfishness as in hopelessness, 'Am I my brother's keeper?' There were some, of course, who, full of charitable emotion, refused to recognise the difficulties, refused to see that there was responsibility in giving, as well as in withholding. Such persons would say that it was right to give alms indiscriminately, and quote the words of our Lord to support their opinions, 'Give to him that asketh of thee.' That was a weighty saying, but could not be made to support their views, unless taken in a literal sense; and it would not be right to take them in such sense any more than our Lord's saying that a man must hate his father and mother if he would be a Christian. Other words also might be quoted to prove this; for instance, 'If a man will not work neither let him eat.' Sentimental almsgiving was indiscriminate, and without inquiry might possibly, in a few instances, do good, but would undoubtedly do an immense amount of harm. Still, it was very little trouble, and gratified the giver, even if it injured the receiver. The old plan of giving alms at the gate of the monastery to all who asked for it was a simple one, and some might have an impression that if this sort of charity were universal, want would be at an end. But those who seriously tried to face the question saw that there was a responsibility in pauperising their neighbours. They had a far harder duty. Much difficulty was met with, and much discouragement experienced. There was therefore great need for untiring patience and courage. After some further observations to the same effect, the rev. gentleman said he had that night to place before them the claims of the Charity Organisation Society, and ask them to help it. A branch of the Society had been doing good work in the parish for some years past, and so should be considered as having special claims on them; but the Society was much cramped and hindered in its work by want of funds. Its claims had been met with indifference and coldness where other things might fairly have been expected. He would therefore ask them to assist the good work with money, but still more especially by interesting themselves in those objects and principles which the Society had been formed to carry out. He then touched on some of those principles, first saying that it was a rule of the Committees of the Society, when trying to relieve want, to aim at helping in some permanent way; in fact, to act as a physician would in dealing with a disease, not merely with its symptoms. And he proceeded to illustrate and describe at some length the mode of working of the Society. After alluding to the action of the Society with reference to Italian children, the rev. gentleman said that the main work of the Society was sometimes misunderstood. Its first and main object was not the giving of relief directly, but (as its name implied) organising existing charities. It was said, by those who knew, that there was already given, in England, more than enough to relieve existing want if it were all wisely applied, but there was so little system, and so much overlapping of different societies, and this showed the need of such a society as the one he was speaking of. It, indeed, gave relief liberally and wisely, as many poor persons in that very parish could testify with gratitude, but its first aim was to utilise the various charitable agencies already existing so far as they were available. It supplemented such in cases where they could not help, but this fact did not appear to be understood by some of those who had spoken of the Society. They were asked to help it in its local claims. It was working in their midst, and was in great need of funds. And there was yet a wider claim. The Society was the result of a growing feeling of responsibility in the minds of many. Two things should be kept in view in efforts to help others. One was, personal intercourse, and help and interest. At the end of the sermon a collection was made, which was, it is believed, satisfactory in its results. The church was full.

WORK AND PROGRESS IN THE EAST END.

In his annual report to the London Domestic Mission, Mr. C. L. Corkran, whose mission station is in Spicer Street, Spitalfields, and who has worked in the district for more than twenty-nine years, bears testimony to the 'social, educational, moral, and religious progress' of the district. 'Notwithstanding,' he says, 'all that has been spoken and written of late, and the alarm so widely expressed touching the spread of intemperance—and few know better than I do the evils wrought by that terrible vice—I am decidedly of opinion that drinking, as we popularly understand the term, rather than drunkenness, has increased of late years, owing in large measure to the greater commercial prosperity of the country, and the consequent better employment and higher wages of the people generally. I do not believe, for instance, that skilled artisans drink much more than they used to do in less prosperous times. The classes who chiefly carry drinking to excess are precisely those who have not had, in past years, the benefits of the improved elementary education now being so widely diffused; but I am not a little confident that in a few years' time, when the masses of children now under instruction issue forth to become citizens of the world, they will be less inclined than their parents to mere sensual indulgence, and more disposed, while better fitted, for enjoyments of a higher and purer kind. The facts, I am aware, would seem to point to an opposite conclusion. When a single public-house, one of the largest and most "prosperous" in Bethnal Green, sold not long since for nearly £21,000—its takings being, as advertised, £920 per month; and when it is borne in mind what a large number of such houses may be found in the district, my belief and expectation of increased sobriety would seem to be at once baseless and hopeless. But I meet even these formidable facts with another, namely, that the vast majority of the many families whose children have been trained in our schools, and have many of them since become parents, may be fairly ranked among the temperate; and I aver my belief that if these masses of the people who are addicted to ruinous drinking habits were raised to the same level of sobriety, there would be but little need for special restrictive legislation directed against intemperance. It will be thus seen that my hopes for improvement in this respect rest upon the slower, but ultimately surer, grounds of educational culture, embracing of course that which is moral and religious.'

He then refers to the 'progress made in the spirit and practice of self-help, as well as in the repression of mendicancy,' and after attributing it partly 'to the wiser views that prevail amongst the ministers and almoners of all denominations as to the mischief that ever results from merely impulsive almsgiving,' bears his testimony to the good work done by two of our Committees—Bethnal Green and Whitechapel—of both of which he himself is an active member.

With regard to over-crowding—'one festering cause of intemperance and social and moral degradation'—he says: 'The scarcity of anything like adequate house accommodation for a dense and ever-increasing population continues, so that the rents of small houses and single or double apartments have risen 25 or 30 per cent. in market value of late years. Such enhanced rents compel numerous families, often including six, seven, and eight individual members, to occupy a single room, in which all the needful usages of domestic life go on monotonously, in which birth and death take place alike. In such a room I lately saw a dying child, afflicted with an attack of bronchitis, which proved fatal, surrounded on every side with damp clothes hung up to dry.'

Mr. Corkran's lending library, from which 2,750 volumes were taken during the year, numbers over 180 subscribers, and 540 contributors deposited nearly £700 in his savings banks.

While yielding 'a somewhat reluctant assent' to the action of the Bethnal Green and Whitechapel Unions as regards outdoor relief, the withdrawal of which, 'always with the option of admission to the house, is often accompanied with circumstances of severe individual hardship and suffering,' Mr. Corkran comes to the conclusion that 'the benefits on the whole are so many and so desirable from a social and economical point of view, that I am fully satisfied the real poor will ultimately be the gainers by the reversal of the former system, when outdoor relief was the rule, as it is now in Hackney, for example, and not the exception, as in the instance just stated.'

EXTRACTS FROM A PAPER ON 'HOSPITAL OUT-PATIENT REFORM: ITS HELPERS, ITS HINDERERS, AND ITS PASSERS-BY.'

By H. NELSON HARDY, F.R.C.S. Ed.

Read in the Public Health Section of the British Medical Association, at the Annual Meeting, held at Manchester, August 9, 1877.

1. Helpers.—The subject of out-patient reform has now been prominently before the profession for the last seven years; it has been much discussed in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and elsewhere; it therefore seems suitable that we should, at the present meeting of the Association, define its position, sketch its past history, and point out its helpers and hinderers, as well as indicate those who take apparently no interest whatever in the matter. In doing so, it will be my earnest endeavour to 'nought extenuate, nor set down aught in malice.' Before proceeding further, it may be well, for the sake of those who have not closely followed the discussion of this subject in the press, to define what is meant and what is not meant by the demand for out-patient reform; and, 1. Negatively, it is not meant or desired to deprive one single necessitous person in England of the benefits of gratuitous medical attendance in time of sickness, but only to restrict the use of the out-patient departments to the really poor; 2. It is not meant to cast blame upon our medical brethren engaged in treating out-patients for doing only what is possible under the circumstances in which they are placed, but to denounce and seek to reform a system which renders it possible for any physician or surgeon to be required to see sixty or eighty patients per hour; 3. Where the abuse has become so great that crowds of sick and suffering persons are kept waiting for hours in stifling out-patient rooms, and are after all dismissed without even the hasty glance of any qualified medical man, carrying with them a bottle of medicine ordered by some second or third year's student, an urgent demand for the reform of such a system can hardly be wondered at. Having referred to the proceedings of the Committee of 1871 on out-patient departments, of the Hospital Out-patient Reform Association, and of the Medical Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, as likewise to the presentation of the memorial, signed by three hundred members of the profession, to the Committee of Council of the British Medical Association, the paper proceeded:—Amongst the individual helpers in the cause of out-patient reform besides those already alluded to (viz. Dr. Meadows, Mr. Timothy Holmes, Dr. Fairlie Clarke, Dr. Joseph Rogers, Dr. Ford Anderson, etc.), I may mention Mr. Erichsen, who, in his lectures on Hospitalism, points to the out-patient department as one of the sources of those septic influences which surround patients in our large hospitals, and render their recovery after operations so much more difficult than when treated at home or in small cottage hospitals; Sir Charles Trevelyan, whose wonderful energy and enthusiasm in the cause have brought him into contact or correspondence with nearly all the workers on the subject all over the kingdom; Mr. T. J. Phillips Jodrell, whose munificent donations to institutions connected with our profession have culminated in the establishment of the Jodrell Chair of Physiology in University College, London, and to whose efforts to obtain a reform of the out-patient department of St. George's Hospital I shall presently refer; Mr. Sampson Gamgee, whose excellent address on 'Our Medical Charities' at the annual meeting of the Birmingham and Midland Counties Branch you have all probably read with pleasure; Sir William Gull, Dr. Robert J. Lee, and last, but not least, the writer of those very striking letters in the British Medical Journal, which, recapitulating with great ability the most salient features in the whole discussion of the subject, are simply signed 'A Member of the Charity Organisation Society.' Amongst the periodicals and journals which have given their powerful support to the movement may be mentioned the Westminster and Edinburgh Reviews, the Quarterly, Macmillan's, and Fraser's Magazines, the Pall Mall Gazette, and our own Journal.

2. Hinderers.—In approaching the consideration of this part of the subject, I am forcibly reminded of the Adventures of Philip on his Way through the World, as narrated by Thackeray, in the course of which, as you will remember, poor Philip finds that the very person who of all others should have protected him from being robbed and deceived, namely, his own father, is the one who gambles away his inheritance and afterwards robs him of his earnings; for I have reluctantly arrived at the conclusion that the principal hinderers of all necessary reforms in the administration of our hospitals are to be found in the governing bodies, whether called Committees of Management, House Committees, or Boards of Governors, whose first aim ought naturally to be to render their institutions as efficient as possible. Having referred to the treatment of Dr. Mayo by the authorities of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, of Dr. Chapman by the Metropolitan Free Hospital, and of Mr. T. J. Phillips Jodrell by the governors of St. George's Hospital, Mr. Hardy proceeded:—The moral to be drawn from these examples and from the experience of the Hospital Out-patient Reform Association appears to me to be that, in future efforts for the reform of hospitals, we must endeavour to get beyond the immediate governing bodies to those from whom they receive their authority: in the case of the voluntary hospitals to the subscribers, and in the case of endowed hospitals, such as St. Bartholomew's and St. Thomas's, to the Corporation of London, and, if necessary, to Parliament. There seems, indeed, no reason that I can discover why charities which are being so misused should not all be placed by Parliament under the direct supervision of the Charity Commissioners.

3. Passers-by.—First among these I name those great medical bodies—the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons—which, standing at the head of their respective branches of the profession, might, if they would, exercise a most beneficial influence on questions such as this, but which have of late years apparently retreated from the honourable position they once occupied in the van of progress, and left to others the discussion and settlement of many questions of general interest to the profession. If anyone will take the trouble to look back over the old records, he will find that the College of Physicians, for instance, once took a deep interest in such questions as medical education, the prosecution of quacks, and even the outdoor treatment of the sick poor. In 1875 I contributed to Fraser's Magazine a paper containing a detailed account of the establishment of the first London dispensaries by the College on its own premises; and there can be very little doubt that the step thus taken by the College stimulated, of course indirectly and quite unintentionally, the development of out-patient departments at hospitals; for we find in Mr. (now Professor) Erasmus Wilson's History of the Middlesex Hospital that, at a quarterly council of the governors of that hospital, held on May 1, 1788, it was resolved that certain governors 'be a committee to take into consideration the several publications relative to the medical dispensaries, and do communicate with the governors of other hospitals whether any and what mode can be adopted by the hospital to prevent the increase of such dispensaries, which are very prejudicial to the regular established hospitals; and do consider whether all the relief held out for poor persons under the dispensary establishments cannot be administered by the hospitals as they now stand; and, if not, whether such improvements may not be made as shall fully answer all the purposes of charity proffered by the institution of such dispensaries, and be the means to encourage all persons inclined to subscribe to such charitable institutions to pay their money to a regular established hospital in preference to a dispensary.' The Committee thus appointed resolved:

'1st. That it may be an advantage to the Middlesex Hospital to extend its plan to a more general visitation of out-patients, and that it may be done by a small amendment of its rules and orders.

'2nd. That it is the opinion of this Committee that such a plan might be more effectually carried into execution if the governors of St. George's and the Westminster Hospitals should concur in the measure proposed.

'3rd. That the governors of this hospital, being governors of one or both these hospitals, be requested to procure a meeting of some of the governors from each of these hospitals to consider the proposition hereinbefore mentioned.' (History of Middlesex Hospital, pp. 50, 51. By Erasmus Wilson, F.R.S. London: John Churchill, 1845.)

The plot, as it stands in the pages of the historian of the hospital, is a very pretty one, and it is quite in accordance with what we find in the present day, that while thus ready to spend money freely on out-patients, with a view to possible subscriptions being diverted from the dispensaries, the governors of the hospital were so pinched in resources for their proper work of in-patient accommodation, that 'the number of patients applying for relief was greater than the house could accommodate,' and that the wards were described by the philanthropist Howard as 'close and dirty,' and the hospital as 'having, on the whole, an air of poverty.' The governors being fully alive to the injury to their subscription list which might follow from Mr. Howard's description of the condition of the hospital, resolved boldly to deny its truth, and invite another visit from that gentleman, and their historian naïvely adds that 'in anticipation of such a visit, conjoined, possibly, with the still small voice of conscience, great activity, in the shape of patching, mending, and washing prevailed, and quite sufficient was ordered to be done by the Board on that very day to prove that Mr. Howard's strictures were not without foundation.'

It would be interesting, had we time, to pursue this matter further, but my present purpose is rather with the College which established, than with hospitals which so jealously opposed the dispensaries, and I cite this instance of vigorous action to show that the present position of the College is widely different from what it once was, and that a true regard to its best traditions would lead to its interference now as actively as a century and a half ago. Among other passers by, I might refer to the Council of the Hospital Sunday Fund, which at first seemed disposed in its report to dwell very fully upon the abuses of out-patient relief in the metropolis, but which, having looked upon the subject and seen the evils of it, has apparently made up its mind to pass by on the other side; to the Medical Society of London, which two or three years ago refused to discuss some cases brought before it as having been badly treated at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on the grounds (as stated by its secretaries) that it could not allow itself to be made the medium of bringing accusations against the authorities of a recognised hospital; to the General Medical Council, whose interest in the matter, however, is confined to its bearing on medical education. But enough; it only remains to ask in which of these categories shall we place the great Association in connexion with which we are met to-day? And that is a question I prefer to leave to be answered by those who hear and read my words. There are, as a celebrated statesman used to say, three courses open to you: you may, if you like, shut your eyes to the facts which are constantly accumulating in your own Journal, and which go to prove that, owing to the improved condition of the working classes, the impossibility of seeing with advantage anything like the numbers that apply at out-patient departments, and the injustice which is being done alike to our profession and to the sick poor by the present system, great changes must shortly be made in that system; or you may even think it your duty to oppose all change, however strong the reasons given for proposing it; but I do not attempt to conceal my hope that you will take neither of these courses, but that the whole weight of the influence of our Association will be thrown into the scale in favour of this movement for reform, which has underlying it those eternal principles of justice, mercy, and truth that ensure its ultimate success.

ILLUSTRATIVE CASES RECENTLY DEALT WITH BY THE DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

CLASS I.—'DISMISSED.'

Sydenham.—W. M., late coachman to a medical man, applied for assistance at the office. His wife stated that her husband was employed as a porter at the Crystal Palace, and that his wages were only 12s. a week, with food, but on inquiry being made it was ascertained that, for the last three weeks, he had been receiving 18s. per week, and that he was previously employed as a painters' labourer at 30s. per week. The medical man, in whose service applicant had been for seven years, was obliged to discharge him on account of drunkenness. Applicant had also absconded, deserting his wife and children, who were obliged to enter the workhouse, but he was subsequently apprehended and imprisoned.

Newington.—T. H., sawdust dealer, aged 60, handed a subscription list to the magistrate at the Lambeth Police Court, asking him for a contribution towards the purchase of a donkey, his own having died. The magistrate sent the case to the Committee for investigation. On inquiry it appeared that applicant was a noted drunkard, and that his donkey was not dead, and when the inquiry officer called at his house, he was informed that applicant was out at work with his donkey and cart. It was found that some five weeks previously he had borrowed £2 from a tradesman, for the ostensible purpose of purchasing a donkey. This he did not do, and was drunk for some days afterwards. The person from whom he borrowed the money has sued him in the County Court. About seven names were attached to the subscription list, which was detained and, with a full report, sent to the magistrate, who has placed the matter in the hands of the police.

CLASS II.—RECOMMENDED.

Fulham.—S. A. H., a widow, aged 37, was referred to the office by a clergyman, and asked that some of her children, aged respectively 9, 8, 6, and 3 years, might be placed in a home. Her husband and one child had died from small-pox two months previously. Applicant owed no rent, had not pawned anything, and was not in receipt of any relief. Inquiries at addresses of employers and of other persons corroborated her statement, and showed her character to be good, while the school attendance of the children was regular and the home clean and tidy. With applicant's consent the Committee recommended the case to the Guardians, who took three of the children into the district schools.

G. S.—The wife, having five children aged respectively 15, 5, 3, and 2 years, was referred to the office by the School Board authorities, and applied for assistance to obtain for her eldest child, a cripple boy, an artificial foot, and for herself temporary assistance to enable her to take a wardrobe shop and commence the business. Her husband, a smith, aged 65, had injured his back six months previously, and could scarcely move, and the doctor had stated that he would never be able to resume hard work. The rent was five weeks in arrear, and articles had been pawned to the amount of £1. 4s. The characters of the family were found, upon thorough inquiry, to be very satisfactory, and a gentleman who knew the people well having agreed to give £2. 10s., the Committee added a grant of £5 from Mr. Peek's fund, and also obtained sufficient letters of the Surgical Aid Society to purchase a cork foot for the boy, who was thus enabled to obtain employment in a gentleman's house.

Chelsea.—A. B. and her sister applied for assistance to return to Canada. One of them was the widow of a pensioner of the 16th Foot, who died suddenly in August 1876. The two sisters then came to England, but very soon found that they could earn a better livelihood in Canada where they could obtain employment as domestic servants. After the usual inquiries by the agent they were visited several times by a member of the Committee, and it was found that for a very moderate sum they could be provided, by an emigration agent, with a passage and outfit. The Committee were unanimous in thinking that the applicants had no claim on the funds, inasmuch as they did not belong to Chelsea, and were very anxious to leave it; but, through the agency of the Committee, funds were procured from private sources and from two corresponding societies, and the sisters were enabled to start for Canada in the beginning of June last.

E. R. had very recently lost her husband, and had six children, of whom four were dependent on her, the two others being able to earn a little. The widow had had parish relief for a short time, and her late husband had belonged to a club from which she had obtained money to pay the expense of his funeral; but his illness and death had left her in debt to the landlord. The result of inquiries was satisfactory, but it being the principle of the Committee not to assist from their funds in the payment of arrears of rent, the sum of £3 was procured from a private source, and entrusted to a member of the Committee, who saw her landlady and effected a satisfactory arrangement of a good portion of her debts. The applicant is in good health, and in a fair way of supporting herself.

St. Marylebone.—A lady, once in opulent circumstances, had for many years been reduced, through no fault of her own, to extreme distress. Her old friends were continually asked for and repeatedly gave liberal assistance, but without concert, and without a prescribed aim in view. Wary, not of giving, but of giving in a fashion which seemed to result in no permanent benefit to the receiver, they referred the case to the Committee. It being decided, after inquiry and due consideration, that a permanent yearly allowance of not less than £40 was the only way to meet the requirements of the case, the names of those who had already evinced a kindly interest by giving liberally from time to time were ascertained, and an appeal was made to them, which has resulted in a promise, from a number of friends, of periodical contributions sufficient to make up the proposed annuity. This case is noteworthy as presenting the Society purely in its organising aspect, and as an example of the grateful alacrity shown by the charitable to utilise its machinery. One of the contributors expresses himself very warmly on this point.

Whitechapel.—M. G., a widow of 71, is afflicted with rheumatic gout; can hardly walk, but works at a sewing class. She is mainly supported by her daughter, aged 25, who earns about 10s. a week, and their characters are excellent. A pair of crutches was supplied by a member of the Committee who happened to have a pair at hand, and not in use. A warm letter of thanks was received from the woman, saying that the crutches suited her perfectly.

Newington.—M. N., a mangler, with three children, her husband being a labourer, earning 20s. a week, had purchased a second-hand mangle, and being an industrious woman, had got a good connection, but the mangle broke, and eventually became quite useless. She applied to the Committee for assistance to purchase a new one, and was granted a loan of £1. 15s. Two members of the Committee, almoners of the Society for the Relief of Distress, granted £1 each. The Committee recommended the case to the magistrates at the Lambeth Police-court, who granted her £3. Another mangle was bought, and the woman is now doing a good trade.

Lambeth.—Three unmarried sisters, from 49 to 53 years of age, lineal descendants of Daniel De Foe, had maintained themselves in respectability by teaching and needlework until the oldest of them became quite disabled by rheumatism. The case was brought to the notice of the Committee by a distant relative, who gave a little temporary aid, which was supplemented by the Committee. The investigation into their case showed the genuineness of their pedigree, and that they had striven to maintain themselves, and were unable to do so any longer. Letters were written to the newspapers on their behalf, with a view to raise sufficient funds to purchase small annuities for them. In consequence of the action of the Committee in the matter her Majesty has graciously conferred a pension of £7 5s. a year on each of them.

A railway porter, with a wife and two children, had received serious injury at his work. The Company gave him light employment, till his health quite broke down; the wife then supported the family by work at a sewing machine, but in consequence of illness it had to be pawned. As they were a very deserving striving couple, a loan of 30s. was granted to redeem the machine; the loan was repaid very punctually, and they went on very comfortably for some time. Another illness of the wife, and the man's utter inability for work, again brought them to distress, when 25s. was expended by the Committee in redeeming their bedding, and 10s. for maintenance, pending a reply to a letter to the Railway Company on their case, while 30s. was obtained from a friend, and eventually the man and his wife obtained an easy situation near Bath. £2 was then obtained for them from the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, to pay their expenses to Bath. The wife now writes that they are very comfortable, and her husband's health much improved.

Wandsworth.—A laundress, a widow, aged 40, with a son, aged 13, who was in St. George's Hospital, and with two other children attending school, applied for assistance. Applicant had been very ill, and a gentleman would lend her £5 on the recommendation of the Committee. It was found that she was sober, industrious, and honest, and had the promise of more work. On the recommendation of the Committee the loan of £5 was made to her, and, during her convalescence, 10s. a week was granted for two weeks. When her son came out of the hospital he was apprenticed, through the action of the Committee, with a premium of £10, obtained from local funds for such purposes.

CLASS III.—ASSISTED.

Strand.—H. L., a young man, aged 18, 'homeless,' applied at the offices for employment and assistance. He stated that he was born at Bangalore, of European parents, who had since died; that his father served in the Royal Artillery; that he left Bombay on the 26th March last in the Peninsular and Oriental steamship 'Mongolia,' working his passage, as waiter, to England, and arrived at the East and West India Docks in May, when he was discharged; that since then he had been wandering about the country, working at different farmhouses, and at night had sometimes taken shelter in workhouses. The lad was very deaf. He applied to the magistrate at Bow Street, and was sent to the office by him. The Committee, perceiving that applicant had had a fair education, and that he was quite destitute, gave him a suit of clothes, with changes of linen, got him a bath, and procured him food and lodgings, pending inquiry into the truth of his statement. The Secretary of the Peninsular and Oriental Company confirmed the lad's statement as to his coming home in the 'Mongolia,' and a Lieut.-Colonel of the Royal Artillery reported that a man of the same name as applicant enlisted in Her Majesty's Indian Military Forces in 1860, and volunteered for the British Army, joining the Royal Artillery in 1865; that he came home with the 17th Brigade, and died at Dover Castle in 1873. A member of the Committee took the lad on the 29th June to a large papier-maché manufacturer, and got him a situation as porter, the Committee paying all his expenses up to the day of drawing his full week's wages.

Shoreditch.—J. H., a widow, aged 37 years, of no occupation, and having seven children, was referred to the office by the relieving officer, in the hope that the Committee would be able to send her to her native place in Bedfordshire, where her mother and her late husband's mother were both living, and where she hoped to receive assistance from these relations, and to maintain her family by her old work of straw-plaiting. Her husband, an ostler, who had been in the same situation 13½ years, was killed five weeks previously by a fall from a loft, and at the date of application 6s. and his dinners, earned by the eldest child, were, with 4s. 6d. in out-relief, the total earnings of the family. The Committee, finding the case to be a very deserving one, granted £1, and the husband's employer also gave some assistance, so as to enable applicant to reach her destination with a pound or two in hand.

Bethnal Green.—The Committee had before them the case of a man with a wife and three children. The man was a painter, and dangerously ill, but the doctor gave hopes of his recovery, which he thought would take two months. The family were found to bear an excellent character, and the clergyman of the district was helping the case, and the Committee gave boots for the children and 10s. a week for nourishment. After a few weeks the man was sent to a convalescent home, and the 10s. a week was continued towards the maintenance of the wife and family. The man is now well and at work again.

In another case, a lad, aged 12 years, attending the National Schools, was pushed down in the street and broke his leg, which was afterwards amputated. The parents paid 25s. for a wooden leg. Then, when well and on crutches, he was again pushed down, and had an arm broken. The arm was set, but the wooden leg had now worn out, and the lad could not go to school. The schoolmaster and clergyman gave him a good character. The father was a weaver, with a wife and seven children, and was paying the school fees for five of the children. The Committee gave £1 and the clergyman 10s. for a new leg. The boy now goes to school regularly.

A man and his wife—the former recovering from a severe illness—had been assisted by the clergyman of the district, who had not, however, been able to do enough. The man had been to a convalescent home, but became very weak again after he had been home for a short time. Inquiry proved both husband and wife to be of good character, sober, and industrious, and 5s. per week was given by the Committee for two months, and nourishment was obtained from a private source. The man is now well; £2 was given to him for stock and tools, and he is at work.

Lambeth.—A late captain in the army, aged 44, left a widower with four children, had commuted his half-pay and, with the proceeds, entered into business, whereby he lost the whole of his property; he had had a little temporary employment as a clerk, but had been quite out of work for two months, and was in great distress. He wrote to the Central Office, and was referred to the Committee. Some temporary aid was granted while employment was sought for him, and eventually, in response to an advertisement inserted in the Times by the Committee, an appointment was obtained for him as assistant secretary to an asylum, at a salary commencing at £50 a year.

A widow, aged 37, with ten children—nine of them under 13 years of age and one aged 16, in service, and unable to help her mother—was earning 8s. a week at army clothing work and received from the guardians about 12s. weekly in money and food. The Committee granted £5, and, from private sources, obtained £8 to pay for the maintenance of one of the girls at an orphanage for one year. They will also endeavour to provide for her support there till she can be maintained free of cost. Communications were also opened with the Guardians, and, at the request of the Committee, two of the other children have been received into the district schools at Norwood. The woman's earnings have also been increased to 10s. a week.

Greenwich.—J. G., a carpenter, with wife and one child dependent upon him, was a long time unable to get work, and was compelled to pledge his tools to obtain food, and could not therefore accept an offer of regular employment which he had received. His application for a loan was acceded to; he redeemed his tools, went to work, and is repaying the loan.

W. C., a costermonger, with a wife and four children, could not, in consequence of the high prices of goods at the markets, purchase sufficient stock to enable him to get a living. He was granted a loan, is now doing well, and has nearly repaid the amount.

Wandsworth.—A bill-sticker and carrier, aged 50, with a wife of the same age, and having twelve children, the youngest of whom was 1½ years old, applied for a loan of £10 to buy a horse. The three eldest children were off his hands, the three next contributed to their own support, and others were at school. Investigation showed that applicant was a very steady, hard working, honest man; that his own earnings were about 35s. a week, and that he had to pay a good deal for horse hire. The Committee made him a loan of £8 on the security of one of his sons, another of whom advanced the remaining £2. The loan was being punctually repaid until, in consequence of an accident to his horse, he begged for an extension of time, which the Committee granted him.

Sydenham.—W. S., a signalman on the Mid-Kent Railway, with a wife and three children, applied for assistance in consequence of illness, and the Committee, finding he was a respectable man of good character, allowed him 8 lbs. of bread, 6 lbs. of meat, ¼ lb. of tea, and 1 lb. of sugar per week for four weeks. His wages when in work were 20s., and he receives 10s. per week when on the sick list, which sum was insufficient for the maintenance of his family.

WEALTHY PAUPERS.

Lambeth.—Dr. Lloyd, the medical officer of the infirmary, reported (says the Metropolitan) that on the 25th May, John Corfield, admitted to the infirmary on the 18th May, expired. This was the man upon whom was found bank-books showing £180 to his credit.—The Chairman stated that, after 8s. had been deducted for his maintenance, the remainder of the cash was given over to his widow.

Nottingham.—The Hon. Secretary of the Nottingham Charity Organisation Society writes to a local paper, saying, with reference to letters from other correspondents respecting two blind mendicants: 'The committee investigated this case about a year ago, and found that the two (brother and sister) were half-crazy, and deliberately preferred begging in the streets (the hurdy-gurdy is a recent investment) to living in decent lodgings at the expense of a kind-hearted relative, who, although not legally bound to do so, has several times provided for them. In the winter they generally go into the workhouse, and the annexed extract from a letter which we received from the master of one of the workhouses in which they had been will show that a beggar with a banking account is not an impossibility.'

'Part of the money they had was doubtless saved out of what their relation allowed them, but some must have been obtained by begging. This case shows that impulsive "charity" does harm, even when its recipients are in the pitiable condition of this poor blind man and his sister.'

'If well-meaning kindly people could only be shown the harm that is done by that self-indulgence which is mistaken for charity, they would be appalled at the evil they have worked.'

'Let almsgiving be done wisely and not from a mere passing sentiment, but with charity in its true sense of love (caritas), and there will be no need for a society like ours. There will be fewer impostors and less silent sufferings in unvisited streets; lower poor-rates; better wages; and more self-respect among the lower classes.'

The extract from the letter of the Workhouse Master is as follows:—

'Your information about John and Frances Smith is correct; they had a balance of upwards of £50 to their credit at the savings bank when they were first admitted here, since which time they have been twice discharged. On their last admission they had upwards of £27 in their possession, and after paying a portion of the cost of their maintenance, were discharged on the 30th May with upwards of £17 in their possession.'

A COUNTY MEDICAL CLUB.

An interesting experiment is about to be tried in Suffolk. It is due, in part, to the success of a similar experiment made some time ago at Eye, in that county. Within a year and a half 4,000 members joined the Eye Medical Club, almost without solicitation, the working men in that district appreciating the advantages held out to them by such an institution, and being independent enough to desire to provide medical aid for themselves through its means rather than rely on gratuitous advice or the parish doctor. It is now proposed to extend the operations of the Club to the whole of Suffolk. The benefits are restricted to persons 'whose earnings do not exceed 20s. a week, or maid-servants whose wages do not exceed £8 a year'; and this restriction marks the Club as one not for mechanics, most of whom would earn higher wages, but mainly for agricultural labourers. The payment for a man or woman is 5s. a year; for a man and his wife, 9s.; and for each child, 1s. with a maximum payment of 5s. for children, no matter how large the family. A member of any Benefit Club may claim an abatement of 4s. from these rates. Women in their confinements will be attended for 10s.; the remaining fees payable to a medical man being supplemented by the honorary fund. One of the rules allows any member a choice of doctors, living within a specified distance, who have agreed to work with the Club, and we learn that most of the principal doctors in the county have consented to the scale of fees embodied in the rules and certified by the Registrar. The club is to be managed by stewards chosen in each parish to receive the payments of members; and these stewards will communicate, through a secretary appointed in every Union district, with the central organisation at Ipswich. Small meetings will be held in the towns and villages throughout the county to explain the rules. These rules and the rates of membership have been so framed that the Club will be self-supporting except as to cost of management, surgical provision for accidents, and extra payments for confinements. Thus honorary members are necessary; but with a wide field for appeal and an excellent object in view, this should present no great difficulty. At the request of the Provisional Committee that has been formed, Sir Edward Kerrison has drawn up a statement in which he thus explains the work it is proposed to do:—

'The object of this Club is to enable benefit members to provide themselves and their families with medical attendance and medicine during sickness. Benefit clubs provide medical attendance for men only, but it is well known that women and children are more liable to illness than men. This Club is intended to remedy this omission, and not in any way to interfere with established benefit societies. The first stepping-stone to pauperism is an application for the doctor. It is now not so often granted by Boards of Guardians as it used to be, but when it is granted, in nine cases out of ten, meat and porter or wine are ordered by the medical man, and the rates are burdened not only with the ordinary maintenance of the families, but with the extras which the doctor considers right to order, and thus one family after another become paupers. It is not to be wondered at that an honest labouring man should seek to obtain the services of a doctor free of cost, when his wages will not enable him to pay a doctor's bill. It can only be by numbers collected together in a club of this description that the charges made by medical men can be brought within the means of the people. It is not an unusual thing for operations or fractures to cost from three to five guineas, a sum which no poor man is able to pay. By belonging to this Club, such payments will be avoided, and a man can look with certainty to the fact, that however large his family, all ordinary doctor's expenses, except for confinements, will never exceed 14s. a year.'

This Medical Club, when started, will be the first county club of the kind in existence, and its working in the almost purely agricultural districts of Suffolk will be watched with interest. Too many families of the labourers in rural districts in the Eastern Counties, as elsewhere in the South of England, are disposed to accept Poor Law relief, especially when it takes the form of medical aid, as a matter of course, without feeling that they are sacrificing much independence or that much effort is required from them to help themselves. One of the happiest results of this Club, if it succeeds, will be the healthier feeling which it will arouse among this class, and the strong probability that they will gradually be stimulated by the example of others in the same condition of life to pay their own doctors. The Labourers' Union delegates, who pride themselves upon the manly independence which their association calls forth, ought in consistency to urge their members to join the new Club, but in any case its effect in encouraging self-help and directly and indirectly in diminishing pauperism may be looked to hopefully.—'The Times' of September 3.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES.—No. X.

ALMSGIVING.—Give no alms to vicious persons, if such alms will support their sin, as if they will continue in idleness; 'if they will not work, neither let them eat' (2 Thess. iii. 10); or if they will spend it in drunkenness, or wantonness, such persons, when they are reduced to very great want, must be relieved in such proportions as may not relieve their dying lust, but may refresh their faint or dying bodies.—JEREMY TAYLOR'S Rules and Exercises of Holy Living, 'Of Alms,' par. 9.

The best objects of charity are poor housekeepers that labour hard, and are burdened with many children; or gentlemen fallen into sad poverty, especially if by innocent misfortune (and if their crimes brought them into it, yet they are to be relieved according to the former rule); persecuted persons, widows, and fatherless children, putting them to honest trades or schools of learning. And search into the needs of numerous and meaner families, for there are many persons that have nothing left them but misery and modesty; and towards such we must add two circumstances of charity: 1. To enquire them out; 2. To convey our relief unto them so as we do not make them ashamed.—JEREMY TAYLOR'S Holy Living, 'Rules for Giving Alms,' 10.

THE ZETLAND ORPHANAGE.—The Countess of Zetland has established, at Saltburn-by-the-Sea, a Home for Protestant Female Orphans, between the ages of four and fourteen, who have lost both parents. The prospectus states that 'no child is to be under four or above the age of six at the time of admission. Each child must be provided with two complete suits of clothing, and a payment of one pound each quarter will be required towards their maintenance. The expense of the journey to and from the orphanage must be paid by the person who sends the child. A copy of the baptismal certificate will be required, and also a doctor's certificate of general good health, in every case. The orphans will be taught to read and write, and trained to do useful work; and, if possible, employment will be procured for them when they reach the age of fourteen, after which they cannot be retained in the orphanage. The number of children will not exceed ten. All letters and applications must be addressed to "The Countess of Zetland, Aske, Richmond, Yorkshire."'

The 'CHARITY ORGANISATION REPORTER' is published weekly during the Sittings of Council; on the second Thursday in each month throughout the year a Double Number is published.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. LOCH, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Minutes of the Administrative Committee during the vacation were read.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending September 29 the receipts had been £179. 7s. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances* of the two funds on that day had been £223. 14s. 6d., and £31. 0s. 9d. respectively, £18. 12s. 5d. of the latter sum being reserved to pay expenditure on School Board cases only, and £1 for Convalescent cases.

GRANTS.—That the following grants had been made during August and September :—Fulham, £20; North St. Pancras, £15; Islington, £25; Holborn, £20; Shoreditch, £40; Bethnal Green, £40; Whitechapel, £20; Stepney, £30; St. Saviour's, £30; Newington, £20; Lambeth, £10.

[The following are the total amounts granted to these Committees during the year ending September 30, 1877 :—Fulham, £130; North St. Pancras, £55; Islington, £130; Holborn, £160; Shoreditch, £130; Bethnal Green, £205; Whitechapel, £134; Stepney, £233; St. Saviour's, £197; Islington, £160; and Lambeth, £135.]

ANNUAL REPORTS OF DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

Major Fitz-Roy asked the following question :—

Should copies of a Committee's Annual Report be sent to strangers living out of the district?

In reply, several members of the Council advocated copies being thus sent, in order that the fullest publicity should be given to the proceedings of the Society.

INCREASE OF VAGRANCY.

The Rev. H. I. Cummins informed the Council that the number of tramps asking for bread had largely increased in the City, and asked if the increase had been observed in other districts.

Rear-Admiral Gardner said the same thing was observable at Eltham.

Mr. Galabin believed that in Camberwell they formerly gave away a great deal of bread, but some time ago they had referred all applicants to the Poor Law, which had materially diminished the number.

Mr. Edgcombe said that there had been a large increase in the number of tramps at Kensington during the past week.

Mr. A. H. Hill said that the experience of the Strand Committee was analogous to that of the Kensington Committee.

The Organising Secretary mentioned that in Fulham, when a great increase of tramps took place, the Agent made a practice of taking down the statement of every fourth or fifth applicant on an application form, at the same time informing the applicant that if his statements proved false he would be prosecuted. This had the effect of largely diminishing the number.

The Council then adjourned.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

WHITECHAPEL.—The Clergy and Charity Organisation.—The Rev. S. A. Barnett, Vicar of St. Jude's, Whitechapel, in his pastoral address and report for the year 1876-7, in dealing with the subject of Poor Relief, says:—"The amount spent has been greater than usual, but does not represent greater distress. I was entrusted with £105 for the use of the poor, and I have therefore felt called on to assist cases which have been brought under my notice through the agency of the Charity Organisation Society. Such cases have been those of people whose characters or circumstances have been such, that a gift has been both a permanent benefit to themselves and to the community. A large sum, too, has been spent in assisting those young girls of whose condition I told you last year. Forty-eight have been taken from amid the most degrading surroundings, and placed in homes or families. Most of those who have been so taken are doing well."

"The plan of assisting the able-bodied women to leave the workhouse has been carried on by Mrs. Barnett and some ladies associated with her. Ninety have been seen, fifty-nine have been placed out, of whom twenty-seven are known to be doing well. The result is, I think, very satisfactory; the women are those who, perhaps of all in the country, have had fewest chances of learning to love the right. Brought up in the streets, with no education beyond that picked up in chance attendance at some ragged school, surrounded by every bad influence, they soon begin to lead careless, sometimes vicious lives, and periodically drift into the workhouses. The time has been well given which has resulted in giving to some a start which they have followed up by better lives. To fully describe what is being done would lead me too far."

"The system of relief in our parish has been carried on with unbroken regularity. As it becomes known that applicants are referred to the Charity Organisation Society, 194 Commercial Road, and that only those get relief whose characters and circumstances are such as give fair hope that such relief will be a permanent benefit, the number of those who make a living by seeking charity decreases. It is a cause for rejoicing that the relief of poverty is gaining such attention; careless gifts have been a source both of suffering and of sin. If, as some think, we are to have a hard winter this year, I hope that many of you will assist us, not only as visitors, but as advisers as to the best means of helping without pauperising. The Charity Organisation Society Committee meets weekly, on Wednesday, at 3 p.m."

"The Society for Relief of Distress has appointed an almoner for this district, Mr. Hulton; he has been most ready in visiting those whom it has been thought wise to assist in their sickness or difficulties. The appointment will be an additional strength if a time of pressure is at hand."

PROVINCIAL.

MANCHESTER.—Boarding Out, Chorlton Union.—The children boarded out within the union are under the supervision of a Visiting Committee, consisting of eight ladies and two gentlemen, one formerly a member of the Board of Guardians. They are all visited monthly, when the allowances are paid, by a special officer of the Board.

The Visiting Committee* continue their supervision of the children after their term of dependence upon the Guardians has ceased: knowing that the most critical and difficult period of the children's life commences when a feeling of self-importance, as bread-winners, has arisen in their minds, in a greater or less degree, and with it a desire for more independence; requiring more tact and judgment on the part of the foster-parents in their management, and affording frequent occasions to the visitors for the exercise of kindly influence both with the children and the foster-parents.

The Guardians have placed in private homes 107 children, chiefly girls. Of these children, 41 remain at the cost of the Union; 37 leaving at the age of 13, have either gone to service in situations found by their foster-parents, or else continue to live with their foster-parents while learning a trade, taking their share in the family work and interests, and remaining, in all respects, on the footing of adopted children. There have been returned to the workhouse 12, viz., one incurably diseased, since dead; three owing to defects in the homes and not again boarded out; and eight for persistent misconduct. Two absconded, of whom one returned to the workhouse, and one stayed with relations. There were applied for or sent to relations, 8. Sent to orphanages, at request of friends, 4. Found unmanageable in their homes, 3. Total, 107.—Fourth Report on Boarding-out, by Miss Preusser, Lady President of the Boarding-out Committee of Windermere and Troutbeck.

Southampton.†—We have received the following returns for the year ending September 30, 1877, from the Southampton Charity Organisation Society. Under Class I., dismissed or unfavourably reported on, is a total of 131 cases: 24 not requiring relief; 67 undeserving; 40 suitable for the Poor Law, or otherwise ineligible. Under Class II., 9 have been recommended to the Guardians; 26 to institutions or local agencies; 7 to private persons; and the class total is 42. Under Class III., 5 have been assisted by grants to the amount of £3. 8s. 4d., and 52 by loans to the amount of £133. 7s. 1d.; 43 have been assisted by employment; 5 by letters to hospitals, &c. The total of this class is 105. The grand total is 308. The remaining figures in the return are—10 inquiries for other societies, 20 vagrants dealt with, and 97 reports sent out.

THE POOR LAW IN HOLLAND.‡

To the Editor of the 'Charity Organisation Reporter.'

MY DEAR SIR,—A few remarks regarding the Poor-law in Holland may be found interesting to your readers.

The Dutch Poor-law is founded on the principle that the relief of the poor is the business of the religious bodies of the various denominations recognised by the Government, and also of private charities, and the public authorities only interfere when all other sources of relief have failed, in order to prevent the pauper starving or falling into the criminal class.

Begging is forbidden by law, and beggars are arrested and committed to certain establishments known as the Beggar-colonies.

The Poor-law divides paupers into three classes (leaving out those supported by private charities)—(a) those who obtain relief from the churches;

* The Committee also take the supervision of a large number of the children placed in service directly from the workhouse; considering that, at once, untrained as they are, and expected by their mistresses to be capable of service equivalent to the wages paid, they stand in peculiar need of kindly visits to themselves and their mistresses from judicious visitors.

† Reporter, No. 202, p. 15.

‡ Reporter 224, p. 122.

(b) those who are supported by the official authorities; (c) professional beggars.

As to the first: There is no Established Church in Holland, but certain denominations receive grants from the Government, and these are each supposed to maintain their own poor. This is done by the maintenance by each religious body of asylums for the aged, by grants of food, money, clothes, or fuel, and also by cottages in which deserving poor are allowed to live free of rent.

As to the second class: The municipal or public authorities of each town or village are only permitted to give relief to a poor person after ascertaining that neither the religious body to which he may belong or any private charity can or will help him; and if after relief has been granted it is found that relief from any private source can be obtained, the official aid ceases.

The (what we should call parochial) relief is entirely outdoor relief, and consists sometimes of fuel, clothes, food and money, but more often the pauper is boarded with some person in his own rank of life, a sufficient sum of money being paid for his support.

With regard to the third class, 'beggars': Any person found begging is committed by a magistrate to a fortnight's imprisonment, and in case of a second conviction is sent to one of the large beggar-colonies, where they are employed in field work. They are retained in these establishments until they can prove to the satisfaction of the authorities that they can earn their own livelihood, when they are released.

The original Poor-law of 1834 held each parish responsible for all paupers born in it, wherever they might be living at the time of their becoming paupers; but this law was so far amended in 1870, that the parish in which a poor person resides has to care for him.

I will forward to the Library a copy of the Poor-law itself, should it not possess one already.

And believe me, my dear Sir, yours respectfully,

ED. F. H. FORTESCUE.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of September 1877 was 36,648, and 40,045 received outdoor relief, making a total of 76,693. This was an increase of 118 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 914, 4,946, and 19,564 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 661. This was an increase of 109 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and a decrease of 114 on the corresponding day of last year.

THRIFT IN BOYHOOD.—The following is one of a series of notes sent by Bulwer Lytton to Laman Blanchard, when the latter was thinking of writing a book on the 'Boyhood of Eminent Men':—

'The boyhood of distinguished lawyers interests a large class. The habit of thrift generally characterises it. Show the use of early habits of economy. The juster virtues are incompatible with a disregard to money. Men called great have often been spendthrifts in their youth—good men rarely. Early habits of extravagance and debt made Caesar the disgrace of the Roman Republic. The wasteful Alcibiades ruined Athens. Those who save and make countries are usually saving and thrifty in their own personal habits—Washington, Peter the Great, Henry VII., Frederick the Great, Aristides, Elizabeth. Necessity of teaching boys what money purchases. They can't know their duties, unless they know the connection of duty with arithmetic.'—Memoir in the Poetical Works of Laman Blanchard, p. 72.

NEW YORK STATE CHARITIES AID ASSOCIATION.
REPORT FOR 1876.

Our readers' attention was called last year (vide Reporter No. 186) to this most useful association, and the issue of the fifth annual report enables us to give further details of its work. The Association was formed in 1872, 'to promote an active public interest in the New York State Institutions of Public Charities, with a view to the physical, mental, and moral improvement of their pauper inmates'; and 'to make the present pauper system more efficient, and to bring about such reforms in it as may be in accordance with the most enlightened views of Christianity, science, and philanthropy.' The Association reports every year to the New York State Board of Charities. It has six Standing Committees: on children, adult able-bodied paupers, hospitals, outdoor relief, library, and finance respectively. The Executive Committee provides 'for the visitation by its members, from time to time, of the institutions of public charities throughout the State.' Visiting Committees are accordingly appointed, who make monthly and annual reports. A couple of extracts from these reports will show their outspokenness: 'The corps of nurses is too small; there are but two physicians, one of whom is seldom met with in the Asylum, and the matron rarely does anything for the comfort of the patients.' 'Two trained nurses from Charity Hospital were in attendance for several months, but the matron made their positions so unpleasant that they were obliged to leave the hospital.'

A very striking testimony to the value of woman's work and judgment is given in the fact that the President, two Vice-Presidents, Secretary, Corresponding Secretary, and Associate Secretary for 1877-8 are of the female sex. Several of the Standing and Visiting Committees are also presided over by ladies, or have lady-secretaries.

Before noticing the reports of some of the Standing Committees it will be well to quote a most interesting extract, in which the Association, after calling attention to the progress made by the County Visiting Committees, 'notwithstanding many discouragements,' and to the 'mutual confidence and support' which exists between it and its branches, says:—'Keeping this fact in mind, we would call your attention, for the first time, to a rather exceptional feature in the organisation of our Association. This is an attempt to meet a difficulty which has long been acknowledged by philanthropists of America and of Europe. The problem has been how to bring the best thought of the day, the results arrived at by men of science, political economists, students of pauperism, into practical application, through those who have constant personal intercourse with the poor, and who, from the want of such knowledge, have often innocently been the means of increasing instead of diminishing pauperism. And not less do the students of social science need the assistance of those who are familiar with the characters and daily lives of the poor, gaining from them the information upon which to direct their thought and to base their theories, thus preventing these theories from becoming visionary and keeping them within the bounds of practical application. There should be no gap, no separation, between these two sets of earnest workers. Both are striving for the same objects, the alleviation of suffering and the diminution of pauperism; neither can work with the same efficiency alone; the thought and experience of each are needed by the other. We have attempted in planning our work to bridge over this gap, and to bring thinkers and doers together. The entire framework of our Constitution rests upon the recognition of this great need of uniting theory and practice; the best thought with the best application of it; of bringing the study into the poorhouse, the hospital, the homes of the poor; of bringing the sadness and suffering of poorhouse and hospital, the trials and temptations, the patient endurance of the poor into the study. Our Visiting Committees help our Standing Committees by reporting their experiences and difficulties, and our Standing Committees help our Visiting Committees by trying to devise measures by which those difficulties can be overcome; sometimes by bringing to bear upon them the latest and best scientific information obtainable from experts of this or other countries, sometimes by suggesting a radical change of system, but always keeping in view the practical working of the proposed remedy, and basing it upon the experience and needs of our Visitors. The practical value of the plan, as it has quietly developed itself year after year, for the past five years, is now beyond question, and it can no longer be regarded as an experiment.'

The first Standing Committee is that on children. It has to 'inform itself of the number, present condition, plan of education, and ultimate disposition of the children in the reformatories of this State, and in the State Institutions of Public Charities. . . . to urge upon the community the very great importance of enforcing such enlightened measures in the care and training of these children as may tend to effectually destroy hereditary pauperism in this State, and to best enable them to become useful citizens and good men and women.' Its report is principally taken up with a review of the results of a law passed in April 1875, by which all healthy children over the age of three were removed from the county poorhouse. 'To let a child,' the Committee say, 'grow up in a poor-house is equivalent to training him in the way he should not go, and the passage of the law abolishing the old system was unquestionably a great and much-needed reform.' 'It was soon noticed,' they add, 'as one of the good results of the new law, that parents became less anxious to give up their children when they found that the State had ceased to keep boarding-houses for youthful paupers. Under the old system it was common for drunken and shiftless people to put their children for the winter into a poor house, taking them out in summer to lead a life of vagabondage, until the cold drove them into the hospitable leisure of the poor-house again, there to associate with vagrants of all types and ages, and to reach the level of the lowest as surely as water running downhill. There was naturally a great outcry among this class of parents when they found that if, for instance, they sent a child to the familiar shelter of "the Island," it was transferred to some private institution with fixed rules and a reformatory system. This was so little what they wanted that in many cases they resolved to spite the State by keeping their children at home.' The number of children accordingly dropped from 1,081 in 1875 to 477 in 1876. In some counties the children are temporarily boarded with respectable families, and the Committee express their conviction 'that, except in the case of juvenile criminals, any decent family home is better than any institution, however good of its kind'; and with regard to the supervision of the children, they quote a statement of what has been done in Michigan, which they well describe as 'strong testimony to the value of a system of unpaid yet official labour given by responsible men and women.' The statement is well worth quoting here. 'In the provision made by the State (Michigan) regarding vagrant, neglected, and dependent children, through the State Public School, and for criminal children through the Reform School, it has followed the old idea of institutional life. But by far the wisest, most economical, natural, and humane of all its endeavours in this direction is the work being done by the county agents of the State Board of Charities, under the law of 1873 and 1875. The duties of the county agents are to investigate the case of every child arrested for crime, and to advise with the magistrate as to the disposition to be made of it; to visit all children adopted or indentured from the Public or Reform School; to procure homes for children, and generally to keep watch and ward over these waifs who seem to be deserted by everyone but the State. They have attended to 252 cases of arrest for crime, 224 boys and 28 girls, that were disposed of as follows: 182 were discharged under suspended sentence and returned to parents or guardians; 51 were sent to the Reform School, 11 were sent to the House of Correction, and 2 were fined. Of the 182 discharged 12 were sent to the State Public School; 6 to poor-houses, and homes were found for 6. The children for whom homes were found from the State Public School, 117 in number, have all been visited. The total expense of this work up to September 30, 1876, was $474.45. In addition to these formal duties required by law they have been of incalculable service in preventing crime, preserving peace in families, restraining cruelty, and in many other ways. If the work of these agents was to be estimated simply by dollars and cents, the amount of money saved the State by keeping boys out of institutions would be found to be very large. . . . The position is not an office, pays no salary except expenses, and can only be filled by those who love the work, and do it because they love it.'

The report of the Committee on Adult Able-bodied Paupers refers principally to the subject of vagrancy, and to the preparation of a Bill 'to provide for the custody and reformatory treatment of vagrants,' under which workhouses would be established, that should in a manner be self-supporting and include a reformatory treatment. To these workhouses vagrants would be sentenced, instead of as heretofore to the jail or poorhouse, for periods ranging from ninety days to six months on the first conviction, and from six months to a year on subsequent convictions. This, it is considered, would be 'a great improvement upon the present law, under which the maximum sentence to the county jail for vagrancy is sixty days, and commitments are frequently made for ten days, or even less. By these short sentences the offenders simply become accustomed to jail life, and cease to regard it as a punishment. It is thought that the fear of a commitment for even ninety days will act as a deterrent upon some persons, while the longer terms will give sufficient time to influence favourably some of the least hardened, and to teach the ignorant some means of gaining a livelihood. There is no question that long terms of confinement are essential in any system intended to reform those subjected to its influence. Persons whose habits of mind and body are opposed to much steady labour can never be improved except by enforced discipline continued long enough to compel them to acquire new habits; short sentences are worse than useless in such cases.'

The policy indicated here is what Mr. Doyle calls 'the policy of repression,' and we would venture to call the Committee's attention to two books, the one a Blue Book on 'Poor Laws in Foreign Countries,' the other entitled 'Poor Relief in different parts of Europe,' both of which form a record of the failure of that policy. As Captain Amyatt Brown, in his pamphlet 'On the Suppression of Vagrancy and Indiscriminate Almsgiving,' says: 'Besides the vagrant there is another party in the transaction who is more to blame than the vagrant himself, and that is the charitable British public,' and he adds that 'any scheme which deals solely with the former, and ignores the latter, will as certainly fail in producing any permanent effect as all such schemes have hitherto failed.' Captain Brown's pamphlet is the history of a success, and we commend it to the notice of the Committee.

The report of the Out-door Relief Committee contains a very interesting account of the breaking-up of the 'revolver' or 'rounder' system in the city of New York. It was discovered that vagrants 'begged during the day and slept at night in the different police station-houses of the city, taking these in turn.' These station-houses were visited by some members of the Committee, whose report contained such startling information that a reform was at once demanded by the public, and an order was soon after issued 'closing the station-houses to the "revolvers" and ordering their arrest.' One or two extracts from the report will show how much need there was for a radical change, and will make one wonder how a system that had been condemned by the Board of Surgeons attached to the police department in 1867, could have been so long tolerated. 'At the Sixth Precinct, No. 9 Franklin Street, in a room 15 by 25 feet, were 45 men, and often the number ran as high as 60. The impression made by this room and its inmates beggars description; lying side by side so closely that the visitor could gain no access to the room itself, were 45 men of an average age of not more than 35 years, white and black, and men of all nationalities. The windows were closed, and there were no apparent means of ventilation. The air was intolerable. An open sink was in the further corner of the room, and the heat was furnished by a drum from the large stove which heats the cells in the story below. All but 6 per cent. of these men were, in the opinion of the officer in charge, tramps. The room for women in this station-house is of the same dimensions, but a corner of it is appropriated for the purposes of an ante-room, in which occasional post-mortem examinations are made.' At another precinct-house 'the room for men is 30 feet long and 12 wide, and on the evening of April 19th had 40 occupants. The lodgers were clearly of the lowest class, and filthy in appearance; the room was shockingly over-crowded, and the air most impure. Seated on a box in one corner of the room was an old man with crutches. There was not room for him to lie down. The officer believed that six-eighths of these men were "revolvers," many of them habitual drunkards. When the liquor stores in the neighbourhood closed then a fresh batch of lodgers arrived. Not 10 per cent. of these men would work, according to the statement of the officer of the precinct. The station-house life has become a second nature to them.'

A couple of extracts will show the character of these people. At one station 'the sergeant stated that once, after a "Camp-fire of the Army of the Republic," a quantity of provisions remaining over from the supper was sent to the precinct-house. Preparations were made to give the lodgers the next morning a breakfast, and they were all invited to remain. No one accepted the invitation, and the file of men and women marched out, many of them to the nearest dram-shop, to fortify themselves before beginning their rounds of begging for the day.' At another a story was told of a gentleman calling the 80 lodgers together and offering work at one dollar a day; 'only two men accepted the offer.'

The station-house lodgers, however, were not solely composed of tramps. Persons seeking employment were to be found among their number. Accordingly the New York Night Refuge Association was established, and homeless men and women offered a night's lodging and meal 'in return for a certain amount of housework or other labour performed by them as payment.'

From the first report, since issued, it may be gathered that success has attended the efforts of the Association. The Refuge has not been abused, the tickets for admission being issued by the police and certain charitable institutions. The great difficulty was in providing a labour test, the necessity for which was thoroughly recognised, as the lodgers were allowed 'a sufficient time to enable them on their own showing to obtain the employment for which they were seeking.' About 600 out of the 6,051 received were able to obtain employment, the average duration in the Refuge being about five nights. The Refuge was closed in April, and will shortly be re-opened for the winter.

Such are a few of the many points of interest to be found in this able report. The whole volume is a record of the patient working of earnest men and women, an army of volunteers, for 'the alleviation of suffering and the diminution of pauperism'; a record of the practical value of bringing the study into the poor-house . . . the patient endurance of the poor into the study.' Though seeking the permanent improvement of the condition of the poor, the hand of pity is not to be stayed until the improvement be effected. 'For the large class of pauper poor whose present abject condition is caused by their own improvidence, their own want of temperate habits, caused also by our careless, selfish way of trying to help them by giving money alone, and not money, time, and thought, some present provision must be made. We cannot undo in a day the evil results of faulty systems of alms-giving extending over many generations. Nor should we condemn these without at the same time trying to substitute some better system.'

MR. CARLYLE ON THE POOR-LAW AMENDMENT ACT.

And yet, as we said, Nature makes nothing in vain; not even a Poor-law Amendment Act. For withal we are far from joining in the outcry raised against these poor Poor-law Commissioners, as if they were tigers in men's shape; as if their Amendment Act were a mere monstrosity and horror, deserving instant abrogation. They are not tigers; they are men filled with an idea of a theory: their Amendment Act heretical and damnable as a whole truth, is orthodox and laudable as a half-truth; and was imperatively required to be put in practice. To create men filled with a theory, that refusal of outdoor relief was the one thing needful: Nature had no readier way of getting outdoor relief refused. In fact, if we look at the old Poor-law, in its assertion of the opposite social principle, that Fortune's awards are not those of Justice, we shall find it to have become still more unsupportable, demanding, if England was not destined for speedy anarchy, to be done away with.

Any law, however well meant as a law, which has become a bounty on unthrift, idleness, bastardy, and beer-drinking, must be put an end to. In all ways it needs, especially in these times, to be proclaimed aloud that for the idle man there is no place in this England of ours. He that will not work, and save according to his means, let him go elsewhere; let him know that for him the Law has made no soft provision, but a hard and stern one; that by the Law of Nature, which the Law of England would vainly contend against in the long run, he is doomed either to quit these habits, or miserably be extruded from this Earth, which is made on principles different from these. He that will not work according to his faculty, let him perish according to his necessity: there is no law juster than that. Would to Heaven one could preach it abroad into the hearts of all sons and daughters of Adam, for it is a law applicable to all; and bring it to bear, with practical obligation strict as the Poor-law Bastille, on all! We had then, in good truth, a 'perfect constitution of society;' and 'God's fair Earth and Task-garden, where whosoever is not working must be legging or stealing,' were then actually what always, through so many changes and struggles, it is endeavouring to become.

That this law of 'No work no recompense' should first of all be enforced on the manual worker, and brought stringently home to him and his numerous class, while so many other classes and persons still go loose from it, was natural to the case. Let it be enforced there and rigidly made good. It behoves to be enforced everywhere, and rigidly made good:—alas, not by such simple methods as 'refusal of outdoor relief,' but by far other and costlier ones; which too, however, a bountiful Providence is not unfurnished with, nor, in these latter generations (if we will understand their convulsions and confusions), sparing to apply. Work is the mission of man in this Earth. A day is ever struggling forward, a day will arrive in some approximate degree, when he who has no work to do, by whatever name he may be named, will not find it good to show himself in our quarter of the Solar System; but may go and look out elsewhere. If there be any Idle Planet discoverable?—Let the honest working man rejoice that such law, the first of Nature, has been made good on him; and hope that by and by, all else will be made good. It is the beginning of all. We define the harsh New Poor-law to be withal a 'protection of the thrifty labourer against the thriftless and dissolute;' a thing inexpressibly important; a half-result, detestable, if you will, when looked upon as the whole result; yet without which the whole result is for ever unattainable. Let wantfulness, idleness, drunkenness, improvidence take the fate which God has appointed them; that their opposites may also have a chance for their fate. Let the Poor-law Administrators be considered as useful labourers whom Nature has furnished with a whole theory of the universe, that they might accomplish an indispensable fractional practice there, and prosper in it in spite of much contradiction.

We will praise the New Poor-law, farther, as the probable preliminary of some general charge to be taken of the lowest classes by the higher. Any general charge whatsoever, rather than a conflict of charges, varying from parish to parish; the emblem of darkness, of unreadable confusion. Supervisal by the central government, in what spirit soever executed, is supervisal from a centre. By degrees the object will become clearer, as it is at once made thereby universally conspicuous. By degrees true vision of it will become attainable, will be universally attained; whatsoever order regarding it is just and wise, as grounded on the truth of it, will then be capable of being taken. Let us welcome the New Poor-law as the harsh beginning of much, the harsh ending of much! Most harsh and barren lies the new ploughers' fallow-field, the crude subsoil all turned up, which never saw the sun; which as yet grows no herb; which has 'outdoor relief' for no one. Yet patience: innumerable weeds and corruptions lie safely turned down and extinguished under it; this same crude subsoil is the first step of all true husbandry; by Heaven's blessing and the skyey influences, fruits that are good and blessed will yet come of it. Chartism, c. iii. [1839.]

OUT-DOOR RELIEF.

At the recent Social Science Congress, Mr. G. W. Hastings drew the following contrast between two Unions. He said:—'At our meeting at Leeds, in 1871, I brought this matter under the notice of our Association, and I produced the statistics of two Unions—those of Atcham, in Shropshire, and Woodbridge, in Suffolk—which had been selected for the purpose, because in point of area, population, and the nature of the occupation of the inhabitants they were closely similar. Each comprised about 20,000 inhabitants, and was purely rural in character. I showed that while Atcham paid £1,512 for indoor, and £650 for outdoor paupers, Woodbridge paid £1,476 for indoor, and £6,099 for outdoor. During the year in which this outlay was incurred, Atcham had 156 indoor paupers and 125 outdoor paupers, while Woodbridge had 163 indoor and 1,339 outdoor. The proportion of paupers to population was in Atcham 1 in 68; in Woodbridge 1 in 15. The pecuniary results were that the cost of relief per head of the population was for Atcham 2s. 3d., and for Woodbridge 6s. 7½d.; and in the pound, on the gross estimated rental, 3d. for Atcham, and 1s. 0½d. for Woodbridge; per acre for Atcham 4½d., and for Woodbridge 1s. 10d.; and the out relief alone per acre was for Atcham 1½d., and for Woodbridge 1s. 5½d.' After stating that these facts had not been answered, he added: 'There was, however, one argument used, or rather one assertion made, in reply to my remarks. It was stated in more than one quarter that the principles carried out at Atcham might do well enough for a rural Union, but that it would be impossible to apply them in the more concentrated population of a town. Now, I can give a remarkable answer to this objection. Since the year 1871, when I addressed the Association at Leeds, the Local Government Board have enlarged the area of Atcham Union, and have added the town of Shrewsbury thereto. When this step was taken it was affirmed by many that it would be impossible to carry out what had become known as the Atcham system within the enlarged borders of the Union. I am glad to say that the Atcham Guardians thought otherwise; that they unflinchingly upheld their principles, and that they found themselves rewarded with the most satisfactory results. When the town of Shrewsbury first came under their administration, a committee was formed to investigate all the cases of destitution, real or supposed, in which outdoor relief was given, and this committee was supplied with a fund, raised by voluntary contribution for the purpose, in order to break the effects of the necessary change, and to prevent any hardship falling upon individuals. The result of the inquiry was that more than one-third of those receiving out relief were at once struck off the roll as undeserving, and that a large portion of the fund remained in the hands of the committee, simply because they could discover but very few cases for which it could be made available. The same gratifying decrease of pauperism that had previously been observed in the rural district of Atcham was now observed in the urban district of Shrewsbury, and the sound principle of Poor Law administration, which has again and again been enunciated to demonstration, was once more proved by the evidence of facts. If examples on a wider scale are needed, I can point to the city of Manchester, whose guardians have for a little time past carried out a code of regulations of their own for the reduction of outdoor relief; and I find that, without refusing help in any case really requiring it, the outdoor paupers in Manchester have been consequently reduced from 2,319 to 931; and that the indoor relief recipients, who in 1874 numbered 2,957, were last year 2,940. The only conclusion can be that there were upwards of 1,300 persons in Manchester who fancied that they could not support themselves, or made others think they could not, until a test was applied to their inability, on the application of which test they discovered either that they were capable of self-support, or that they had relations who were willing to keep them. I point, as another example, to the metropolitan Union of St. George's-in-the-East, where a similarly rigorous administration has been followed by like results. I may add that, in a rural Union with which I am intimately acquainted in my own county of Worcester, owing to the representations made by the West Midland Poor-Law Conference, a committee of the guardians was appointed to inquire into the out relief. It had been loudly affirmed by that very Board that no reduction in the out relief was possible, and that no relief of any kind was given except in necessitous cases; and yet the result of the inquiry was that the out relief was reduced at once by one third.'

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES. No. XI.

CHARITY BEGINS AT HOME.—Charity begins at home—that is, real charity. The modern charities of the rich are mostly given in public subscriptions and to distant objects, which they cannot be acquainted with. The effect of giving alms to those close to us and connected with us is, that we acquaint ourselves with the persons and miseries of the receiver; charity has its proper use and operation, and both the giver and the receiver are blessed. There is more than can be known except by experience, in this maxim 'charity begins at home'; and this principle in charity will not be found to diminish the supplies to really useful objects at a distance, but would rather be found to increase the fruitfulness of the spring, as well as make it flow in the right direction. Charity at home will not be found to diminish the healthful supply abroad; but the beginning with foreign distant charities may stop the supply homeward. However, the true principle is, that everyone should attend to his own concerns first, and to his own neighbourhood; and this will be found to be much more sufficient in practice than is imagined. There is more than money in almsgiving.—Bosanquet on the Poor and Christian Almsgiving, p. 351.

ILLUSTRATIVE CASES RECENTLY DEALT WITH BY DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

CLASS I.—DISMISSED.

St. James' (Westminster).—The family consisted of father, mother, and three children. Application was made for clothing for the two younger children to enable them to go to school. It appeared on inquiry that the eldest child was earning good wages as an ironer; that the father and mother were to be seen constantly at the public house; and that their earnings had been during the past three months 31s. a week. They could earn considerably more if they were sober and industrious.

CLASS II.—RECOMMENDED.

St. James' (Westminster).—The applicant, who had a wife, and a son aged 14, had been in receipt of a salary of £100 a year in a merchant's office at Liverpool. He was discharged for intemperance, and the family came to London. The wife (a superior person) and the son obtained employment; but their earnings were barely sufficient for their support. She fell ill, but refused to go to a convalescent home, as she said she would have to leave her husband and son to starve. It appeared that the husband had not been habitually intemperate; but not having a character he had been unable to obtain work. Temporary employment was obtained for him, and clothes were given him. Nourishing food was given the wife by the clergy. Application was made to the employer at Liverpool, who undertook to reinstate the husband in his situation, and paid the passage of the family.

Strand.—A widow, who obtained her livelihood by charing, applied for a grant to enable her to buy some clothes and redeem others for the use of her daughter, who had been promised a situation at Chelsea, provided she could obtain better clothing. They were living in a common lodging house of evil repute, from which it was desirable they should be taken as soon as possible. The daughter had a good character from her last employer, and the statements of the mother were found correct. The clothes were provided, and the daughter went to the situation. After a short time she was dismissed for taking tea and sugar. A lady on the Committee, however, obtained admission for the girl at a home, and afterwards placed her in a good situation, in which she has been doing well.

CLASS III.—ASSISTED.

St. Pancras (South).—Assistance was asked for a widow with two daughters, who supported themselves by letting furnished apartments and keeping a small school. The mother also did fancy work. Owing to the general depression of trade, and also partly to illness, they had got into difficulties; their rooms were unlet, and the mother's work was at a standstill; they were in dread that the landlord would turn them out, and take their furniture. This would have broken up their little school. Inquiries were made as quietly as possible. The family had held a good position in the neighbourhood for many years, and were greatly respected. The landlord was induced to promise that he would do up the rooms as soon as the arrears of rent were paid up. A connection of the family gave £5, and the Committee collected £15 more, which was sufficient to relieve them from their difficulties and give them a fresh start.

In another case, M. H., a shoemaker, was ill in Middlesex Hospital, and his wife was referred to this Committee by the Guardians. She had six children, the eldest of whom was 18, and was earning £12 a year as a servant. Another girl of 15 had been in service, but was then in the Smallpox Hospital. The family occupied two rooms in a house which they rented at £30 a year; they obtained 16s. 6d. a week from lodgers. The rent was one quarter in arrear, and the wife was unable to continue to pay it and support the four children which were at home. The case was recommended to the Society for Relief of Distress, who made the wife an allowance of 5s. a week for eleven weeks. The husband having died in hospital, the widow obtained a promise of work from a firm who had employed him, if she could obtain a machine for sewing boots. £4. 12s. 6d. having been collected by a lady, the remainder was procured from private persons by the Committee, and the machine was purchased for £8. 10s.

In another case the usual inquiries were made before stamping a letter for the Ormond Street Children's Hospital, and it was reported that the father, a tailor, was out of work in consequence of a bad thumb; that the mother was seriously ill in bed; and that there were four young children at home, besides the sick child. The case was accordingly visited by a member of the Committee, and inquiries as to character being satisfactorily answered, assistance was obtained to take things out of pawn for the wife, and to procure suitable nourishment for her during her confinement. One of the children, who was very ill, was sent to a convalescent home, and kept there for five months on the special recommendation of the doctor. She returned home in July greatly improved in health.

St. James' (Westminster).—In this case the applicant, a native of Australia, had been a clerk in a merchant's office in that country, and had afterwards held the position of manager and subsequently of principal in a large store. Unfortunately he fell ill, and the business being badly conducted by the person in charge, he became a bankrupt. He was ordered to England for change of climate, and arrived with a small sum of money; but failing to get suitable employment he was reduced to destitution. His statements were found to be correct; food, lodging, and clothing were provided, and eventually a free passage to Australia was procured for him through the instrumentality of the Committee.

BOARDING OUT.

An Association for boarding-out orphans has been established in memory of Mrs. Nassau Senior. The Committee are the Right Hon. James Stansfeld, M.P., Miss Octavia Hill, Thomas Hughes, Esq., Q.C., and William Shen, Esq. Miss Caroline Stephen, 48 Cheyne Walk, Chelsea; and Miss Synnot, Clapham Common, S.W., Honorary Secretaries.

'The purpose of the Association is to carry out, in memory of the late Mrs. Nassau Senior, an object which was very dear to her, and the importance of which has, through her feeling on the subject, been strongly impressed upon some of her friends—to provide some of the orphans and destitute children of London with as much as it is still possible to give them of the blessings of home, of country life, and of parental care.

'This is now done for some of our pauper children by the Guardians, according to the regulations issued by the Poor-Law Board; and the Association proposes to extend the same advantage to children whose parents were not paupers, but who are left destitute by their death—to the class of children, that is, for whom orphan asylums are intended. Those who believe that the practice of placing children in private homes, to be brought up as members of families, is a more wholesome and natural one than that of collecting them into large institutions, will feel that the advantages of the boarding-out system over that at present adopted are as great with regard to these children as they are with regard to the children of paupers. The Association proposes to adopt as many as are applicable of the regulations of the Poor-Law Board, and especially to secure an equally regular system of inspection.

'There appear to be three great advantages in the practice of boarding-out children, as compared with that of placing them in institutions. First, its success in giving them such natural domestic training, and such individual love and care, as nothing but a real home can afford; secondly, its cheapness, since no new buildings nor staff of paid officials are required; and, thirdly, its elasticity and adaptability both to the circumstances of each individual child, and to future needs and developments. Delicate children may be sent to the sea-side or to suitable climates; gifted children may be placed where special advantages for their education are to be found; help can be given in a thousand unforeseen and various ways when each child is placed under the watchful care of an individual friend; and the collective experience of the Association is at the service of any member to supply information and suggest expedients.

'The Committee already know of several desirable homes in the country, in which children would be received, and where they could be superintended by ladies already tried as members of Boarding-out Committees under the Poor Law regulations. As soon as sufficient funds have been received, the Committee will be prepared to select children to be placed in the most suitable of these homes. Reports of the children's welfare will be furnished to the Committee by the superintending ladies at least once a quarter; and these reports, together with all other information respecting the work of the Association, will be published annually, and sent to subscribers. Donations and subscriptions will be received by the Honorary Secretaries.'

The fund is not intended to meet the wants of the large class of fatherless children supported by widows, nor to deal with purely Poor-Law cases. The two children already boarded out by the Association are those of a man whose widow received 4s. 6d. weekly from his club till the lodge broke; she herself is dying of consumption. The Committee will be glad to consider, on its merits, the case of any orphan submitted to them; the names may be sent to the Hon. Secretaries, or to Miss Octavia Hill. The number of orphans boarded out will not be many.

UNITY OF ADMINISTRATION IN CHARITY.

'There is now a general impression that anything like promiscuous charity is a mistake, but it is only those whose way of life brings them into habitual contact with the charity-receiving classes who can fully realise how great a mistake it is. So utter a repugnance have the really working classes, and the truly industrious poor, to seeking charity, that the mere fact of charity being solicited should suggest doubt of those asking it belonging to those classes, and lead to a strict inquiry as to the truth of whatever allegations are made. If a private individual gives charity in any case with the merits of which he is not personally acquainted, or has not been assured of by some one on whose independence and judgment he can rely, the chances are much more in favour of his having played into the hands of an undeserving person than of his having assisted a deserving one. We think it may safely be said that the largest half of all our charity is secured by people who are neither truly needful nor worthy of it.

'To the intervention of the cormorant traders upon poverty, of whom we have been speaking, must in a great measure be attributed the fact that the enormous—and probably in itself amply sufficient—total of English charity fails to fulfil its mission; that the law of the land, that no member of the community shall perish from want, is practically a dead letter. The ultimate object of charity is, we take it, to afford maintenance to the helpless poor, and give adequate assistance to those whose own utmost efforts at self-help fail to secure them a sufficiency of the common necessities of life. This purpose English charity does not accomplish, though it can scarcely be doubted that its resources are equal to carrying it out to the fullest extent—if they were rightly administered. How to administer them rightly is a question to which only years of experimental trials can give a satisfactory answer; but the time has unquestionably arrived when "something should be done." There is one point in the required reform, however, concerning which we think there could be but little difference of opinion: the necessity, namely, for concentrating charity—for, if possible, confining its distribution to a single channel. In the face of such watchful, active, and unscrupulous enemies as the charity-hunting poor, diversity is a weakness. As matters stand, it is the point which more than all others favours their operations. The agents of each charity are led to infer that they alone are solicited for aid, and while the assistance that each may give may be all too small to meet the alleged wants, the gifts of a number will combinedly make up a very comfortable livelihood. If the exact total amount that each person or family was drawing from charity could be known, many of the idle poor would not be able to draw a tithe of what they do now; would be able to draw so little that the game would cease to be worth the candle to them, and, disgusted and desperate, they might be driven—to work for a living.

'Centralisation in charity would be a tower of strength against the attacks of the worst kind of poor—an undoubted benefit to the best, and to the public at large. Its tendency would be to extinguish the mere idle poor as a class, lessen the mass of full-blown technical pauperism, and ameliorate the condition of the industrious poor, who, from the causes we have spoken of, find charity as at present administered only vanity and vexation of spirit.'—Our New Masters, p. 390.

MR. FORSTER, M.P., ON THRIFT.—In addressing the Oddfellows at Radford, a short time ago, Mr. Forster called attention to the necessity of making provision for old age, and after pointing out the reason why, in his opinion, the Government plan of annuities had failed, and the conditions under which a form of insurance could, he considered, be safely established, he appealed to his hearers to 'see whether they could by any means help the formation of a society which could safely take charge of the money on those conditions.' He added that if the 'authorities of the principal societies agreed with him he should be very glad to offer £50 for prize . . . for the best essay, to be written by members of a registered friendly society . . . upon the question of the duty of a working man to provide for old age, and how he can best do so, and especially how members of friendly societies could best do so. . . PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 231.

THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 18, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, the 22nd instant:

1. Mr. A. H. Hill to move:—

‘That the present relations of the Central Office to the District Committees of this Society be considered, and that arrangements be made at once to secure a more effective uniformity in the Society's work throughout the metropolis.’

2. Major FitzRoy to move:—*

‘That whereas at present great confusion exists in the minds, not only of the general public, but even of supporters of this Society, as to its functions in the matter of giving relief, it is advisable to take steps more completely to disassociate Charity Organisation from Charitable Relief. To this end the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to direct their attention to making such arrangements that, on and after January 1, 1879, no relief by grant be made by any Committee of this Society; and that this important matter may be kept constantly before the Council, the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to report progress quarterly, commencing in January 1878.’

ST. OLAVE'S.—Mr. W. F. Beanford has been elected a representative of this Committee.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, October 11. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Holland, in the chair; Lady Wilson, Lieut.-Gen. Cavenagh, Lieut.-Col. Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Messrs. Hill, Miner, Peters, and Roberts.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending October 6 the receipts had been £17. 17s. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances* of the two funds on that day had been £192. 2s. 5d., and £30. 0s. 9d. respectively, £18. 12s. 5d. of the latter sum being reserved to pay expenditure on School Board cases.

GRANT.—A grant of £10 had been made to the Whitechapel Committee.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on October 9 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Miss Howes, Messrs. R. Barrington, F. J. S. Edgcombe, and S. Fuller.

MR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson moved:—

That this Council approves of the course taken by the Administrative Committee in issuing the circular of September 15 last with reference to Mr. Barnardo's Homes.

This motion he supported by a graphic speech, and remarked that the Society had not the smallest wish to suppress a good work.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Russell Barrington.

Mr. W. Bevan said that, the matter having been dealt with by the Administrative Committee, he thought it a pity that the question should have been reopened at the Council. He therefore moved the previous question, which was put and carried.

The Council then adjourned.

ERRATA.—For the paragraphs headed ‘Grants,’ page 162, Reporter No. 230, read as follows:—

GRANTS.—That the following grants had been made during August and September:—Fulham, £30; North St. Pancras, £15; Islington, £25;

* It was estimated that the liabilities of the Council amounted to £600.

Holborn, £40; Shoreditch, £40; Bethnal Green, £40; Whitechapel, £20; Stepney, £30; St. Saviour's £30; Newington, £20; Lambeth, £10; Mile End, £10.

[The following are the total amounts granted to these Committees during the year ending September 30, 1877:—Fulham, £120; North St. Pancras, £40; Islington, £105; Holborn, £140; Shoreditch, £90; Bethnal Green, £165; Whitechapel, £114; Stepney, £213; St. Saviour's, £167; Newington, £140; Lambeth, £125; and Mile End, £177.]

In the returns of Metropolitan Pauperism, p. 154, the persons in receipt of outdoor relief in the union of St. George's East should have been 92 instead of 792.

CONTRIBUTIONS.

The following contributions were received by the Council for the week ending October 13, 1877:—

FOREIGN.

NEW YORK.—The New York Church Journal, in an article on Charities, has the following:—'The matter of Charities will need reinvestigation, we are convinced, at no distant day. It is beginning to be forced upon the attention of even the most careless that we have been going on in a blind happy-go-lucky sort of way, under the impression that the mere giving of money to anybody or anything that asked is a good and meritorious work. Instead of this, such giving may be a very bad and a very wicked work, deserving the severest penalties. Possibly nothing does so much evil in this world as careless good-nature. And careless good-nature among a rich people may be the most fruitful parent of crime and worthlessness. For we are a rich people. . . . And yet we are over-ridden with beggars and tramps from one end of the country to the other, as is no country, perhaps, in Christendom! The reason is, that people with any industry and sense make a living so easily and so abundantly, that they have not only enough for themselves, but some to spare for the lazy and the worthless. The waste in America is enormous. . . . That our indiscriminate charities are responsible in large degree for the increase of a worthless population, there can be no doubt. That any charity which does not look to the extinguishment, by the most merciful but effectual means of this worthless population, is a wrong charity, weak and wicked, is so evident that it needs no argument. That a charity which blindly sustains and increases this worthless population, always worthless and often criminal, is worse than weak and wicked, we shall not argue here.'

A BETHNAL GREEN DIALOGUE.

Passing up St. Peter's Street, Bethnal Green, a few days since, I met a labouring man whom I had known well for the past ten years. Some time ago he was habitually under my personal observation, occasionally, indeed, employed by me; but latterly he has been living in a rather more distant part of the parish, and had been almost lost sight of during the past eighteen months. Suddenly meeting him, an inquiry into his present position at once suggested itself, and the following dialogue is almost verbatim:—

M. 'Well, P, I am glad to meet you, and pleased to see you so much better clad and so much more comfortable-looking than I have known you for some time past.'

P. 'Thank you, sir, for your kind inquiries. You know I have been frequently almost starving, and then for a few months or so doing rather better; but latterly I am thankful to say that my work, which you know is paid by the job, has been much more brisk, and my earnings consequently much larger and more regular, and, having no children, my wife and myself have been able to make both ends meet, which,' he added, 'you well know, sir, I have been for years off and on not able to do.'

M. 'Well, now, I am glad to hear such good news; and now that you have mentioned your wife, how is she?'

P. 'Well, sir, thank you; but to say the truth, my wife is not very well, sir; see, sir, that the change in her living does not agree with her. From being in other days so frequently pinched, she now actually complains of her health from having too much, not only in the quantity, but the quality; for you must know, sir, that whereas we had formerly very frequently no meat, now she as often has too much, and, as I tell her, buys enough for a family, instead of remembering that there are only our two selves. Why, sir, she will buy half a shoulder or leg of mutton at a time; and as I do not care for cold meat, nor for that matter does she herself, it has been more than once wasted and gone stale. As I tell her, sir, such a thing as two shillings' worth of good steak would be ample for a meal, and then would have none to spare, and none to waste; but she will not listen—spend the money she says she will; it looks more respectable, and gratifies her vanity.'

M. 'But surely, remembering the old times, you do not spend all in such waste?'

P. 'I am sorry to say we do. My wife will listen to no economy, and says while I earn she will spend.'

M. 'But do you give her all your earnings?'

P. 'Yes, sir; for peace I am obliged to do so. She reckons up sharply all I get, and insists upon my making her housekeeper; and if I try to put anything by she will go to my employers, get an account of my earnings, and search my pockets to make the total agree, so I must always be plain with her, tell her all, and trust to her management. It is true I have a few shillings in the Post Office, but nothing worth mentioning; and as my work is now much slack, and is already falling off, I expect that we shall soon be as pinched as ever. So, sir, I have done better lately, but with a short time may be as badly off as ever.'

So we parted. But surely such a meeting and such a dialogue deserves a short paragraph among the 'Annals of the Poor.' Is there, Sir, no 'School of Cookery' where these hopeless spendthrifts can be warned? The case is a typical one. Thousands are thus earned, and thus worse than wasted, and P. will, during this present winter, be considered a deserving object of compassion and support, while the wasted and putrefying legs and half-legs, and shoulders and half-shoulders of mutton, and bread even in half-quarterns, are crying for revenge upon those who, 'having fed themselves to the full,' are amongst the most loud and encroaching upon the aims of the provident.

CONVALESCENT HOMES.

The Sisters of All Saints' Home, Margaret Street, London, have undertaken the management of a Home at 4 Markwick Terrace, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

The object of this institution is to receive ten female patients, specially those suffering from diseases of the chest, for whom the climate of St. Leonards is so highly recommended; and they will receive most careful nursing and all that is needed for their restoration to health.

Any patient (from any part of England) will be admitted on the payment of 10s. a week, if their case be eligible according to the Rules of the Home. Presents of fruit, vegetables, flowers, new-laid eggs, &c. will be thankfully received by the Sister in Charge.

The Home can be seen any afternoon, between 3 and 5.30.

Annual subscribers of £1. 1s. can have a patient for one month in each year on payment of 8s. 6d. a week.

CHARITY AND EMPLOYMENT.—Though an individual may be in work himself, he will come across a multitude who have failed in finding anything for their hands to do. And seeing how rich this country is, this state of things is really very sad. Of course, it is hard to get at the root of this terrible London evil; indiscriminate almsgiving has, it must be confessed, a good deal to do with the large amount of the laziness abounding in our midst; but that there is a vast quantity of enforced idleness in this very large place of London cannot, I assume, be doubted by anyone possessed of even a few grains of common sense. . . . There are many well-meaning folk among the throng that daily tread the pavé between Birdcage Walk and Old Palace Yard. There are to be seen there men and youths, poverty-stricken and haggard to look upon, who are only too anxious to do well, but kept aloof from success by sheer misfortune, and lacking a friend to take them by the hand. Feeble health may possibly have brought about their sorry trouble; perhaps some slippery trick or other; perchance running after myths, losing the substance in grasping the shadow, and consequently 'jumping out of the frying-pan into the fire.' However this may be, there are hundreds (and what I say is an absolute fact) who would be humbly grateful for employment—aye, and of the roughest and any kind. In their present mode of existence (and after revelling in the glory of seeing and hearing the 'sogers' play) they moon or loaf about and wander through the streets, their only hope consisting of helping some one into a carriage, or giving a hand when a cab is to be unloaded, or 'carry yer parcel, sir,' or, 'please to 'elp a poor fellow to a copper.' And there is the curse: almsgiving gets in the way and closes all prospect of a man helping himself. Some prefer to live—exist—on misplaced so-called charity rather than lead an honourable, noble life.—Labour News, Sept. 15.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHARITY ORGANISATION AND RELIEF.

To the Editor of the 'Charity Organisation Reporter.'

DEAR SIR,—I should be much obliged if you would allow me a few words of explanation of the motion of which I have given notice.

My object is simply to recall our minds to the first principles of the Society as stated in the Manual, viz.:—

'The main object of the Society is the improvement of the condition of the poor, (1) by bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor-law, and amongst the Charities; (2) by securing due investigation and fitting action in all cases; and (3) by repressing mendicancy.'

It may be said that, in 'securing fitting action,' it is a distinction without a difference if our Committees obtain the relief from some other society, or give it from funds placed in their hands by individuals. But my experience leads me to the conclusion that there is a great difference, and that the energies of our Committees are frittered away, and organisation lost sight of in dealing with individual cases. Our function ought to cease when we have thoroughly investigated a case and handed it over to the proper quarter for 'fitting action.'

To meet special and urgent cases, it may be necessary that each Committee should have at their command a small relief fund; but it would be better if arrangements could be made with the Society for the Relief of Distress to do this.

Our object should be to make our offices centres of information and reference, where those who are working and those who are anxious to work can communicate with one another; but as it is, our Committees are too often merely another source of relief in a district where too much is given already.

97 Onslow Square.

Yours faithfully,

C. C. FITZROY.

STARVATION CASES.

The death of Ann Kelly in the Mile End Union District has recently directed public attention to the small allowance of outdoor relief often granted by Boards of Guardians; the following letter of Dr. J. H. Hill, addressed to the Daily News in July last, points out some of the evils of the system:—

'I was for eight years, and until recently, the medical officer to one of the largest workhouses in London. During that time many cases of death from starvation came under my notice and care, cases where, although a low form of disease came as it were to the rescue of the sufferers and ended their pangs, still want of the common necessities of life was the primary and real cause of their disease and death. Many of these cases were brought before the coroner, and verdicts returned of death accelerated by want of proper food—verdicts really of death from starvation, but cloaked in milder and less striking terms; and here I would remark that in my opinion it would be better to always look the matter fairly in the face, call a spade a spade, and call such cases—where, according to medical testimony, corroborated by other evidence, death has been caused or accelerated by want of proper food—deaths from starvation, and let parochial authorities explain more clearly and satisfactorily how such cases are permitted to exist when the name of the sufferer is, as in many cases, on the books of so-called parochial relief. I have known many cases where persons sick unto death and living alone have been allowed 3s. a week and a loaf of bread, when, on the most simple inquiry, it would have been found that they were paying 2s. 6d. a week for rent, leaving the small sum of 6d. a week for procuring proper food, fuel, &c. I am confident that a better system of parochial investigation of cases is in many instances required, which would lead to the detection of such cases before too late, and the providing them with proper nourishment and attention, which would frequently be the means of saving their lives. An immense amount of money is expended in many parishes in giving a weekly pittance to a great number of persons, when, from the staff of relieving officers and system of giving relief, it is utterly impossible that due and proper care can be taken in its administration. I firmly believe that a great saving of life, money, &c., would be effected by an increased and better staff of relieving officers. It is also a question worthy of deep consideration whether legislative interference could not be beneficially brought to bear by the passing of an Act of Parliament enabling parochial authorities to obtain a magistrate's order for removal to a workhouse infirmary of such persons as could be satisfactorily proved to be without friends and to be dependent entirely upon parochial aid, and at the same time are unfit to remain or become recipients of outdoor relief, instead of, as at present, allowing them to exercise a frequently very unwise discretion of their own, and morally and really to commit 'suicide by starvation' rather than enter a workhouse. I have known many instances where persons have refused until too late to be removed from wretched hovels, where they have laid under clearly hopeless conditions for recovery, and where a nuisance to others around them, while at the same time they have been receiving parochial relief. Surely this could be improved upon.'

Bearing on this, the following notes may be of interest. They are taken from the Returns from 1870 to 1875 of 'the number of all deaths in the metropolitan district upon which a coroner's jury have returned a verdict of death by starvation, or death accelerated by privation.'

In 1870, out of 37 cases in the Eastern Division of Middlesex, one received 1s. 6d. a week in outdoor relief; another (man and wife) 2s. 6d. a week, with 2 quarter loaves, $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. sugar, and 2 ozs. tea; another, admitted into the house dying, was in receipt of 1s. and a loaf.

In 1871, in the Central Division, 8 were receiving outdoor relief. The following are the amounts set down in each case: 3s., 2s. 6d., 2s., 3s., 4s., 3s., 2s. 6d. In one case 'meat and brandy' were being given. It is not stated whether there were children or others who would be likely to share in the relief.

In the Eastern Division, in the same year, out of 25 cases, 5 received respectively, as outdoor relief, the following: 2s.; 'an amount not known'; tea, sugar, 1s. 6d., and a loaf; 2s. 6d. a week; one who was in the stoneyard two days received on the first day 7d. and a loaf, and on the second 5d. and a loaf: 'an order for admission was given by the parish doctor, but the man died before admission.'

In the returns for 1872, in the Central Division, 4 cases are set down in which outdoor relief was being received; the sums are: 4s., 2s. and two loaves, 2s. 6d. and a loaf. In one case the amount is not stated.

In the Eastern Division, in the same year, two cases are mentioned. One is that of a boy aged 6, for whom 'one week's relief and soup occasionally' were given; admission to the workhouse was offered to, and refused by, the parents. The other is that of a girl aged 6 months, whose mother was in receipt of '2 loaves per week for a month.'

In 1873 three are mentioned as being in receipt of outdoor relief; in one 1s. 6d. a week was given, the house was offered and refused; in another brandy and meat were supplied; one is entered as having received £2. 14s. in outdoor relief, and to have died from 'want of food.'

In 1875 five cases are mentioned, with the following remarks on each: 'amount unknown,' 'medicine,' 'mother had 1s. 6d. and 4 loaves,' 'nourishment for three days,' '2s. weekly.'

In the return for 1876 four are set down, one receiving 2s. 6d., one 3s., one 3s. 6d. and a loaf, and one 3s. 6d.

These notes refer only to the question of the inadequacy of outdoor relief. The deceased are sometimes set down as 'inmates.' Unwise charity, also, appears in some cases to keep the poor in chronic starvation. One case is mentioned as being 'supported by charity,' another as in receipt of 5s. a month from the churchwardens.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of October 1877 was 36,972, and 40,197 received outdoor relief, making a total of 77,169. This was an increase of 476 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 1,135, 4,296, and 14,022 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 816. This was an increase of 155 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and a decrease of 11 on the corresponding day of last year.

WANDERING VAGRANTS.—The Brighton Board of Guardians, in common with many other local authorities, have for a long time been considerably exercised by the more or less frequent and extensive incursions of 'tramps' into their casual wards. Many devices have, with but little avail, been tried in various places to check the visits of these moving masses of pauperism; and the Brighton Board have now hit on the simple and inexpensive expedient of having their orders for the casual wards issued after a certain hour by one of their own officers at a district police station. This plan, which requires only the co-operation of the police authorities, and a little extra salary to the officer, has been found to answer exceedingly well, as, for reasons more or less obvious, the professional tramp evinces a peculiar reluctance to visit such places more often than impelled by strict necessity, preferring to seek a fresh town rather than present himself a second time at a police-office. A return submitted to the Board yesterday afternoon showed that during the past three months there had been the extraordinary decrease of 1,822 admissions as compared with the corresponding period last year, when the number was 3,088. During the twelve months the plan had been adopted 5,884 persons had been admitted, being a decrease of as many as 2,841 on the previous year, whilst, instead of admitting them to the wards at the rate of 44 a night, the average now was only 17. The Board expressed themselves highly satisfied at the success of the scheme, and, subject to the approval of the Local Government Board, decided to continue it for another six months.—Daily News, October 10.

CHARITY AND LABOUR.*—For so it is written, 'Cui plus datum est, plus requiretur ab illo' ('He that hath much must make account for much; and if he hath not spent it well, he must make the heavier account'). But I speak not this to let poor folks from labour; for we must labour and do the works of our vocation, every one in his calling: for so it is written, 'Labores manuum tuarum manducabis, et bene tibi erit' ('Thou shalt eat thy hand-labour, and it shall go well with thee'). That is to say, every man shall work for his living, and shall not be a sluggard, as a great many be; every man shall labour and pray, then God will send him his living. St. Paul saith, 'Qui non laborat, non comedat' ('He that laboreth not, let him not eat'). Therefore those lubbers which will not labour, and might labour, it is a good thing to punish them according unto the king's most godly statutes. For God himself saith, 'In sudore vultus tui vesceris pane tuo' ('In the sweat of thy face thou shalt eat thy bread'). Then cometh in St. Paul, who saith, 'Magis autem laboret, ut det indigentibus' ('Let him labour the sorer, that he may have wherewith to help the poor'); and Christ himself saith, 'Melius est dare quam accipere' ('It is better to give than to take'). So Christ and all His Apostles, yea, the whole Scripture, admonisheth us ever of our neighbour, to take heed of him, to be pitiful unto him: but God knoweth there be a great many which care little for their neighbours.—Latimer's Sermons.

ST. OLAVE'S.—This Committee would be glad to obtain the services of an Hon. Secretary.

THE EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT OF COUNCIL.—The Council would be glad to receive any copies of the Eighth Annual Report of Council that District Committees may be able to spare.

The following business stands for Monday, the 29th instant:

'That whereas at present great confusion exists in the minds, not only of the general public, but even of supporters of this Society, as to its functions in the matter of giving relief, it is advisable to take steps more completely to dissociate Charity Organisation from Charitable Relief. To this end the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to direct their attention to making such arrangements that, on and after January 1, 1879, no relief by grant be made by any Committee of this Society; and that this important matter may be kept constantly before the Council, the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to report progress quarterly, commencing in January 1878.'

4. Mr. Bousfield to call attention to the present position of the Society with regard to Mr. Barnardo's Charities, and to move a resolution thereon.

Present :—Mr. A. H. Hill (in the Chair).

* The ascertained liabilities were £700, exclusive of £600 required for District Committees during the current quarter.

EMPLOYMENT.

The following papers had been forwarded to District Committees:

'GENERAL POST OFFICE: 26th September, 1877.

'SIR,—I beg leave to forward to you the enclosed copies of a Prospectus giving the conditions under which the Department will in future employ boy messengers in the Telegraph Department; and as it is understood that your Society has the means of acquainting itself intimately with the class of persons from which boy messengers are usually drawn, and is in the habit of receiving applications for employment, I have to ask if you would be prepared to co-operate with the Department in its endeavours to select, as candidates for the employment in question, such boys as are of undoubtedly good character, and have respectable parents or guardians.

'I should explain that the wages which will be paid to the boys under the new system are higher than those which the Department has been in the habit of giving, and the prospects of their promotion in the Service are better; it is hoped, therefore, that, with these advantages offered to candidates, the class of boy messengers may be materially improved.

'If you find that it is in your power to assist the Department in the manner proposed, I would suggest that, on recommending a candidate, a certificate should be furnished by a responsible member of your Society, to the effect that inquiries have been made at his home, and that he is found to be respectable, and suitable, so far as his character and that of his home are concerned, for the employment sought.

'I shall be happy to furnish you with any number of these prospectuses which you may require.'

'I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

'W. PARKHURST.

'The Secretary, Charity Organisation Society.'

'SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

'CENTRAL OFFICE—15 Buckingham Street,

'Adelphi, London, W.C.: October 15, 1877.

'DEAR SIR,—With reference to the accompanying letter, which has been addressed to the Society, I am directed to request that you will communicate with the Secretary of the General Post Office whenever persons who have boys eligible for employment under the Post Office come under the notice of your Committee.

'I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

'C. J. RIBTON-TURNER,

'Organising Secretary.

'To the Hon. Secretary,

Committee.'

*SITUATIONS OF OUTDOOR BOY TELEGRAPH MESSENGERS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE GENERAL POST OFFICE, LONDON.

Applications for these situations must be made by candidates, in writing, to the Secretary, Appointment Branch, General Post Office, St. Martin's-le-Grand.

The limits of age for the situation are from 14 to 15.

The Boy Telegraph Messengers, so long as they remain in their class, must reside within three miles of the General Post Office, or of the office at which they are employed, either with their parents or guardians, or they must be placed by their parents or guardians with some responsible person living within the same distance.

Their employment will not give them any claim to superannuation, compensation, or other allowance under the Superannuation Acts of 1834 or 1859.

The wages of these boys are 7s. a week, rising after one year's service to 8s., in Town Districts, with uniform; and 6s. a week, rising after six months to 7s., and after a year's service to 8s., in Suburban Districts, with uniform.

The duty does not commence, as a rule, before 8 a.m., and it continues for 10 hours.

On attaining the age of 16, boys will no longer be employed as Outdoor Telegraph Messengers in the Town Districts; but in the Suburban Districts they will continue to be so employed until they are 17.

Outdoor Telegraph Messengers who can from their conduct be recommended for further employment will be eligible for nomination, on their attaining the age of 16, to Boy Sorterships and Indoor Telegraph Messengerships, and on their attaining the age of 17 to Junior Sorterships and Letter Carrierships; and preference will be given to them over other candidates.

The wages for these situations are as follows, viz.:

SITUATIONS.	WAGES.
Boy Sorter, Circulation Department..	12s. a week, with prospect of rising to 18s. a week.
Do. Eastern Central District Office	14s. a week, with prospect of rising to 18s. a week.
Do. Metropolitan District Office	10s. a week, with prospect of rising to 14s. a week.
Indoor Telegraph Messenger	12s. a week.
Junior Sorter, Circulation Department and Eastern Central District Office	20s. a week, increasing by 1s. a week annually to 25s. a week, and with prospect of rising to 45s. a week.
Junior Sorter, Metropolitan District Office	18s. a week, increasing by 1s. a week annually to 34s. a week.
Junior Letter Carrier, Eastern Central District and Metropolitan Districts (Town Divisions)	18s. a week, increasing by 1s. a week annually to 21s. a week, and with a prospect of rising to 30s. a week.
Junior Letter Carrier (Suburban Division)	17s. a week, increasing by 1s. a week annually to 20s. a week, and with a prospect of rising to 28s. a week.
Suburban Letter Carrier	18s. a week, increasing by 1s. a week annually to 23s. a week, and with a prospect of rising to 28s. a week.

VAGRANCY.

Letters from Lewisham and North St. Pancras were read on the increase of vagrancy, and on the best measures for its treatment.

THE DISTRICT COMMITTEES AND THE COUNCIL.

Mr. A. H. Hill then proceeded to read a statement in connection with his motion, to the effect that the present relations of the Central Office to the District Committees of this Society be considered, and that arrangements be made at once to secure a more effective uniformity in the Society's work throughout the metropolis. He explained that he did not wish to anticipate any larger discussion by pressing his motion at the present time, but he considered the period had arrived when the work of the Society in its districts should more thoroughly approximate to the machinery set forth by the originators, and he believed that all classes would benefit by a greater centralisation of efforts.

Mr. H. R. Brand seconded the motion, and expressed his opinion that all grants made to District Committees should be carefully decided on, and then punctually paid.

Rev. R. J. Simpson considered the discussion premature.

Mr. H. Hay Hill thought that the collection of funds in the districts was prejudiced by the want of a higher class of officers.

Mr. Lawrence thought no material good would be gained by the discussion, and moved that the consideration of the subject be adjourned.

Mr. Edgcombe seconded this proposal.

Dr. Daniel was of opinion that the motion should be carried, whilst Col. Prendergast thought it should receive much fuller consideration than was then possible.

Mr. Maurice thought that a mere collection from the centre would be very unpopular in many districts.

Mr. Tidman thought only inefficient committees were likely to raise any objection, and they should be brought up to a higher standard.

Mr. Corkran considered that more steps should be taken to educate the public in the principles of the Society.

Mr. Bevan held that the financial question was quite secondary to the humanitarian one. It was essential at any cost to bring up the efficiency of the districts, even if those districts had to be largely increased in number.

Mr. Hill, in reply, said he was quite satisfied with the discussion that had taken place, as he merely desired to indicate certain large issues which would have to be further considered at some future date, and, with the consent of the seconder (Mr. Brand), he withdrew his motion.

On the motion of Mr. Edgcombe, the consideration of Major Fitz-Roy's motion was adjourned till next Monday.

The Council then adjourned.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of October 1877 was 37,393, and 39,674 received outdoor relief, making a total of 77,067. This was a decrease of 102 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 692, 3,644, and 13,959 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 890. This was an increase of 74 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 160 on the corresponding day of last year.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES. No. XII.

FRIENDSHIP IN CHARITY.—Human life does not admit of extensive friendships and wide circles of intimacies and interests. Truth and reality all lie in particulars, and all interest is in details; and the more we deal in generals and vast circles of information, and great numbers of people, the more our knowledge becomes superficial and heartless and inanimate, and our intercourse degenerates into mere acquaintance.—BOSANQUET: The Poor and Christian Almsgiving, p. 251.

THE SUPPRESSION OF MENDICITY IN ROME.—The want of an Institution for the Suppression of Mendicity, which exists to so great extent in Rome, has now the prospect of being supplied by private energy and benevolence. A Committee has been formed, of which Signor Ferdinando de Felice is the President, for the purpose of establishing workshops and homes for mendicants. The great aim of the Institution is the suppression of the trade of begging, and the effectual help of those who are truly in need. It is hoped that the Government may be induced to transfer the convents and monasteries, which were suppressed by law in 1873, to the Society, and thus 2,000 persons would be received. These buildings would then be prepared for the reception of beggars, and of poor creatures who, having been recently released from prison, may be homeless and, from the loss of character, unable to obtain honest employment, and the chance of a new start in life would be afforded them. In each building there will be an officer, whose duty it will be to discover and provide the kind of work most suited to each individual. Of the profits realised, one portion will be appropriated to the funds of the Institution, and another for the benefit of the workman. The patronage of many members of the Roman aristocracy has been obtained, and the Committee is anxious to bring the scheme to the notice of the public in England, hoping that many may be inclined to assist in suppressing the great evil of mendicity, by which all who have ever been in Rome must have been annoyed and distressed.

Messrs. Macbean & Co., Bankers, Rome, will receive subscriptions on behalf of the 'Comitato per la Instituzione in Roma di una Casa Provinciale di Lavoro ed Ospizio di Mendicità.'

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

CHARITY ORGANISATION IN ITS CHRISTIAN ASPECT, WITH REFERENCE TO ALMSGIVING AND MEDICAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTIONS—THEIR USE AND ABUSE.

Sir Lovelace T. Stamer read the first paper, in which he strongly condemned careless, indiscriminate, and lavish giving to those who represented themselves to be in want. So far from being twice blessed—blessing him who gives and him who receives—it had the contrary effect. The evil was not a small one. In the metropolis the amount expended annually on legal charity was a little less than two millions, while the amount given in private charity was computed at about seven millions sterling. These facts showed the urgent necessity for some organisation of charity in order to insure it doing good instead of great evil. He was strongly in favour of money intrusted to the clergy for the relief of the sick and needy being distributed through lay agency, as when given by the clergy it frequently led to false pretence and hypocrisy. (Cheers.)

Dr. Fairlie Clarke was the next reader, and he treated of the medical charities of London. There was more than half a million sterling spent annually by those charities—most of it in a recklessly open-handed manner—and this expenditure was out of all proportion to the real needs of the people. More than half of the applicants to the London hospitals could pay a few shillings a year for that which they now sought in forma pauperis. A payment of three halfpence or twopence a week would secure to a working man and his entire family medical aid throughout the year. What was wanted was such a concurrence of opinion among the managers of medical establishments that they would lend their aid to the establishment of provident dispensaries, and be content to relieve those who, being proper objects of charity, would not be degraded by receiving it. The present free dispensaries ought to be turned into provident dispensaries, and many more of those excellent institutions ought to be established. Manchester had gone far in this direction. Birmingham was following the good example, and Liverpool was considering the question with a view to doing likewise. He was happy to say that in London, also, the number of provident dispensaries was increasing; but it was urgently needed that much more should be done. The clergy could give most valuable aid in the movement. They were often influential as members of the managing committees of hospitals, and they could also help in setting on foot provident dispensaries, and in their intercourse with working people could do much in the way of explaining the advantages of those institutions, and recommending them to widespread support. To raise and strengthen those who were in danger of being debased and pauperised was surely a work in which the ministers of a national Church might well take part.

The Rev. Harry Jones testified to the usefulness of the Charity Organisation Society, which had prevented large sums of money from going into the pockets of impostors and professional beggars. His experience left him without a doubt that charity organisation was distinctly one of the Christian works of the day.

The Rev. R. Linklater said the ministration of charity was the work of the Church, and outside the Church charity sank into philanthropy. The greatest calamity that had happened to the poor was the suppression of the religious houses by Henry VIII.; but he hoped to see the day when the tithes of England would be given once more to the poor and needy of the land, and thus an act of national sacrilege be to some extent atoned for. He proposed, as a practical matter, that in all parishes a committee of communicants should be formed to receive grants of tithes, and that all charity should be distributed from those centres. He also advocated the establishment of provident institutions in each parish, and recommended that the clergy should on all possible occasions impress upon the poor among their people the advantage of thrift.

Dr. Richardson spoke of the difficulties which surrounded the question of medical relief. Hospitals should never contain more than twenty-five to thirty beds, and there should be many small institutions instead of a few large ones. With respect to the outdoor work of the hospitals, on which so much was expended, there had been a vast and startling increase in the applicants for the benefits of the hospitals of late years. How was it to be prevented? In the first place, there ought to be united action on the part of the outdoor managers of dispensary hospitals and the managers of provident dispensaries, so that all might be brought under one common system. He would recommend, too, that no funds should be given to outdoor dispensaries where the admission was free, as that system had largely added to the number of applicants for medical relief. Next, he would suggest that the issue of governors' tickets should be suspended in respect of those departments. It was most desirable that a fund should be formed by the benevolent for the support of convalescent homes; for the aid of working men who, being convalescent, were returning to work; and, further, to provide in their day of sinking and distress for those most excellent women who spent their strength in the nursing of the sick. In conclusion, he had to say the two professions—the medical and the clerical—were one, as the soul and the body were one, and the more closely they were united for the common good, the more rapidly would the happiness of the world be increased. (Cheers.)

The Rev. J. Wigan (Bethnal Green) gave an instance of wrongheaded liberality, in which several old women were paid 5s. every time they attended service at the church. (Laughter.) The Rev. Hy. Cummings said the reason many people went begging was because they were able to do it, and that showed the necessity of some good organisation. There was great want of confidence in the minds of a large body of the public in the matter of charity, and this fact was revealed on occasions such as the Indian famine. People then sent money freely because they had confidence in its being properly administered. The Rev. Chas. Bull having made a few remarks, the Rev. Thos. Franklin said that a good organisation would guide the stream of charity into judicious channels, so that instead of pauperising the people, it would make them thrifty, provident, and happy.

(Cheers). The Rev. Hy. Cowell (Paddington) remarked that the plan adopted in his parish was for the district visitors to bring each case before a small relief committee, and relief was then given through the district visitors. After a few words from Mr. MacInnes, the Section adjourned.—The Guardian, October 17.

PAUPERISM.—BOARDING OUT.—Mr. Francis Peek regretted that the subject of truant children had been bracketed with that of pauper children. The latter subject was of such great importance to the country that it deserved exclusive attention. He found from the last Government reports that there were in England 752,887 paupers, maintained at a cost of no less than £7,335,858 per year. After making all allowances there was a large amount of pauperism which, he maintained, was home-made. Universal testimony showed that when the pauper taint was imbibed it never could be eradicated. There were now over 48,000 children indoor paupers. The idea seemed to be that most of them were brought up in district schools or were boarded out; but such was not the case. Of the entire number, about 40,000 children were still brought up in connection with the workhouse; of these, 32,362 children were orphans, or the children of parents who were paupers; 16,000 might be considered as casuals, 5,817 were in district schools, 27,000 attended workhouse schools, 15,568 did not attend any school, but were simply in the workhouse; and 2,800 children were boarded out. It would not be disputed that to train children in workhouses was to make paupers of them; so that every ten years they sent out 30,000 to 40,000 children to perpetuate pauperism and make it hereditary. There were three systems in existence, each of which was infinitely better than the workhouse system. The first was the district school system, an excellent specimen of which was to be seen at Anerley; but that system, though good, was not without its imperfections and disadvantages, especially as to cost. The next plan was the boarding out of pauper children in cottage homes. The plan was carried out partially in England, and universally in Scotland, where, under proper supervision, the most admirable results were found to follow. The third plan might be called the village home system, the best example of which was to be found at Metray school. Having described the latter system in some detail, Mr. Peek earnestly recommended its wide adoption. It combined the advantages of the district school and of the cottage home, and this in time would cut off the entail of pauperism.

INTEMPERANCE.—Canon Duckworth said: 'In 1857 there were 76,000 committals for drunkenness in England. In 1875 there were 204,000, of which 150,000, or 75 per cent., were contributed by the seven most densely populated counties, and those which contain the largest towns, viz., Lancashire, Middlesex, Durham, York, Stafford, Northumberland, and Cheshire. In eight agricultural counties the average rate of committals was 2.9 per 1,000. In eight industrial and mining counties it was 13.6 per 1,000. That is to say, the present insobriety of our industrial population is five times as great as that of our agricultural, while that of our agricultural population is about one-third greater than that of Frenchmen of all classes. Scotland is ten times as drunken as France, and Ireland nine times, so far as committals are to be regarded as a fair test of general intemperance. Taking into account the increase of population during the eighteen years between 1857 and 1875, the committals, according to Professor Leone Levi, have increased by fully 71 per cent. throughout the country.'

DISTRICT VISITORS.—Dr. Alfred Carpenter said: 'I urge most strongly upon all district visitors that any recommendation which appears to suggest that stimulants would be provided if they were prescribed is helping the enemy at a time when enormous injury can be done to the cause of temperance. Stimulants, as a rule, are unnecessary in the treatment of disease. I urge, therefore, as a duty upon the officer of mental health, that he resolutely discourage their distribution by district visitors. Dr. Carpenter also urged the formation of a class of visitors from amongst the poor themselves.'

LABOURERS' DWELLINGS AND SAVINGS BANKS.—Sir H. Selwin Ibbetson said, recently, he hoped to see the welfare of the labourer promoted by a combination of the landlords throughout the country to give him a better house. With a better cottage, let to him, as it ought to be, at a reasonable rent, he would be able to live and labour in hard times like these without striking for an increase of wage. He was satisfied, moreover, that the landlord was very short-sighted who did not see the advantage which he gained by building cheap and sound cottages. Of course it was not, as a speculation, a pecuniarily remunerative one, but the remuneration came in the thews and sinews of the labourer and the better cultivation of the land, and the landlord had also the satisfaction of feeling that he was attempting to help others on in their course through life. He had long thought that another thing wanted to encourage the labourers was an extension of the savings banks. He hoped some day to see savings banks scattered through all the villages of the land.

A FLOOD OF CHARITY.—A correspondent sends us a table showing the distribution by Mr. Graham's executors of the large sum confided to their charitable discretion. The table is arranged on the model of the 'Classified Directory to Metropolitan Charities.' PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 233.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 1, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

CALENDAR OF MEETINGS AT THE CENTRAL OFFICE.

Thursday, Nov.	1	...	3 P.M., Administrative Committee.
Monday,	5	...	3 P.M., Council.
Tuesday,	6	...	2.30 P.M., Mendicity Sub-Committee.
			3.30 P.M., District Sub-Committee.
Wednesday,	7	...	2.30 P.M., Co-operation Sub-Committee.
Thursday,	8	...	3 P.M., Administrative Committee.

ST. JAMES' AND SOHO.—Mr. F. C. Mills has been appointed Hon. Secretary of this Committee, vice Mr. C. A. O. Marsham.

ST. MARYLEBONE.—Mr. L. G. Gordon Robbins has been elected one of the representatives of this Committee.

The Charity Organisation Reporter is published weekly during the sittings of Council. The monthly number of the Reporter is published on the second Thursday in each month throughout the year. Contributors of £5 and upwards to the funds of the Council, or to those of any of the Committees of the Society, can have the Reporter free.

THE 'REPORTER.'—The Secretary will be glad to receive memoranda containing information on the following subjects, with a view to their insertion in the Charity Organisation Reporter when space permits:—

- (1) Meetings on subjects connected with the improvement of the condition of the poor.

- (2) Efforts made to improve the machinery and working of existing District Visiting Societies.
- (3) Efforts made to promote provident habits among the poor.
- (4) Efforts made to improve the dwellings of the poor.
- (5) Efforts made to promote the welfare of the afflicted poor.
- (6) Efforts made to suppress vagrancy.

Annual Reports of District Committees.—Papers of Suggestions relating to Annual Reports are about to be issued to District Committees.

School Board Returns.—District Committees who have not yet done so are requested to forward their School Board returns for the past quarter to the Central Office with as little delay as possible.

Estimates for the Financial Year 1877-8.—The attention of District Committees is called to the following resolution of Council of July 3, 1876:—

That within a month after September 30 of each year ESTIMATES of the probable expenses of each Committee for the ENSUING YEAR, together with the BALANCE-SHEET FOR THE PAST YEAR, be sent to the Secretary of the Council, to be laid before the Quarterly Finance Sub-Committee, in order that they may, as soon as possible, have the means of passing the Estimates for the District Committee Aid Fund.

Forms for the Estimates and Balance-sheets have been forwarded to the District Committees. It is very desirable that District Committees likely to require grants should transmit them, duly filled up, to the Central Office at an early date.

HOSPITAL LETTERS.—We have received the following letter from the Hon. Secretary of the St. George's (Hanover Square) and Westminster Committee:—'I am directed to inform you that Letters as per enclosed list are now in this office, and will be given to any District Committee for deserving cases.'

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, the 5th instant:

1. Major FitzRoy to move:—

'That whereas at present great confusion exists in the minds, not only of the general public, but even of supporters of this Society, as to its functions in the matter of giving relief, it is advisable to take steps more completely to dissociate Charity Organisation from Charitable Relief. To this end the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to direct their attention to making such arrangements that, on and after January 1, 1879, no relief by grant be made by any Committee of this Society; and that this important matter may be kept constantly before the Council, the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to report progress quarterly, commencing in January 1878.'

PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, October 25. There had been present:—

Mr. E. Peters, in the chair; the Earl of Lichfield, Lieut.-Col. Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Capt. Fortescue, Rev. S. A. Barnett, H. I. Cummins Messrs. Barrington, Burdett-Roberts, Crowder, Dowson, Hill, Hoare, and Lawrence. Mr. Rodger, visitor.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending October 20 the receipts had been £15. 0s. 6d. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances* of the two funds on that day had been £07. 15s. 2d., and £20. 0s. 9d. respectively, £18. 12s. 5d. of the latter sum being reserved to pay expenditure on School Board cases.

GRANTS.—Grants of £10, £10, £7, and £15 had been made to the St. Saviour's, St. George's East, Newington, and Whitechapel Committees respectively.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on October 23 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Messrs. Barrington, Bousfield, Brand, Edgcombe, and Fuller.

The receipt from the Charity Commissioners of a collection of Papers relating to Charities was reported.

VAGRANCY.

Major FitzRoy having consented to his motion standing over to the next week,

The Rev. H. I. Cummins called attention to the great increase of vagrancy in the City, and quoted facts showing that the applications had increased from 55 in May to 909 in October, notwithstanding a very careful supervision by the police during the last month. He further stated that many of the more recent applicants for bread appeared to be destitute wayfarers, but that in the anomalous state of Poor-law administration they could not be referred to the relieving officer with any certainty of relief during the day. He moved—

That the President of the Local Government Board be requested to receive a deputation from the Council to direct his attention to the great and alarming increase of vagrant destitution in the metropolis during the last few months, as shown by the applications for bread at the offices of the Society, and to urge the necessity of instant measures to meet it.

* The estimated liabilities were £700, exclusive of £600 required for District Committees during the current quarter.

Mr. Edgcombe seconded.

Mr. A. H. Hill thought that the co-operation of the Mendicity Society should be obtained, and the Organising Secretary suggested that the leading members of the Metropolitan Boards of Guardians should be invited to take part in any deputation that might be arranged. He thought that the present method of giving bread at the offices to destitute wayfarers, though bad in principle, was good as a matter of policy.

Mr. J. R. Holland feared that any extension of relief to vagrants in the middle of the day would only lead to an increase in the disease.

Mr. Bousfield stated that he had some time since received an official reply, that the present law, if duly administered, was sufficient to meet the case.

Major FitzRoy said there was no increase in the number of vagrants at St. George's, Hanover Square.

Mr. Peters said that at Stepney there was a decided increase; and

Mr. Maurice said the same was the case at Hampstead.

The Rev. Harvey Brookes thought that the matter was urgent, many deserving persons were evidently applying in a state of utter destitution.

Mr. Cummins having replied, his resolution was put and carried.

MR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

Mr. Bousfield called the attention of the Council to the relations of the Society to Mr. Barnardo's institutions, but after some discussion agreed to withdraw his resolution.

The Council then adjourned.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.*

CHARITY ORGANISATION IN ITS CHRISTIAN ASPECT, WITH REFERENCE TO ALMSGIVING; AND MEDICAL AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTIONS, THEIR USE AND ABUSE.

A correspondent has sent us the account of the discussion on the above subject which appeared in Church Bells of the 20th October last. This account is more detailed than that which we published last week from the Guardian, and we give it at length, omitting the substance of the paper read by Dr. Fairlie Clarke and the speech of Dr. Richardson, which have already been given in a sufficiently complete form.

SECTION HALL, WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON. 2.30 TO 5. OCT. 17.

The Section-room at 2.30 presented a very different appearance to the morning. It was pretty full at the commencement, and kept up its numbers throughout, though a large number fluctuated between it and the Congress Hall, and heard a part of each. The interest in the discussion was sustained capitally to the end, and speakers and listeners were unflagging, so that an important subject was left well turned over but not exhausted.

The Bishop of Dover took the chair, and called on Archdeacon Sir Lovelace Stamer, Bart., to read his first paper, in the absence of the Earl of Aberdeen. The subject was, 'Charity Organisation in its Christian aspect with reference to Almsgiving; and Medical and Provident Institutions, their use and abuse.'

The Archdeacon urged that Charity Organisation was a matter of Christian concern, that that lavish distribution might be avoided which, far from being twice blessed, does harm to the lazy and selfish giver, and to the idle and designing receiver. To cut the career of the professional beggar short was desirable. An immense sum was squandered in London in private charity, and organisation was very helpful in guiding the giver and improving the condition of the poor. He offered a practical suggestion for parochial almsgiving. Far better that the clergy should here remain in the background, and that district visitors should not be mixed up with this relief; and he considered that a parochial mission-woman was the best agent for this purpose, to carry the relief resolved upon round, either in kind or more seldom in money. In a smaller parish, the clergyman might separate between his visits for spiritual comfort and temporal relief. Relief thus systematically administered was far preferable to occasional gifts, and this and gifts to charitable objects, as provident dispensaries, would fitly employ the alms of the congregation. Our aim should be to provide for the self-respect and independence of the people.

The Rev. Harry Jones said of the Charity Organisation Society that it was a new broom, and might be thought 'to sweep too clean.' Its work lay with open administration of charity, not with secret giving. But how useful it was, notwithstanding prejudices, to have such an association at hand, ready to do the dirty work of difficult inquiry, from which many would shrink. The Charity Organisation Society makes a better system of giving possible; and certainly a man can show mercy with cheerfulness better if he knows he is not deceived, and is relieved from the disagreeable uncertainty of not knowing whether he has done most good or harm. The work of the Society was in harmony with the true law of Christianity, since it checked falsehood and improvidence, and made Christian charity more true.

The Rev. R. Linklater, another East-end incumbent, who, like Mr. Jones, was much cheered on coming forward, spoke of the true motives of Christian almsgiving from love to men for Jesus' sake—a matter of deep principle and sacrifice. He regretted the loss of the share of the ancient tithes, and the suppression of the monasteries, which had supported so many of the poor.

The Rev. J. D. McGachen, Bethnal Green, said he was driven to take an interest years ago in Charity Organisation, because it seemed to him that Christianity was at stake in the East of London. Thousands of pounds went there uselessly. There were people who expected five shillings a head almost to go to church, and others who were all things to all sects to get their alms. Very affecting was the speaker's description of the real, deep poverty which hid itself in that part of London in sorrow and shame. Such the Church must seek and tend; but many others who fed on charity undeservedly should be exposed. The Charity Organisation Society met a crying need: it was young, and its work was old; it was yet imperfect.

The Rev. Chas. Bull wished a separation in charitable relief between those who had parish relief and those who had not. The Rev. T. Franklin made a hot attack on the charitable ladies, whom he called the Bashi-Bazouks of the regular army of well-regulated charity bestowers. He wished those helped who helped themselves; and had found in Leamington the value of a Charity Organisation, though the kind ladies distrusted. The Rev. J. Cowell, St. John's, Paddington, did not like Sir L. Stamer's scheme, because it placed so much power in the hands of a mission-woman. He had a system which worked well. The visitors recommended cases on slips of paper, and a committee of the parish considered each case and sent proper relief by the visitors to them. Mr. M'Innes feared that some thought the giving of money was charity, whereas people must give, and follow up the giving. People gloried now in all organisation; but we must not give a tenth, or more, and think that then the rest was ours to spend as we liked. The Rev. Henry Wright, in a vigorous speech, thought the blot was the bad administration of the Poor Law, and he wished ladies to try and examine the condition of the poor in the workhouses.

BOOKS ON CHARITY AND CHARITABLE RELIEF.

M. Bruno-Gambini, one of the original Committee of the Bureau Central de Bienfaisance at Geneva, has lately sent us a copy of his book on Christian Charity.* His view of the subject is likely to be of interest to those engaged in Charity Organisation.

Like the author of 'Dispauperisation,' he finds ample evidence to prove a case against a method of legal relief such as that which exists in England. But he places in the category of systems of legal relief the collective and individual charity which is practised in Italy, Spain, France, and Holland, and which, like legal charity, limits its sphere, for the most part, to the relief of physical wants. In support of this he quotes the evidence given in official inquiries in England, Switzerland, and other countries, and states that this evidence proves beyond a doubt that moral and physical misery increase in proportion to the money lavished on their relief, and that the creation of a new charitable institution augments the number of the poor, just as the opening out of a new market leads to an increase in manufacture. Taking, then, as his guide, numerous Scriptural precepts respecting the poor, he is unable to reconcile the charity there set forth with that usually advocated. From them, however, he draws the inference that there must be a moral element in charity, 'a sort of inward improvement in both the parties whom it has brought into contact'; and thus that charity must be personal. There are the contented poor and the pauperised poor, whose strength of character has been diminished. Their moral weakness is the principal cause of their distress. Labour and forethought are the only means by which the people can struggle against indigence. A man, except in unusual misfortunes, can, by the strength of his will, maintain himself above destitution; and what is more difficult still, after having fallen into destitution he may regain his position. Those energetic, proud, thrifty, and hard-working families, who reject aid and resist, support themselves and retrieve their position, while so many others become and remain for ever ruined, are a proof of this. What is necessary, therefore, is to 'destroy destitution' instead of relieving it; and to do this charity has not to act on the destitution itself, which is only an effect, but upon the moral causes of this effect, so as to check them, if possible.

He then traces the lapse of Christian charity, with the gradual change in the doctrines of the Church respecting it, to the time of Constantine, when charity became lukewarm, almshouses were established, 'la foi s'aristocratise et la Diaconie croule'; and he concludes that it is principally under the double influence of the legal alms of the Roman Empire, and of the doctrine that alms would redeem from sin, that Christian charity became a material charity, such as that generally practised at the present day.

Personal visitation of the poor, in order to aid them in soul and body, is, he believes, the basis of right charity; and he mentions three institutions that appear to work satisfactorily on this basis:—'Amies des pauvres' at Hamburg, the German Society of 'La Mission Interieure,' and the 'Association of Delegates of Benevolent Societies of Boston.' He considers the practice of these societies not unlike that of the early Church, and he quotes St. Cyprian to show that aid used to be granted not by chance, but with care, and preceded by an inquiry, in which the most exact and circumstantial information was obtained, the age of the applicant, his profession, the number of his children, his character, the cause of his distress, being entered in a special register or matricula.

As to the means of assisting a poor person, 'that is to say, a man who, in spite of his embarrassed position, has not altogether lost his moral power,' the charitable should aim at teaching him to provide for his own wants, and should encourage him to work and to be provident. In such charity as this there is the moral element. The motto of the Amies des pauvres is 'Prie et travaille,' its constant rule 'Aide toi et nous t'aiderons.' They consequently spare no effort to obtain work for the poor, to give them work, and even to get the shoemaker to make shoes, which are afterwards transferred to the destitute tailor, while the destitute tailor sews a coat which is destined for the shoemaker.

On the other hand, savings banks and benefit societies should be everywhere instituted and warmly supported. There is 'the certainty that the poorest workpeople, the most miserable population, can and do save money, and that thrift depends above all on the character of the individual.' This is proved by many inquiries into the subject, while we have the opinion of M. Guizot that 'if ever the poorer classes are to be relieved in a permanent manner, it will only be by institutions which have as their basis labour and foresight'; and the opinion of M. Jules Simon, who lays it down as a principle that no one but the poor man himself has the power of saving the poor from destitution, and who considers that association and thrift are only second to schools in relation to the material prosperity and moral advancement of the working classes.

Keeping these methods then in view, charity has to determine 'to relieve real indigence in the hope of curing it'; and it has to adopt two principles. It has to substitute 'an intelligent beneficence for the instinctive and blind desire to do good'; and it has 'to couple all material aid with some action which will apply to the moral element in the poor.' Then, if the case is one of a family which is in distress from vicious habits, the charitable should make the aid they offer conditional; if the family will not approve the condition, it is only charitable not to relieve; or, if the case is one in which the misconduct of the head of the family is the cause of distress, material aid will, besides other evils, only weaken his responsibility, and it is uncharitable to give unless the gift is conditional. And thus in all cases, and especially those in which there is a relationship with its accompanying responsibilities, the charitable should make it a rule to aid those only who will aid themselves. The two parties in a charitable act, the giver and the receiver, must both be 'improved,' and this can only be done by 'visiting' and personal influence, and by 'conditional assistance.'

[To be continued.]

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of October 1877 was 37,797, and 40,141 received outdoor relief, making a total of 77,938. This was an increase of 871 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 134, 3,787, and 12,525 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 844. This was a decrease of 45 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 53 on the corresponding day of last year.

NEW YORK STATE BOARD OF CHARITIES.—I.

The volume containing the Tenth Annual Report of the State Board of Charities for the State of New York divides itself into three parts: the Report proper, in which the work of the Board in its different branches is briefly stated; the evidence collected in a, so far as possible, exhaustive inquiry on the causes of pauperism; and a series of conclusions based on this evidence. This evidence and these conclusions form part of the Report of Mr. C. S. Hoyt, Secretary to the Board.

The Board are able to state that 'the accommodation for the blind of both sexes, suited by age and otherwise for instruction, are believed to be, for the time being, adequate to all those seeking admission.'

This is a striking contrast to the state of things here. In the United Kingdom there are upwards of 30,000 blind persons, of whom there are scarcely 800 at work in industrial institutions, while there are believed to be nearly 10,000 of them able-bodied and capable of contributing to their own livelihood. In the metropolis there are six industrial and training and eighteen pension and other societies for the blind. Yet of the 3,000 blind persons in London, industrial training is only available for 50.

In consequence of the number of unteachable idiots, both children and adults, in families or county poor-houses, the Board have been induced to recommend 'the establishment of a custodial institution for unteachable idiots, in which there shall be complete separation of the sexes, with proper arrangements and oversight.'

Referring to the county poor-houses, the Board report as follows:—'Among the more important changes effected in the management of the poor-houses, since the Report referred to, have been the removal of the violent and disturbed chronic insane to the appropriate State institution for this class, and the transfer of the children, temporarily, to asylums or family homes. A more careful scrutiny regarding admissions to poor-houses is generally exercised by officials, the able-bodied class being rejected, and a better system of discipline, in most cases, is enforced and maintained. The removal from the poor-houses of some of the classes referred to has greatly changed the character of these institutions, so that, from being the abodes of the able-bodied idle and vagrant, as well as nurseries of pauperism and crime for children, they have become largely homes for the aged and infirm, furnishing also comfortable accommodation for the enfeebled and sick. As such they attract the notice of the charitable and benevolent more generally than heretofore, thus securing, in the case of the poor, the gratuitous services of large numbers of intelligent, zealous, and earnest persons. It is believed that these volunteer agencies will hereafter multiply, as opportunities for usefulness offer, and the value of their services in various localities is recognised.'

In Reporter No. 230, p. 152, will be found a note of what has been done in Whitechapel in bringing charitable effort to the aid of the work-house system, as it now exists. The Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants is working on this method. The extension of work of this nature was advocated at the recent Church Congress.

Referring to Dispensaries, the Board states, that 'the number of Dispensaries in large cities seems to be greater than public necessity demands, and may tend measurably to encourage unnecessary application for gratuitous medical aid. To guard against imposition, one of these institutions recently adopted the plan of collecting a small sum monthly from each patient, and a considerable income was derived from this source.'

Under Act chapter 661 of the laws of 1873, provision is made for the support and care, by the State, of certain persons having no legal settlement, in such poor-houses and almshouses as may be designated by the Board. There are 11 State almshouses for State paupers. 'The beneficial result of the Act, both in its social and economic bearings, will be best seen by a brief summary of its operations. The whole number of commitments to September 30, 1876, as has been shown, was 1,850. Of this number 1,048 have been sent to the care of friends, or places of settlement in other States or countries; 31 placed by adoption into families; and 404 discharged upon recovery from the disease or infirmity for which they were committed. This shows 1,483, or over 80 per cent. of those committed thus restored to self-support, or placed under the authorities of other States or countries liable for their maintenance. A few only of those aided or sent out of the State have subsequently applied for relief.' But for this it is probable that 60 per cent., or 890 persons, would have become 'fixed public burdens.' The expenses have been less than $18,000 per annum.

The increase of able-bodied vagrants is noticed. It is calculated that last year (1876) $200,000 were expended in their relief by officials; and a proportionately large sum must have been spent by private individuals. The charges for arrests, commitments, etc., must have been very considerable, the cost of one magistrate alone being $2,000. 'These men and women are generally debased. . . . As they pass from town to town they spread moral contagion, and when they rest in a county poor-house they corrupt all those who are better than they when committed. In the county jails they are thrown into close and intimate companionship with persons detained as witnesses, and with young men and women arrested on suspicion, and here again they are centres of evil.'

The Board recommend the establishment of workhouses in which the vagrants shall be committed for terms of sufficient length, that they may be weaned from their evil ways and companions, and better thoughts and habits taught them. The tramps, it is remarked, are generally young men, and the number of native Americans among them is increasing to an alarming extent.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES.—XIII.

INVESTIGATION AND CHARITY.—There should be no blinking of this question [what that is which we owe to humanity, when a case of distinct undeniable suffering and want comes in authentic exhibition before us]; and it were the symptom of a weak and worthless cause did we seek to evade it. We desire no exemption for our philanthropist from any of those moral obligations which, whether morally or Christianly, are alike binding upon all; and all we claim for him is the privilege of ascertaining the real state of every applicant who lays the case of his necessities before him.

It is surely no unfair demand that when one man places himself in the relation of a suppliant to another, that other should be entitled to place himself in the relation of an inquisitor over him; and when we make use of this term, we do not mean that the inquiry should be conducted with harshness or insolence, for, on the principle of rendering honour to all men, it ought to be conducted with the most perfect kindness, and courtesy, and delicacy. All that we insist for is, that he who seeks of another's bounty should also submit to another's scrutiny. In the denunciation just quoted upon him who steels himself against a brother's imploring cry, it is presupposed that he knows the cry to be a true one. 'If he seeth his brother have need,' give him then a sight of the necessity, that he may know what he is doing.—On the Sufficiency of the Parochial System, by Dr. Chalmers.

INCREASE IN PAUPERISM.—Speaking of the increase in pauperism during the month of August, the Globe says:—'Round the skirts of each handicraft there are numbers of outsiders who manage to pick up a scanty living by doing odd jobs. Whenever a strike takes place these waifs lose their only means of subsistence, and are forced to fall back upon parochial assistance, which too often converts them into professional paupers.'

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL.

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 234.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is
the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicancy.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

Estimates for the Financial Year 1877-8.—The attention of District Committees is called to the following resolution of Council of July 3, 1876 :—

That within a month after September 30 of each year ESTIMATES of the probable expenses of each Committee for THE ENSUING YEAR, together with the BALANCE-SHEET FOR THE PAST YEAR, be sent to the Secretary of the Council, to be laid before the Quarterly Finance Sub-Committee, in order that they may, as soon as possible, have the means of passing the Estimates for the District Committee Aid Fund.

Forms for the Estimates and Balance-sheets have been forwarded to the District Committees. It is very desirable that District Committees likely to require grants should transmit them, duly filled up, to the Central Office at an early date.

ILLUSTRATIVE CASES.—District Committees which have not yet done so are requested to send to the Secretary by the 10th instant, if possible, notes of cases of interest dealt with by them during the past month, for insertion in the next monthly Reporter.

PERSONAL WORK AMONG THE POOR.—A circular letter, calling attention to the resolutions of Council of the 23rd

July last, is about to be sent to District Committees. Copies of the Report of the Committee on this subject can be had by District Committees on application.

LECTURES.—The Secretary of the Council will, in accordance with instructions from the Administrative Committee, be glad to make arrangements with District Committees for one or more popular lectures, by competent persons, on general subjects connected with Charity, Provident Habits, and the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor.

ST. GILES'.—Mr. R. L. Kenyon has been appointed Hon. Secretary, vice Mr. H. N. Hoare, who is now acting as representative of this Committee.

WOOLWICH.—Colonel Oldfield has resigned the post of representative of this Committee.

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, the 12th instant:

1. Major FitzRoy to move :—
‘That whereas at present great confusion exists in the minds, not only of the general public, but even of supporters of this Society, as to its functions in the matter of giving relief, it is advisable to take steps more completely to dissociate Charity Organisation from Charitable Relief. To this end the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to direct their attention to making such arrangements that, on and after January 1, 1879, no relief by grant be made, from its ordinary funds, by any Committee of this Society; and that this important matter may be kept constantly before the Council, the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to report progress quarterly, commencing in January 1878.’
2. Mr. W. F. Lawrence to move :—
(1) That the Report on Adequate Relief be taken into consideration ;
(2) And to move on the Report, that whereas it appears that cases exist which are not adequately relieved by any means this Society at present possesses, it be resolved :
(a) That a short statement of such cases be inserted by advertisement in the Times, Daily News, Standard, and Daily Telegraph, on the first Monday in each month during a period of four months, commencing on December 3.
(b) That the advertisements be addressed as from the Central Office, but be drafted and paid for by the District Committees inserting the same, who should conduct all correspondence with the public relating to them, and be responsible for the bona fides of the case advertised.
(c) That a statement of each case be presented to the Districts Sub-Committee within the first fortnight of each month, who shall have the power of veto in each case within one week of such presentation, subject, however, to appeal to the Administrative Committee by the Committee presenting the case.
(d) That the Secretary to the Council address a letter to the principal newspapers, to inform the public of the proposed scheme.’
3. Rev. R. J. Simpson to move :—
‘That the clause in the Manual of the Society (page 12), which sets forth “That the Charity Agents are allowed in cases of absolute hunger to give bread,” be rescinded, and that this resolution be duly reported to the Metropolitan Poor Law Authorities.’
4. Mr. J. R. Holland to move :—
‘That, while the Council has no desire to curtail the powers of District Committees in dealing with starving persons, it cannot recommend them, as a rule, to give bread to those who are frequenting the casual wards and as such, receiving the relief which the Poor Law allows to such cases.’

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, November 1. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Holland, in the chair; Rear-Admiral Gardner, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Rev. S. A. Barnett, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Barrington, Brown, Bevan, Copeman, Crowder, Edgcombe, Fuller, Hill, Lawrence, Miner, Peters, Roberts, Robbins, Stevens, and Tidman. Mr. Rodger, visitor.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending October 27 the receipts had been £10 for the General Fund and £300 for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances* of the two funds on that day had been £93. 6s. 5d. and £278. 0s. 9d. respectively, £18. 12s. 5d. of the latter sum being reserved to pay expenditure on School Board cases.

GRANTS.—That grants as follows had been made:—Islington Committee, £60; Fulham, £35; Stepney, £30; Shoreditch, £15; St. Saviour's, £40; St. George's East, £25; Poplar, £35; St. Olave's, £70.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on October 30 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Messrs. Bousfield, Edgcombe, Fuller, Graham, and Lewis. Lady Wilson, Messrs. Roberts and Rodger, visitors.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on October 30 there had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Major FitzRoy, and Mr. Bevan.

VAGRANCY.

Mr. C. E. Maurice reported that the increase in vagrancy at Hampstead, which he had mentioned at a former meeting, had abated.

CHARITY ORGANISATION AND RELIEF.

Major FitzRoy made a few preliminary remarks on his notice of motion, and obtained permission to insert the words 'from its ordinary funds' after the words 'be made' in the motion as set down in the Reporter.

The Council then adjourned.

CONTRIBUTIONS.

The following contributions were received by the Council during the week ending November 3, 1877:—

Donations:—	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
De Winton, Col. . . .	1	1	0	Hansbury, F. L., Esq. . .	1	1	0
Sheppard, Mrs. M. . .	1	0	0	Liebenrood, Capt., R.N. .	1	0	0
Annual:—				Rushton, Mrs.	1	1	0
Bosanquet, F. A., Esq. .	1	1	0

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of October 1877 was 38,249, and 40,282 received outdoor relief, making a total of 78,531. This was a decrease of 593 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 111, 3,893, and 12,587 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 809. This was a decrease of 35 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 57 on the corresponding day of last year.

* The estimated liabilities were £650, exclusive of £300 required for District Committees during the current quarter.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

SHOREDITCH.—The Annual Report.—This Committee has dealt with 527 cases during the past year, as compared with 516 in 1875-6. Labourers (51), women obtaining a livelihood by charring and washing (45), needlewomen (38), general dealers (21), hawkers (19), and porters (15), form the larger part of the applicants. 456 had never subscribed to any club or benefit society.

PROVINCIAL.

NOTTINGHAM.—Medical Charities.—At the recent anniversary of the General Hospital the Weekly Board stated that they had received a report from the local Charity Organisation Society; and that they were of opinion that it would be of some public service to make it known as widely as possible. The report mentions that the usual request of those who are recommendations for begging is for linen, &c., to enable them to go into the hospital, 'but they sometimes say that they are waiting for a bed and have meanwhile nothing to live upon. Considerable ingenuity in counterfeiting sickness is frequently shown. These appeals appear to be generally successful, and there is reason to believe that the clothes and food obtained are sold, the real object of the beggars being to obtain money. The Committee would respectfully suggest that governors asked for recommendations should refer them to the office of this Society; where, if deserving, they would obtain not only recommendations, but also, when necessary, the linen and other articles required by in-patients, and even assistance to support them until they could be admitted. Recommendations presented by mendicants should be impounded and sent to this office, to which the applicants themselves should also be referred. The frequent allegations that applicants are known to the governors who have signed the recommendations, or that they have been inadequately relieved by the Society, should not be accepted without inquiry.'

One noteworthy case is reported:—'Thomas B., alias Thomas Smith.—This man has been known to the Committee for one year and a half as getting his living by begging with recommendations. His very sallow face and glassy eyes enable him to feign illness with great success. It may be mentioned that he has on the same day obtained an outdoor recommendation and a shilling from one governor, and an indoor recommendation and a walking-stick and food from another in a street close by. One of the recommendations was afterwards used for begging. Out of the last two years he has passed fourteen months in prison. On the 1st September last he was committed for a month for begging with a recommendation threatening to strike a servant-girl with his stick. On the 10th October he was again sent to gaol for a month for a similar offence.'

The Weekly Board further stated that 'the possession of a recommendation does not and cannot now always ensure admission for the patient. The pressure upon the hospital wards has of late years been so great that only the most severe cases can be taken in at once, and the rest have to wait their turn, often for many weeks, before they can be admitted.'

Lord Manvers, after urging the careful use of governors' recommendations, said that nothing could be more grievous than that an institution so valuable as this should be imposed upon, as it had been occasionally. He thought the position of the Charity Organisation Society, of which there was a very useful branch in this town, might be well employed in sifting cases that were brought before them.

WEST SUSSEX MENDICITY SOCIETY.—From the report of this Society it appears that in the year ending 29th September, 1873, the Society dealt with 6,247 tramps; in 1874 with 6,885; in 1875 with 5,264; in 1876 with 7,301; in 1877 with 11,891. There has been an increase of 4,590 in the past year. The increase in the number of persons apprehended under the Vagrant Act has been 43, i.e. 110, as against 67 in the year 1876.

FOREIGN.

VAGRANCY IN THE UNITED STATES.—Mr. Elihu Burritt, in a letter to the New York Tribune, expresses the opinion that begging must now be regarded as a permanent institution in America. If business prosperity increases to the full extent of the general hope, we shall find, he says, that the mobilised army of tramps will not disband or return, or rather resort to industrial life. We shall have to accept the situation, and make provision for it, as they do in other countries. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact; we have with us already all the classes that vice, poverty, and ignorance have made 'dangerous' in the Old World, and we must have the Old World institutions to protect society against them. We have nearly all the institutions except one, and that one has become an urgent, outspoken necessity. We must have the English workhouse, with whatever improvements we may add to it. We cannot afford or need one in every half-dozen towns, as in England, but we ought to have one in every county in our populous Northern States, or one within twenty-five miles of every town and village. Such an institution is as much needed as a county gaol. It should not be a prison or poorhouse, neither for criminals nor indigent invalids, nor mental incompetents. It should be especially fitted for the class of actual or prospective vagrants who claim to beg only because they cannot find work. It should fully meet their case, and provide such an amount and variety of outdoor and indoor labour as should not only pay their board, but also something over for the poorhouse or asylum. If, like a similar class in Japan, they should be sent out by the institution with a suit of clothes and a little money as a reward for honest work, it would enhance the merit of the system. Such a workhouse must be established in a country town, with plenty of land for summer work, and as many mechanical industries as practicable for indoor employment in winter. With such an institution, every town and village could make a clean sweep of tramps, for it could say to everyone of the able-bodied vagrants:—"There is the workhouse, within a day's walk at the farthest. There you will find plenty of work, and better food and lodging than you can get by begging." This would test the motive of their vagrancy. If they refuse the workhouse they must accept the prison. "There is no discharge from this war" with voluntary indolence and vagabondage. We must supplement our gaols, poorhouses, and asylums with this English institution. It must be a county establishment, at least in our most populous States. And there is hardly a county in them all that has not had an amount of property destroyed by tramps equal to the cost of a workhouse and 300 acres of land. The location, erection, and working of such an establishment are matters of detail which the county would decide for itself. Its authority to found such an institution could be obtained through an easy process of legislation.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES.—XIV.

WEALTH AND CHARITY.—The great use of wealth is to do good with it . . . it is not a property, but a stewardship. It is true that when compassion is given way to as a heedless and headlong impulse, it often does mischief. But to regulate is not to destroy; and when told it is blessed to consider the poor, we are not to interpret this into a call upon the understanding to overbear the heart, but a call to bethink ourselves, not how to do little, but how to do the most, or how to do the best for them. And it will sometimes turn out that the best thing is to give, and with an unsparing hand, when benevolence may take to itself a free and full indulgence. In matters of philanthropy it is not the office of consideration to damp the benevolence, but of benevolence to prompt the consideration. Some are jealous of all thought in the business of charity, as if it savoured of the coldness and rigidity of calculation; but let us remind them that it is the part of the liberal man not only to do, but to devise liberal things; and that in the very soul or actuating spirit of liberality—not the spirit of that avarice which withholds, but of that wisdom which can devise the way that is most prolific of blessings to the poor, and which rejoices therein—not because the least expensive, but because the most effective method of well-doing.—On the Sufficiency of the Parochial System, by Dr. CHALMERS.

THE NATIONAL PENNY BANK.—We hear that this bank has now an average of £800 a week in receipts, without withdrawals, and that at present they hold deposits to the amount of £33,000, as against £11,000 this time last year.

PAROCHIAL COUNCILS.—It appears from the last statement of the accounts of St. Peter's Parochial Council that the receipts for 1876 were £1,235. 14s. 5d. Of this £632. 13s. was received at offertories at the churches of St. Peter and St. John. The subscriptions were £317. 13s. 6d., and District Visitors contributed £59. 11s. 5d. The expenditure in relief was—by Permanent Fund, £699. 4s. 6d.; by Temporary Fund (other than medical), £211. 19s. 11d.; on medical certificate, £107. 17s. 2d.

CORRECTION.—The Guardian, from which our report of the proceedings of the Church Congress on the subject of the 'Christian Aspects of Charity Organisation, &c.' (see Reporter No. 232, p. 165), was taken, has, in its issue of the 31st October, 1877, published the following correction: "The name of the Rev. J. D. McGachen, vicar of St. Bartholomew's, Bethnal Green, was erroneously given as 'Wigan' in our brief notice of the discussion at the Church Congress on 'Charity Organisation.'" Mr. McGachen said he had been driven to take an interest years ago in the subject, because it seemed to him that Christianity was at stake in the East of London. There were people who almost expected five shillings a head to go to church, and others who were all things to all sects to get their alms. The Church must seek and tend those who were really suffering, but those who fed on charity undeservedly should be exposed; and he believed that the Charity Organisation Society met a crying need."

Mr. McGachen was until recently the Hon. Secretary of the Bethnal Green Committee of the Charity Organisation Society, an office which he had held from the time of the establishment of that Committee.

BOOKS ON CHARITY AND CHARITABLE RELIEF.

M. Bruno-Gambini then sketches the organisation which should be the framework of an association whose members would work in this spirit. Its main features are similar to those of the Charity Organisation Society. For information and inquiry a Central Committee is necessary; for assistance personal and individual work is required. This, speaking generally, is the method of procedure. Assistance is given during inquiry; the inquiry is conducted by a visitor, who reports to the Committee; the Committee decide on the report what, if any, subsequent action should be taken; and the case is then entrusted to the visitor, the Society placing, if necessary, the means of assistance at his disposal.

With regard to the funds required for such an organisation he says: "It is true that a centralised administration necessitates considerable expenditure, but it is not necessary to regard it, in this special instance, as forming part of the general and ordinary expenses of a society, and still less as money squandered to the detriment of the poor. To forget that the centralisation of information renders the moral work possible, and forms, so to speak, a part of it, would be a great error. . . . At present private charity remits a part of the funds at its disposal to public charitable institutions in order that they may distribute them. The contrary to this should be done, or, at least, private charity ought to be able to act as the intermediary, which redistributes the sums which public aid has entrusted to it."

The only advantage of 'collective' charity is the centralisation of information; and so impressed is the author with the necessity of wise personal and individual influence, and the great evil of material charity unaccompanied by it, as it must be in most charitable institutions, that he quotes with satisfaction the following passage from a speech of M. Cherbuliez: "He could not understand the feeling of satisfaction which the greater number of the delegates (at the Congrès de bienfaisance de Bruxelles, 1856) showed when they spoke with admiration of the number and variety of the charitable institutions of their country. It seemed to him to be like boasting of the sanitary state of a country, and alleging, as a proof, the large number of doctors who practised there. And how would it be if these doctors, instead of being the sign of the evil, were the cause of it? . . . For his part, that would be the happiest day of his life on which, instead of boasting of the charitable institutions of his country, he could come and say to them, 'No, gentlemen, in Switzerland there are none, or but few crèches, or infant schools, because poor mothers have the leisure, the will, and the ability to take care of their children themselves. In Switzerland there are fewer almshouses than anywhere else, because the workmen of that country have a sufficiently careful spirit, and sufficiently high wages to enable them to husband their resources so as to provide for old age and accidents. In Switzerland but little alms is given, for the workman renounces charitable gifts more readily than his independence and his dignity.'"

With regard to State or legal aid, M. Bruno-Gambini considers that it ought to be limited to the relief of affliction arising from absolute incapacity to work, from old age, or from physical and mental infirmities. It ought, except in cases of emergency of a temporary nature, to be entirely dissociated from almsgiving, whether bestowed at the houses of the poor or in any other way. Such charity is private charity, which by the conjunction of individual and associated action, should be 'organised' so as to avoid overlapping, with its consequent abuses, and to act in harmony with State relief.

CHARITIES FOR THE BLIND.—A new Asylum for the Blind has just been opened at Plymouth.

HOSPITAL FOR INEBRIATES.—On the 29th ultimo, at a meeting at the Mansion House, it was resolved to establish an industrial home for the reformation of women and girls addicted to drink. £4,000, of which £300 had been obtained, was required for this purpose. Yet is it advisable to establish one more charitable institution? In New York there is a 'State Inebriate Asylum' which provides for a limited number of public patients committed by county judges or sent by superintendents of the poor, under the authority of the Legislature. Its income is, however, derived mainly from the receipts from paying patients. It is questionable whether it is desirable to ask for State aid, except on the ground that the inebriates are, in point of fact, an 'afflicted class,' and that, by curing drunkenness, imbecility and insanity are prevented. But, if there were certified inebriate asylums to which, on adequate payment, or, when the patients could contribute, on part payment, guardians, magistrates, and charitable persons might send cases, and at which also paying patients would be received, the want would be met, and while an honourable and charitable work was imposed on the medical profession, there would be no temptation to make charity an unwise and unjust substitute for professional duty.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Council does not consider itself responsible for any of the opinions expressed by its Correspondents.]

EDUCATION AND ILL-HEALTH.

To the Editor of the 'Charity Organisation Reporter.'

DEAR SIR,—I should like to call the attention of the District Committees to an ably suggestive article in the British Medical Journal of the 13th ult., on 'Primary Education: its Sanitary and Medical Aspects,' by Dr. Francis Warner, M.D., one of the Visiting Physicians of the East London Hospital for Children.

In it he speaks of the sufferings which children are often subjected to, from the idea that they are idle or inattentive at school, when they are really the victims of ill-health or inherited disease. For instance, Dr. Warner writes—'We have several times met with cases of slight chorea, where the child had been in trouble at school because he "would not keep quiet"; the schoolmaster not suspecting that he had to deal with a case of brain disease.'

If a simple fact like the above were made known to those who have to do with Board and other schools for the poor, it might save much unintentional ill-treatment.

October 24, 1877.

I am, yours faithfully,

H. N. D.,

Hon. Sec. Mile End Committee.

THE INDIAN FAMINE FUND.

To the Editor of the 'Charity Organisation Reporter.'

SIR,—The Indian Famine Fund has now reached a magnificent sum, and it has become a great national testimony of sympathy with our Indian fellow-subjects in the overwhelming misfortune which has come upon them.

Nothing can be more cheering than the benevolence which has prompted the subscription, and if its daily exhibition is now only able to show itself in smaller additions, it is mainly because the rich cream of human kindness has been already skimmed. There is, however, another cause which is operating to a considerable extent in keeping back subscriptions, and which ought not to be difficult to remove by a full and detailed statement of the manner in which the fund is being applied, and clearly showing the propriety of, and necessity for, such application of charitable funds.

For want of this information it is the opinion of many that the necessity for it is not apparent. It has throughout been stated by the highest official persons, from the Governor-General downwards, and only recently by the Marquis of Salisbury, that there is no want of money within the power of the Indian Government to do all that is required; and, indeed, this could not be otherwise. The Government, they say, is also fully alive to its entire responsibility to deal with the famine. This could not mean that the Government would wait till the poor natives were half-starved before they gave them either free relief or wages on the works. The Government must be constantly taking the largest outlook to prevent as well as to relieve famine and starvation, and their consequences, and if the crops cannot be sown for want of seed, it would, in ordinary course, provide what is wanted to afford both present work and to avert future danger.

Of course, in doing all this under its own heavy responsibility, the Government has the advantage of carrying out its own work in its own way and by its own officers; and the difficulty is in seeing how an external body, independent and without Government responsibility, can find necessary work to do, which is not governed by the high duties already being carried out by the Government.

If the fund were to be handed over to the Government merely to aid in lessening the total cost, and thus to save taxation, it would still be a splendid instance of national sympathy; but it is not paid to or being administered by the Government, and what is now needed is to know exactly in what way it finds its high use, without detracting from the responsibility of the Indian Government to do all that is necessary.

A satisfactory answer to this question would vastly increase the fund.

THE BLANTYRE COLLIERY ACCIDENT AND A MINERS' PERMANENT RELIEF FUND.

To the Editor of the 'Charity Organisation Reporter.'

SIR,—I observe that an appeal is being made with great success for the sufferers by the dreadful colliery accident at Blantyre.

Whatever the claim on the public may be for such a subscription, we hope it will only be granted on condition that steps are first taken to organise a 'Miners' Permanent Relief Fund Benefit Society,' on the lines of the society of the same name established at Newcastle in 1862 for the counties of Northumberland and Durham, and since then of others successfully inaugurated and in operation in the Midland Counties and Yorkshire.

The excellent society at Newcastle is now in its full usefulness, and after providing for all claims upon it for the year 1876, added £11,603 to its reserve fund, which then amounted to £33,587, invested at good interest. It numbers 50,000 miners, having added 12,000 during the last year.

During the year 1876 widows and children received £5,774; permanently disabled, £2,675; minor accident allowances, £4,958; aged miners, £206; and legacies were bought (life insurances) for which there were payments of £844.

All this is achieved by the men subscribing 3d. each per week, or 1s. per month, with some special contributions, which produced £24,033, to which 20 per cent. was added by the colliery owners, producing £3,912, and interest on investments of reserve fund, £885.

Surely a society like this, supported by the men and owners themselves at so little individual sacrifice, and calculated to provide for all casualties, and for relief in sickness and old age, is better than having to appeal to the public for charity every time that a large accident occurs. As for small accidents, they are not sufficiently exciting to call out the sympathy of the public, and though in the aggregate they exceed the large ones, they get no relief. I therefore appeal to the men and owners to help themselves out of the large sums they are and have been receiving as wages and profits in coal; to spare the public these appeals in future; and to cultivate the principle of self-help, providence, and thrift.

The Hon. Secretary of the Newcastle Society is Henry Taylor, Esq., Quay Side, Newcastle, who will supply copies of the rules and report of this society on application.

Your obedient servant,

W.

THE AMALGAMATED CARBIDRIVERS' SOCIETY.—The Chairman, at a meeting of this Society held on Sunday evening last, said 'that the Association was entirely self-helping—so much so, indeed, that they had refused many kind offers of assistance from ladies and gentlemen.' In four years the Society had spent £105 in legal expenses in defence of members; £280 for sick pay; £100 for funeral expenses; £50 in trades' benefits; £36 to members in difficulties; and it had £1,000 in hand.

The 'CHARITY ORGANISATION REPORTER' is published weekly during the Sittings of Council; on the second Thursday in each month throughout the year a Double Number is published.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. LOCH, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

ST. PANCRA'S, SOUTH.—The Hon. Secretary of this Committee would be glad to know of some home or institution, in town or country, that would take in an old lady who has a small income of her own.

ST. OLAVE'S.—This Committee would be glad to hear of suitable employment for an applicant, aged 35, who is a book-binder, but who, owing to an accident, has lost his left hand. He is about to be supplied with an artificial hand, which may be of great service to him. The applicant bears a good character.

Persons who think they may be able to assist, are requested to communicate direct with the Hon. Secretary of the St. Olave's Committee, 172 Tooley Street, S.E.

ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST.—Major Meadows has been elected one of the representatives of this Committee during the absence of Lord Dunsany, who has temporarily resigned the post.

PERSONAL WORK AMONG THE POOR.—The attention of District Committees is drawn to a letter on the above subject on p. 177.

WORK OF THE COUNCIL, 1876-7.—The attention of District Committees is drawn to the statement of the work of the Council for the year 1876-7, which has been drawn up for insertion in their Annual Reports, in accordance with a resolution of Council of July 3, 1875.*

LECTURES.—The Secretary of the Council will, in accordance with instructions from the Administrative Committee, be glad to make arrangements with District Committees for one or more popular lectures, by competent persons, on general subjects connected with Charity, Provident Habits, and the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor.

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, the 19th instant:

I. (1) To the motion of Major FitzRoy on the subject of Relief and Organisation (see p. 177), the following amendment has been moved by Mr. Wightman Wood, and seconded by the Rev. H. I. Cummins, viz.: 'That all words after "to this end" be inserted, and the following words added: "The District Committees of the Society are requested to discontinue as soon as is reasonably practicable, the practice of making grants (loans excepted), from their ordinary funds, and to collect, if possible, a special fund from which to make grants in accordance with the Society's principles."' (2) The Rev. R. J. Simpson has given notice of the following amendment, viz.: 'That, while acknowledging the force of the principle involved in Major FitzRoy's motion, this Council is of opinion that the time has not arrived when the Society can dispense with the power of relief from its own resources in the last resort.'

(3) Mr. C. A. Miner has given notice of the following amendment:—'That the motion be altered as follows, viz.: "That whereas at present great confusion exists in the minds, not only of the general public, but even of supporters of this Society, as to its functions in the matter of giving relief, it is advisable to take steps to make more widely known the established principles of the Society with respect to granting relief, as set forth in the Manual of the Society, viz.:

"(i) When other charities are unable to afford the requisite assistance to such cases (cases of temporary distress, with evidence of good character and thrift), the Committees assist them, if the funds entrusted to them admit of this.

"(ii) The Committees cannot undertake to find the pensions which chronic cases need; but where individuals or special charities are willing to take charge of these, the Committees are ready to send them the names of persons ascertained to be deserving."

(4) Capt. Fortescue has given notice of the following amendment, viz.: 'That whereas at present great confusion exists in the minds, not only of the general public, but even of supporters of this Society, as to its functions in the matter of giving relief, it is advisable to take steps more completely to dissociate Charity Organisation from Charitable Relief.

'To this end, District Committees are requested to collect money, either for the working expenses of the Society or for relief, and to keep the two accounts distinct, and that after January 1, 1879, no grant to any District Committee for relief will be made by this Council (except money specially placed in its hands for the purpose of relief), but all grants will be considered as for working expenses; and, further, that it be a recommendation to District Committees to point out that, in collecting money for relief, no part of the money so collected is used for office expenses.'

II. Mr. W. F. Lawrence to move, on the Report on Adequate Relief being taken into consideration: 'That whereas it appears that cases exist which are not adequately relieved by any means this Society at present possesses, it be resolved:

'(a) That a short statement of such cases be inserted by advertisement in the Times, Daily News, Standard, and Daily Telegraph, on the first Monday in each month during a period of four months, commencing on December 3.

'(b) That the advertisements be addressed as from the Central Office, but be drafted and paid for by the District Committees inserting the same, who should conduct all correspondence with the public relating to them, and be responsible for the bona fides of the case advertised.

'(c) That a statement of each case be presented to the District Sub-Committee within the first fortnight of each month, who shall have the power of veto in each case within one week of such presentation, subject, however, to appeal to the Administrative Committee by the Committee presenting the case.

'(d) That the Secretary to the Council address a letter to 'the principal newspapers, to inform the public of the proposed scheme.'

III. (1) Rev. R. J. Simpson to move:—

'That the clause in the Manual of the Society (page 12), which sets forth "That the Charity Agents are allowed in cases of absolute hunger to give bread," be rescinded, and that this resolution be duly reported to the Metropolitan Poor Law Authorities.'

(2) Mr. J. R. Hollond to move:—

'That, while the Council has no desire to curtail the powers of District Committees in dealing with starving persons, it cannot recommend them, as a rule, to give bread to those who are frequenting the casual wards and, as such, receiving the relief which the Poor Law allows to such cases.'

(3) Mr. Wightman-Wood has given notice of the following amendment to the Rev. R. J. Simpson's motion, viz.:—

'That the word "rescinded" be omitted, and the following words substituted, "altered so as to apply to residents only, and not to vagrants."

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, November 8. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Holland, in the chair; Lieut.-Col. Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Captain Fortescue, Rev. S. A. Barnett, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Bevan, Brown, Crowder, Hill, Hoare, Lawrence, Peters, Roberts, and Robbins.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending November 3 the receipts had been £16. 17s. 4d. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances* of the two funds on that day had been £544. 14s. 1d. and £18. 0s. 9d. respectively, the whole of the latter sum being reserved to meet expenditure on School Board cases.

PERSONAL WORK AMONG THE POOR.—The following letter had been sent to District Committees:—

‘Dear Sir,—I am directed by the Administrative Committee, in accordance with the resolution of Council of the 23rd July last (vide Reporter No. 226, p. 128), to call your attention to the resolutions passed by the Council at their meeting on that day, on the subject of Personal Work among the Poor, and to ask you to let me know in due course what steps your Committee have taken, or propose to take, to carry out the suggestions contained in those resolutions. The Council are of course aware that in some districts an organised system of personal work in connection with the Committees has been already instituted.

I am, dear Sir, yours truly,
C. S. LOCH, Secretary.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on November 6 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Mrs. Lathbury, Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, Messrs. Bousfield and Edcombe.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on November 6 there had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Mr. Bevan.

VAGRANCY IN THE DISTRICTS.

Rev. R. J. Simpson reported that several hundred applicants for bread had presented themselves at the Strand Committee offices.

The representative of the St. Olave's Committee said that there had been a large increase in their applications during the last few months.

Admiral Gardner reported a great increase at Eltham.

ORGANISATION AND RELIEF.

Letters having been read from Mr. W. Day and Mr. H. N. Hoare, Major FitzRoy moved the resolution of which he had given notice, viz.:—

‘That whereas at present great confusion exists in the minds, not only of the general public, but even of supporters of this Society, as to its functions in the matter of giving relief, it is advisable to take steps more completely to dissociate Charity Organisation from Charitable Relief. To this end the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to direct their attention to making such arrangements that, on and after January 1, 1879, no relief by grant be made, from its ordinary funds, by any Committee of this Society; and that this important matter may be kept constantly before the Council, the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to report progress quarterly, commencing in January 1878.’

He wished to clear away one or two misconceptions that some appeared to have entertained respecting the purpose of his motion. He did not propose any sudden change—the arrangement he advocated would not come into force till 1879. He did not wish District Committees to abandon their present system of making every effort to get relief.

The Council, however, should mean what they said as well as say what they meant. The Manual did not make any allusions to effectual relief being furnished by the Committees themselves. It had been argued that there was money enough spent in charity to meet the wants of the people; and that it was the business of the Society to see it well applied. It was in fact already the duty of the Committees to find out societies which were instituted for the purpose of dealing with and helping the cases that came before them. He proposed nothing new, and yet he proposed a change.

From the work at St. George's, Hanover Square, where, besides the cases of the Committee, he had good opportunities of acquainting himself with the action of other Committees, from the work at St. Olave's, and from that at the office of the Council, he had acquired considerable experience respecting the ability of the Committees to obtain relief. And he quoted several cases in which an exhaustive scrutiny of the charities had not obtained the required assistance.

On the other hand, he had no doubt that many persons had subscribed on the theory that they were giving to a Relief Society. In the cases of ‘Veta’ and of ‘Capt. Williams’ the Society had been blamed for not giving temporary relief. Similar blame was imputed to the St. George's, Hanover Square, Committee, in the case of a woman, in assisting whom £16 had been spent. The public did not ask for inquiry and report, in order that they might themselves carry on the work of relief; but they wished relief given for them. Yet it would be better, in his opinion, if the Society could expend a hundred per cent. in organisation, and nothing in relief.

The offices of the District Committees should be used as centres of information and inter-communication more than they were at present. He was glad that many persons of means were making this use of the machinery of the Society.

The Society for the Relief of Distress should, he believed, occupy the position of almoners, and dispense all necessary relief. He had heard many discussions as to the arrangements for relief, and he found, from the opinions entertained by several members of that Society, that the duty of dispensing relief was considered to devolve naturally upon them, while from the circumstances of our work, it was frequently taken up by our Committees instead.

Mr. E. Peters thought that the attention of District Committees should not, as was often necessarily the case at present, be confined to the work of relief. The difficult work of organisation was insufficiently done, and our Committees ought to have at hand more tabulated information on matters connected with the poor and charitable assistance generally.

Mr. F. D. Mocatta felt strongly on the subject. The Society was certainly established for investigation and organisation; but at the same time the conditions under which the Society had to work made it necessary to temporise. The Society's aim was to eliminate pauperism, not to cut the heads off paupers, or to argue that they need not exist. The strata of modern society were most various: there were the very rich; then those who had to live carefully; then the poor. Among these, too frequently, ignorance of the means of husbanding resources went hand-in-hand with want. There were the germs of self-help; there was intelligence; but the poor lacked information and knowledge.

This Society brought to the notice of members of other classes facts connected with the individual distress of the poor in this class, and its action tended to produce self-help. He had often received begging letters from persons whom he did not know. He referred them to the District Committees, and he was thus able to husband his relief fund. He always made it a rule to consider fully any case that was bien constaté. After detailing various cases that came under his notice, he said that, in his opinion, if there was a suitable relief society, application should be made to it; if there was no such relief society, application should be made to charitable individuals; if there was no such person to take the case up, the Society should deal with it. Every deserving case must in some way be effectually assisted. The Society should not be merely a distributor of relief—it should itself meet good cases.

Mr. C. L. Corkran entirely supported Mr. Mocatta. It would be fatal to the work of the Society in the poorer parts of London if investigation were not coupled with relief. He used the District Committees as a medium for the distribution of a large poor-fund; but if charities could not be found to fulfil their part in the administration of relief, greater efforts must be made to initiate more people in our principles and work. Circumstances might arise which would necessitate a considerable amount of relief being necessary.

Mr. Russell Barrington moved the following amendment:—

That the words ‘on or after the 1st January 1879,’ be omitted.

He considered that at present the Society should try and find other societies to relieve on its principles; but that it should on no account give up its work of relief. If this were done new organisations might spring up for no purpose but giving relief, entrusting the work without safeguards to volunteers. The Society, he thought, should stand by its principles, and the Co-operative Sub-Committee should take speedy and effective action in the direction indicated by the motion.

* The estimated liabilities were about £1,200, exclusive of £360 required for District Committees during the current quarter.

The amendment was not seconded.

Mr. Wightman Wood considered Mr. Mocatta's statement too theoretical. He agreed with Major FitzRoy as to the necessity for some change. Many persons subscribed with a view to assisting the Society in its subsidiary work of relief: their complaint that so little was spent in relief would be met by the amendment he proposed, viz. :—

That all words after 'to this end' be omitted, and that the following be added: 'The District Committees of the Society are requested to discontinue, as soon as is reasonably practicable, the practice of making grants (loans excepted) from their ordinary funds, and to collect, if possible, a special fund from which to make grants in accordance with the Society's principles.'

Relief could not be dissociated entirely from the organisation of charity. If the relief-function was abolished the work would be even more difficult, and the time occupied in obtaining relief would be even greater. By a division of funds the District Committees might obtain the support of those who would be more inclined to give for relief than for organisation, and vice versa.

Rev. H. I. Cummins seconded this amendment. He did not think the Society for the Relief of Distress could, or would be relied upon to do the work of relief. The Society ought to deal with the subject. Mr. Wightman Wood's amendment seemed to apply only to rich Committees. The Council, he thought, might raise a relief fund.

Miss Gibson thought that there should be a separate fund. This would save much trouble. At present members of the District Committees had to spend a great deal of time in writing to ask persons to relieve cases.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson gave notice of the following amendment:

That while acknowledging the force of the principles involved in Major FitzRoy's motion, this Council is of opinion that the time has not arrived when the Society can dispense with the power of relief from its own resources, in the last resort.

He considered a fund of some sort was necessary; yet he feared that the due relative proportion of the sums collected for relief and for organisation might not be maintained.

Capt. Fortescue moved the adjournment of the debate, which was seconded by H. F. Mallet, and eventually carried.

Mr. C. A. Miner and Capt. Fortescue then gave notice of amendments, which will be found on p. 176.

VAGRANCY.

Mr. J. R. Hollond pointed out that his motion on this subject was in the nature of an amendment on that to be moved by the Rev. R. J. Simpson.

Mr. W. W. Wood gave notice of the following amendment on Mr. Simpson's motion, viz. :—

That the word 'rescinded' be omitted and the following words substituted: 'altered so as to apply to residents only and not to vagrants.'

The Council then adjourned.

JUSTICE AND PITY.—'Some readers know that softness without rigour, rigour as of adamant to rest upon, is but sloth and cowardly baseness; that without justice first, real pity is not possible, and only false pity and maudlin weakness is possible. Others again are not aware of that fact.'—Carlyle.

ILLUSTRATIVE CASES RECENTLY DEALT WITH BY DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

CLASS II.—RECOMMENDED.

St. Marylebone.—A young couple in very bad health applied for a convalescent letter for the wife. Both belonged to clubs, but from ill health their payments had fallen into arrears. Their characters were good. They had no children. The Committee procured a convalescent letter for the wife and a hospital letter for the husband. The clergy in the applicants' district lent 30s. to pay up club dues. The Society for the Relief of Distress granted 10s. for travelling expenses, and the Committee paid 9s. for the wife's maintenance in the convalescent home. She has since been to the office to thank the Committee for the benefits she has received.

E. H., a widow (six weeks) with four children, ages respectively 7, 5, 2, and 6 months, applied for assistance in placing her two eldest children in a school. She had no objection to the parish schools. It was her intention to train as a monthly nurse. Her late husband was a coach-painter; he had worked for one firm for twenty years, and was much respected by his fellow-workmen. At the time of his death a few pounds were collected by them towards defraying funeral expenses, mourning, &c., and after these expenses had been met a small balance remained in hand sufficient to maintain the family for a short time. During the inquiry the applicant informed the Committee that a friend of her late husband's had sent her £10. This amount she proposed to expend on the children's schooling (other than the parish). The Committee advised that the amount should be placed in the Post Office Savings Bank until a suitable school could be found. Subsequently the Committee obtained admission for the children in a comfortable home for one year on the payment of £10.

Lambeth.—A tradesman's assistant and his wife, aged respectively 65 and 70, and quite disabled by illness and infirmity, had expended all their savings with the exception of a life policy of £150, on which they were unable any longer to pay the premiums, and were compelled to live by borrowing. The Committee have obtained a pension for them of 10s. a week from a relative, and have, after much trouble, found suitable lodgings for them in the country, where they were recommended to go both for the sake of their health and for the sake of economy. Their life policy was also purchased on most favourable terms through the instrumentality of the Committee, who have undertaken the charge of the purchase money, which is being refunded in the form of a pension, and in such other modes as are likely to be most beneficial.

Poplar.—In the month of March a boy aged fourteen years was taken into the Poplar Hospital for Accidents. He had been run over by a steam engine, and it was necessary to amputate both his hands. On his recovery the question was, what could be made of him? His parents belonged to the lowest grade of the poor, and were not at all favourable specimens of their class. The thing to be aimed at was that the boy should be made a fair scholar and trained for such light employment as could be carried on by the aid of artificial limbs. Different institutions were applied to but without success. They declined to receive so serious a case. At length a lady who had become interested in the matter obtained admission for him into a Home which it is hoped will be found in every way suitable, and, chiefly by her help, funds were easily raised sufficient to maintain him there for two years.*

CLASS III.—ASSISTED (BY LOAN).

Greenwich.—M. H., a garden labourer with a wife and six children dependent upon him, was a long time in hospital, his family being in receipt of parish relief. He left the hospital in a weakly condition, and was told by the doctor that he would never again be able to do hard work. The Committee made him a loan to buy a donkey and cart, in order that he might be able to hawk vegetables. He is now doing well and has repaid the greater portion of the loan.

I. O., a domestic servant, the daughter of poor parents, was, in consequence of an enlarged knee, compelled to leave her situation and come home. She had to pledge her clothes for her support, but recovered her health. She then obtained another place, and the Committee made her a loan in order that she might redeem her clothes. She is now in a situation and is repaying the loan.

ASSISTED (BY GRANT).

Strand.—A. K. applied for a grant of a small sum of money to enable her to get some clothes out of pawn and buy some others. She stated that she had had to leave her last situation through illness, and that she had been at home nearly four months. The person in whose service she latterly had been would take her back again, if she had better clothes. It was ascertained that her statement was true and that she was an industrious, honest, and sober woman. The Committee granted her the money to buy and redeem her clothes, and she then went to her situation.

Poplar.—Not long ago the Committee were asked to lend £2 to a working-man to enable him to send his daughter to the Margate Infirmary. It became their duty to enquire whether this was the best thing to be done for the poor child, who was suffering from a very bad special disease. Mr. F. M. Corner, for whose frequent assistance the Committee desire to express their most grateful acknowledgments, was of opinion that good might perhaps result from careful and prolonged medical treatment, and he further recommended that she should be under the care of a certain medical man who was connected with a Hospital specially intended for such cases. The child was taken to see this gentleman, and she was then admitted into the hospital, the Committee paying the greater part of the weekly charge, and the father that portion of it which it was thought he could fairly afford. Two similar cases are now awaiting admission, one into a hospital for hip disease, the other into a home for incurables, the payment in each case of 4s. weekly being met by the Committee, and by any friends whose co-operation they may be fortunate enough to secure.*

MEDICAL CHARITIES. TOWN AND COUNTRY.

On October 1 all the outdoor visiting which has hitherto been carried on by the TUNBRIDGE WELLS INFIRMARY ceased, and the new Provident Dispensary, which is situated in the immediate neighbourhood of the Infirmary, was opened. The British Medical Journal remarks that 'from such co-operation the best results may be expected. Unless the Medical Charities consent to put some check upon their liberality, it is impossible for provident dispensaries to hold their ground. Working people will not pay even a penny a week for that which they can get for nothing. But while the provident dispensary suffices for all ordinary sickness, the hospitals are needed for severe cases and for accidents. Thus each institution has its own proper sphere.'

The same number of the Journal contains a letter respecting the SUFFOLK COUNTY MEDICAL CLUB. The following is the scale of payments:—

Members pay annually, and the medical man receives:				s.	d.
Single member	...	...	...	5	0
Man and wife	...	...	...	9	0
Man, wife, and one child	...	...	...	10	0
" two children	...	...	...	11	0
" three children	...	...	...	12	6
" four children	...	...	...	13	0
" five or more children under 16 years of age	...	...	...	14	0

Four shillings and sixpence is deducted from the above when a man belongs to any sick club providing a doctor. In confinements, members pay 10s.; medical man receives, under one mile, 15s.; over one mile, 20s. Surgical extras, same scale as Poor Law Board. The writer states that 'in six villages with a population of nearly 3,000, no less than 1,300 are in the club, or 1 in 2·3 of the whole population.'

The following account of the WHITECHAPEL AND ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST MEDICAL CLUB, which we have received from a correspondent, is in striking contrast to the above:—

'About a year ago a small committee was formed, by which rules and a scale of payment were drawn up, founded on the experience of provident dispensaries, and suited to the wants of the neighbourhood. The doctors most popular among the poor agreed to find medicine, and attend, if necessary, at the houses of members, for the usual club payment of 4s. a year. A collector was appointed, who canvassed from house to house, offering to people the care of their favourite doctor in illness for a payment of about one penny a week. The people thus canvassed were well able to afford such payments, and the men were generally found to belong to clubs; the women, however, persistently refused. After a year of struggling it has therefore been determined to give up the effort. The Committee attribute the failure to the fact that so many means exist for obtaining free treatment. There are several free dispensaries, the Metropolitan Free Hospital, and the London Hospital, all offering to supply the people with medicine and advice in the time of sickness. There are also many practitioners who, for 1s. a week paid during the time of illness, attend the sick. To these causes, and not to poor-law relief, which is given very strictly, must be attributed the ill-success with which our collector met.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fifth week of October 1877 was 38,465, and 40,733 received outdoor relief, making a total of 79,198. This was an increase of 667 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 125, 3,837, and 12,378 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 798. This was a decrease of 11 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 105 on the corresponding day of last year.

WORK OF THE COUNCIL 1876-7.

The Council* of the Charity Organisation Society have during the session 1876-7 held thirty-five meetings. The average attendance has been thirty-eight. At one meeting as many as sixty-eight persons were present, and at several there were more than fifty. The Council have dealt with or discussed the following important subjects amongst others:—Personal work among the Poor; Co-operation with the Industrial Classes; Out-relief; Metropolitan Medical Relief; Institutions for Idiots, Imbeciles, and Harmless Lunatics; Charitable Endowments, and more especially the St. Katherine's Hospital Charities; Soup Kitchens; and the Suppression of the Traffic in Italian Children.

PERSONAL WORK.

At a meeting held at the Rooms of the Society of Arts in February last, at which more than 300 persons were present, the following resolution was, after a long and interesting discussion, unanimously agreed to:—

That District Visitors, and those who are willing to work personally among the poor, be invited to co-operate as far as possible with the District Committees of the Society.

A Special Committee subsequently considered what general rules the Council should frame for the guidance of District Committees in supplementing the Society's work by personal visitation, and on their report the following resolutions were adopted:—

That the District Committees be recommended to enlist the services of volunteer Visitors, who shall visit, and, when desirable, keep up friendly intercourse with those persons whose cases may have been investigated at the District Office.

That the Visitors, in their capacity as Visitors for the District Committees of the Society, shall not act as almoners for the Committees.

That it be not considered necessary that the Visitors be members of the District Committees, but that they be invited cordially to attend its meetings.

That the Visitors be instructed to keep constantly before them the importance of establishing friendly relations between themselves and all those who may be working among the poor in connection with other agencies.

OUTDOOR RELIEF.

The question of the changes to be made in charitable administration consequent on the reduction of outdoor relief have been discussed at length. A Special Committee has reported on the subject, and steps have been taken to ascertain what (if any) charitable institutions were or would place themselves in a position to meet those exceptional cases in which distress had ensued in consequence of the reduction of outdoor relief.

THE ST. KATHERINE'S HOSPITAL.

A memorial to the Lord Chancellor was adopted by the Council, urging

That such portions of the funds of the St. Katherine's Hospital as might be considered available for eleemosynary purposes would be wisely and justly appropriated for affording, under due safeguards, small pensions for the deserving and provident poor in the East of London, so as to meet any exceptional distress that might be contingent on the laudable efforts of the Guardians to administer the Poor Law on sound and well-defined principles.

This memorial was signed by the Duke of Westminster, Earl Stanhope, Lord Richard Grosvenor, and by numerous Members of Parliament and others.

METROPOLITAN MEDICAL RELIEF.

Two special meetings have been held on the subject of Metropolitan Medical Relief. At the former the following resolution was passed:—

That the improvement of the people of London in health and habits of thrift and independence demands that while, on the one hand, out-patient departments should be regulated so as to secure the prompt treatment of cases requiring the special resources of an hospital, on the other, free dispensaries should be converted into provident dispensaries, and new provident dispensaries should be established in proportion to the wants of the population.

This resolution was passed unanimously at a large and influential meeting. Subsequently, in July, a meeting was held at the rooms of the Medical Society, at which a resolution was passed for the formation of a representative Committee to take into consideration the question of the introduction of the provident element in the administration of Metropolitan Medical Relief.

INSTITUTIONS FOR IDIOTS.

A large deputation, composed of medical men and others, from all parts of England, waited upon the President of the Local Government Board with a view to submitting the need of training and industrial institutions for teachable idiots and imbeciles, and of custodial establishments for the incurable. They received the reply that the President of the Local Government Board would do everything he could to advance the objects represented by them.

ITALIAN CHILDREN.

A deputation has also waited upon the Home Secretary to draw his attention to the prevalent traffic in Italian children, and active measures have been taken to put the law in force for the prevention of this traffic.

SOUP KITCHENS.

The Council have again pointed out the injurious effect of free soup kitchens, and have advocated self-supporting public kitchens and coffee-houses, such as have been found successful in several large towns.

GENERAL.

The above are some of the many questions dealt with by the Council. Besides the Special Committees, Committees on almost all the branches of the Society's work have held numerous sittings. A large number of cases have been investigated by the Central Inquiry Department.

ORGANISATION NOTES.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL.—It appears from the British Medical Journal that the annual clear expenditure of £30,000 has not, under recent administration, supported more than two-thirds of the patients whom such an income is capable of maintaining. A patient at St. Thomas's Hospital has cost £12, while a patient at Guy's has cost only £5. The consequence is that upwards of 150 beds have remained empty, the mere interest on the money expended in construction being £100 a year for each such empty bed. In other words, the extravagance of administration has been such, that beds costing £15,000 a year have been and are still remaining empty.

THE REPORT OF THE LUNACY COMMISSIONERS.—The Standard, in an article on the report of the Commissioners for 1877, says: 'The report tells the same tale as all its predecessors—namely, that insanity is steadily on the increase. The statistics, as we shall presently show, do not altogether bear out the common theory as to the cause of the phenomenon. But of the result there is, unhappily, no doubt. Until the year 1859 no account had been kept of the number of lunatics annually admitted into our various asylums, hospitals, and licensed houses. But from that date to the present the number has increased from 36,762 to 66,636, while the proportion of lunatics to the whole population has increased from about 1½ per cent. to nearly 3 per cent. . . . It is only now for the first time that the Commissioners have succeeded in obtaining the necessary information to enable them to exhibit in a tabular form both the predisposing and exciting causes of insanity in all the registered cases for the year under consideration, as well as their varying effect in different professions and occupations. Nobody will be surprised to learn that, among all the causes of insanity, intoxication stands first and foremost; but some persons may perhaps be surprised to hear that this is equally true of all classes. Each class has, of course, its own special troubles and temptations, which account for some portion of the insanity which it contributes to the sum total; but all meet together on the common ground of drink. In order three—that is among clergymen, lawyers, doctors, authors, artists, the most refined, most moral, and most highly cultivated section of society—about one-eighth of the cases of insanity are referred to intemperance. Among farmers and agricultural labourers about one-sixth is due to this cause; among factory operatives about one-seventh; among “persons of rank and property” having no occupation the percentage is much the same as it is among professional men. And the general conclusion to which we are forced is that drinking habits are by no means so completely eradicated from the educated classes as many persons are accustomed to suppose.

SOCIAL CHARITY.—Mr. Gladstone, speaking at Dublin, said: ‘The mere politics of the country lie upon the surface. That which is vital and essential is the social condition of the country. It is not whether my honourable friend, the member for Limerick, Mr. Butt, and I take the same view of party organisation. That may be a question worth considering in its own place; but it is unimportant in comparison with the great question of what is the state of human life in Ireland—what is done to provide for its wants, to alleviate its cares—to develop the energies of our nature—to give sanction and encouragement to what is good, to put down and discountenance what is evil—to make cheerful at least, perhaps in some cases even to make bright, the lot of human kind—to relieve labour of its cares—to enable the father to make a reasonable provision for the health and comfort of his wife and children, as well as of himself—to take care that when he rises in the morning to go to his labour, and when he comes home from it at night, his expectations shall not be unenlightened by hope, and his recollections shall not be embittered by the sense of wrongs. These are the questions that are really important, and our political ideas and our political arrangements must all be tested, and in the long run they will be tested, by the final opinion of mankind, and they will be tested by another and yet loftier, and yet more authoritative judgment—by their conformity to the principles of justice and virtue, and by their tendency to promote the true individual happiness of the people, as well as the greatness of the country at large.’

It is in this way that we hope Charity Organisation may develop—treating ‘charity’ as a whole, and, at the same time, trying to bring personal influence to bear on individual cases of distress. By association, each worker may obtain necessary information which he cannot readily acquire for himself, and may draw upon the resources of the experience of others.

THE CHARITY OF SELF-HELP.—Mr. Gathorne Hardy said at Woolwich, on the 7th inst.:—‘Everybody knows the views that are held by different societies, which say, “You must put this down,” and “you must legislate for that.” Gentlemen, if you want to reform the country you must begin by reforming yourselves. If you want to have a well-educated people you must begin by educating yourselves, and then you will be going about it in the right way. I am far from wishing to depreciate the efforts made by philanthropic societies for the reformation of people, but after all it is not on the platform or in the crowded assembly, but it is in the private houses, in the homes of the citizens, that reformation must be carried on, and it is there that the stability of the country must be secured.’

CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS.—The Guardian says:—‘It is to be hoped that the Charity Commissioners will be able to bring out some practical result of the train of inquiry suggested by the Charity Organisation Society and the London School Board.’

THRIFT.—Mr. G. C. T. Bartley enumerates the requirements of the agricultural labourer as follows:—1st. Some fund, however small, to fall back upon for any sudden charge that may come upon him. 2nd. An assurance that if he is sick he will have something to make up for the loss of his wages. 3rd. An assurance that he will not be ruined by a doctor’s bill. 4th. An assurance that when he is old and past work he will have some allowance or pension. 5th. An assurance that he will leave behind him enough to prevent his remains being degraded by a pauper’s funeral. These requirements may seem somewhat formidable for a man with but too scanty wages, but they are the least that everyone in this kingdom should aspire to. What is more, the real way of raising wages is for all to determine to secure these benefits by their own efforts. As a matter of fact, all persons in this country do get sick allowance, medical attendance, support in old age and burial, but it now mostly comes from the parish, with all the degradation which this necessitates; the cost, therefore, which these benefits involve, instead of being paid to the labourer as his wages, goes to support the rates. Nothing would tend to raise wages more surely than for all people in their youth and middle age to provide themselves for those wants which they now in but too many cases receive from the rates and from the alms and clubs of those in a better position than themselves.

PROVINCIAL.

SOUTHAMPTON CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.—At the second annual meeting of this Society on the 7th inst., Surgeon-General Dr. Maclean, who was in the chair, moved the adoption of the annual report.*

He said that the Southampton Charity Organisation Society was a very young society, and the report, which had just been presented, was in every way a cause for congratulation, considering that the Society had a great many misgivings, a good many misrepresentations, misapprehensions, and perhaps prejudices; but, notwithstanding this, he thought the past year’s work was a good omen of the work that would be accomplished in the future. The Executive Committee during the past year had worked well, they had given time, attention, and money to the faithful discharge of their duties, and he was quite satisfied the people of Southampton would feel greatly indebted to them for their arduous labours.

Mr. Russell Gurney, who was received with cheers, in seconding the adoption of the report, said he was not at all surprised to hear from the report, and also from the Chairman, that at the commencement of the Society’s operations they had considerable difficulties to contend with. He confessed that when he first heard of the Society his prejudice was against it, for he always felt that there were many other societies struggling for want of funds, and that the funds which were asked for a new society would be better applied to strengthen the old ones.

This objection, however, did not apply nor interfere, as anyone could see, with this Society. It was quite ready to help all other societies; but the great object the Society had in view was to prevent money which people were disposed to apply for charity being applied to the assistance and encouragement of imposture. It was not the great object of the Society to afford immediate and active relief, and certainly not to spread out doles among the poor; its object rather was to afford all other societies the means of having cases inquired into which were brought before them, and not only societies, but individuals also, in order that they might ascertain whether the object applying for charity was a worthy one or not.

When he (the right hon. gentleman) first resided in London, he used to have a great number of begging-letters applying for charitable relief. He was now and then induced, by the piteous tones of the applications to give that relief, without the amount of inquiry which he ought, perhaps, to have made, or which, in fact, he was able to institute. Now he had adopted a different plan. He sent all the letters he received to the Charity Organisation Society, or elsewhere, and had the cases investigated, and he found that almost invariably the cases forwarded were ascertained to be dishonest cases. Since adopting this plan these applications to him for charity had considerably decreased. It seemed as though all the imposture had disappeared, and that the cases he now received were bona fide ones. There was no doubt a regular system of organisation among beggars in large and small towns; they knew well where the persons who would make inquiries were, and they always endeavoured to keep out of their way. A great dignitary of the Church had said that ‘he had no doubt he had a great deal to answer for; but there was one thing he would never have to answer for, that of giving to a beggar in the street.’ He thought that they could not all adopt that principle.

He was satisfied there was an immense amount of mischief done by money being distributed indiscriminately; but if they gave to a society such as that whose interests he was now advocating, they might rest assured that their money would be well distributed to those worthy of it. A venerated friend of his, one of the great legal dignitaries of his day, told him (the speaker) that he had had brought under his notice a most piteous tale of a family represented to be in deep distress, and who were said to have lost their youngest child. Not being satisfied with the case, he visited the house, and found the family apparently in deep distress, and the child laid out to all intents and purposes, a lifeless corpse. His sympathy, as might be imagined, was greatly touched, and he left, promising immediate help. By a mishap, however, he accidentally left his glove in the room which he had visited, and went back for it, when to his astonishment he heard, while on the top of the stairs, the supposed lifeless corpse say, ‘Mother, can I get up now?’ There was something ludicrous in this; but it showed the kind of imposture to be met with, and the sort of difficulties which charitable individuals had to contend against. The gentleman to whom he was referring certainly seemed to be taking very careful means in order to ascertain whether his money would be properly applied; but had it not been for the mere accident of leaving his glove behind, he would have been greatly taken in. This, he argued, only showed how difficult it was for an individual to ascertain whether the cases they were willing to help were really deserving. Now, this Society had all the means of discovering such deception, which no single individual could possibly do.

There was another point which had been dwelt upon—the giving of loans rather than doles. With respect to individuals deserving help, he had been informed the loans were a good plan, because the Society had the means of inquiring whether the persons requiring such loans were of good character, and what were their means of repayment. He fully believed that such a method was a good way of relieving those who stood in need of it. He instanced a town in the West of England where gentlemen had a large fund placed at their disposal, and there he found that although they had £1,000 out on loan, they seldom lost more than five pounds per annum. In all the cases so relieved, real, actual, positive good had been done. They not only relieved persons in distress, but encouraged them in ways of thrift, all of which tended to improve the character of the person relieved.

In the town of Southampton there were very considerable sums of money which had been bequeathed in former times for charitable objects. He thought it would be a good plan if the custodians of such moneys could be persuaded to give some little information respecting them, and assist in letting it be known who the persons were who benefited by such charity. He knew the cases of persons who were relieved by five different centres of relief, and not one of the centres knew that the persons were relieved by the other four. This, he urged, ought to be prevented; and it could only be done by publicity. Of course a certain amount of discretion was needed in publishing these names. But there ought undoubtedly to be some facilities afforded for preventing the imposture to which he had referred, and the more they could reconcile themselves to the fact, the more would be the benefit to society. They all had a right to know where the funds of the Guardians went to. There were many cases where persons were relieved out of the poor rates, and yet it was only right that private individuals should have the opportunity of affording relief beyond them. There might be circumstances which rendered the Society less required here than in other parts; still he thought they could not do without such agencies.

The Charity Organisation Society in London had done an enormous amount of good; it was increasing in power and influence, and the more it was known the more it would be supported. Whether there were circumstances in Southampton or not which rendered the operations of such a Society less beneficial he was not able to judge. For his own part he could not help feeling, from what he had seen of the work of similar societies in different large parishes in London, that this Society would be likely to be of very great good to the charitable, and of great good to all worthy objects of charity in Southampton, if it were liberally supported.

The report having been adopted, Mr. Sheriff Le Feuvre, in proposing a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Gurney for his attendance, said that when they found that of the number of applicants whose cases had been dealt with one-third had been proved to be ineligible or undeserving, it clearly showed that a certain amount of money had been prevented from being wasted on undeserving objects, and been saved for the really deserving poor. It was a matter of extreme regret to him (the speaker) that the resolution which was carried by the clergy of the town last April at the conference had become so much a dead letter, and had practically not been acted upon. With regard to what had been said respecting loans, he thoroughly concurred in it, and he would remind the executive committee of the Society that they had under the management of the local trustees of charities a special fund for loans, under the names of Steptoe, Lynch, and Wallop's Charities, consisting of about £1,000, which was lent to young beginners in trade free of interest. A portion of that sum was being constantly lent out from time to time, and repaid by instalments. He thought it very likely that the Charity Commissioners in London would be requested in the course of a short time to effect some alterations in the scheme; for instance, though their income under it was only £30 a year, they were bound to pay £18 out of the £30 to their clerk. He was convinced that such a scheme ought to be remodelled at the earliest possible opportunity, and he hoped that but a few months would elapse before a resolution was adopted by the trustees in favour of the scheme being amended.

He had seen much benefit resulting from the Society's working during the past few months. He had had to fill up some ten or twelve rooms in the newly-established Shirley Homes for Aged Women. They advertised, and had some forty applications for those empty rooms, and after taking out some names, which were ineligible according to their rules, they were obliged to refer the balance of the names to the Society, and the information they gave them was very valuable, inasmuch as this had reduced the names to the exact number they had at their disposal.

The meeting then terminated.

THE NORTH OF ENGLAND MANUFACTORY FOR THE BLIND, SHEFFIELD.—The Committee report that the sales of the institution have been £2,222. 8s. 2d., showing, notwithstanding the general depression of trade, only a falling off of £63 in comparison with last year. The profits have been a little more than sufficient to meet the expenditure. £15,000, of which all but about £2,670 has been obtained, is about to be laid out on the erection of new buildings, which will accommodate 50 inmates.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE SANATORIUM.—From the last report of this sanatorium it appears that after the 1st October 1877 the charge for Unrecommended Patients will be 18s. per week (instead of 10s.): the charge made to patients 'Recommended by Annual Subscribers' will be 6s. per week (instead of 8s.) in all cases where the subscription falls due on or after the 1st October.

BOSTON.—Charity Organisation.—The Common Council of the City of Boston have passed the following order, dated December 28, 1876:—

'That the Mayor be hereby authorised to appoint a Commission of three persons to consider and report upon the treatment of the poor who apply to the City for relief, whether temporary or permanent, and to ascertain what, if any, changes are desirable in the laws of the Commonwealth and the ordinances of the City for the relief, maintenance, and employment of all classes of the poor; the expense to be incurred by the Commission not to exceed five hundred dollars, and to be paid from the Appropriation for Incumbents.'

Messrs. George S. Hale, A. A. Burrage, and A. Parker have been appointed Commissioners, and have circulated the following letter from the Charity Building, Chardon Street, Boston (February 5, 1877):—

'The undersigned Commissioners under the annexed order are desirous of obtaining statistics—as to the amount and kind of relief afforded, and the number of persons aided by charitable institutions, organisations, and churches, in the City of Boston, for the past ten years,—and respectfully request that the blank in the enclosed envelope may be filled and returned to them. They would also be glad to receive any reports or documents relating to the institution or organisation.'

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 236.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 22, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, the 26th instant:

I. Mr. W. F. Lawrence to move, on the Report on Adequate Relief being taken into consideration: 'That whereas it appears that cases exist which are not adequately relieved by any means this Society at present possesses, it be resolved:

'(a) That a short statement of such cases be inserted by advertisement in the Times, Daily News, Standard, and Daily Telegraph, on the first Monday in each month during a period of four months, commencing on December 3.

'(b) That the advertisements be addressed as from the Central Office, but be drafted and paid for by the District Committees inserting the same, who shall conduct all correspondence with the public relating to them, and be responsible for the bond fides of the case advertised.

'(c) That a statement of each case be presented to the Districts Sub-Committee within the first fortnight of each month, who shall have the power of veto in each case within one week of such presentation, subject, however, to appeal to the Administrative Committee by the Committee presenting the case.

'(d) That the Secretary to the Council address a letter to the principal newspapers, to inform the public of the proposed scheme.'

II. Mr. A. H. Hill to move:—

'That, on the return of Mr. Loch to his secretarial duties, the departmental arrangements* of the Society recommended by the Committee on Office Arrangements be at once carried out, and that the Inquiry and Mendicity Department be henceforward subordinated to the General Purposes Office.'

III. Mr. Edward Bond to move:—

'That all departments of the Society's work be placed under one head, and that with that view the services of the Organising Secretary be dispensed with.'†

IV. Mr. Bousfield to move:—

'That the motion of which Mr. Bond has given notice be taken as urgent for the meeting of Council on the 26th inst.'

V. Hon. R. C. Grosvenor to move:—

'That, in the opinion of the Council of this Society, it has become necessary to alter the existing rules respecting the Constitution of the Society with a view to the establishment of a smaller representative Governing Body, which shall be responsible for the management of the affairs of the Society; and that for this purpose the Council are of opinion that a special meeting of the members of the Society ought, as soon as possible, to be convened.'

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, November 15, There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Holland, in the chair; Lady Wilson, Lieut.-Col. Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Barrington, Crowder, Edcombe, Hill, Hoare, Lawrence, Maurice, Miner, Peters, Praed, Probyn, Roberts, and Mrs. Lathbury. Miss O. Hill, visitor.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending November 10 the receipts had been £36. 10s. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances* of the two funds on that day had been £526. 11s. 3d. and £18. 0s. 9d. respectively, the whole of the latter sum being reserved to meet expenditure on School Board cases.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on November 13 there had been present:—

Mr. A. D. Graham, in the chair; Mrs. Lathbury, Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, Messrs. Barrington, Bousfield, Brand, Crowder, Edcombe, and Lewes. Captain Leeson, visitor.

NEW MEMBER.—Mr. H. Brand had been appointed a Member of the Sub-Committee.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on November 13 there had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Rear-Admiral Gardner, and the Hon. H. R. Scott.

THE FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE had met on Wednesday, the 14th November. There had been present:—

Lieut.-Gen. Cavenagh, in the chair; Major Nares, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Corrie, Hill, Peters, Praed, and Roberts.

At an adjourned meeting of the above Sub-Committee on Friday, the 16th November, there had been present:—

Mr. A. H. Hill, in the chair; Major Nares, Sir R. M. Stephenson, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Holland, Miner, Peters, and Roberts.

RESIGNATION OF THE CHAIRMAN.

The Secretary read the following letter from the Earl of Lichfield:

'11 Portman Square, W.,
 November 12, 1877.

'Dear Mr. Loch,—After very full and anxious consideration I have come to the conclusion that I cannot continue to occupy the position of Chairman of Council of the Charity Organisation Society, and I must request that my resignation be accepted.

'Since the early part of last year, when I found myself in a minority upon questions affecting the government of the Society, I have taken no part in its work, and until the middle of last month I have not attended any of its meetings.

'I feel that some apology is due from me to the Members of Council for having so long retained the office of Chairman without having been able to fulfil its duties. My only excuse is that I have looked forward, perhaps unreasonably, to changes in the direction I have desired being effected, though, perhaps, by other means than those I have so persistently and unsuccessfully advocated.

'The interest I feel in the Society is undiminished; and I am daily becoming more convinced of the necessity of the work it has undertaken.

'I wish to see it carried on with greater energy and determination;

* The estimated liabilities were about £1,200, exclusive of £300 required for District Committees during the current quarter.

and to this end I believe that the Central authority must be strengthened.

'As a Member of Council I shall continue my efforts in this direction.

'Believe me, yours sincerely,

LICHFIELD.

Sir Charles Trevelyan said that the Society was greatly indebted to Lord Lichfield for the active part he had taken in moulding its constitution, and laying down those general principles, the value of which he so fully endorsed. He was glad that he would continue to take part in the work of the Society, as the Chairman of the Marlborough Committee and a Member of Council. He moved the following resolution:—

That this Council desires to express its great regret at Lord Lichfield's resignation of the Chairmanship; its strong sense of the invaluable services which his lordship has rendered to the Society, and the grateful feeling with which it has received the intimation of his lordship's intention to continue to assist as a Member of Council.

Mr. C. L. Corkran seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

The Chairman then moved the following instruction to the Administrative Committee, which was agreed to nem. con.:—

That the Administrative Committee be requested to consider and report on the letter of Lord Lichfield, and make such recommendations to the Council as they may think fit with respect to his successor.

He mentioned, with regret, that Lord Lichfield had been suddenly called to Cannes, on account of his brother's illness.

ORGANISATION AND RELIEF.

Major FitzRoy, with the permission of Council, explained, that in the account of what he had said at the last meeting of Council an omission had been made. He had mentioned 'several cases in which an exhaustive scrutiny of the charities had not obtained the required assistance.' He added, that this scrutiny should not content the District Committees; the fact that there were such cases showed that existing charities did not, owing to their restrictions, meet the necessities of the poor, and the Committees should endeavour to obtain such alterations in the rules of these societies as would enable them to meet those necessities. He and his seconder considered that the principle they had advocated would be sufficiently enforced by the amendment of which the Rev. R. J. Simpson had given notice. They therefore withdrew the motion in favour of it.*

Captain Fortescue withdrew the amendment of which he had given notice. [See below.]

* The following are the motion and amendments referred to in the course of the debate on this subject:—

(1) Major FitzRoy had moved:

'That whereas at present great confusion exists in the minds, not only of the general public, but even of supporters of this Society, as to its functions in the matter of giving relief, it is advisable to take steps more completely to dissociate Charity Organisation from Charitable Relief. To this end the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to direct their attention to making such arrangements that, on and after January 1, 1879, no relief by grant be made, from its ordinary funds, by any Committee of this Society; and that this important matter may be kept constantly before the Council, the Co-operation Sub-Committee are requested to report progress quarterly, commencing in January 1878.'

(2) Mr. Wightman Wood had moved the following amendment, viz.:

'That all words after "to this end" be inserted, and the following words added: "The District Committees of the Society are requested to discontinue as soon as is reasonably practicable, the practice of making grants (loans excepted), from their ordinary funds, and to collect, if possible, a special fund from which to make grants in accordance with the Society's principles."

(3) The Rev. R. J. Simpson has given notice of the following amendment, viz.:

'That, while acknowledging the force of the principle involved in Major FitzRoy's motion, this Council is of opinion that the time has not arrived when the Society can dispense with the power of relief from its own resources in the last resort.'

(4) Mr. C. A. Miner had given notice of the following amendment:—

'That the motion be altered as follows, viz.: "That whereas at present great confusion exists in the minds, not only of the general public, but even of supporters of this Society, as to its functions in the matter of giving relief, it is advisable to take steps to make more widely known the established principles of the Society with respect to granting relief, as set forth in the Manual of the Society, viz.:

After a few words from the Rev. H. I. Cummins and Mr. J. R. Hollond, Sir Charles Trevelyan urged that Major FitzRoy should withdraw his motion. It was impossible to dissociate charity organisation from charitable relief. Mr. Simpson's amendment appeared to countenance this principle.

Mr. Miner having urged the same view, Mr. Russell Barrington moved the previous question, which Dr. Daniel supported, saying that he sympathised with what Major FitzRoy had said, for he had no wish that the Society should not take the position of another relief society; but, on the other hand, he considered that the difficulties of a double collection for relief and organisation would be great.

Mr. Bousfield thought the Council should not have recourse to the previous question on such an important matter.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson, speaking against the motion for the previous question, said that the Society should, in his opinion, keep the organisation of charity steadily before it as its goal; so that eventually it might be in a position to relieve cases by reference to the proper quarter only, and should not have to assist by direct grants. Yet, while this principle was acknowledged, it could not, under existing circumstances, be put in force.

The Rev. H. I. Cummins argued that it was unwise to give prominence to a principle which the Society could not act upon. It was needless to reassert it. He would vote for the previous question.

The previous question was then put and carried.

ADEQUATE RELIEF.

Mr. W. T. Lawrence asked the permission of Council that the motion of which he had given notice might stand over. This was accordingly agreed to.

VAGRANCY.

Rev. R. J. Simpson then moved:—

That the clause in the Manual of the Society (page 12), which sets forth 'That the Charity Agents are allowed in cases of absolute hunger to give bread,' be rescinded, and that this resolution be duly reported to the Metropolitan Poor Law Authorities.

He considered the rule laid down in the Manual a mistake. Its object was to enable persons who met in the streets those who alleged that they were starving, to refer them to District Committees instead of giving them pence. This led the public to consider the Society as, primarily, a relief society, and the tramps naturally came to this conclusion also. The mere dealing with these cases, entry of names, &c., occupied a great deal of time. The Strand Committee had relieved with bread 302 persons since the 1st of October. From a private correspondence he drew the conclusion that the District Committees by giving bread were doing the work of the Poor Law. The Relieving Officers were bound to relieve all who came to them in a state of starvation.

Major Fitzroy seconded the motion. It was impossible to decide offhand, whether the applicant for bread was or was not in a state of 'absolute hunger.' There was a meal given at the casual ward morning and evening, and the want of a midday meal did not mean starvation. He feared, and he believed facts proved, that it was not those who went about, but those who stayed at home, too proud to

"(i) When other charities are unable to afford the requisite assistance to such cases (cases of temporary distress, with evidence of good character and thrift), the Committees assist them, if the funds entrusted to them admit of this.

"(ii) The Committees cannot undertake to find the pensions which chronic cases need; but where individuals or special charities are willing to take charge of these, the Committees are ready to send them the names of persons ascertained to be deserving."

(5) Capt. Fortescue had given notice of the following amendment, viz.:

'That whereas at present great confusion exists in the minds, not only of the general public, but even of supporters of this Society, as to its functions in the matter of giving relief, it is advisable to take steps more completely to dissociate Charity Organisation from Charitable Relief.

'To this end, District Committees are requested to collect money, either for the working expenses of the Society or for relief, and to keep the two accounts distinct, and that after January 1, 1879, no grant to any District Committee for relief will be made by this Council (except money specially placed in its hands for the purpose of relief), but all grants will be considered as for working expenses; and, further, that it be a recommendation to District Committees to point out that, in collecting money for relief, no part of the money so collected is used for office expenses.'

beg, who were like to starve. When the offices of the St. George's, Hanover Square, Committee were first opened, they had applications for bread all day long; the applications were carefully, and he believed the residents in that district would say wisely, sifted. Now they had eight applications there as against 939 in the City in the month of October. He considered the bread-giving a part of the work of the Poor Law. To give vagrants bread at the offices instead of pence in the street was not doing a better, but rather a 'less bad' thing. If the work was Poor Law work the Society should leave the responsibility of it on the Poor Law.

Mr. J. R. Hollond was of opinion that the majority of these cases should be left to the Poor Law. The Paddington Committee acted on the rule that a man who had a meal in the morning and evening was not an 'absolutely hungry' man. They did not therefore give bread to those who had slept at the casual wards. They had only three vagrants last month. The statement in the Manual was clear, and a sufficient guide to the charity agent. It was as follows:—

The local Poor Law authorities have ample power to relieve ordinary mendicants, but the Charity Agents are allowed, in cases of absolute hunger, to give bread to be eaten on the spot.

The practice of Relieving Officers, in accordance with the injunctions of the Boards of Guardians, was in many cases, to relieve with bread those only who had slept the previous night in their district. The Local Government Board would not, he believed, recognise any such distinction. He moved the following amendment, which was seconded by Captain Fortescue, viz.:—

That, while the Council has no desire to curtail the powers of District Committees in dealing with starving persons, it cannot recommend them, as a rule, to give bread to those who are frequenting the casual wards and, as such, receiving the relief which the Poor Law allows to such cases.

Rev. H. I. Cummins said the rule in the Manual had, he believed, been wisely adopted. The system of reference to the District Committee by ticket, and of giving bread there, had been most successful in such places as Blackheath. Before, the mendicants used to make the place unsafe; now he could say, as a resident at Blackheath, they caused little or no annoyance.

Mr. Simpson's motion would, however, if carried, have to be nugatory for the present at least. The City Committee, till last April, relieved but few vagrants. In fact, the direction in the Manual had become almost a dead letter. But in May there were 50 applications for bread; in June, 180; in July and August there was a large reduction, owing to the exodus from London for hop-picking, etc.; towards the end of September the numbers rose again, and there were 83 in that month. In October there were 939.

The bread was always eaten on the spot. Each applicant was asked his name, his business, where he had slept, where he was going, and some other questions, the answers to which were duly recorded. A pound of bread was given at first, but the Committee thought that this, without some check, was perhaps too great an attraction. They therefore made an arrangement by which the tickets for bread were procurable at the City police station only. At the police station the applicants were questioned as to their names, where they had last slept, &c., and were examined so as to find out whether they had money or food with them. They were also told that if their statements were found to be false they would be brought before the magistrates. To this men would not submit, unless they were really in want. The numbers, however, did not decrease. The amount of bread was reduced to half, then to one-third of a pound. The Committee also decided not to distribute bread between one and two o'clock. There had been a reduction in the number of applicants, but they were still exceedingly numerous.

The Committee had inquired into the cases of some, and found one or two to be most deserving. They had been able to start in business one who was a foreigner. He had himself questioned many. They were not men ready to drop down from starvation; but they were in want, and appeared to be, in many cases, working men. Some may have falsely stated that they had not slept in metropolitan casual wards. Yet the fact remained that, notwithstanding strict supervision, the bread supplied a want—the want of many who seemed to be respectable.

With regard to the Poor Law, from inquiries he had made, it appeared that the Guardians at one time relieved with bread and soup in the middle of the day; but found it better to give the practice up. At present he believed that (as a matter of law), if a Relieving Officer refused bread to a vagrant, who in consequence died of starvation, he would be liable to an action for manslaughter.

Any retraction by the Society of the rule in the Manual would give an impulse to street-begging; and if cases of real destitution occurred, the District Committees should take advantage of the rule, to carry out their work of assistance. Letters on the subject of the increase of vagrancy had been addressed to the District Committees and Country Mendicity Societies; arrangements were being made for a deputation to the Local Government Board, and he hoped that the Council would postpone its decision till further information had been collected.

Mr. Alan Lambert endorsed much of what Mr. Cummins had said. The Council should consider the position of suburban Committees, such as Wandsworth, where the applicant for bread, if referred to the Relieving Officer, might have to go four miles. A sturdy vagabond might not suffer, perhaps, but there were some that would. The action of the Wandsworth Committee had largely reduced mendicity, and Mr. Hollond's amendment, no less than the Rev. R. J. Simpson's motion, would greatly cripple their usefulness. It was the principle of the Poor Law to take something in return for what it gave; for the morning and evening meal, work was required. It would not be likely to give, perhaps ought not to give, a midday meal gratis.

Mr. Barrington moved the previous question. The question had been recently considered, and the Council had decided that a deputation should wait upon the President of the Local Government Board. A Committee had been appointed by the Administrative Committee, in accordance with the instructions of Council, to collect information, &c.

Colonel Prendergast opposed both motion and amendment; because he did not wish the rules agreed upon by the Council and laid down in the Manual to be lightly set aside; because the District Committees were finding, but had not yet found, a better mode of dealing with these cases; because the circumstances of Committees were different, and the uniformity aimed at in Mr. Hollond's amendment was not attainable, while Mr. W. W. Wood's amendment, reducing such cases to resident cases only, did not touch the point; and lastly because, though the Poor Law might be able to do the work, it was not for charity needlessly to hand over any part of what might be proved to fall within its sphere to the Poor Law.

Mr. C. L. Corkran suggested that some system of labour in return for work might be organised by the District Committees.

Mr. Bouefield referred to an arrangement made with the Kensington Board of Guardians by the Committee in that district, viz. that the Committee should refer vagrants to the Guardians, who would give them a pound of bread and an hour's work. This had not been found a restriction; all or almost all were ready to go to the workhouse and do the hour's work. He thought Committees should try expedients, and thus ascertain the best method of dealing with this class of applicants. The arrangement of the Kensington Committee might have been continued, but the Guardians could not obtain the sanction of the Local Government Board for it.

Mr. Burdett Roberts said that the Society had been most successful in checking street vagrancy; and it would be a mistake to alter its rules on the subject hastily.

After a few words from Capt. Fortescue, it was suggested that the motion and amendments should be referred to the Committee alluded to by Mr. Barrington. The Chairman pointed out that the increase in metropolitan vagrancy was but slight in comparison with the figures quoted by Mr. Cummins. More information was required as to the causes of this increase. From inquiries he had made, he found that the Guardians gave most varying instructions to the Relieving Officers as to the treatment of these cases.

After some further discussion, in which Capt. Fortescue, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Mr. Barrington, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. Alan Lambert, and Rev. H. F. Mallet joined, it was agreed to refer the motion and amendments to the Committee.

The Council then adjourned.

AN INCIDENT.

A LITTLE WAIF.—Caroline Everett, an interesting-looking little girl of nine years of age, was charged on remand with being found wandering without visible means of subsistence. Francis Browne, an officer of the London School Board, said that he had received information from a gentleman connected with the Charity Organisation Society, that the child had been deserted by her mother, and that she had since been wandering about, sleeping and living anyhow, or where she could. She was brought to witness, and he, thinking it was the best thing that could be done, charged her, with a view to getting her placed somewhere where she could be properly looked after. Mr. De Rutzen expressed some surprise at the manner in which the child was dressed, and her nice appearance generally. Mr. Logan, superintendent of the London School Board, informed his worship that this was due to the kindness of Mr. Graham, of the Charity Organisation Society, who had very kindly procured clothes for the little waif, and had taken care of her for the past week. After some discussion, Mr. De Rutzen said that he thought the best thing he could do would be to remand the child to the workhouse for a week, during which time a school could be found for her. On hearing this stern judicial decree the poor girl began to cry bitterly, evidently not relishing the prospect at all. Mr. Graham, however, came to the rescue again, and said that he would take the little one home with him for the week. Mr. De Rutzen offered no objection to that course, and expressed his opinion that Mr. Graham was acting with very great kindness in the matter. Little Carry then dried her eyes and tripped out of court, having fast hold of her protector's hand.—East London Observer, November 17, 1877.

HINTS AND EXPERIENCES.—No. XV.

THE DISTRICT VISITOR'S DUTY.—It is his duty, as the friend of the poor, and consulting for their best interest, to point out the other resources which they should draw, apart from and if possible anterior to his own liberality—as, first and foremost, to stimulate their own industry or suggest how they might abridge their expenditure, thus teaching them how far they can help themselves; and secondly, if this be insufficient, to seek after their relatives, and with all proper delicacy on the one hand yet frankness and fidelity on the other, recommend the case to them, telling them how right it is that one should help those of his own kindred; and thirdly, if there be a shortness or insufficiency still, and so as yet to exceed either the means or inclination of the visitor fully to provide for, to seek for aid in this work of charity from neighbours, and specially from those whose confidence he has won, and whose moral weight in their own little vicinity might secure a general approval and willing co-operation for all his views.—The Sufficiency of the Parochial System, by Dr. Chalmers.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of November 1877 was 38,656, and 40,894 received outdoor relief, making a total of 79,550. This was an increase of 355 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 87, 3,729, and 12,479 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 746. This was a decrease of 52 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 82 on the corresponding day of last year.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 237.

THURSDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 29, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

Wednesday „ 5	2.30 P.M., Co-operation Sub-Committee.
	5 P.M., Medical Committee.
Thursday „ 6	3 P.M., Administrative Committee.

POPLAR.—This Committee would be glad of assistance in the following case:—A girl of 5, the daughter of respectable parents (the father is a member of a benefit club) is ill with spinal paralysis. Admission to the National Orthopaedic Hospital has been obtained for her—the case not being considered quite hopeless. A payment of 7s. 6d. a week, or about £18. 4s. 6d. for, at least, one year is required. The Committee are endeavouring to obtain this sum from private and other sources.

The number of the case is 1,114. Communications should be directed to the Hon. Secretary, Poplar Committee, 129 East India Dock Road, E.

ST. GILES' AND BLOOMSBURY.—'Employment wanted for an applicant, aged 33, with a wife and family. He has been prevented by failing sight from continuing in his occupation as a compositor; but the doctor holds out hope of his ultimate recovery. He would be capable of taking work not making exceptional demands upon his eyesight.' Communications should be addressed to the Hon. Secretary, 7 Arthur Street, Oxford Street, W.C.

CONVALESCENT AND OTHER LETTERS.—An in-patient letter for the Brompton Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, and a letter for the Metropolitan Convalescent Institution can be had by District Committees, on application at the office of the Council. The letters are only available for the present year.

STANDING SUB-COMMITTEES.—The Mendicity Sub-Committee will continue its weekly meetings on Tuesdays at 2.30 P.M. Special notices of meetings will, for the present, be sent to the members of the Districts, Collection and Finance, and Co-operation Sub-Committees.

OFFICE HOURS.—Council Offices, 15 Buckingham Street, W.C. The office is open daily from 10 A.M. to 6 P.M., and on Saturdays from 10 A.M. to 2 P.M. Persons wishing to see the Secretary, except by special appointment, are requested to call between the hours of 11 A.M. and 1 P.M., on Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, or Fridays.

Applications for employment under the Society should be made between the hours of 11 A.M. and 1 P.M., on the above-mentioned days.

REPORT ON ADEQUATE RELIEF.—Copies of this Report can be had, on application to the Secretary to the Council, by Members of Council.

ILLUSTRATIVE CASES.—District Committees, which have not yet done so, are requested to send to the Secretary by December 8, notes of cases of interest dealt with by them during the past month, for insertion in the next monthly Reporter.

LECTURES.—The Secretary of the Council will, in accordance with instructions from the Administrative Committee, be glad to make arrangements with District Committees for one or more popular lectures, by competent persons, on general subjects connected with Charity, Provident Habits, and the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor.

CAUTION TO THE CHARITABLE.—On page 189 will be found a caution respecting a man of the name of Cheslett, the particulars respecting whom have been forwarded to us by the Secretary to the Seamen's Hospital Society, Greenwich.

ST. GEORGE'S, HANOVER SQUARE.—A Warning.—The Hon. Secretary of this Committee has forwarded the following notice:—

A tall, well-dressed, elderly man, having a military appearance, giving the name of Russel, has been calling on several ladies. He represents himself sometimes as sent by one of the churchwardens or by the rector, sometimes as a Guardian or Poor Law Inspector. His object is to collect money for the education of a blind child, or something of the same sort. He gives no address, but in one instance gave the name and address of the blind child. The address was visited but no blind child could be found.

GREENWICH.—The annual meeting of this Committee will be held at 3 P.M., December 3.

HACKNEY.—Mr. E. Leigh Bennett has been elected one of the Hon. Secretaries of this Committee, vice Mr. Edward Bernard resigned.

LAMBETH.—Mr. W. H. Gurney Salter has been elected one of the Hon. Secretaries of this Committee vice Mr. Heathcote Long.

ISLINGTON.—Mr. Henry FitzRoy has been appointed Hon. Assistant Secretary of this Committee for six months.

STEPNEY.—Rev. H. Burchell Herne has been elected one of the Representatives of this Committee.

LECTURE ON THRIFT.—Mr. H. N. Hoare will, on Monday, Dec. 3, deliver a Lecture on 'A Penny Saved is a Penny Gained; or, Investments of the Working Classes,' at the St. Andrew's National Schools, Southam Street, Kensal Road, Kensal Town. The nearest underground station is Westbourne Park. The chair will be taken at 8 P.M. Admission is free.

ASSOCIATION FOR BEFRIENDING YOUNG SERVANTS.—The annual meeting of this Association will be held at the rooms of the Society of Arts, John Street, Adelphi, at 2.30 on Tuesday, December 11. The Dean of Westminster, the Right Hon. James Stanfeld, M.P., and others, will address the meeting.

COUNCIL BUSINESS.

The following business stands for Monday, the 3rd Dec. :

I. To consider the following recommendations of the Administrative Committee on the reference to them from Council of 19th November,* viz. :
'That Lord Shaftesbury be invited to accept the post of Chairman of Council.'

II. Rev. H. I. Cummins to continue the debate on Mr. E. Bond's motion* viz. :

'(1) That the whole of the Executive work of the Central Office be put under one Secretary.

'(2) That with that view the services of the Organising Secretary be dispensed with.'

III. Mr. A. H. Hill to move :—

'That, on the return of Mr. Loch to his secretarial duties, the departmental arrangements of the Society recommended by the Committee on Office Arrangements be at once carried out, and that the Inquiry and Mendicity Department be henceforward subordinated to the General Purposes Office.'

IV. Mr. W. F. Lawrence to move a series of resolutions respecting Adequate Relief. See Reporter, No. 236, p. 183.

V. Hon. R. C. Grosvenor to move :—

'That, in the opinion of the Council of this Society, it has become necessary to alter the existing rules respecting the Constitution of the Society, with a view to the establishment of a smaller representative Governing Body, which shall be responsible for the management of the affairs of the Society; and that for this purpose the Council are of opinion that a special meeting of the members of the Society ought, as soon as possible, to be convened.'

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, November 22. There had been present :—

Mr. E. Peters, and subsequently Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the chair; Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Lt.-Col. Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Capt. Fortescue, Rev. S. A. Barnett, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Rev. H. F. Mallet, Miss Collett, Miss O. Hill, Messrs. Barrington, Brown, Bond, Copeman, Crowder, Edgecombe, Hoare, Lambert, Lawrence, Miner, Maurice, Probyn, Praed, Robbins, Roberts, and Tidman.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on November 20 there had been present :—

Major FitzRoy in the chair; Mrs. Lathbury, Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, Messrs. Barrington, Edgecombe, Hollond, and Lewes; Mr. H. FitzRoy, visitor.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on November 20 there had been present :—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall in the chair; Hon. H. R. Scott, and Mr. Bevan.

THE FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE had met on Wednesday, the 21st November. There had been present :—

General Cavenagh in the chair; Sir R. M. Stephenson, Major Nares, Messrs. Miner, Peters, and Roberts.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending November 17 the receipts had been £30. 16s. 6d. for the General Fund, that there had been no receipts for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances* of the two funds on that day had been £544. 14s. 2d. and £18. 0s. 9d. respectively, the whole of the latter sum being reserved to meet expenditure on School Board cases.

RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMANSHIP.

Lord Lichfield thanked the Council for the resolution which they had passed at their last meeting, on accepting his resignation.

WORK OF THE CENTRAL OFFICE.

The Administrative Committee having, in accordance with the 27th Bye-law, arranged that the motion of which Mr. E. Bond had given notice should be taken first, the motion of which Mr. Bousfield had given notice, viz. :—

That the motion of which Mr. Bond had given notice be taken as urgent for the meeting of Council on the 26th inst.

was not put.

Mr. Bond obtained leave to alter the wording of the first part of his motion, so that instead of reading thus :—

That all departments of the Society's work be placed under one head, and that with that view the services of the Organising Secretary be dispensed with—it read as follows, viz. :—

That the whole of the executive work of the Central Office be placed under one Secretary, and that with that view the services of the Organising Secretary be dispensed with.

It was agreed that the motion should be put in two parts (see notice of 'Council Business.')

After a few remarks from the Chairman, a letter from Mr. H. B. Praed, in favour of the motion, was read.

* The estimated liabilities were about £1,200, exclusive of £300 required for District Committees during the current quarter.

* See Reporter No. 236, p. 184.

Major FitzRoy gave notice that in the event of Mr. Bond's motion being carried, he would move the following rider:—

On and after June 1, 1878, and that leave of absence be granted to the Organising Secretary from 1st January next to that date.

Mr. Bond then moved, and Rev. S. A. Barnett seconded, the motion in the above terms.

Mr. C. L. Cockran, Mr. Bousfield, Mr. C. E. Maurice, and Miss Octavia Hill supported the motion.

Rev. H. F. Mallet, Admiral Gardner, Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, Mr. A. H. Hill, Rev. R. S. A. Walrond, Mr. W. W. Wood, Mr. R. V. Tidman, Lord Lichfield, and Sir Charles Trevelyan, spoke against the motion, either generally, or in reference to the latter part.

Major FitzRoy explained shortly some of the work of the Organising Secretary's department.

Lord Lichfield urged that the former part of the motion be referred to the Administrative Committee.

Mr. Bond was unwilling to give an opening for the protracted and possibly personal discussion which the reference to the Administrative Committee would probably involve. The decision lay really in the hands of the Council.

Mr. J. R. Hollond was in favour of Lord Lichfield's suggestion, but proposed that the question should be referred to a special committee.

Subsequently, Rev. H. I. Cummins, seconded by Mr. W. S. Seton-Karr, moved the adjournment of the debate, which was supported by Rev. R. J. Simpson and Mr. A. D. Graham, and opposed by Mr. H. J. Cornish, but eventually carried.

The Council then adjourned.

CAUTION TO THE CHARITABLE.

Mr. H. T. Cheslett, the person referred to in the following letter which appears in the Birmingham Daily Post of the 22nd inst., having obtained money by false pretences from several supporters of the Seamen's Hospital Society, late Dreadnought, Greenwich, which has agencies in many of the chief towns in the United Kingdom, we are requested to state for the protection of the public that the person in question was dismissed for misconduct a fortnight since. H. T. Cheslett, has, therefore, no connection whatever with the charity in question:—A CASE OF IMPOSTURE.—To the Editor of the Daily Post.—Sir,—Allow me to put your readers on their guard against a respectable-looking, bald-headed, middle-aged man, named Cheslett, who is obtaining money under false pretences. He called at the Glassworks on Saturday, and asked for the gift of 10s., to enable him to complete his journey to London. He stated that he had been employed as assistant clerk in the office of the Seaman's Hospital (late Dreadnought) at Greenwich, and had recently left, because there was no further need of his services. He presented a neat card, with his name and address at the hospital, but took good care to say that he had no longer right to make use of that card. I gave him the 10s., but, upon further consideration, decided yesterday to write to the secretary, Mr. F. C. Burdett, at the hospital, and have this morning received a telegram to the effect that "Cheslett is an impostor," and has got money in like manner from others. His excuse was that he had been to Liverpool to look after a situation, which he had failed to obtain, and had exhausted his resources.—Yours truly, R. L. CHANCE. Chad-hill, Edgbaston, November 21, 1877.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the second week of November 1877 was 38,784, and 41,089 received outdoor relief, making a total of 79,873. This was an increase of 323 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 689, 3,867, and 12,281 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 802. This was an increase of 56 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 121 on the corresponding day of last year.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

HACKNEY.—Annual Meeting.—The annual meeting of this Committee was held on the 12th inst. There was a good attendance. The Chairman, Mr. Robert King, in opening the proceedings, said, after alluding to various topics:—

'New remedies for existing evils always at first meet with great opposition, and it is long before they are received favourably, but, if founded on truth, gradually they gravitate to the masses and become the accepted principles of society. It is thus with the plans for the organisation of charity: the great imposture that existed and preyed upon the charitable called aloud for remedy; it increased to such an extent that local committees started into existence for its suppression, and these, not without great opposition, spread over the whole metropolis, and, for the sake of concert, and for statistical purposes, were joined to a central office.

'We have arrived at this stage of our history that we are recognised by society as filling a useful place, and are used by the charitable to a great and increasing extent, and a feeling is arising that, when a subscriber sends a case to the Society, all responsibility there ends, except a hostile criticism that the one who was relieved was not lifted out of his misery and placed in a position not again to require help—as though a simple resolution of a committee and an ordinary grant could at once remove the causes of failure from that life which possibly might be found (could the causes be traced far into the past) to be the result, perhaps, of evil companionship at school, or of the bad example of a brother or sister, a father or mother.

'There can be no doubt that the constant use of our agency by the charitable has a tendency to lessen the feeling of responsibility, by withdrawing the charitable from contact with suffering, and I must entreat everyone who sends us cases not to let their interest cease there; as far distant, I hope, may be the day when the great sympathy that is now felt for the suffering poor may be in the least lessened. I have again to urge all who have to administer charity funds in this large parish to use the information we have obtained by extended inquiry; we shall not say, "What are you doing?" but, "Come and see what we and others are doing, so that your charity may not be wrongly bestowed."

'In making an annual report of a society like this, whose object is the amelioration of the poor, it is most gratifying to be able to announce progressive work. The influence of the School Board of London is now unmistakably shown by the report of the Governor of Holloway Prison, who states that "The juvenile criminal population has yearly decreased, so that, instead of 136 males and 26 females received in 1869, the number in the present year has been only 28 males and no females"; and the report attributes the decrease to the School Board. Now, when we think that in every town and village in the Kingdom the School Act is being enforced with like results, we can estimate but faintly the enormous influence that will affect the rising population. The temperance movement is making progress, and many are joining the ranks, men of moderate habits giving up their little that they may speak with greater force to those who indulge in excess—the cause of most of the misery of great towns. These signs are cheerful, and bid us look forward with hope and not despair; and I conclude in the words of the great Arnold: "Let us work with the firm hope of success, but with the feeling that we have not succeeded."

NORTH ST. PANCRAS.—Vagrancy.—Mr. A. N. Butt, one of the Hon. Secretaries of the North St. Pancras Committee, writes as follows:—

'As I did not arrive until very late at the Council meeting to-day, and had no opportunity of speaking on the subject of tramps, I shall be glad if you will allow me to state the plan we have adopted of dealing with them. It has met with complete success, and, therefore, I hope the suggestion may be useful to other Committees.

'Our office is seldom visited by vagrants; but a short time ago they suddenly appeared in considerable numbers. Most, if not all of them, collect in the latter part of the morning. From this we surmised that they were casuals, who, having performed the allotted work since breakfast, found it agreeable to lunch at our expense. We therefore instructed our agent to obtain the necessary permission to visit the parish stone-yard early every morning to take a look round. From the first day this was done the applications ceased altogether.'*

BATTERSEA.—Collections in Places of Worship.—The Hon. Secretary of the Battersea Committee writes, that collections in aid of the funds of that Committee will be made in several places of Worship in the parish on Sunday, 9th December.

PROVINCIAL.

BRIGHTON.—The Brighton Charity Organisation Society have adopted the plan of publishing monthly leaflets, which are issued gratis. That for October is headed with the address and office hours of the Society. Then follow a list of the honorary and other officials of the Society, a few remarks respecting the objects, work, membership, and general arrangements of the Society, a classified list of cases 'during the year 1877-78, to the end of last month,' an abstract of accounts to the end of the month, a few 'notes,' and three illustrative cases. The notes state that the Society have recently established a fund for the relief of deserving cases. 'All contributions to it are applied in full without any deduction whatever; the whole of the expenses of investigating the cases and of seeing to the application of the relief granted (which is always given in kind, when practicable) being borne by the general funds of the Society.'

The leaflet is short, clearly printed, and easily read. District Committees may find the publication of similar sheets of good service in bringing the work of the Society to the notice of the residents in their districts. A few copies can be obtained on application to the Secretary of the Council.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RICH AND POOR DISTRICTS.

To the Editor of the 'Charity Organisation Reporter.'

DEAR SIR,—It is a little important just now that members should be well-informed as to the ability of Committees in the poorer districts to be self-supporting—self-supporting, that is to say, under the arrangement which precludes their collecting outside the area belonging to them.

During three years spent in the south and east of London, I have had some opportunities of watching the facts for myself, and also of hearing the views of others better qualified to express an opinion upon them.

I am bound to admit that the supposition with which I entered upon the work was a mistaken one. I believed—and I still believe—the principles and plan of the Society to be so excellent, that I thought they only required to be understood to command the support of the public. In regard to this last assurance I was utterly wrong.

Reasons exist in virtue of which the Charity Organisation Society cannot at present expect to be well supported by the middle classes, and, speaking generally, it is to the middle classes alone that we can look for funds in the poorer parts of London. A few wealthy employers of labour are of course to be found, but in the present state of public opinion we must expect that some of these will be hostile, or at least indifferent, whilst others plead that they have to look after their own people, and also that they have claims upon them in the suburbs where they live.

I must not take up your space by enumerating the Reasons above referred to, but they are, for the most part, closely related to one great fact of which the Charity Organisation Society has no reason to be ashamed. That fact is that we are a reforming Society, and therefore, like all reformers, in a minority. In our endeavour to work out and to propagate sound principles of relief, we must expect to be opposed by many who have not given much thought to the subject, not to speak of those, and they are not a few, who, from a variety of motives, are interested in administering charity upon unsound principles. For a long time to come we must expect to be supported chiefly by the upper classes; because it is mostly amongst them that persons are to be found, who have been led, either by the necessities of their position or by intelligent interest, to give the subject the consideration it requires.

The theory that District Committees should be self-supporting would have been an excellent one, if no Committees had been established until the districts had asked for them, for people may fairly be expected to pay what they very much desire to have. The theory would be good enough to go upon, even as things are, if only we were not ahead of middle class opinion; the middle class purse being quite deep enough for our modest wants, if we were permitted to draw upon it, but since we can count upon the sympathy only of the better educated and most disinterested section of the public, it is pure delusion to expect the poorer District Committees to be self-supporting.

Having shared the delusion, I am naturally disinclined to be hard upon it, and will content myself with pointing out that the reason why it enthrals so many respected members of the Charity Organisation Society is one which is at the root of many errors. Theory, uncorrected by experience, is the fertile mother of mistakes, and the tenacity with which this particular mistake is adhered to by gentlemen who have done good service at the Central and on the West End Committees, is due to the fact that they have not gone through a sufficient course of poor district experiences.

District Committees could probably be self-supporting if they collected outside their own area, which, of course, they would be obliged to do if told that they must not look to the Council for funds, but it would be a melancholy spectacle of disorganisation, if the West End were invaded by a straggling contingent of collectors, representing all the poorer districts of the metropolis!

I am, &c.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 238.

THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 6, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, November 29. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Holland in the chair; the Earl of Lichfield, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Lieut.-Col. Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Captain Fortescue, Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Rev. S. A. Barnett, Rev. H. F. Mallet, Mrs. Lathbury, Miss O. Hill; Messrs. Barrington, Brown, Copeman, Edgcombe, Fuller, Hill, Hoare, Lawrence, Mills, Miner, Maurice, Peters, Roberts, and Robbins.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending November 24 the receipts had been £129. 19s. for the General Fund, and £102. 2s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances† of the two funds on that day had been

* The 13th Bye-Law is as follows:—

'After a resolution or amendment has been moved and seconded, the same shall not be withdrawn without leave of the Council; but the mover may accept a modification of his resolution or amendment, with the consent of the Chairman.'

† The estimated liabilities were about £800, exclusive of £200 required for District Committees during the current quarter.

£273. 12s. 7d. and £120. 2s. 9d. respectively, £18. 12s. 5d. of the latter sum being reserved to meet expenditure on School Board cases.

GRANTS.—That they had made the following grants:—Holborn £15; Mile End £18; Newington £15; Shoreditch £10; Stepney £15; and Bethnal Green £15.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on November 27 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy in the chair; Mrs. Lathbury, Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, Messrs. Barrington, Bousfield, Edgcombe, and Lewes.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on November 27 there had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall in the chair; Major FitzRoy, and Mr. Bevan.

THE FINANCE AND COLLECTION SUB-COMMITTEE had met on Wednesday, the 28th November. There had been present:—

Mr. A. H. Hill in the chair; Sir R. M. Stephenson, Major Nares, Rev. H. I. Cummins, and Mr. F. B. Roberts.

QUARTERLY REPORT ON FINANCE.

The Report of the Finance and Collection Sub-Committee for the quarter ending 30th September last was read. It appeared that the donations on the General Fund had been £771, as against £782 in the corresponding quarter of 1876; and the subscriptions £185, as against £90. A sum of £250 had been contributed to the General Fund by District Committees. A loan of £300 had been obtained from Messrs. Coutts & Co. Loans from the General Fund to the District Committee Aid Fund had been £425, as against £200 in the corresponding quarter of last year. The general receipts on the District Committee Aid Fund had been £39, as against £63; the receipts from District Committees on this fund had in the Michaelmas quarter of 1876 been £363; but no sums had been received from District Committees on this fund in the corresponding quarter of 1877.

£113 less had been received from District Committees on the two funds; and £110 more paid in aid of District Committees. £514 had been thus distributed.

VAGRANCY.

Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe asked if members who were members of Boards of Guardians had found that there was any unusual pressure on the casual wards.

Rev. H. I. Cummins said that there was no such special pressure in the City.

Major-General Gardiner said that there had been an unusual number of admittances in Marylebone.

CHAIRMANSHIP OF THE COUNCIL.

Sir Charles Trevelyan moved the adoption of the following recommendation of the Administrative Committee, viz.:—

That Lord Shaftesbury be invited to accept the post of Chairman of Council.

He said that Lord Shaftesbury was rightly and generally recognised as the representative of British charity. It was therefore most fitting that the Council should elect him as Chairman of the Council of the Charity Organisation Society. Questions of political economy had a close relation to the work of the Society, but, after all, the basis of the work was charity, and the constituents of the Society, whose confidence it was most essential that the Society should secure, were the charitable. It was frequently urged that the Society raised expectations it could not realise; that it inquired with a view to ascertaining demerits. The evidence for this was exceedingly slender. The Society was not so amenable to such strictures as was generally supposed. But the most effective answer to them would be the election of Lord Shaftesbury as Chairman of Council. In his speech at the annual meeting last year Lord Shaftesbury had said:—

All in all, I congratulate you upon the establishment of a Society like this, which places its hands on so many means of helping the needy, and acts so promptly in exposing the impostor. The longer you work the better will your operations become adapted to the wants of the people, and I trust that you will put manifestly forward that you are not merely a Society for repression, looking into the abuses which wrong alike the givers and the poor; but that you are, at the same time, a Society for the help of the deserving and industrious, not by the distribution of doles, but by the help which will place them above necessity and elevate them in all respects.

There could not be a more true and just statement of the objects of the Society than this.

Mr. A. H. Hill seconded the motion. He believed in that catholicity of spirit which prevailed in the Society, and which would gladly welcome Lord Shaftesbury as Chairman.

After some remarks from Mr. Russell Barrington, Major-General L. Gardiner, Mr. C. E. Maurice, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. W. S. Seton-Karr, and Captain Fortescue, Lord Lichfield, seconded by Rev. R. J. Simpson, moved the adjournment of the debate, General Gardiner giving notice of the following amendment, viz. :—

That in future the Chairman of the Council of this Society be elected annually, and that Lord Shaftesbury be asked to accept the office for the year 1878.

WORK OF THE CENTRAL OFFICE.

On the reopening of the discussion on this subject, letters, containing resolutions, were read from the Lambeth, St. Marylebone, and South St. Pancras Committees, together with a letter from Mr. J. Whitcombe.

Mr. E. Bond then stated that General Gardiner was about to give notice of an amendment, which in due course he would himself be ready to accept. The motion would then run as follows :—

That the whole of the executive work of the Central Office be put under one Secretary :

‘And that it be referred to a committee, consisting of General Cavenagh (as Chairman), the Earl of Lichfield, Mr. J. R. Hollond, Mr. W. F. Lawrence, and General Gardiner, to consider and report to Council as to carrying out this object.’

The latter paragraph would take the place of the words—

That with this view the services of the Organising Secretary be dispensed with.

After a short discussion, in which Rev. H. I. Cummins, Mr. E. Bond, Mr. A. G. Crowder, Mr. A. H. Hill, Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, Lord Lichfield, Mr. J. R. Hollond, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Rev. Harry Jones, Lieut.-Colonel Prendergast, and Sir Charles Trevelyan joined, Rev. H. I. Cummins moved the following amendment, which was seconded by Mr. J. R. Hollond, viz. :—

That all the words after ‘that’ in the motion be omitted, in order to insert the following, viz. :—

‘The Council are of opinion that the question of dispensing with the services of an old and valued officer of the Society ought not to be mixed up with a proposal to regulate the relations of the two great departments of the Society’s work to each other, and they consider that no sufficient reasons have yet been shown for dispensing with the services of the Organising Secretary : but they are further of opinion that it is necessary to subordinate the work of Repressing Mendicancy to the more important work of Charity Organisation, and that it should be referred to a special committee to consider and report on the best means of accomplishing this.’

Mr. G. C. T. Bartley, Mr. Russell Barrington, Mr. Seton-Karr, Rev. W. T. Thornhill Webber, and Mr. H. H. Hill supported the amendment.

General Gardiner, in opposing the amendment moved by Rev. H. I. Cummins, gave notice of the following amendment, viz. :—

That all words after ‘one Secretary’ be struck out, and that in lieu thereof the following words be added :—

‘And that it be referred to a committee, consisting of General Cavenagh (as Chairman), the Earl of Lichfield, Mr. J. R. Hollond, Mr. W. F. Lawrence, and General Gardiner, to consider and report to the Council as to the best means of carrying out this object.’

Rev. C. Carruthers, Mr. Crowder, and Mr. W. Day opposed Mr. Cummins’ amendment.

Rev. R. J. Simpson gave notice of the following amendment :—

That the consideration of the question, whether the whole work of the Central Office should not be placed under one head, should be referred to the Administrative Committee, with the instruction that they should report on the subject to Council.

The Secretary having spoken shortly, Mr. Bond replied, a motion for the adjournment of the debate, moved by Dr. Daniel and seconded by Lord Lichfield, being withdrawn.

On a division being taken, the numbers in favour of the amendment, moved by Rev. H. I. Cummins, were 47 : those against the amendment were 40. The amendment having been accepted as a substantive motion, the other amendments were not put.

The Council then adjourned.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

POPULAR.—ANNUAL REPORT.—District Committee Work.—‘The circumstances which draw the attention of the public to the Society are often such as to bring into somewhat excessive prominence the action of the Central Office in respect to large general questions and matters of special temporary importance, and thus to obscure the fact that the chief work of the Society is that which is carried on at its District Offices, in the midst of the London poor, out of sight, for the most part, of the public press and of the world at large. What that work is, in some of its most important aspects, it is the purpose of the following pages to explain. To be occupied with it, to feel that from time to time some fellow-creature, stricken by undeserved misfortune, is raised, and comforted, and helped to renew the struggle of life; that some poor sufferer, afflicted by terrible bodily infirmity, is rescued from squalor and neglect, and placed where sympathy and skill can alleviate even if they cannot cure—these experiences give to the individual members of the Committee courage to carry on their tasks amidst much that is discouraging and even painful, and justify them in the belief that, if only they could really make clear to residents in Poplar what it is they are doing, and trying to do, there would be no necessity to go to their Central Office, or to the West End, for funds to prosecute the work. The careful reading of the Report by persons interested in the district is the more desired because the Committee have reason to suspect that their action is somewhat misunderstood, and the rules that guide them sometimes held to be unreasonably severe. It cannot be too emphatically repeated that the aim of the Charity Organisation Society is, not the suppression of charity, but the diversion of it; that is to say, the diversion of it from the parasite swarms of idlers and cadgers and malingerers by whom a charity dispensed without investigation is certain to be absorbed, to the deserving and afflicted poor, whose sorrows are real sorrows, whose distresses are the result, not of improvidence, waste, and dissipation, but of those calamities which none can be expected to foresee, and which it is the glory of true charity effectually to relieve.’

Principles of Decision.—‘A reference to the Classified List on page 6 will show that nearly half the applications made to the Committee during the year were rejected as “ineligible,” “undeserving,” or “not requiring relief.” The broad principle which has governed the decision in the majority of these cases has been plainly and tersely expressed by Mr. G. W. Hastings, a well-known authority in matters relating to the welfare of the people. He says :—“It is most unkind to do anything which will have the effect of inducing the bulk of the inhabitants of this country to be improvident, or careless, and so to bring themselves ultimately to destitution and misery.” This consideration it is which binds the Committee frequently to refuse assistance, even where the applicants are of fair character, when the distress arises from circumstances that might have been controlled or provided for. If a contrary policy were pursued, if the working-classes of London were to learn that a society existed for the purpose of saving them from the consequences of all ill-considered action, all improvident habits, then that society, however benevolent it might be in intention, would be, not merely no blessing to the people, but a positive curse. On the other hand, when the distress does not originate from some cause which the poor ought to deal with themselves, when it is due, not to vice or indolence, not to want of thrift or want of thought, not to lowness of wage or slowness of work (which latter evils in so far as they are chronic are the result of over-population), when, in a word, the distress comes from some exceptional misfortune, some—roughly speaking—non-preventable cause, then the Committee endeavour to remove it, no regard being had to money, time, or toil.’

Organisation Expenses.—‘Before leaving this point it may be well to notice its bearing upon an objection sometimes urged against the Society, that so large a part of its funds is spent upon mere machinery. Such an objection cannot, it is thought, be brought against a Committee which endeavours, in the manner described in this report, to secure for persons in distress the best help that can be obtained, both from other benevolent agencies and from the resources of private charity. It is true that a paid agent is employed, an office rented, and sundry other small expenses incurred, but, in return for this, a house is daily opened where any case of distress belonging to the district can be investigated, and where once a week a meeting takes place of the working members of the Committee, each of whom is pledged by the fact of his attendance to do his best to secure "fitting action in all cases." An attempt is here made to show what that "fitting action" means, and, from what has been already said, it must be sufficiently obvious that the balance-sheet is a very inadequate representation of the expenditure it involves.

The report contains several typical cases, with remarks on dealing with cases of illness and widowhood, which cannot fail to be of interest to those who are desirous of making their charity as far as possible remedial.

PROVINCIAL.

BRIGHTON.—Annual Meeting.—At the sixth annual meeting of the Brighton Charity Organisation Society, held on the 26th of November last, the Chairman the Mayor of Brighton—offered, as 'one of the trustees for the training ships . . . if his fellow trustees were agreeable . . . to send a ship to be stationed at Shoreham, so that Brighton might have a place to send her destitute boys to.'

In the annual report, which shows a steady increase of work, it is stated, 'in the relief of distress in the ranks of deserving poor, as well as those who by sudden and unlooked-for reverse of fortune, have been reduced to poverty, your Society has been able to do more than formerly, owing to the increased amount which has been placed at its disposal for purely charitable purposes. It is hoped that this charitable fund may be largely augmented in future. In those cases of gross imposition and fraud which, in pursuance of a public duty, your Society has felt bound to prosecute, not a single failure has occurred, although, unfortunately, from the reluctance of many persons to give evidence in open court, several flagrant cases of imposture have for the time evaded punishment. Still, the opinion of both residents and visitors seems to be unanimous that, since the establishment of the Society, Brighton has been free from the plague of beggars to an extent unknown in former years.'

'But beyond those operations of the Society which can be shown by statistical reports, the amount of work done in gradually forming public opinion on matters of such grave importance to the national welfare as the administration of the Poor Laws, the mode of dealing with that vagrant class which is the marvel of other countries and the disgrace of our own, and the condition of the labouring classes generally, the administration of the great medical charities, and questions of a like nature, is not to be estimated by any return of mere office work. That work of this kind is still to be done in Brighton, especially with reference to medical charities, seems probable, if the statement made in a late article in the Quarterly Review, October 1876 (headed "London Alms and London Pauperism"), that one in four of the whole population of this town is in receipt of gratuitous medical relief, is in any way founded on fact. It is a matter of regret that the report of a committee of this Society on medical charities, printed with the annual report of 1875, has not received that amount of consideration which the importance of the questions raised in it might seem to demand. Meantime, in furtherance of the object which your Society keeps steadily in view, it confidently recommends the extension of the system of provident dispensaries as one of the best means for improving the condition of the poorer classes.'

The Society has also, as we have good reason to believe, been highly instrumental in checking the action of collectors for spurious London charities.

We should be glad to know what steps—if any—have been taken to promote the formation of Parochial Councils or Committees of Relief in the various ecclesiastical districts of Brighton. One of the latest formed in the metropolis will be found fully described in the Reporter of 14 Dec. 1876, No. 198.

ORGANISATION NOTES.

ANOTHER EVIL OF PAWNBROKERS.—The pawn shop is, it has often been said, the poor man's bank. But it is not a savings bank. The conveniences it offers create a tendency to unthrift, and to all the evils that arise from unthrift. One of the most truly charitable acts, it is now generally acknowledged, is to place within the reach of the poor easy and secure means of saving their money, and obtaining a reasonable and not artificial rate of interest. The Sanitary Record of the 16th ult. points out another prevalent though not necessarily insurmountable evil. These two, among other instances, show how infectious diseases are spread, through pawnshops:—

'CASE 1.—Two sisters lived in a small village near London, but nearer to a country market town. One of these sisters was seized with the small-pox and died. The survivor, who was next to destitute, took some of the deceased's clothes and the sheets and blankets off the mattress on which she died to the pawnbroker of the market town in question. The sheets were refused, as they were evidently dirty, but the blankets and the apparel were taken in. At the same time, on the same day, A. Z., a workman, pawned his jersey at the same place. He took that jersey out five days afterwards, and within a fortnight was also seized with the small-pox, of which, till then, there had been no case in the town. He recovered; but the outbreak of which his case was the commencement led to three deaths.

'CASE 2.—A servant, in service at Holloway, paid a visit to her mother who lived in the eastern district of London to spend her week's holiday with her. During her stay there she pawned a velvet jacket, which she redeemed the day before she returned to service. Soon afterwards her mistress's baby was seized with the small-pox, and mother and child died of the disease. The servant escaped.'

These and three other cases, the Sanitary Record states, have been very carefully inquired into, and while it acknowledges that 'many solutions of the difficulty at slight expense and trouble will offer themselves for consideration,' it writes that 'No better means could possibly be devised to spread such infectious diseases as are communicable by clothing than the pawnbrokers' shops. They are in truth veritable Exchanges of Disease, and the poorer the people, the more disease prevails amongst them, the livelier is the communication between infected and uninfected clothing and bedding.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the third week of November 1877 was 39,116, and 41,371 received outdoor relief, making a total of 80,487. This was an increase of 614 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 1,234, 3,969, and 12,275 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 812. This was an increase of 10 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and of 183 on the corresponding day of last year.

The 'CHARITY ORGANISATION REPORTER' is published weekly during the Sittings of Council; on the second Thursday in each month throughout the year a Double Number is published.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. LOCK, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, December 6. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the chair; the Earl of Lichfield, Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, Major-General Gardiner, Lieut.-Col. Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Capt. Fortescue, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Rev. S. A. Barnett; Messrs. Barrington, Bevan, Bond, Brown, Copeman, Crowder, Hill, Lawrence, Peters, Peto, Roberts, Mrs. Lathbury, and Miss O. Hill.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on December 4 there had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Hon. H. R. Scott, Major FitzRoy, and Mr. Bevan.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending December 1 the receipts had been £69. 8s. 8d. for the General Fund, and £1. 1s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances* of the two funds on that day had been £275. 15s. 6d. and £24. 17s. 3d. respectively, £10. 5s. 11d. of the latter sum being reserved to meet expenditure on School Board cases.

CHAIRMANSHIP OF COUNCIL.

The following amendment to the recommendation of the Administrative Committee, that Lord Shaftesbury be invited to accept the post of Chairman of Council, was moved by General Lynedoch Gardiner, and seconded by Lord Lichfield, viz.:—

That in future the Chairman of the Council of this Society be elected annually. And that Lord Shaftesbury be asked to accept the office of Chairman for the year 1878.

General Gardiner explained that 'the year' mentioned in his amendment was from one annual meeting of the Society to the next. He thought that the Chairman of Council for each year should take the chair at the annual meeting in March, and hold office till the March following. It would be necessary to ask Lord Shaftesbury to take the Chairmanship for a somewhat longer period, viz., from the present time to March 1879.

With the permission of the Council, the words 'ensuing year' were substituted for 'the year 1878.'

After a short debate, in which Sir Charles Trevelyan, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. Bousfield, and Admiral Gardner took part, the amendment, which it had been agreed to vote upon in two parts, was duly put and carried, and accepted as a substantive motion.

WORK OF THE CENTRAL OFFICE.

It was agreed, on the motion of Rev. H. I. Cummins, seconded by Mr. Russell Barrington, that the following members of Council be members of the Committee to be appointed in accordance with the resolution of Council of the 3rd inst., viz. Lord Lichfield, Major-General Cavenagh, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. E. Bond, Mr. W. F. Lawrence, Mr. J. R. Hollond, and Rev. H. I. Cummins.

STATEMENT OF THE BARNARDO COMMITTEE.

The adoption of the statement of the Barnardo Committee was moved by Lord Lichfield, seconded by Mr. J. R. Hollond.

Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, seconded by Mr. C. E. Maurice, moved the following amendment, viz.:

* The estimated liabilities were about £800, exclusive of £200 required for District Committees during the current quarter.

That the statement be referred back to the Committee with instructions to amend it by the omission, as far as possible, of all charges against Mr. Barnardo. And that this report be issued, at the discretion of the Secretary, only to such persons inquiring as are legitimately interested.

It was agreed that the amendment should be taken in two parts.

Mr. Russell Barrington, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. J. W. Probyn, Admiral Gardner, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Rev. H. I. Cummins, and Mr. W. W. Wood, supported the motion.

Mr. Bousfield and Mr. E. Bond supported the amendment.

Miss O. Hill, Mr. W. F. Lawrence, Major FitzRoy, Mr. W. Day, and Mr. L. G. Gordon-Robbins, said a few words.

The amendment having been put and lost, 10 voting for it, 33 against it, the motion for the adoption of the Report was put and carried.

A series of verbal amendments, of which Major FitzRoy had given notice, were, with others suggested by General Gardiner, and Mr. Gordon-Robbins, referred to the Committee.

To the latter part of Mr. Edgcombe's amendment, amendments were moved by Rev. H. I. Cummins, viz.:

That an advertisement be inserted in the newspapers, stating that the statement can be had at the Central Office;

by Rev. R. J. Simpson, viz.:

That the question of the mode of publication be referred to the Administrative Committee;

and by Lord Lichfield. The latter, to the following effect, was eventually carried, viz.:

That it be referred to the Administrative Committee to adopt the best and most effectual means of giving full publicity to the completed statement of the action of the Society in the Barnardo case (as approved to-day).

ADJOURNMENT OF COUNCIL.

The following recommendation of the Administrative Committee having been taken as urgent, was moved by Mr. Russell Barrington, and seconded by Lieut.-Colonel Prendergast, viz.:

That the Council adjourn to the 14th January next.

Mr. J. R. Hollond, seconded by Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, moved the adjournment of the debate.

The Council then adjourned.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

GREENWICH.—Annual Meeting.—The Annual Meeting of this Committee was held on the 4th instant, Major-General Bainbridge being in the chair.

Mr. Burdett, Secretary to the Seamen's Hospital, in moving the adoption of the Report, said he had been a resident of the district for about four years, and although he did not altogether agree with the work of the Society he was pleased with the good that had been done. Passing through the park and over Blackheath he could not at one time go above fifty yards without meeting a beggar. One was now scarcely met, and as citizens they were much indebted to the local branch for what they had accomplished in this district. He believed, speaking of hospital work, that the Charity Organisation Society enabled them to look forward to the time when those persons who applied for assistance and help from the hospitals, and who were really ill and deserving, would receive aid without that delay and annoyance which was experienced from the impudence and professions of the able-bodied and undeserving.

* This item, having been collected in error, has been refunded.

Rev. F. S. Clark seconded the adoption of the report. He thought if persons would spend a little more in studying the operations of the Society, and remember that it was a Charity Organisation and not a relief Society, more good would be done.

The Rev. R. J. Simpson said, if after 40 years the Poor-law had been unable effectually to deal with the question of relief, how could they expect the Charity Organisation Society to do so in eight years, or to attempt to do so without opposition? The nation spent a large sum of money in carrying out a system of public relief which enabled every man to calculate to a certainty what he will receive, and that, no matter how reckless or idle he may be, without any discriminate inquiry being made. When the Society had to adjust such a system it had a gigantic work before it, which required a great deal of energy and courage to carry out.

It was impossible to organise charity without directly or indirectly repressing mendicancy; but for one case of repression and prosecution they had hundreds of cases in which they were quietly working for the benefit of the poor, and elevating them from a state of pauperism or semi-pauperism to one of self-reliance and independence. Many might imagine that because they saw a prosecution about every three months, where the public themselves would not interfere, the Society was mainly formed for repressing mendicancy, but it was not so.

One objection to the Society was, 'We don't want other people to spend our money; we want to spend it ourselves.' The Society said they wanted them to spend their own money, but in such a way that it would not injure, but benefit the poor. Another objection was that their working expenses were very large in comparison with the relief given, and he said, so much the better, and the Society would not become what it should be until such expenses were 100 instead of 70 per cent. If all the money in the coffers of London was properly distributed there would be no need for the Society to give one farthing in relief. If charity consists in flinging a shilling or a half-crown to a person the moment he asked for it, no doubt whilst many would be ready to give there would be more ready to receive; but if there was to be no inquiry in a metropolis of ten cities, with a population of 4,000,000, which was the focus into which the whole nation poured its paupers; if they wished to have the opportunity of allowing impostors to prey upon the benevolent, they could not do better than allow indiscriminate almsgiving to go on.

Speaking of ladies and district visiting, it was a delicate subject,—than them they found few more active and intelligent workers,—but they should be able to get amongst them those who could make up for the terrible benevolent misdeeds of their sisters; for more harm had been done by warm-hearted benevolent ladies—and, second to them, by misguided clergy—than by anyone else. If the Society did no other work than diffusing a discerning spirit amongst the district visitors, it would do a good work; but without the discernment the angel of light produces darkness to an alarming extent.

Mr. Rilton Turner said he was bound to say that the Society was by no means perfect, but a great number of persons were themselves to blame for not remedying what they said were evils. They could not relegate the responsibility to others. From what he saw of the Report that branch deserved encouragement for its success in discouraging begging, and for that alone it was well worthy of support. The Society had plenty of energy; for that it could hardly be blamed! According to the Poor Law the responsibility for relief was what he might term perpendicular—from grandfather to grandchild—but in Germany it reached aunts and uncles, and every person had to contribute towards the support of his or her relatives, and consequently the poor-rate was diminished. The Society was entitled to some credit for driving into work the undeserving, by cutting them off from all sources of charity. With regard to prosecution, it was a most painful task, but after many years' experience he had found that the person prosecuted frequently came to him for advice afterwards. In nearly every case of charity which came before them there was a screw loose, and they must find out where it was, and make the person feel that he must become an independent instead of a dependent man. It was of no use people denouncing the Society without sharing in the work, or learning how it was done. To those they would say, 'Come and help us; see our work, and if we are wrong, show us where.'

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the fourth week of November 1877 was 39,403, and 41,733 received outdoor relief, making a total of 81,136. This was an increase of 649 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 1,107, 3,646, and 12,579 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 772. This was a decrease of 40 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 88 on the corresponding day of last year.

PROVINCIAL.

ABERDEEN.—Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor.—At the eighth annual meeting of the Association, held on the 13th ult., Lord Provost Jamieson, who was in the chair, said: 'The public generally realise the benefits of this Society. It is, and ought to be, looked upon by them very much as the means of intelligently distributing their charity. If we are really beneficially to give away money to the poor, we must do one of two things. We must go there first ourselves and examine into the cases, and see that they are really needy cases, proper cases, cases that can be alleviated beneficially for the person and for society; or we must do what a number of us feel is the only other resort we can apply to, namely, to apply to the Society. We shall then be able, certainly, to do what is right in the circumstances.'

'This Society exists not merely for the purpose of handing over money and food and clothing for the poor. That is not the object of the Society, or at least that is not altogether the object of the Society. The object of it mainly is to find out—first, the condition of parties who apply for relief; to ascertain what their difficulties are, what their real circumstances are, what their relations in life are, and, if possible, stimulate them to help themselves to make a livelihood, and to appear respectable in the world. If this is not done, we shall have done no good thing to the poor.'

'No doubt there will be cases in which you cannot possibly put the poor in the way of making their livelihood, but you can then support them until they are able to do so, and if that is not possible, then you know the institution to which to hand them over for the purpose of something like permanent support. Our institution is to help those who cannot help themselves, and to help them especially in a time of need, a time of depression, a time of sickness, it may be, when they have been brought very low, and to put the hands of the Society around them, and bear them up until they are able to do something again respectably for themselves. To do anything else, I need not tell you, is only to foster and to promote pauperism, and I hope that this Association will not be found lending itself to anything of the sort.'

It appeared from the Report that 813 cases—23 more than last year—had been dealt with, there being a proportionate decrease in unsuitable cases. With regard to the workshop, the number to whom work was offered during the past year was 226. Of that number 69 did not present themselves at the workshop, while 46 of those who did go declined to commence work. The number who commenced to work was 111, or less than one-half of those who applied for assistance because they had no work; and of those who did make a commencement, 11 remained less than a day; so that out of a total of 226 who would have accepted relief had it been offered to them, these figures show distinctly that 126 of the number could do without it, while the remaining 100 were put in a position to help themselves, and in numerous instances permanent employment was obtained for them.

The Report referred specially to the other departments of the work of the association—the Industrial Register, the Loan Fund, Mendicity, the Prison Aid Society, the Flower Mission, &c.

Rev. J. M. Dawson quoted the following definition of organised charity: 'To work as well as to give, and to give with clear intelligence as well as kind purpose, make it the practical charity that is needed in these times.'

He urged upon all Christian communities to consider the claims of this Society, not as diminishing the chances of their own poor for relief in their particular congregations, but rather as taking up those cases which no congregational organisation can overtake.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Charity Organisation Society.—The annual meeting of this Society was held on the 6th inst. The Mayor was in the chair.

Archdeacon Prest said he believed there was a large fund of generosity in the people of these towns; but, after all, there was a limit to the power of giving. The experience of those who worked as he did in large populations told us that any day there might be found a number of persons who would spend a whole day in walking about to the houses of those who were supposed to be charitable; and then, when asked the circumstances of their case, could not tell with any precision where they lived. You could not in every case follow out the investigation; and very often you lost time, temper, and money. We wanted a society which would really conduct these investigations, and this would largely economise the funds available for the relief of poverty.

'The cost of working the Society diminished the funds, but, notwithstanding this there was an immense increase in the amount of real charity well bestowed. The Society did not wish to take the reins out of a man's hands, or to refuse to let him do what he will with his own; but it desired to help him where he really had not got the reins at all, and could learn nothing whatever of the applicant. In fact, the Society encouraged personal investigation as far as possible; for nothing was better than that we should make our own hands our executors, and our own eyes our overseers, and that we should personally give, because we could give the word of sympathy and of wise counsel at the same time. But as this was impossible to most of us, this Society afforded a most useful and practical agency.

'What was given indiscriminately was to a very large extent lost. We ought to economise in every direction, in order that when deserving cases came they might have help to the full measure of their needs and deserts, whilst at the same time the undeserving might receive that check and, if possible, that absolute and entire repression which was so desirable in a well-organised community.'

Mr. C. B. P. Bosanquet moved: 'That this meeting approves of the objects and working of the Society, considers its system and organisation valuable for the purposes of relieving distress and preventing imposture, and strongly recommends it to the moral and material support of the public.' He said the object of this Society was to bring about a division of labour in the work of charitable relief. It was quite true that they would be very glad to go back to that simple system of charity which had been alluded to, but which was only possible in a village; but it was obvious that that was out of the question in large towns, where the rich and poor generally lived at different ends of the town, and where cases of distress were often of an extremely complicated character. There were many cases with which an individual who was desirous of personally bestowing charity on the deserving would scarcely know how to deal, and to these the Society was ready and anxious to give information.

He felt most strongly the importance of what Archdeacon Prest had said as to the importance of in every way encouraging personal intercourse between the charitable and the distressed. That was a point the Society had not forgotten, and one in which they were anxious that more instead of less should be done. It was a mistake to suppose that the Society wished to do the charity of the public for them. At the same time the officer of the Society was ready to act as the agent of everybody inquiring into cases of apparent distress.

The efforts of the Society were not altogether, though chiefly, local; it had communication with similar organisations in many parts of the world—in India, the United States, Australia, on the Continent, and in England, Ireland, and Scotland; and they were thus enabled readily to obtain information in cases both of distress and imposture. He had observed that there had been a good deal relating to the Artisans' Dwellings Act in the local newspapers of that day. He read all about it with the greatest interest, because it was entirely owing to the Charity Organisation Society in London, and to the labours of the special Committee appointed to consider the whole subject of the worst parts of London, that Mr. Cross was enabled—by the information they laid before him—to bring in the bill which is now the Artisans' Dwellings Act. He ventured to say that, if this Society had the support which the resolution he had moved said it deserved, if a number of people took a cardinal interest in it, they might do a great deal to mature public opinion on such a subject, and promote the wise application of such a measure as that to which he had referred to the needs of the town. In conclusion, he wished to say to all, 'Please make use of the Society.'

Councillor Dixon seconded the motion. He said there was never a greater fallacy than the belief that indiscriminate and bounteous giving wiped out poverty. So far was indiscriminate charity from wiping out poverty, that in the great majority of cases it actually increased the very thing they wished to do away with. It destroyed self-reliance, and it was important to this and every country that the feeling of self-dependence should be strengthened.

It must not be supposed that the Society was against liberal giving; the only point on which they quarrelled with many benevolent and kind-hearted people was their mode of giving. As there was only a limited amount of means, they wished it all to go to the deserving poor, and not to dissolute and undeserving people, who would rather beg than work.

ILLUSTRATIVE CASES RECENTLY DEALT WITH BY DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

RECOMMENDED AND ASSISTED.

Marylebone.—C. C. was a single woman, upwards of 70 years of age. She had been assisted by her brother, and thus kept from the parish. Upon the brother's death his widow felt unable to continue her late husband's payments, and C. C. applied to the parish. The Guardians offered admission, as it appeared the woman had no means whatever. The case was then brought before the Marylebone Committee. Through the clergy, two nephews and a niece were got to promise the aunt 6d. a week each, and the clergy undertook to give a small pension. The Guardians, upon this being represented to them, reconsidered their decision, and granted 3s. weekly.

Islington.—A man, a clothier's cutter, who had been for seven weeks unable to go to his work in consequence of the breaking of a blood-vessel, applied to our Committee for an in-patient's letter for the Brompton Convalescent Hospital. He had a wife and six children, the eldest only 12. They bore a most excellent character. The man had belonged to the Foresters' Club, but he had been 'scratched off' three years before, not being able to keep up the payments when he was out of work. His employer had sent him 10s. a week during the first part of his illness, and was ready to take him on again directly he was fit for work. As Hampstead was nearer to the man's home than Brompton, an out-patient's letter for the Consumption Hospital there was given him until he could be admitted, and 10s. was granted in the meantime, and his case was to come up again. The attention of the Committee was now called to his family by the School Board. As the wife was earning what she could, and friends were helping, it was decided to give clothing, of which part was provided for by members of the Committee, the rest by a grant of £2. 10s., and to make them an allowance by the week when the husband went into the hospital. Their weekly income was made up in this way:—

The wife earned about	6s. a week.
The Strangers' Friend Society gave	2 "
St. Mark's Lay Association "	2 "
Our Committee	5 "
	15s.

The husband stayed six weeks in the hospital, came out with his health improved, and was then sent to Walton for a month during which time the weekly 5s. was continued. He then returned, and was able to go to work again, and expressed much gratitude to the Committee for having helped to prevent him from applying to the parish.

A man aged 34, a labourer, with a wife and four young children, applied for help to get the clothing necessary to enable them to emigrate to Australia. The man suffered from asthma, which generally prevented his earning much in the winter; he thought the drier climate of Australia might perhaps cure him. His wife's two brothers were out there, doing well, and had sent the money for their passage. They had collected the money for their journey to Plymouth, from whence the ship was to sail, and all they now wanted was clothing, a certain quantity of which all emigrants are obliged to have before they are admitted on board. Inquiry proved them to be thoroughly respectable, and it was decided to help them. What they wanted was provided in clothing and the sum of £1. 5s., given by or through different members of Committee, and by £1 granted from the funds of the Committee. The family sailed last month.

Holborn.—M. F., a widow with three children—the two elder at school—had recently lost her husband, a journeyman printer, his sudden death throwing upon her the support of the children. She applied for and received outdoor relief, 4s. 6d. a week. The family were well known and respected in the home where they had lived seventeen years, and which she now had to leave. She applied to the Committee for help to purchase a sewing machine having collected from neighbours a considerable sum towards the purchase-money. A grant of £1 was made out of a private fund placed at the disposal of the Committee. This, with £3 she had collected, enabled her to buy a good second-hand machine, and to increase largely her weekly earnings.

St. Olave's, No. 1,287.—The applicant applied for assistance to enable him to pay for his passage to South Africa, stating at the same time that he had been suffering from consumption for the past three years, and had been compelled to give up work for twelve months. It appeared on inquiry that both applicant and his wife bore excellent characters. For some considerable time the man had been dependent on his wife's earnings as an umbrella maker. The Committee obtained for the case the sum of £9. 2s. from private individuals, and made a grant of £5. 14s. from their own funds. This enabled the man to pay his passage of £16. 16s. to Port Natal. The doctor had recommended his going to this place as the only means of saving his life. On leaving England the applicant wrote a letter to this Committee, thanking them most gratefully for the liberal way in which they had assisted him.

Woolwich.—J. P., a labourer, with wife and five children, earning altogether in full work 36s. per week, but at present only 21s., asked for a loan and a grant, to enable him to send his son, aged 17, out to Australia as an emigrant. A married daughter and husband were going out, and the opportunity seemed a good one. A loan of £4 was granted, to be repaid by weekly instalments, and £2 given for outfit. The family had been suffering from sickness for some time, which made it difficult for them to raise the money. The man belonged to a burial club.

E. R., a married woman, aged 39, with seven children, applied for loan of £5 to buy a mangle. Her husband is subject to fits, and is therefore unable to get or retain regular work. A daughter (14) is at service, with 2s. a week wage, and a son (16) gets 1s. a week as apprentice to a waterman. The woman supports the family by washing, and earns fair wages in the summer. She has managed this year to keep herself and family off the rates. She bears an excellent character and provides good security. The loan was granted.

SELF-SUPPORTING MEDICAL INSTITUTIONS.

NEWCASTLE AND GATESHEAD PROVIDENT MEDICAL SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society was held recently. The Report, which was adopted, stated:—The object of the society is to afford those of the working classes—who are in a position to do so—an opportunity of paying for their medical attendance, and thereby relieving the medical charities. The report of the medical officer relative to the medical work performed renders it unnecessary to enter upon that part of the year's operations further than merely to record the satisfaction of the committee with our present medical officer. We again congratulate the members on the usefulness of the society, and trust every member will use his utmost endeavours to increase its usefulness by spreading a knowledge of its advantages. It is now three years since it was determined to establish the society, and we are proud to testify to the amount of really satisfactory benefit derived by the members, as will be seen from the number attended, both at home and at the dispensary, as well as the number of cured and relieved, together with the low death-rate. During the year the number of members has continued to increase. We have now upon the books 1,129 male members; 698 female members; 99 juvenile members; 1,304 children members; making a total of 3,221 persons. The following is a general summary of the numbers of members treated, with results:—Cured, 720; relieved, 383; advised, 12; not treated, 6; accouchements, 22; under treatment, 32; total, 1,175. Deaths, 6.

PLYMOUTH.—Proposed Amalgamation of Free and Provident Dispensaries.—Mr. W. H. Alger has forwarded to us a copy of a pamphlet on the 'Outline of a Scheme for the Amalgamation of the Plymouth Public and Provident Dispensaries.' The Court of the Governors of the Public Dispensary have resolved that, 'this Court gives power to its Committee to adopt the provident system in connection with this institution.' Mr. Alger proposes that effect should be given to this resolution in the following manner:—In future a subscription of one guinea to the Public Dispensary should entitle the subscriber to four recommendation papers. These recommendation papers should be given to applicants for medical advice, not as a title to gratuitous treatment, but, as it were, as payment on their behalf of the sick fines, which—not having previously become members of the Provident Dispensary—they would, according to the usual rules of a Provident Dispensary, be required to pay on admission to its benefits during illness. The subscriber would thus have in his hands the power of absolving from the sick fine those to whom he gave his paper of recommendation. After being admitted in this way the patient would take his place as an ordinary Provident Dispensary member, and would pay sixpence, which would thus be considered equivalent to the weekly payment of an ordinary member for six weeks. After six weeks the patient would be induced, if possible, to continue his weekly or monthly prepayment, and he would not be allowed to have the benefit of medical attendance on any other footing for another six weeks, unless it were found on inquiry that he was a suitable recipient for further gratuitous advice.

Mr. Alger points out that, 'in this way, whilst the Provident system would be engrafted upon the Public Dispensary, yet the charity would still be holding out a welcome hand to those poor persons who could not afford to pay for medical assistance; and the investigations which would be made into the merits of each case, whilst weeding out improper persons, would doubtless bring into notice the really necessitous cases, and thus enable the benevolent to render aid to them in other ways.'

These last words which we have italicised suggest one of the most pressing considerations in medical charity organisation. Sickness being of necessity the crisis in the career of many at which timely assistance may be effectual, and after which even lavish assistance may be unavailing, it is most important that the charitable who give medical relief and the charitable public outside hospitals and dispensaries should so co-operate that, with the medical advice and treatment, assistance during convalescence and other adequate aid should be given, and at the same time everything be done to induce the patient to insure himself, so far as may be possible, against the hopeless difficulties which a recurrence of illness may bring with it.

The pamphlet contains numerous suggestions respecting the apportionment of medical duties and payments, of great importance for the just and easy settlement of details. With regard to the position of the medical profession we quote the following paragraphs:—

'A striking illustration of the unwise prodigality of the medical profession is to be found in the Plymouth Public Dispensary. At this institution four physicians and four surgeons gave, during the past year, their best advice to nearly four thousand (3,928) patients. Each of these persons might have had advice and medicine for six weeks; and supposing that ten interviews took place between each ticket-holder and his medical attendant during the six weeks, either at the patient's house or at the Dispensary (and I understand from one of the staff that this number is below the real average), this will represent about forty thousand (39,280) interviews or visits. Now, what is the sum paid for this enormous amount of mental and physical wear and tear?

'Six of these gentlemen get absolutely nothing, whilst the other two, who do most of the home visiting, receive £120 per annum between them; and, dividing this sum by the figures just quoted, it will be found that the medical profession was paid at the preposterous rate of less than three farthings for each consultation or actual home visit.'

SUFFOLK COUNTY MEDICAL CLUB.—A meeting was held at the Town Hall, Ipswich, on the 29th ult., for the purpose of electing a Committee of Management, and to take such steps as might be thought desirable towards the establishment of the Suffolk County Medical Club.

Sir Edward Kerrison, who was in the chair, said it was his wish, as well as, he was sure, of all the gentlemen who had acted with him, that the Club should be made entirely self-supporting. . . . The Eye Medical Club, which had now been in successful working for a year and a half, made no payment to its stewards; and he sincerely hoped that, in the various other districts in the county of Suffolk there would be people found who would be ready to collect subscriptions and receive the names of members for the Suffolk County Medical Club. He did not doubt that in some instances the overseer, in others the schoolmaster, or, it might be, farmers would take this duty without payment. The Eye Club had some 4,000 members; the number was being added to every day, and the only payment to officers of that kind was one of £20 a year to the general secretary. . . . It would be necessary to have a general secretary at Ipswich, and, for a time, a gentleman appointed here and there to assist him in putting the stewards in the way of collecting these sums, but this could be done for a nominal payment of some £5 or £10 a year, according to the district. If, however, after a time, gentlemen could not be found in the various districts of the county willing to collect the subscriptions without payment, then he should say it would be almost better not to have a Club at all.

Alluding to a letter of Dr. Fletcher's, in which he spoke of the popularity of the Club in his district of Earl Soham, where, out of a population of 3,000 as many as 1,300 persons had already joined the Club; and in which, referring to expenses, he mentioned that the amount received from the Eye Club was £187, which was supplemented to the amount of £60 by the honorary fund, Sir Edward Kerrison said that, taking the rate as laid down in the rules of the County Club, the payment for a thousand people would be £32 a year, so that, if there were 10,000 people in the County Club, the extras paid to the medical officers would amount to something over £300 a year. He went on to state that considering that these medical men would have this little extra beyond what they would have in the ordinary cases in the same class, and considering that the money was collected for them, he thought they ought to be satisfied with this arrangement. Sixty-eight medical gentlemen had signified their willingness to accede to these terms, and he believed this number would be increased the moment the Club set to work.

If gentlemen resident in the various districts would call the labourers together in the evening at the different schools, as he understood Dr. Short was going to do in six different parishes next week, and explain to them the rules, tell them of gentlemen who would be willing to receive subscriptions, and point out to them that they were eligible to receive the benefits of the Club one month after they had joined, that would be an admirable method of making known the advantages of the Club, and inducing those to join for whose special benefit it was formed. In that way not only would people be helping the labouring classes in times of sickness, but they would at the same time be directly tapping the very sources of pauperism; and it was upon the principle of stopping pauperism as well as on the principle of affording medical relief that he and others had taken up this movement. Many counties in England were making applications for rules, in order that they might be able to see what Suffolk was doing in this matter.

Dr. Short observed that this County Medical Club was not entering into competition with the Oddfellows' or Foresters' Clubs in any way. On the contrary, this Club was intended to assist them rather than be at all antagonistic. In many cases provision was only made for the men; this Club proposed to include the wives and families as well; and one direct benefit would be that the surgeon of the district would become acquainted with the families of the labouring classes, and would be able to help the great benefit clubs to healthy members. The Medical Club would also help those who were inclined to be self-provident by providing medical attendance for their families.

ONE CHECK ON INTEMPERANCE.

Theories, statistics, and statements respecting drunkenness and pauperism are to be found in every newspaper and periodical. And some are attempting, by placing within the reach of the people more rational amusements, to divert them from grosser pleasures. To these the following translation of a part of a description given by George Sands of a marriage festival in central France may be of interest. It shows how, in an old-world district of Europe, only a comparatively short distance from London, at every peasant's wedding several days used to be spent in serio-comic mummeries—in strange, almost childish ceremonies and playing—which formed a part of an inheritance of thought and symbolism, bequeathed from very far distant ages, and which, notwithstanding their wildness and grossness, were powerful to check drunkenness, improvidence, and recklessness:—

Two young fellows, representing a husband and wife, dress themselves up as beggars, covered with the most miserable rags. The husband is the dirtier of the two: vice has degraded him; the wife is only unhappy and disgraced by the misconduct of her husband.

They are called the gardener and the gardener's wife. But the husband goes by various names, each of which has a meaning. He is called indifferently the straw-carrier, because he wears a wig of straw or hemp, and because, to hide his nakedness, he covers his legs and a part of his body with straw. He makes himself a large paunch or a hump by stuffing straw or hay under his blouse. He is called the rag-man, because he is covered with rags. And he is called the pagan, which is still more significant, because he is reputed by his cynicism and debauchery to contain in himself the opposite of every Christian virtue.

Sometimes he appears with his face daubed with soot and dregs of wine, sometimes disguised with a grotesque mask. A broken earthenware cup, or an old shoe, hung from his waist by a string, he uses to hold out for the wine for which he begs. No one refuses him, and he pretends to drink, and then pours the wine on the ground by way of libation. At every step he falls, and rolls in the mud; he pretends to be in the most disgraceful state of intoxication. His poor wife runs after him, lifts him up, calls for help, tears the hemp hair which comes in rough locks out of her dirty mob-cap, cries over her degraded husband, and reproaches him pathetically.

"Unhappy man," says she, "see to what we are reduced by your bad conduct! In vain do I spin, work for you, mend your clothes. You are always tearing your things and dirtying yourself. You have devoured my little property. Our six children have to lie upon straw. We live in a stable with the animals. See, we are reduced to beg for alms, and still you are so ugly, so disgusting, so despised, that soon we shall have bread thrown to us as to dogs. Alas, good people, have pity upon us! Have pity upon me! I have not deserved my fate; and never did a wife have a more dirty, a more detestable husband. Help me to lift him up, or the carriage will crush him, like an old broken bottle, and I shall be a widow, which will complete my misery and kill me; although everyone says it would be a great blessing for me."

Such is the part of the gardener's wife and such are her continual lamentations during the whole piece. For it is a regular comedy, free, impromptu, played in the open air, on the roads, across fields, supplemented by any fortuitous accidents which present themselves, and in which during three or four hours of the day everybody takes part, those belonging to the wedding party or outsiders, occupants of the houses or passers-by, as well as those who go to see it. The theme is invariable, but there are infinite variations upon the theme, and it is in these that the instinct of imitation, the abundance of grotesque ideas, the loquacity, the spirit of repartee, and even the natural eloquence of our peasants appear.

The part of the gardener's wife is generally given to a thin man, without beard and of a fresh complexion, who understands how to give great reality to the personification, and to play burlesque despair in a sufficiently natural way to amuse and sadden at the same time as by a reality. . . .

When the unhappiness of the wife is proved the young people of the wedding party get her to leave her drunken husband, and to amuse herself with them. They offer her an arm and carry her off. Gradually she gives herself up to present enjoyment, grows merry, begins to run, first with one then with another, behaving in a shameless manner: a new moral—the misconduct of the husband provokes and leads to that of the wife.

The pagan then rouses himself from his drunkenness, looks for his companion, arms himself with a rope and a stick, and runs after her. They make him run, they hide themselves, they pass the woman from one to another, they try to distract and deceive the jealous man. His friends try to intoxicate him. At last he rejoins his faithless wife, and wishes to beat her. . . . But the moment he raises the stick and prepares the rope to tie the delinquent, all the men of the wedding party interpose and place themselves between the husband and wife. "Do not beat her; never beat your wife!" is the formula repeated to satiety in these scenes. They disarm the husband, force him to pardon—to embrace his wife; and he soon pretends to love her more than ever. He goes about arm-in-arm with her, singing and dancing, until a fresh access of drunkenness makes him roll upon the ground; and then the lamentations of the wife begin again, her despair, her simulated misconduct, the jealousy of the husband, the intervention of the neighbours, and the reconciliation.

There is in all this a lesson, naïve, even coarse, showing its descent from the Middle Ages, but it always makes an impression, if not upon the married people at least upon the children and youths. The pagan so frightens and disgusts the young girls, by running after them and pretending to wish to embrace them, that they fly from him with an emotion which has nothing of pretence in it.

ORGANISATION NOTES.

ROYAL DRAMATIC COLLEGE FUND.—A glance through any of the directories or handbooks to the Charities of London shows how naturally a large number of the charities group themselves under different trades and professions. A common profession seems to create a sort of charitable kinship between the members of it. It is on this kinship that charity, when relations or private friends are not forthcoming, has frequently to rely in obtaining assistance for those who are in distress. For such reasons as these we cannot but regret to see the notice that appeared in some of the daily papers recently: 'That as it is impossible to keep up the Royal Dramatic College and provide for its inmates, through want of sufficient support, there being at this moment no funds for the current expenses except by selling out the remaining sum of £1,000 in the New Three per cents., the Council do forthwith take such steps as the Charity Commissioners may advise to dispose of the property and to provide for the inmates.' Any member of the medical profession 'in London, notwithstanding that he may afterwards move away, can, by joining' the Society for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of Medical Men, 'when he is resident in London, always insure that, for the small payment of two guineas annually, his wife and children shall, if he die without leaving means for their support, be kept from penury and its attendant miseries.' Surely it would not be a hopeless task to attempt to organise a charity on this self-supporting or quasi-self-supporting basis, for those who obtain their livelihood by the drama. Or would it be impossible for those who make art in its several departments their profession to form some combination of their charities, so as to place them by increased support on some such thoroughly sound basis? The only strictly theatrical charitable institution that appears to exist in London at present is the Royal General Theatrical Fund, which has an income of about £2,400.

CRITICISMS ON THE SOCIETY.

The following letter appeared recently in a contemporary:—Sir,—As you have opened your columns to a discussion on the policy and principles of the Charity Organisation Society, I shall be glad if you will allow me space to make a few criticisms on Mr. S. C. Hall's recent pamphlet on the subject. These criticisms, which I shall direct chiefly to Mr. Hall's own theory of charity, as far as we have any indications of it, will enable me to bring out more clearly the aims and principles of the Society, and the special evils which it is intended to remedy.

In Mr. Hall's view, as far as I can judge of it from the censures he passes on the Society, the sum and substance of charity is to be found in the literal carrying out of the precept, 'Give to every man that asketh of thee.' All who come to us professing to be in distress ought to be relieved, and that without delay. If it be suggested that we ought first to ascertain by visiting the home or making inquiry in other ways, whether the distress is genuine, the answer would be that the distress may be genuine and may be urgent, and if it is, while you are taking up time in inquiry the poor applicant may starve. Better run the risk of being imposed upon—I imagine Mr. Hall would say—than the risk of a single human being perishing through want.

The first remark I shall make on this theory is that it entirely ignores the existence of the Poor-law. Can Mr. Hall be aware that there is a State provision, maintained at a cost of eleven or twelve millions annually, by which food to eat and a roof to shelter them are secured to all who are without the necessaries of life? It is true that in order to prevent the abuse of this provision certain regulations have to be made as to the mode in which these necessaries are to be given, but the regulations are not such as to nullify the benefits of the law, or to make it untrue to say that by the law of England no one need starve. To discuss, therefore, the duties of private societies and individuals, without considering the important duties which the State has taken upon itself in this matter of charity, is to ignore at least half the conditions of the problem to be solved. The second remark I would make is, that Mr. Hall seems to me to underrate the evil of imposture. Of this evil a very small part is the mulcting of the pockets of the well-to-do; by far the larger part is the demoralisation which would be caused in the class intended to be benefited, by a series of successful impostures. If everyone gave to all comers without hesitation and without inquiry there would be no limit to the ingenious devices by which the sympathies of the public would be played upon. Feigned illness, telegrams from dying relatives, urgent needs of all imaginable kinds, would be systematically resorted to; and, if all did their duty according to Mr. Hall's principles, with unvarying success, the industrious poor, who are striving hard to live a life of honest toil, would see their less scrupulous neighbours living in idleness and comparative ease on the fruits of their deceptions, and would be tempted at times to follow their example. In other words, we should be throwing additional difficulties in the way of honest industry, and offering a premium to fraud.

Now, surely it cannot be right to act upon a principle which, if acted upon universally, would lead to such results as these. It cannot be right in the matter of charity, where the interests of others are concerned, to set aside the common sense rule of conduct which bids us look before we leap. It is just to enable the public to act systematically on this sound maxim in charitable matters that the Charity Organisation Society exists. Few persons can undertake to give the necessary time and trouble to an inquiry into every case of distress which comes before them, and they are tempted either to give impulsively and unwisely or to refuse with equal unreason. But here the Society steps in and offers to undertake the investigation for them. In every district in London it has its office and staff of workers, of all creeds and classes, ready to attend to every case of distress brought to their notice. Urgent cases are sent at once to a refuge, but to them, as to all, the principle of thorough investigation is applied, in order that, after the need of the moment has been met, the deeper underlying causes of distress may also be met, and the recurrence of the poverty guarded against. Nor is personal care for the poor dissociated from the work of the Society. It does not offer a substitute for individual charity; all the relief it gives it would gladly see given by individuals; it only offers its services for the purpose of ascertaining how the help may be best applied. It annihilates the excuse for hardheartedness, which arises from fear of deception, and at the same time stimulates real benevolence, by directing the best thought and attention of all to the removal of the causes of poverty. Much more may be said on the subject, but I feel that I have already trespassed too long on your space.

Charity Organisation Reporter.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY DURING THE SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

BY THE

SOCIETY FOR ORGANISING CHARITABLE RELIEF AND REPRESSING MENDICITY.

No. 240.

THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 20, 1877.

PRICE 1d.

THE OBJECT of the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY is the improvement of the condition of the poor:

1. By bringing about co-operation between the Charities and the Poor Law, and amongst the Charities.
2. By securing thorough investigation and suitable action in all cases.
3. By granting effectual temporary assistance, as far as the funds of the Committees allow, in cases where a permanent result may be hoped for, and which are not met by existing sources.
4. By repressing mendicity.

The Society, therefore, being desirous of enlisting the sympathy of those who are endeavouring to ameliorate the condition of the poor, would urge such of them as are willing to take part in the work to become members of the District Committees, especially of those in the poorer parts of London, and would remind them that by so doing they will be brought into direct contact with the facts of the life of the poor, and with the various agencies that are intended to help them.

The Secretary of the Council, Mr. C. S. Loch, 15 Buckingham Street, Adelphi, will be happy to furnish further information.

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, December 13. There had been present:—

Mr. E. Peters, in the chair; the Earl of Lichfield, Sir C. E. Trevelyan, Rear-Admiral Gardner, Lieut.-Col. Prendergast, Major FitzRoy, Major Nares, Capt. Fortescue, Hon. H. R. Scott, Miss O. Hill, Mrs. Lathbury, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Messrs. Barrington, Bond, Brown, Copeman, Edgcombe, Hill, Hoare, Lawrence, Mills, Peto, Tidman, Whitcombe.

SUB-COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT WORK.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on December 11 there had been present:—

Major FitzRoy, in the chair; Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, Messrs. Barrington, Bousfield, and Edgcombe.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on December 11 there had been present:—

Rear-Admiral Gardner, in the chair; Hon. H. R. Scott, Major FitzRoy, and Mr. Bevan.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending December 8 the receipts had been £132. 9s. 6d. for the General Fund, and £271. 1s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances* of the two funds on that day had been £349. 8s. 7d. and £162. 13s. 10d. respectively, £127. 1s. 6d. of the latter sum being reserved to meet expenditure on School Board cases.

* The estimated liabilities were about £800, exclusive of £200 required for District Committees during the current quarter.

GRANTS.—That the following grants had been made:—Stepney, £5; Bethnal Green, £5; and St. Olave's, £25.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHES.—That the following letter had been received:

SCHOOL BOARD FOR LONDON.
7 The Terrace, Putney, S.W.:
December 4, 1877.

SIR,—I am instructed by the Committee on Needlework to ask you whether it would be in your power to purchase ready-made underclothing of good materials, suited principally for children.

These garments can be supplied singly or by the dozen, and will be sold at cost price or a little under.

They have been made in the Board Schools, but, owing to special circumstances which can be fully and satisfactorily explained, have not met with a sale among the scholars, and the Board are desirous of clearing them out of their schools.

Yours faithfully,
H. FLOYER,
Examiner of Needlework.

STATEMENT RESPECTING MR. BARNARDO.

Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe stated that Mr. Maude was present as a visitor, and was able to give evidence respecting Mr. Barnardo's having sufficient private means to give his services gratuitously. Mr. Maude had called on him and invited him to go and see Mr. Barnardo on the subject, but he had been unable to go. Mr. Peters had, however, gone in his stead. This evidence, he believed, would go a long way to meet some of the points in the Statement adopted by the Council at their last meeting. The Administrative Committee had given instructions respecting the publication of the Statement. After that day these instructions would be carried out. The matter was therefore urgent.

The Chairman ruled that it would be out of order for a visitor to submit evidence. The question had been discussed at length and settled by the Council at the previous meeting. In accordance with the 5th Bye-law, 'statements' might be made 'by members on subjects of special interest to the Society.' It was open, therefore, to Mr. Edgcombe, as a member of Council, to make any such statement.

Mr. H. Brand said that, from information he had lately received, there appeared to be some chance of a conference between the Committee of Mr. Barnardo's Homes and members of this Society. The question had been brought before that Committee during the past week. He would ask the Council whether they would delay the publication of the Statement for six or seven days, in order that he might be able to inform them definitely by that time if the Committee had determined on a conference. The Council had no end in view but the ascertainment of the truth. He had given the name of his informant in confidence to Lord Lichfield.

Lord Lichfield said that, while at the Council meeting, Mr. Brand had mentioned to him the name of his informant, and what he had just stated. The question to be considered was whether the delay in the publication would bring about a conference between members of the Society and Mr. Barnardo's trustees. He felt, when Mr. Edgcombe asked the Council to consider the question, that one grave objection was, that it would bring the Council into contact with Mr. Barnardo, and not with Mr. Barnardo's trustees. The trustees had said that they had evidence to refute the evidence in the hands of the Society. That evidence, however, had not been forthcoming. He had been most anxious to hear it, and would be the last to oppose any delay in order to come in contact with the trustees themselves. There could, however, be no question but that delay would have an injurious effect, unless something came of it. He was ready to accept Mr. Brand's assurance of the likelihood of this.

It was pointed out that this information did not come from the trustees, but from Mr. Barnardo's committee. Mr. Barnardo, so far as he was responsible, was responsible to his trustees.

Mr. Brand stated that Mr. Barnardo and Mr. Nisbet were, he understood, opposed to any conference. If their opposition could be met, the conference, he believed, might be arranged. He wished the causes of delay to be fully stated in the Reporter.

Rev. R. J. Simpson said the Society's object was to have justice done. This being so, there were good grounds for delay, if the evidence mentioned by Mr. Edgcombe was good and sufficient.

Mr. Edgcombe again urged that Mr. Maude be heard.

The Chairman said he could not alter his ruling.

Major FitzRoy moved:—

That it be an instruction to the Administrative Committee to withhold the publication of the Barnardo Statement pending the negotiation for a conference which has been suggested.

Mr. Edgcombe moved the following rider:—

and not to publish the statement until they have reported to the Council.

Mr. Bousfield said the case was exceptional. Justice required that the Council should hear the evidence.

The Chairman stated that Mr. Edgcombe was in a position to lay the evidence before Council.

Mr. Edgcombe stated that Mr. Maude had seen the marriage settlement, and that he believed that this and other facts went to disprove the second head of the Statement.

Mr. J. Whitcombe alleged that, in the circular published in September last, charges under this head had been made without evidence being given.

Mr. J. W. Probyn said that he had supported the adoption of the Statement. He believed that if the Council postponed the publication of it, they would at least show that all they aimed at was to obtain truthful information. He hoped a conference would ensue. It was a most important question; the Council had to consider the possibility of the conference failing.

Lieut.-Colonel Prendergast pointed out that the Council should consider the position of the Society as well as that of Mr. Barnardo's trustees. The trustees had promised to give evidence; they had had ample opportunity for doing so, and they had broken their promise, sheltering themselves under the recommendation of the arbitration that no defamatory statements should be published by either side. They might have officially instructed some one to give evidence on their behalf. There was nothing to show that they were taking any action. This came from individuals only. He did not think the Council should hear any evidence except such as was submitted by the trustees.

Rev. R. J. Simpson suggested that Mr. Edgcombe and his friends might lodge a protest containing the evidence he had against the Statement.

Mr. Brand said that, after what Colonel Prendergast had said, he must state that this proposal of a conference did not come from the trustees, but from a gentleman of position and known integrity, who had interested himself in the matter, and was in hopes of arranging a conference between the two committees. The trustees had not, until quite lately, had the evidence. He thought the Council was too large a body to consider and sift evidence.

Mr. Edgcombe said Mr. Maude would speak from evidence received from the trustees.

Mr. Peters said he had been shown by Mr. Barnardo, on the accounts of the Children's Treasury, a net balance of £1,878. 10s. 4d. With regard to other sources of income, Mr. Barnardo had stated that, early in his career, private friends had guaranteed his expenditure. He had only Mr. Barnardo's statement on this and other points.

It was stated that the alleged income for the Children's Treasury would not meet the charges made against Mr. Barnardo on the score of finance.

Mr. Whitcombe said that Mr. Peters had not alluded to the marriage settlement.

Mr. Peters stated that Mr. Barnardo had also mentioned this. The settlement amounted to £105 a year.

Major FitzRoy said that there ought not to be, nor werethere, he believed, two parties in this question. To ascertain the truth was alike most important to both.

Mr. Edgcombe's rider having been put and lost, 8 voting for it and 22 against it, Major FitzRoy's motion was unanimously carried.

ADJOURNMENT OF COUNCIL.

Mr. Russell Barrington, seconded by Lieut.-Colonel Prendergast, moved the following recommendation of the Administrative Committee, which was adopted nem. con.:—

That the Council adjourn to the 14th January next.

DEPUTATION TO THE COURT OF ALDERMEN.

The Secretary explained shortly the object and main arguments of the statement which it was proposed by the Committee of the British Medical Association to submit to the Court of Aldermen.

Dr. R. J. Lee, who attended as a visitor, said that the Committee

REPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE.

The Administrative Committee had met on Thursday, December 6. There had been present:—

Mr. J. R. Hollond, in the chair; the Earl of Lichfield, Hon. R. C. Grosvenor, Major-General Gardiner, Lieut.-Col. Prendergast, Major Fitz-Roy, Major Nares, Capt. Fortescue, Rev. H. I. Cummins, Rev. S. A. Barnett; Messrs. Barrington, Bevan, Bond, Brown, Copeman, Crowder, Hill, Lawrence, Peters, Peto, Roberts, Mrs. Lathbury, and Miss O. Hill.

MENDICITY SUB-COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of this Sub-Committee on December 4 there had been present:—

Mr. R. A. Aspinall, in the chair; Hon. H. R. Scott, Major FitzRoy, and Mr. Bevan.

FINANCE.—It was reported that during the week ending December 1 the receipts had been £69. 8s. 8d. for the General Fund, and £1. 1s. for the District Committee Aid Fund, and that the available balances* of the two funds on that day had been £275. 15s. 5d. and £24. 17s. 3d. respectively, £10. 5s. 11d. of the latter sum being reserved to meet expenditure on School Board cases.

CHAIRMANSHIP OF COUNCIL.

The following amendment to the recommendation of the Administrative Committee, that Lord Shaftesbury be invited to accept the post of Chairman of Council, was moved by General Lynedoch Gardiner, and seconded by Lord Lichfield, viz.:—

That in future the Chairman of the Council of this Society be elected annually. And that Lord Shaftesbury be asked to accept the office of Chairman for the year 1878.

General Gardiner explained that 'the year' mentioned in his amendment was from one annual meeting of the Society to the next. He thought that the Chairman of Council for each year should take the chair at the annual meeting in March, and hold office till the March following. It would be necessary to ask Lord Shaftesbury to take the Chairmanship for a somewhat longer period, viz., from the present time to March 1879.

With the permission of the Council, the words 'ensuing year' were substituted for 'the year 1878.'

After a short debate, in which Sir Charles Trevelyan, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. Bousfield, and Admiral Gardner took part, the amendment, which it had been agreed to vote upon in two parts, was duly put and carried, and accepted as a substantive motion.

WORK OF THE CENTRAL OFFICE.

It was agreed, on the motion of Rev. H. I. Cummins, seconded by Mr. Russell Barrington, that the following members of Council be members of the Committee to be appointed in accordance with the resolution of Council of the 3rd inst., viz. Lord Lichfield, Major-General Cavenagh, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. E. Bond, Mr. W. F. Lawrence, Mr. J. R. Hollond, and Rev. H. I. Cummins.

STATEMENT OF THE BARNARDO COMMITTEE.

The adoption of the statement of the Barnardo Committee was moved by Lord Lichfield, seconded by Mr. J. R. Hollond.

Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, seconded by Mr. C. E. Maurice, moved the following amendment, viz.:

* The estimated liabilities were about £800, exclusive of £200 required for District Committees during the current quarter.

That the statement be referred back to the Committee with instructions to amend it by the omission, as far as possible, of all charges against Mr. Barnardo. And that this report be issued, at the discretion of the Secretary, only to such persons inquiring as are legitimately interested.

It was agreed that the amendment should be taken in two parts.

Mr. Russell Barrington, Rev. R. J. Simpson, Mr. J. W. Probyn, Admiral Gardner, Sir Charles Trevelyan, Rev. H. I. Cummins, and Mr. W. W. Wood, supported the motion.

Mr. Bousfield and Mr. E. Bond supported the amendment.

Miss O. Hill, Mr. W. F. Lawrence, Major FitzRoy, Mr. W. Day, and Mr. L. G. Gordon-Robbins, said a few words.

The amendment having been put and lost, 10 voting for it, 33 against it, the motion for the adoption of the Report was put and carried.

A series of verbal amendments, of which Major FitzRoy had given notice, were, with others suggested by General Gardiner, and Mr. Gordon-Robbins, referred to the Committee.

To the latter part of Mr. Edgcombe's amendment, amendments were moved by Rev. H. I. Cummins, viz.:

That an advertisement be inserted in the newspapers, stating that the statement can be had at the Central Office;

by Rev. R. J. Simpson, viz.:

That the question of the mode of publication be referred to the Administrative Committee;

and by Lord Lichfield. The latter, to the following effect, was eventually carried, viz.:

That it be referred to the Administrative Committee to adopt the best and most effectual means of giving full publicity to the completed statement of the action of the Society in the Barnardo case (as approved to-day).

ADJOURNMENT OF COUNCIL.

The following recommendation of the Administrative Committee having been taken as urgent, was moved by Mr. Russell Barrington, and seconded by Lieut.-Colonel Prendergast, viz.:

That the Council adjourn to the 14th January next.

Mr. J. R. Hollond, seconded by Mr. F. J. S. Edgcombe, moved the adjournment of the debate.

The Council then adjourned.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES.

GREENWICH.—Annual Meeting.—The Annual Meeting of this Committee was held on the 4th instant, Major-General Bainbridge being in the chair.

Mr. Burdett, Secretary to the Seamen's Hospital, in moving the adoption of the Report, said he had been a resident of the district for about four years, and although he did not altogether agree with the work of the Society he was pleased with the good that had been done. Passing through the park and over Blackheath he could not at one time go above fifty yards without meeting a beggar. One was now scarcely met, and as citizens they were much indebted to the local branch for what they had accomplished in this district. He believed, speaking of hospital work, that the Charity Organisation Society enabled them to look forward to the time when those persons who applied for assistance and help from the hospitals, and who were really ill and deserving, would receive aid without that delay and annoyance which was experienced from the impudence and professions of the able-bodied and undeserving.

* This item, having been collected in error, has been refunded.

and quoted his application to it of the first verse of Psalm xli.: 'Blessed is he that considereth the poor.' He regarded such work as most clearly a religious work, and should not otherwise concern himself with it. He ventured to suggest to his brethren in the ministry there present, that they would find themselves in nowise fettered, but greatly aided, by co-operation with the Society, and dwelt upon the mischief unavoidably occasioned by entrusting the work of giving relief to District Visitors, without supervision or direction, and without full investigation and careful consideration of all cases.

Mr. Fremantle further proceeded to strengthen his argument by adducing various examples of actual cases of distress, and of difficulties in dealing with them which were surmounted, but could only be surmounted, by full inquiry and patient consideration. Cases of pressing urgency could always be temporarily dealt with until investigation has taken place.

The adoption of the report was moved by James Marshall, Esq., J.P., and Chairman of the Board of Guardians, who paid a handsome tribute to the value of the Society's work in Hampstead, and regretted that it had not been more fully appreciated. He spoke from personal experience as a Justice of the Peace, as Chairman of the Board of Guardians, and as a Trustee of the Wells and other Endowed Charities in Hampstead. He was seconded by Mr. T. A. Evans, also a Guardian of the Poor.

A resolution of thanks to the officers and Executive Committee was moved by Manley Hopkins, Esq., who spoke with warm approval of the efforts of the Society, and was followed, as seconder, by the Rev. Dr. Sadler, of Roslyn Hill Chapel, who defended the Society against the imputation of hardness, and said that it would be nearer the mark to say that it was 'not soft.' The resolution was acknowledged by Mr. Frederic Hill, Chairman of the Executive Committee, who took occasion to refer to the valuable services of the Agent, Mr. Robert Frisby, by the Rev. H. F. Mallet, and by Messrs. Edward Bond, and C. E. Maurice, representatives of the Committee at the Central Council.

The Rev. S. B. Burnaby, Vicar of Hampstead, moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Fremantle for his kindness in presiding and conduct in the chair, stating his own entire concurrence with his views, which he was endeavouring to carry out in his own portion of the parish, and his readiness, if others would join him, to appoint one Relief Committee for the whole of Hampstead, in which Churchmen and Nonconformists should unite. The motion was seconded by Charles H. L. Woodd, Esq., J.P.

The meeting was attended by a good many ladies engaged in district visiting from various parts of the parish, and, in addition to those already mentioned, by the Rev. J. Kirkman, Vicar of St. Stephen's; the Rev. A. Herklots, Vicar of St. Saviour's; the Rev. J. M. Sutton, Mr. W. Geoghegan, C. R. Wild, A. N. Butt, Mr. Burford, and others.

CONVALESCENT HOMES.

To the Editor of the 'Charity Organisation Reporter.'

SIR,—I wish to recommend to the notice of members of the Charity Organisation Society, through the medium of the Reporter, a 'Home for Invalid Children,' of which I enclose a prospectus. 'St. Agatha's Home,' at Beckenham, Kent, has been established by a lady who was for some years one of the surgical sisters at St. Thomas' Hospital, and who, in the course of her experience in the children's ward, became much impressed with the great need of early removal from the hospital of children patients, partially convalescent, but not yet fit for either home or an ordinary convalescent institution.

Having, at her own cost, provided a suitable building, she is desirous of receiving patients for whom payment can be made. The Home has been opened for a year, but has not met with the support which it deserves.

Having considerable acquaintance with the subject, I may venture to say that no other similar institution supplies what this does—all the skill and care of a hospital, with more individual attention, and with country air; and I can conceive of no better form of permanent relief in cases which are but too numerous in the children's wards of this metropolis, than by providing the cost of the journey, and a few weeks' maintenance to a little patient.

A complete recovery may thus frequently be ensured, which, under other circumstances, would be either extremely doubtful or out of the question. Enquiries should be addressed to Miss Hawthorn, St. Agatha's Home, Beckenham.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

HENRY BONHAM CARTER.

91 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W., November 25, 1877.

VAGRANCY.—It has been found that the professional vagrant has a decided preference for those workhouses where provision is made for his accommodation on the old-fashioned plan, with associated dormitories and workrooms. Here he can change experiences with his brother tramps and give and receive 'tips' as to the best 'lays,' and generally spend his evening in social, albeit somewhat obscene, discourse, to the disgust of any respectable poor person who may, by stress of circumstances, be compelled to accept the charity of the ratepayers. The associated vagrant wards are, however, doomed, and new wards on the cellular plan are taking their place. The Guardians of Kensington are about to erect wards for 40 males and 20 females, from the plans of Messrs. A. & C. Harston, architects. Here each tramp will, after taking the inevitable bath, be introduced to a separate sleeping-cell, warmed, lighted, and provided with every necessary, but accommodation for one person only. Adjoining each male's cell is a work-cell, into which he is admitted in the morning, to find a given quantity of granite stones and a hammer for the cracking thereof; should he have occasion to call the attendant he will find in each cell an electric 'push,' which will cause a gong to sound in the attendant's room. The clothing of the vagrants will be dried and disinfected in a Leoni's gas disinfectant, in the basement, where will also be found the boilers for heating and for the supply of hot water. The contract for the whole of the work has been taken by Messrs. Lathey Bros.—Builder.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The total number of paupers in metropolitan workhouses on the last day of the first week of December 1877 was 39,744, and 42,242 received outdoor relief, making a total of 81,986. This was an increase of 850 on last week's returns. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1876, 1875, and 1874, this was a decrease of 821, 4,250, and 13,013 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 746. This was a decrease of 26 on the return for the last day of the preceding week, and an increase of 90 on the corresponding day of last year.
